6. Blessed are they who express their delight in the Lord by their generous offerings as well as by their ready words of praise.
7. Blessed are they who appreciate their church and are eager for opportunity to recommend it to their friends.
8. Blessed are they who do not justify themselves in doing what they would condemn others for doing.

I take no thought of my neighbor's birth,
Nor the way he makes his prayer;
I grant him a human's place on earth,
If his game is on the square.
If he plays straight—I'll call him mate,
If he cheats—I'll drop him flat;
All else but this is a worn-out lie—
For each clean man is as good as I—
And a king's no more than that.

SUFFOLK BARACA CLASS HONORS MR. NORFLEET.

James Lloyd Norfleet, 69-year-old retired produce merchant, was honored Tuesday night for an outstanding attendance record in Sunday school.

During the past ten years, he hasn't missed a Sunday of the Baraca Bible Class of the Suffolk Christian Church. For that achievement, he was awarded a service pin by L. S. Burton, class membership chairman.

Mr. Norfleet has belonged to the class for 30 years, since coming to Suffolk. For many years he operated a stall in the City Market. He now lives at 227 Western Avenue where he spends much of his time working in his garden.

Occasion of the award was the annual dinner meeting of the Baraca Class at the church. Present were 150 of the 250 class members.

MAKING GOOD USE OF MOVIES.

Rev. Henry E. Robinson, minister of our Burlington Church, is Chairman of the Visual Aids Committee of the Southern Convention. Mr. Robinson is keenly interested in visual aids and makes fine use of them in his own church. For several months he has ordered a good picture for each week-end which he uses in the following way: On Saturday morning he shows it to the children in his church; on Saturday night he shows it to the boys and girls at the Elon Orphanage; and on Saturday afternoon or Sunday afternoon he shows it to about 100 people in the county prison camp at Graham, and then to the young people in his church on Sunday night. He says that any picture that is worth showing once is worth showing to as many people as possible.

MISS ELENA MAQUISO.

It is the fulfilment of a dream—the coming to America of sweet-faced Elena Maquiso of Dumaguete, Negros Oriental, Philippine Islands.

"I count it a privilege to be given this opportunity to study in your great country. I want to learn about her people, her ideals, and her institutions. The United States has been a guide to my country, morally and spiritually, this last half a century," says Miss Maquiso, who is in the United States for a three-fold purpose.

She attended the International Congregational Council meeting at Wellesley College, Wellesley, Massachusetts, June 17 to 24. She was a member of the International Seminar of the American Board of Foreign Missions in which a group of mature Christian leaders from the Young Churches of India, the Philippines, Japan, Mexico and China met for fellowship and the study of problems that perplex Christian people in all lands as well as those peculiar to the individual countries. She is taking graduate work this coming year at Hartford Seminary Foundation, Hartford, Connecticut.

"It is a responsibility to come to America for I shall be representing my people, the church and all that is Filipino," adds Miss Maquiso.

Of the missionaries from the U.S.A. to the Philippines Miss Maquiso states that "Christianity would not have spread in my country had it not been for the efforts and zeal of those missionaries who left the comforts of home and came there. Their contribution in the progress of my country cannot be measured."

Elena Maquiso got her education the hard way. Her life from childhood was one of privation and work. Born in the bario (village) of Katungawan on the island of Bohol, into a Protestant family, she saw her father throw himself passionately into his faith. "He had the zeal of a Paul and the impulsiveness of a Peter," she declares. But then came tragedy. There were not enough missionaries or national pastors to visit the barrio and encourage the Christians so that gradually her father lost his faith, turned to gambling as a refuge and lost his business.

Elena, her brother and a sister would go into the mountains to look for food and come home with camotes (similar to a sweet potato) on their heads. "With bolos at our sides we would go for firewood. We carried water from the well in long bamboo poles. I earned my first money to buy myself a dress by harvesting rice at twenty centavos a day," she recalls.

When she was finishing the sixth grade in the barrio school an epidemic of dysentery broke out. There was no doctor, no nurse—only a sanitary inspector for the whole town. Sometimes two or three members in one family died. People got their drinking water from the same well. Very few houses had sanitary conveniences of any kind.

During this period Miss Maquiso's father had been working on a plantation in Hawaii. He returned home and the family migrated to the island of Mindanao. Her father was not interested in having her attend any school and her education was sketchy.

MISS ELENA MAQUISO.

Miss Maquiso will be special guest at the following Camps and Conferences: Young People's Conference at Elon College, July 2-8; Officers Camp, July 9-12 at Crabtree Camp; Group for Junior Boys and Girls, Crabtree, July 12-14; Family Life Camp, Crabtree, July 14-16.

She sold fish and sewed to earn a little money. It was then that she met a missionary of the American Board named Mrs. Pearl F. Spencer who was a teacher in the Mission High School at Lanao on Mindanao. Mrs. Spencer took Elena as a clerk and in this way the young Filipino was able to finish high school.

When Elena Maquiso first met Mrs. Spencer she said to her, "Elena, I believe it was God who directed you to write me asking for work so that you can go to school and prepare your life for God's service." Elena was not now interested in church and knew very little of the Bible. She had not the slightest idea of going into church work. Mrs. Spencer never again referred to the subject, but through her own life and her silent testimony

Elena Maquiso decided to train herself for Christian service among her own people. With some scholarship help Elena Maquiso worked her way through college, sewing, washing dishes, scrubbing and sweeping. She learned the ministry of Christian Music and later in her course taught that subject. After her special church training was finished she went out into the field and then was made Promotional Secretary of her Church Conference.

Then came the war. During the lulls in enemy activities she visited churches and individual members scattered here and there. "The work of the church continued in spite of terrible hardships," she says. During those war years she sang and preached at a concentration camp for prisoners; took charge of a funeral service when the enemy was fast approaching; conducted a young people's conference at a place forty kilometers away from the enemy garrison; cared for a whole household of malaria patients without medicine except herbs, roots and leaves from trees.

"Just before liberation I conducted a five-week Lay Leaders Institute of 53 young people who came from far and near. Some of them hiked 150 kilometers. It was a joy to watch these young people who in spite of hardship—some of them hardly had decent clothes on—studied their lessons in earnest and were happy in spite of everything. The girls were huddled in a small house with every one sleeping on the floor." During the last few years Miss Maquiso has been serving as matron of Channon Hall at Silliman University, Dumaguete and teaching Church Music while she finished her work for her Bachelor of Arts degree. Being a matron and a full-time student at the same time is not an easy job, but Elena Maquiso did it. This last year—1948-49—thanks to a scholarship from the American Board of Foreign Missions, she was able to concentrate entirely on her studies and finish her Bachelor of Christian Education with a major in Church Music.

Backed by the friendship, sympathy and financial aid of her American missionary associates Miss Maquiso has had with her at Silliman this year, a little niece who was only one month old when her mother was killed by a bullet during the war.

Guard within yourself that treasure of kindness. Know how to give without hesitation, how to lose without regret, how to acquire without meanness.—Selected.

BUILDING FOR CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

An adequate building does not guarantee an adequate program of Christian education. Lack of vision, paucity of imagination, unwillingness or inability to accept new methods and techniques can fasten the lock of an antiquated program on the most modern building. But a new building does create the setting, open the door and provide a powerful incentive for an improved program. Erstwhile limitations of space and equipment are laid aside. The Sunday School can stretch itself as it emerges from its procrustean quarters. Like a child whose personality becomes radiant with the realization of a room all his own for the first time, departments may come into their long-delayed own and begin to function efficiently as recognized entities in the total enterprise. Classes, long accustomed to the teaching of many tongues at the same time, are now able to center their attention on one voice and one teacher in the comfort and privacy of individual classrooms. The Sunday school superintendent breathes a prayer of thanksgiving as the babel of competing sounds becomes only a memory and the dream of a full-departmentalized school unfolds. Likewise the minister rejoices that his people have resolved, whatever the cost may be, to take Christian education seriously. They are giving more than lip service to Him who said: "For this cause came I into the world, to bear witness to the truth." The School and the Church can claim anew the promise of Christ: "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

DURHAM

As you drive out West Main Street in Durham and come to the stoplight at Gregson, you will notice that the church on the corner has become twins. The original structure has been matched by an adjacent one, similar, but not identical in design and proportion. If interest or curiosity should lead you inside, you will find yourself in a three-story educational building. You may pause at the minister's study or church office which are easily accessible at your right. Turning left, you note with interest the Scout Room on one hand and the social hall on the other. Here, you reflect, will be the setting for many exciting events. Recreation, education and religion will join hands and march to the same music. And just beyond, a kitchen quickens the imagination and you visualize suppers, anniversary banquets and a variety of festival occasions in this new unit of the Lord's house. Serving and being served, these people will grow in grace as well as in the stature and in favor with God and man. The church parlor on the second floor, provision for two departments each on the second and third floors, give you the overall plan. You will rejoice in the wisdom of providing an assembly room and three classrooms for each department. If you chance to meet Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, the pastor, he may tell you that space has been made to accommodate twice their present enrollment of 300. As you emerge and reflect on this structure of brick walls, slate roof, modern oil heating, you may arrive at the conclusion that $65,000 spent here represents a substantial and lasting investment in Christian education. Congratulations, Durham!

FAYETTEVILLE

Interesting and daring experiments in building are unfolding in our midst. The Highland Presbyterian Church in Fayetteville is making church history. This congregation has invested nearly $300,000 in a chapel (not a church!), a religious education building, and a recreation building. These three units are designed to meet three basic needs of every individual — worship, instruction and play. Every classroom is furnished for worship as well as instruction. The full-time minister of music has an office and an adequate choir room in which to train his multiple choirs. The Sunday school superintendent has an office from which he can reach every department simultaneously with music and/or announcements over a public address system. The director of children's work has an office from which she supervises the church school on Sunday and the kindergarten on week-days. The Ligon plan of Christian education has been introduced in the junior-high grades. The church takes recreation seriously and has added a full-time director to its staff. Attendance is growing by leaps and bounds. Many people are weary of antiquated Sunday School facilities and are looking for the church that dares to blaze new trails in Christian education. It is refreshing to know that such things are being done.

THREE FAR-REACHING DECISIONS

The U. S. Supreme Court has just driven one more death-dealing spike into the South's system of racial segregation. By its three-fold decision, on June 5, railroad dining cars are legally forbidden to curtain off Negroes from whites; the graduate school of Oklahoma State University must discontinue its practice of segregating Negroes from whites in its classrooms; and the University of Texas must admit Marion Sweatt, a Negro, to its all-white law school, even though Texas has established a separate law school for Negroes.

The Texas case is directly relevant to a suit now pending in North Carolina, in which several Negroes are suing for admission to the University law school at Chapel Hill. Unless it can be shown that the Negro law school of North Carolina College at Durham is substantially equal to the University law school, the latter will probably be required to admit Negroes.

Although the court did not specifically reject the historic "separate but equal" doctrine, that doctrine is implicitly condemned in its dining car verdict, since the tables set apart for Negroes were really equal to those limited to whites.

The court reveals a wise pedagogy in eliminating segregation gradually, and in terms of individual cases as they arise in the various Southern States. A wholesale condemnation of segregation, however morally justified, would probably be catastrophic in its social effects.

Now that the legal basis of segregation is being undercut, it is highly important for the Southern churches and their educational agencies to seek to establish a broad moral basis for a non-segregated society. Otherwise, the resulting changes in the South's social structure may well produce dangerous interracial tension.

Fortunately, a growing number of Southern Christians have been anticipating the new order, and thus have been actively cultivating those moral and spiritual attitudes that would enable the South to make its transition peacefully and constructively. If, therefore, this region's racial caste-patterns should be non-violently discarded, it will be because internal nurture, as well as external pressure, has been operative. The accruing result demonstrates, admirably, that in any complex process of social change both internal and external forces must be wisely coordinated and applied.

The fact that the South will generally accept the new social patterns in a spirit of good will is itself a splendid prophecy of its more creative role in the life of the Nation. In truth the South, at mid-century, is burgeoning with promise, and it bids fair to be, during the next half-century, the American area of greatest economic, social and cultural development. Obviously this constitutes a great challenge to the churches of the South. To meet this challenge they must be both spiritually renewed and ecumenically united.

Mrs. R. W. BRANNOCK AND M. Z. RHODES HAVE LONG SERVICE WITH LOCAL CHURCH.

By A. C. SNOW.

"Music is the universal language of mankind." Two members of the First Congregational Christian Church of Burlington will agree with this expression by Longfellow and have spent more than a quarter of a century in the interpretation of this language for the congregation.

Mrs. Robert W. Brannock, 202 Aycock Avenue and M. Z. Rhodes, 500 Central Ave., have faithfully served together for more than 25 years as organist and choir director at the church. During this time they have watched the faces of the congregation change and have said "hello" and "farewell" to seven ministers. Yet they themselves have become an inspiring and essential part of the church services.

Working together for more than 25 years without a single disagreement is a tribute to unusual personalities and noble character. Each person gives the other the credit for this harmonious relationship, which has resulted in faithful and beautiful choral accomplishments.

According to Mrs. Brannock and Mr. Rhodes, no mishaps have occurred during their tenure of service at the church.

"I have one complaint," Mrs. Brannock said jokingly, "M. Z. sometimes takes the Hallelujah Chorus too fast, and it's a job to keep with him on the organ."

"But you always manage to be there at the finish," smiled Mr. Rhodes.

Mrs. Brannock and Mr. Rhodes directed the first choir in Burlington to give the complete performance of Handel's "Messiah," as well as Steiner's "Crucifixion."

Mrs. Brannock has also had experience in choir direction and conducted the church choir two years before Mr. Rhodes came to the church.

"Directing that choir was the hardest struggle of my life," she said.

Mrs. Brannock, wife of a local dentist, has served the church as organist for more than 30 years. The rich, full peals from the organ fill the church every Sunday morning, and the music truly flows from faithful and experienced hands.

The organist began contributing her musical talent to the church when, as a 12-year-old girl, she played for the Sunday school services. Having completed her musical education in 1920, she began playing for regular services that same year when the organ was installed, and since that time has not been absent more than 15 times due to illness.

During the 30 years in which she has played for 58 weddings and approximately 240 funerals, Mrs. Brannock has been present for all Easter and Christmas services except for those during a two-year leave of absence.

Commenting on the weddings, she said: "In the 58 weddings in which I have played the organ, not one marriage has failed. Of the 58 couples, not one has been divorced."

Graduating from Burlington High School in 1917, Mrs. Brannock has the distinction of being the only person in the area who was awarded a High School diploma in piano by the Burlington Board of Education.

Mrs. Brannock continued her education at Salem College in Winston-Salem and was graduated from Elon College in 1920. During her years of service at the First Christian Church, she has trained other organists, including Mrs. Donnell Tate, Mrs. Herman Truitt and Miss Rebecca Lightbourne. She is also a charter member of the Burlington Music Club.

For the past 25 years, quiet, friendly M. Z. Rhodes has slipped into the choir loft of the First Christian Church to conduct the group through the musical services.

During this time Mr. Rhodes, a graduate of the Shennandoah Conservatory of Music in Virginia and a graduate of Elon College, class of 1923, has never been absent for a service on account of illness. Through the years, the ever-changing pastors have been sure of one person to preach to, as Mr. Rhodes has faithfully attended all services, morning, evening or special.

Serving overseas in World War I, Mr. Rhodes was the director of the 116th U. S. Infantry Band and prior to his job with the U. S. Post Office in Burlington, he served for 13 years at the Burlington High School as glee club, band and orchestra director. He directed the Burlington High School orchestra which won its class championship in 1929.

His other services include the work as director of the Burlington Community Chorus in several of its Christmas concerts. He was also director of the American Legion Band here last summer and toured the state with the well-trained and admired American Legion Drum and Bugle Corps.

Mrs. Brannock and Mr. Rhodes both have one child, Betty Rhodes, 13 years old, is a music student at Southern Studios, while Anne Brannock, tenth-grade student at Burlington High, is studying music under Fletcher Moore of Elon College. Both are following in the footsteps of their talented parents and plan musical careers.

Rev. Henry Robinson, the present pastor of the church, is appreciative of his faithful helpers. Speaking of Mrs. Brannock and Mr. Rhodes, he said:

"They have given a beautiful interpretation of church music that has added greatly to the sense of worship in the church. In their faithfulness and dependability, they have done much to encourage talent and leadership in several organizations in the community as well as the church and have inspired the younger set to divert their talents to the ministry of music."

In the flow of music, the universal language of mankind, which has reached backward through the past 25 years and continues in the same spirit of humble service and love of music, these two have won the respect and admiration of their fellow church members and friends.

In the Sunday morning services, the evening worships, or the Tuesday night choir practices, the music from the First Christian Church convinces one that music might well be said to be "the speech of angels."—Burlington Times-News.

THE WORD "FRIEND."

The word "friend" has a double meaning. My friend is a man to whom I can open my heart, also a man who is kind and friendly towards me; the term always implies a certain amount of intimacy. The Jews called the Lord "the friend of sinners," and truly He was so. He called His disciples His friends, because He had communicated to them all that the Father had given Him. Any familiarity with the Lord impresses me painfully, and I consider it carnal even when it is linked with piety. He is not ashamed to call us brethren. In this last sense it is quite improper to imply the word to Jesus, and to call Him our Brother. But if we say, what a wondrous Friend of sinners Jesus was when He gave Himself upon the cross, or, what a Friend of sinners is the Jesus who ever lives to intercede for us, the thought assumes quite another character, but we must avoid a freedom which is not becoming.—J. N. Darby.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

ENDOWED EDUCATION.

The following is the preamble to the President's report to the Board of Trustees of Elon College at its annual meeting, May 29, 1950:

"Modern education efficiently and effectively administered is not self-supporting. It must be supported in part or in whole either by private or public funds. If by private funds, the college is known as a private institution. If by public funds or tax money it is considered to be a public institution. The curriculum of both institutions may be the same basically. The private school may enjoy more freedom and have a richer and wider range of studies. Students for both institutions come from the same communities and in many instances from the same homes. They return from college to serve the same communities and the same country. The main distinguishing features are in the breadth and richness of the curriculum and in the sources of support, chiefly, the sources of support. For all intents and purposes the privately-supported college is just as much a public institution as the tax or state-supported college. In reality, they both serve the public. Taxes are levied and collected without respect of persons. Why should money so received be administered with prejudice? At any rate, both types of schools must find additional support either from private or public funds and in many instances today from both. Tax-supported schools seek private funds for numerous foundations or endowment, the income from which to be added to the current fund treasury. The so-called private college has not as yet been permitted to seek its share of tax money for its support. The private schools in this country have been the precursors in the field of education, religion and morals. These institutions are the fruits of the church and they bear the evidences of sacrifice, integrity, and truth. They have been the continuing sources of freedom, the purifying forces of democracy, the feeders of our Christian faith and the invincible bulwarks of our American way of life. Their contributions are unmistakable and indispensable for this day or any day that shall come after this. Yet, these schools are facing rough seas and future sailings will be hazardous. Their safety is with the church and their support is in the hands of Christian laymen. In the beginning these two forces built the Christian college that served all interests. In these days of dire need and painful uncertainty, the same two forces, the church and Christian laymen, must come to the rescue and make our colleges secure and safe."

INCREDIBLE STORY.

Did you read the almost incredible story of the Elon College class of 1910? That each one of its eleven members is still living—forty years after graduating from college? That fact does not make them old, but it is unusual to find a group intact after four decades—four decades in which two World Wars have come, in which the automobile has developed not only into a major means of transportation but a major cause of death, in which there have been epidemics and many another hazard to life.

It is true that the original group was comparatively small, but how many families living in 1910 have all their members living in 1950? And how many graduating classes, of colleges and of high schools, have not lost a member in 40 years? Your observation, as you reflect upon these questions, will show that an experience such as that of the Elon class is the exception. It would be interesting to hear of other groups which have survived intact 40 years.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

When the church founded Elon College in 1889, it committed the membership of the church then and for all time, or so long as the college lasts, to the support of Elon College, financially and otherwise.

There are certain expenses that are continuous. You meet them one year—the same is to be met the next year. This is true with the expenses of a home and a family, with the expenses of a church and a school. It is certainly true with our college. If the college grows, and grow it must, the expenses of operation increase. We should not be disturbed by this fact since the church itself has increased enormously since the founding of the college. The growth of the church is dependent upon its quality of leadership. The college takes pride in the fact that it has had a part in training the leadership for the church and providing for it vision and inspiration. The growth of the college and the church have been mutually dependent. Its further advancement must likewise be mutually dependent. As the church increases its support of the college, the college will increase its contribution to the church. When the church founded the college, it meant for it to be the training ground for its leadership. The church continues to look to the college, and to no other institution within its bounds for the discovery, the development, and the training of its leaders. The college appreciates this fact, and endeavors, year after year, to measure up to any expectation that the church may have.

MY FIRST BED-TIME PRAYER.

What man or woman today does not remember this—their first-time baby prayer. Face washed and hands clean, dressed in a little gown of white we knelt at mothers knee:

Now I lay me down to sleep.
I pray thee Lord my soul to keep.
If I should die before I wake
I pray thee Lord my soul to take.

This ended our playtime days. Though tired, it would have been difficult to go to sleep without saying this little evening prayer. But in these days of moving pictures depicting sudden death under tragic circumstances another question has arisen. What thoughts should the little one take to bed with him? Certainly not that of dying in his sleep, or the remotest possibility of it. Tomorrow his playmates will be waiting for him, and another day of frolic and fun. Little ones look forward to sleepy time with its bed-time stories about the fairies who with the wave of a magic wand could bring to pass the desires of any childish heart. There were no kindergartens a half-century ago when some of us were young. Today the teaching of little tots how to play, how to give and take, how to be beautifully unselfish has much to do with determining the kind of mothers and fathers the future will have to depend upon.

Psychologists tell us that the thoughts we take to sleep with us have

Christian Missions

At Home and Abroad

AMBASSADORS OF CHRIST.

By ALDEN E. MATTHEWS*

Throughout the history of the Christian Church men and women have answered the call to serve as missionaries. The call to missionary service has come to different people in different ways. Some have heard the call to heal disease, spread medical knowledge, and raise the level of public health. Some have heard and answered the call to teach: to combat the evils of ignorance and superstition. Some have answered the call to serve their brothers by giving them the technical knowledge and skills which can make possible a more satisfying standard of living. The specific calls to missionary service are as numerous as the missionaries themselves.

My personal call to the mission field came partly as a call to serve as an ambassador of Christ. The phrase has become rather hackneyed and trite, but of late this aspect of the job of a missionary has become for me increasingly meaningful and important. Accordingly, I would like to share some things on what it means to be an ambassador of Christ in China today.

One of the definitions of the word ambassador in my dictionary reads as follows: "A minister accredited to a foreign government as the official representative of his own sovereign"—Christ. A missionary is a minister accredited to a foreign church as the official representative of his own church.

Whereas, this definition did not fit the missionary to China a hundred, or even fifty, years ago, it is growing more and more clear to me that the missionary to China today is becoming increasingly just what that definition indicates: A minister accredited to a Chinese church as the official representative of his own church.

Missions in Transition.

From what I have heard, seen, and read I should judge that the missionary of the past was a different sort of creature. He was primarily the carrier of Christianity to an unchurched land. He was the agent of Christian service and the initiator of a Christian church in a land where the church was unknown. He was the administrator of the money sent with him to make his work possible. He was often the director of whatever work was carried on to propagate the gospel. He was usually the final authority on matters educational, medical, or ecclesiastic. In terms our Marxist friends like to use, he was the cultural imperialist who imposed on the Chinese people foreign medicine, foreign education, and a foreign church.

This foreign medicine, education, and religion were too expensive for the Chinese pocketbook and had to be heavily subsidized from a foreign purse with the missionary holding the purse-strings.

In China today, though he still exists to some extent, this type of missionary is an anachronism. He is not wanted and will not fit.

Ever since 1927 there has been much talk of the church becoming self-governing, self-supporting, and self-propagating. The fact that China is still unable to afford foreign-style medicine, education and religion is one of the horns of our dilemma. The other horn is the fact that missionary control of foreign funds will no longer be tolerated. The Chinese Church is becoming self-governing.

We might compare this with the relationship between the child in his late teens and his parents. The former, while usually unable to support himself financially, is able to compel his parents to respect his independence of thought and action. Thus the parent churches continue to give financial assistance to the younger church in China, but must recognize the latter as independent and self-governing.

This is not unwelcome news to those concerned in the missionary enterprise. Far from it! It is a long-standing dream finally coming true. But partly because it has been a dream for so long, it is hard for realization to sink in. At last the missionary has become a Christian ambassador: the duly accredited representative of one church sent to another church.

What Are the Functions of the Ambassador of Christ?

1. The first function of the Christian ambassador is as a minister.

And that means to minister. Whether it be in the ministry of healing, the ministry of teaching, the ministry of music, the social ministry, or the ministry of the gospel, the first task of the missionary is to minister.

The verb to minister is not a passive verb; it demands an object. The Christian ambassador must minister to something or someone. We are ministers to the Chinese people and to the Chinese Church. It is a good thing for the missionary to remind himself of this fact. We are not invited here or sent here to run things, to lord it over anyone. We, like the Son of Man, are come to minister, not to be ministered unto. To minister, then, is to serve: to serve the Chinese people and to serve the Chinese church. This calling, however glorious, is a humble calling; a calling for humble people.

To serve is to be a servant, to obey orders. At this point I fear we are inclined to let ourselves off too easily. We like to think that we take our orders from God. So we should, but that is only part of what is required of the Ambassador of Christ. History and our own experience tell us clearly that some of the least humble men the world has known have been those who took their orders directly from God.

Ministers to the Chinese people and the Chinese Church are called upon to serve them: to take orders from the Chinese and from the Chinese Church. We are not to serve God by directing the activities of the Chinese. We must serve God and the Chinese by obeying the will of God and the orders of the Chinese Church. And let the man be very careful indeed to whom it appears that the will of God and the will of the Chinese Church do not agree.

2. A second function indicated in our definition of the ambassador of Christ is an official representative. As he ministers to the Chinese Church and the Chinese people the missionary must not, in fact cannot, forget that he is a representative.

Perhaps others have been as naively idealistic as I and tried to identify themselves with the Chinese people and the Chinese Church. My experience has been that such identification is impossible. Whether he likes it or not, the missionary is a representative. He represents the church and the people by whom he is sent.

This realization has been brought home to me in the last few weeks, and most forcefully in a rather traumatic experience last week. In a meeting of the Fukien Christian Council I spoke up in objection to the Church official-

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Mrs. O. H. Paris, Convention President, will have a special part in the "Style Show in Materials for Women's Groups," to be held at the General Council in Cleveland, Ohio, June 22. All women are invited to this program, and popular fashions in presenting programs will be shown. Mrs. Paris will present ideas on using programs on the Mission Themes.

* * *

The women of the Winston-Salem Church have started a fund for a new church building. The idea for really starting the fund came from Mrs. Joe R. Sharpe, Sr., though several people had suggested that one be started. Mrs. Sharpe decided that she wanted a new church so badly that she could start a fund herself, but all the women decided they would like to help. They have begun by selling metal sponges, and hope to do other things later.

PLEASANT RIDGE WOMEN HAVE ANNIVERSARY PARTY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Pleasant Ridge Church observed the twenty-fifth anniversary of their organization, at the church on April 4, with a Silver Tea.

Twenty-five years ago, Rev. R. A. Whitten was serving the church as pastor, and Mrs. Whitten organized the Woman's Missionary Society on April 9, 1925, with twelve charter members, five of whom were present at this meeting—five are still enrolled and three of them still active members of the present organization. Mrs. A. B. McFarland was the first president. Mrs. C. B. Higgins, Mrs. W. C. Nelson, Mrs. P. G. Flemming and Miss Florence Crutchfield each served as president during the next twelve years, Mrs. McFarland serving a longer term of years than any other in the life of the society. We now have two circles with combined membership of twenty-seven.

Guest speakers were Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, who gave an interesting review of our study book, Which Way Japan, and Rev. Joseph Moulton, who gave a very inspiring and instructive account of the work in India. After the program, we enjoyed hearing Mr. Moulton sing in the Indian language.

The Business Girls' Circle sponsored the Tea, and one of their members, Mrs. Nelson, gave the devotion.

There was a lovely two-tier birthday cake, with candles—and with that, tea, nuts and mints were served to the group. The offering was $17.10.

Both the first and the present president were wearing orchids for the occasion.

Mrs. Kermit Robinson is leader of the Business Girls' Circle. Their project is the improvement and maintenance of the cemetery, and they are doing a grand work there. They have made individual pledges and donations, secured some outside financial aid and "inspired" the men to help with the actual labor of seeding grass, planting shrubbery, etc.

Our pastor, Rev. W. E. Wisseman, was with us. We may be just a "side line" with him, but he is very good to us, and we greatly appreciate the interest he takes in the work of our church and community.

MRS. J. WRIGHT PEGRAM,
President.

LYNCHBURG HAS FAMILY LIFE PROGRAM.

The most outstanding program for the year in the Lynchburg (Va.) Women's Missionary Society was the local May Fellowship meeting, which furnished inspiration and help in planning Family Worship in the home. This program began with a covered dish supper, followed by group singing. A splendid talk on Family Life by Mrs. Allan Stanger, a Young People's Worker of the Disciples Church, was greatly enjoyed. A dramatization of three types of Family Worship was put on by the Education Committee of the church. The meeting was closed with games suitable for use in the home including all members of the family.

The group cooperated with the Lynchburg Council of Church Women in the services for May Fellowship Day, as well as the ones for World Day of Prayer and World Community Day.

Mrs. Joseph Hunter, a returned missionary and member of the Disciples Church, spoke at our February meeting, on her experience in Japan.

A generous package of cloth and other items was sent to Miss Angie Crew in Japan. Also, two bundles of "Pieces for Peace" were sent.

The Cradle Roll program was carried out efficiently by Mrs. Harold Brooks, having meetings with the parents at Christmas and Easter.

Mrs. S. R. Gay taught our Bible Course in her usual inspiring manner.

MRS. W. T. DUNN, SR.,
President.

CYPRESS CHAPEL LADIES AID HAS REGULAR MEETING.

Mrs. Frank Harrell thanked the society for the cards sent her while she was a patient in the hospital. Mrs. Rountree read a card from Mrs. Ferrell thanking the society for the show given her recently.

The following committees were appointed for the coming month. Mrs. J. P. Byrd and Mrs. Norfleet Brinkley, flowers; Mrs. W. L. Brinkley and Mrs. Horace Lily, visiting; Mrs. Floyd Brinkley and Mrs. A. J. Rountree, program; Mrs. Clarence Bunch, devotionals.

The nominating committee presented the following slate of officers to go in effect at the July meeting: president, Mrs. W. C. Knight; vice-president, Mrs. Wesley Brinkley; secretary, Mrs. Henry Rountree; assistant secretary, Mrs. W. N. Beale; treasurer, Mrs. J. P. Byrd, assistant treasurer, Mrs. Earl Bunch; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Earl Bunch.

The club voted to change officers every two years. Mrs. Marian King presented a program with Mrs. U. B. Harrell reading "Father Forgets," Mrs. J. P. Byrd reading "God's Dreams," Mrs. Earl Bunch reading "He Stumped His Toe." Mrs. U. B. Harrell closed the meeting with a prayer. The July meeting will be held with Mrs. G. C. Mann.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

HOW MARY MADE FRIENDS.

Mary was a very fortunate little girl. She lived in a nice home with a lovely lawn all around and plenty of room to play. She had any number of toys, but still she was not quite happy. "I don't see," she said to her Aunt Mary one day, "why all the children will stay over at Jane's and play with her so much more than they will play with me. Her dolls are not half so nice as mine, and she has hardly any toys. Besides, she isn't very pretty and her hair is as straight as a stick. And look how much room we have here."

Now Aunt Mary loved her little name-sake very much, and she hated to see her unhappy. So she was sorry to have to say what she felt was the real reason that Mary was alone so much of the time. "You know," she said slowly, stroking her little niece's bright curls, "straight hair does not necessarily make one unattractive. Haven't you often heard grandma say that 'pretty is, as pretty does'? Maybe Jane is nicer about letting the other children play with her dolls and her toys than you are. Does Jane ever say 'Don't take that carriage. That's mine'? I don't believe she would ever say to the other children, 'You'll have to play the game that I want, because aren't we playing on my lawn?'"

Then Mary's little head began to hang down a bit. She remembered having said almost exactly those words. And she remembered, too some things she felt sure Aunt Mary didn't know about, how she had hid candy and just slipped bites of it when the others were around and she thought they weren't looking, and other things like that.

The she glanced up. "Aunt Mary," she asked slowly, "do you think if I wouldn't be selfish that the other children would like better to play with me?"

"Well," answered her aunt, "I couldn't be sure, but I don't think selfish people have so many friends and they are never as happy as their unselfish friends even if they have ever so many more toys."

"All right," said Mary, "you don't know, and I don't know, but I'm going to find out if being selfish has kept me from having friends."

She was as good as her word and often after that when she wanted to ride her bicycle herself she would remember just in time and say, "Let's take turns riding so we can all have fun." She learned to play the games that her playmates wanted, and she was surprised to find that very often they would make her choose a game. She found, too, that a little bit of candy shared with her friends tasted better than lots more eaten "on the sly."

It was not long until the children all came to Mary's lawn to play, Jane along with the rest. Before Mary was through her lunch, she would hear "Ma-ree," and she never more had to beg her friends to come over and play with her.—The Christian-Evangelist.

PREPARING TO TRAVEL.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Mother, how soon shall we be there?—How far is it to Grandmother's house?—Why doesn't the train go faster?—Do you think Grandmother is waiting at the station for us now?"

In the Pullman section across from me a restless little boy kept plying his mother with questions. Always she answered patiently, trying to keep the little fellow occupied watching interesting things he could see from the car window, but she did not give him anything to do.

Knowing that a small child needs to have some activity, I was rummaging in my handbag to see if I could find anything that would help, when another tiny boy came slowly down the aisle, carrying an inflated balloon. Shyly he placed the toy in the other child's hands and then backed away toward his own seat.

My little neighbor relaxed as he grasped the cord attached to the balloon and watched the bright plaything floating above his head, while his mother smiled her thanks to the other mother who was seated a little distance away.

Within an hour the boy was back—this time with a set of animal-picture cards. "For you," he said, handing the cards to his new friend.

"Thank you," the little boy gasped, and "Thank you," his mother echoed, "but don't you want to keep these cards for yourself? Ronnie can play with them and then bring them back to you."

"Mother said I could give your boy some cards," the small donor explained before retreating.

Very happily my little neighbor arranged and rearranged the pictured animals on the car seat in front of him, while his mother rested.

Some time later I looked across and saw that the other boy had again returned, this time bringing his mother with him. The two mothers were quietly talking while the children played with some miniature cars made of soft rubber. Bits of conversation floated across to me, and I discovered that one mother had given much time and thought to preparing to travel with her child, while the other had not realized such preparation was necessary.

"I was brought up on a farm," the latter mother was saying. "Ronnie is makin his first trip to visit my parents and my old home. He has always been interested in trains, and I thought that actually going on a train to visit his grandparents would be such a delight that he would not need any other form of entertainment."

"One of my friends who has done a great deal of traveling helped me prepare for our trip," the visiting mother explained. "If you want me to, I'd be glad to pass on her suggestions to you."

"Oh, yes, I'd like to hear them," my neighbor agreed.

"First of all," the visitor began, "children need quiet toys on the train. Horns and noisemakers are obviously out—for the sake of the other passengers. Then, they need toys that are soft and smooth, so they won't be hurt if the train jerks them about. Of course, one cannot bring anything that is bulky, but I have found that children very much enjoy playing with small toys."

"I bought an inexpensive lightweight bag for James to carry by himself. We are on our homeward journey, and he has spent hours just packing that bag, then taking the things out and putting them all back again. I chose a small bag for two reasons—a big bag would be too heavy for him to carry, and I found that it isn't best to give him all the toys for the journey at one time. It's nice to have some surprises; in fact, I have a few things tucked away for tomorrow that James will be glad to share with Ronnie."

"We do appreciate your kindness," my neighbor declared, "and next time we're going to be better prepared before we entrain."

JONAH LEARNS GOD'S MISSIONARY PURPOSE.

LESSON XIII—JUNE 25, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Salvation is of the Lord.—Jonah 2:9.

LESSON: Jonah 3:3-6; 4:1-11.

DEVOTIONAL READINGS Ephesians 3:14-21.

"Jonah and the Whale."

For many people the little book of Jonah is simply the story of "Jonah and the Whale,"—the strange story of how when a man was thrown overboard of desperate sailors on a storm-tossed sea, he was swallowed by a whale. (The Bible does not call it a whale, it simply says that God had prepared a "great fish" to swallow up Jonah.) After living for three days in the belly of this great fish, Jonah was cast up on dry land again. That is about all that the average man knows about this meaningful and magnificent book. Alas that this is true.

The Story in Brief.

The story is simply told in a straightforward manner. It is the story of a man who received a divine commission or command to go preach to a great city, the capital of the great Assyrian Empire. It was this very Assyrian Empire that had ruthlessly overrun the Jewish nation and had carried most of its treasures and most of its leading people into captivity. It was a city notorious for its wickedness. Small wonder that this Jewish preacher had no stomach for this disagreeable task. He felt in his heart that nothing was too bad for these people and he would have been delighted to learn that Jehovah had visited His wrath upon them even as He did upon Sodom and Gomorrah. And here he was commissioned to go and preach to these hated, wicked foreigners. It was too much for Jonah, and in order to get away from it all he decided to get on a ship and make a trip to Spain. He was not the first man who tried to run away from the call of God. Nor was he the last. Neither was he the first nor the last to find that one cannot get away from God.

After his harrowing and humbling experience on and in the sea, Jonah again received a divine call to service, and this time he obeyed the call. He set forth for Nineveh and boldly entered into that great and wicked city and began to preach. His message evidently was simple—"Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown." But it was powerful in its results. The people were put under conviction and repented wholeheartedly and in a wholesale manner. Even the king and the nobles became penitent, and the king proclaimed a fast for the entire city. It should have been a heart-warming experience for the prophet to see a whole city turning from sin and certain doom unto God and salvation.

But not so. That man of God actually sulked and became angry. He went outside the city to see just what would happen, and he told the Lord about his feelings in no uncertain terms. In fact he told the Lord that he was afraid that was just what would happen, and that was why he did not want to come in the first place. Strange as it may seem, this petulant, pouting prophet said that he would rather die than to see Nineveh spared.

But God dealt patiently and kindly with the embittered prophet. He first of all caused a gourd to grow up, which with its large leaves gave shelter to the prophet as he sat under the rude shelter he had fashioned out of boughs and sticks. Then a worm gnawed at the gourd and it quickly withered and died, leaving the poor fellow exposed both to the sun and to the hot wind that blew across the desert. That did it. The prophet blew up. He got into a great dither. "Look here, little boy," said the Lord, "you are kind of excited about this gourd aren't you, this gourd on which you did not put any labor or have anything to do with its growth, this gourd that came up in a night and likewise perished in a night? Excited about it, eh? Well, how do you think that I feel about this great city with its teeming thousands, including its one hundred twenty thousand small children, and with its cattle?" "Do you think that as God I am not concerned about these? Do you think that I want them to perish? Do you think that I do not care?" The story ends there. But we can readily surmise that its lesson was not lost on the prophet.

The Moral.

The story is a parable of the care and concern of God for all peoples, even wicked people, and of His willingness to forgive and of His eagerness to have them return unto Him. The story is an arraignment of the Hebrew people. God had chosen them as His instrument through whom He could make his saving grace known to all the nations of the earth. But the Jewish people had become proud, narrow, provincial, bigoted, self-righteous, exclusive, selfish. They believed that salvation was only for the Jews. They had nothing of the missionary spirit. They had failed in their divine mission. This little book was an effort on the part of God to awaken them from their lethargy, to arouse them from their self-complacency, to inspire them to take up their missionary calling.

There are, of course many truths in the little book. Dr. Jefferson gives them in brief as follows: 1. Do not be a snob. 2. Do not hate any race or nation, no matter what it has done. 3. Do not be disagreeable because you are uncomfortable. 4. Believe in the lovingkindness and infinite tenderness of God.

This ancient story has point for us today. There are too many people who do not believe in "foreign missions." too many people who think that the proper slogan is "America for Americans." This book calls for widening horizons, and stronger purposes to carry on a world-wide missionary endeavor.

AMBASSADORS OF CHRIST.

ly and formally recording itself as one of the sponsors of the so-called "peace manifesto" used in the campaign for signatures in all party-line countries. Believing that I was thinking and speaking only for the church and as a church member, I objected to the Church compromising itself under pressure and becoming a tool of communism. The response to my remarks showed clearly, and to my shame, that they were received by some as the thoughts of a representative of another nation and race.

Thus I learned what I should have realized before: that the missionary is inevitably a representative. Whether he himself is conscious of it or not he represents the church and the people by whom he is sent. He is a representative of the good and of the bad in his own church, his own nation, and his own culture.

3. A third function of the ambassador of Christ comes from another dictionary definition of an ambassador: "An official messenger." Missionaries are official messengers.

In my experience this function is the one most easily and most often neglected. But that does not decrease its importance. The Christian ambassador should never become so absorbed in what is happening right before him and around him that he forgets his duties as a messenger. The missionary is called upon to serve the church to which he is sent and also the church he represents by being a good messenger. In speech, in writing, in personal living he is asked to relate the Chinese Church to the sending church. To put it bluntly, this includes writing letters.

The Christian messenger must take messages both ways. He owes it to the church people in China and to the church people back home to keep messages going back and forth in order to promote the mutual affection and understanding so essential for real peace.

Recently the Associate General Secretary of the Church of Christ in China, now home on furlough, resigned his position. The response of the CCC was to invite him to return to China as Corresponding Secretary. There, in a nutshell, is recognition of the importance of the Christian ambassador's service as a messenger.

In conclusion let me add the note that the Christian ambassador in China today as minister, as representative, and as messenger must be able and willing to adapt to changing conditions of the present and the future. He can no longer think in the old ways. He cannot always use the traditions of the past as his guide. He must be prepared to abandon old forms of service that were formerly good and apparently indispensable to take up new forms of service that meet contemporary needs in a changing nation and in a changing world.

May Christ find it possible to teach, guide and use his ambassadors to His glory in this new age.

Lee Norfleet who has been serving as corresponding secretary. Miss Norfleet resigned on account of illness. Mrs. Allen Piland, Mrs. Carroll and Mrs. Robert Warren will attend the School of Missions to be held at Elon College next week.

Mrs. W. John Norfleet, Mrs. David Howell and Mrs. Harry Davidson were appointed as a menu committee to plan for the Holland Ruritan dinner to be served by the ladies of Holy Neck in July.

The society voted to contribute $15 on the expenses of children who will attend the Junior High camp to be held at the YMCA camp at Lynnhaven. Mrs. John Norfleet conducted the worship service and the program was presented by Mrs. George D. Parker with Mrs. Luther B. Grice, Mrs. Allen Piland, Mrs. Clarence Saunders and Mrs. James A. Hareum taking. The topic was "Our Robbery of American Migrants."

The society voted to support the home mission project which is Mi-grants and also to make a contribution to a foreign mission project in Japan.

A memorial will be given in Memory of Mrs. M. J. March, a former member of the society who passed away recently.

Unless man has the wit and the grit to build his civilization on something better than material power, it is surely idle to talk of plans for a stable peace.—Selected.

The Orphanage

MY DEAR FRIENDS:

Flowers are beautiful and sweet and are a lovely way to express sympathy to bereft neighbors and friends. However, there are an increasing number of people who, recognizing their perishableness are sending memorial gifts to orphanages, instead. We have prepared a beautifully engraved card which will be mailed immediately to the bereft family showing from whom the gift is sent and in memory of whom. On it will be found the following original verse:

Noble Lives Aren't Ended.

Noble lives aren't ended
But glorified above,
When their kindness is extended
In thoughtful acts of love;
The blessed art of giving,
When heavenly life is won,
Is passed on to the living
By thoughtful deed they've done.

And loved ones show the measure
Of what their lives were worth,
By passing on the treasure
They've loaned to them on earth;
And they have the joy of knowing
That those here left behind
Have learned the art of showing
Their ways of being kind.

By sending such a memorial you can really "lay up treasure in heaven" because you have invested in a life—the life of some homeless child who by your help may arrive after a useful life into the life eternal. We have evidence that many persons would like such gifts to be made at the time of their going rather than flowers. Bereft families have indicated their joy at such thoughtfulness. You will find on this page a convenient form to use in sending in such gifts.

This week eight Burlington and Graham dentists cleaned and filled teeth for forty-one of our children. Another date is being set for the others. This is a generous and gracious thing for these fine dentists to do, and they cannot be thanked too much.

Thank you everyone for your gifts this week.

ALCOHOL, WASHINGTON, BLAB-BERMOUTHS, WAR.

Currently, a remarkable open letter to the President of the United States, signed by Billy Rose, is appearing in newspapers throught the country which carry his column, "Pitching Horseshoes."

Mr. Rose makes the statement that an editor of a national magazine with more than 15 million readers (is there more than one such magazine?), not so long ago was present at a dinner party in Georgetown—a community of the city of Washington—and over a post-prandial brandy, was told by a "high ranking official" just how many atom bombs the United States has, where they are stored, and the security measures effective in that area. Fortunately, remarks Mr. Rose, the editor in question is a man of responsibility and discretion. He continues, however that the recipient of this information is of the opinion that Washington is currently "a-bursting with blabbermouths" who, at the drop of a daiquiri, are perfectly ready to "blurt out" classified information to anyone who cares to listen, "including those who cash their pay checks in the First National Bank of Moscow." Mr. Rose concludes his letter with a postscript that calls attention to the fact that the per capita consumption of liquor in Washington is greater than it is in any State of the Union. The damage which has been done to this country, and is now being done to this country by alcohol consumption on the leadership level, constitutes a peril difficult to over-estimate.

Alcoholism is not the alcohol problem—it is only one phase of it, a relatively small phase of it. More important is the fact that the consumption of alcohol causes "blabber- mouths," that persons in a places of responsibility are by it made irresponsible, that it results in wrong political and

SMITH.

WHEREAS, God in His infinite wisdom and goodness called Oscar Frommell Smith from his earthly home on May 4, 1950, and,

WHEREAS, he was a member of Rosemont Christian Church for 47 years, joining the Church as a boy 11 years of age, and,

WHEREAS, he was a faithful and loyal member for many years, serving as a teacher in the Sunday School; as Chairman of the Finance Committee, as Chairman of the Building Committee when the present building was erected and when the parsonage was built, and at the time of his death a member of the Planning Committee for Sunday School Extension, and,

WHEREAS, Mr. Smith gave abundantly to the Church not only of his time and talents as a lay-leader, but also liberally gave of his possessions to the Church "as the Lord prospered him," and,

WHEREAS, he not only contributed generously to the Church's benevolences and current expense, but also gave the Church its organ in memory of his Brother—Carl, its air-conditioning system, and with his wife, Mrs. Ruth McCloud Smith, gave the Church an electronic Carillon in memory of Mrs. B. F. (Aunt Betty) Gibson, and also made very substantial gifts to the present Building Fund for Sunday School expansion, and,

WHEREAS, his alert and keen mind, his penetrating insight, his deep understanding of human nature, and his abiding love of God and his fellow men drew to him many people for advice, consolation and help, which he very generously made available at all times to all people who came to see him, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of God, knowing that it was His divine will that he was taken from us.

2. That we keep in remembrance his life, his years of service to his Church and Community, his many acts of kindness and generosity, his wise counsel, and his noble example of sharing what he had with those less fortunate than himself.

3. That we have suffered an irreplaceable loss, but that we also feel he has entered that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, as a servant who was faithful over a few things, now ruler over many things.

4. That we express our heart-felt sympathy to his loved ones and we commend them to our Heavenly Father's love and comfort.

FIELDS.

Our Reidsville Church has suffered an irreplaceable loss. On Monday, May 7, Mrs. Carrie Fields went to her just reward. For nearly a year Mrs. Fields had been confined to her bed. But during all of her intense suffering her faith never weakened, nor did her hope grow dim.

For years Mrs. Fields, better and affectionately known as "Ma" by all who knew her, was a pillar of the Reidsville Church. She was active and interested in everything, a deaconess, a Sunday School teacher and the president of the Women's Auxiliary. But not only was she active and interested in her own church, she was interested in the conference and the whole and greater church. This was evidenced by the numbers from other churches who attended her funeral.

Mrs. Fields is survived by two children, Rev. Clyde Fields of Ramsuer, and Mrs. Charles Newman of Raleigh and two sisters of Reidsville.

Mrs. Fields was buried from her church Tuesday afternoon, May the 9, with her Pastor, Rev. Tucker G. Humphries, officiating. And as he pronounced the benediction he well said: "Well done thou good and faithful servant."

military decision, and this at a time when even one wrong decision may mean disaster, final and complete.

The scientific principle involved is expressed thus:

"Alcohol successively weakens and suspends the hierarchy of functions of the brain, and therefore of the mind, in the order from above downward; that is to say in the inverse order of their development in the individual and in the race. For the emotional dispositions or capacities are a very ancient racial endowment and have their physiological seats in the basal ganglia, the lowest levels of the great brain, the part which alone is represented in the brains of the lower vertebrates. The higher intellectual faculties, on the other hand, are the latest acquired and are connected with the anatomically highest and last developed parts of the brain."

This is the effect of alcohol which is the all-important effect, and which has nothing to do with drunkenness, which, on the contrary, is brought about by the consumption of relatively small amounts of alcohol, such amounts as are commonly consumed at cocktail parties and dinners, where men meet other men for casual social talk.

It is a reasonable deduction from the known effect of alcohol as commonly consumed, that drinking may have been in large part responsible for the fundamental misconception at Yalta which has had such terrible results. With the international Communistic conspiracy, brutal and bloody beyond description, shutting off vast areas of the world from the light of freedom, closing the Baltic Sea to the Western nations, probing at the defense lines of free men with provocative aggressions, the time has come to call upon all men in places of political or military responsibility to adopt a policy of total abstinence from the use of alcohol as an inherent obligation of their position, in order that the nation may be wisely led in this time of increasing peril.—Deets Pickett.

Most children are afraid to sleep in the dark, especially in a room alone. They feel the need of a protective presence. "Now I lay me down to sleep" hardly suggests that kind of loving protection, for there's a chance that tomorrow may never come. We owe the best we have to the children God has given us.

The Loom of Life

All day, all night, I can hear the jar
 Of the loom of Life; and near and far
 It thrills with its deep and muffled sound,
 As the tireless wheels go always round.

Time, with a face like mystery
 And hands as busy as hands can be,
 Sits at the loom with its warp outspread,
 To catch in its meshes each glancing thread.

When shall this wonderful web be done?
 In fourscore years, perhaps—or one—
 Or tomorrow. Who knoweth? Not you nor I.
 But the wheels turn on and the shuttles fly.

Are we spinners of woof for this life-web—say?
 Do we furnish the weaver a thread each day?
 It were better, then, O my friend, to spin
 A beautiful thread than a thread of sin.

WHY I VOTED TO INCREASE THE SUBSCRIPTION PRICE OF THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

I voted to increase the subscription price of THE CHRISTIAN SUN because we were getting so much for so little. I considered the greatly increased prices I had to pay for my daily papers and magazines. Why should I not pay more for my church paper which has been delivered to me for the same price for a long time notwithstanding the increased cost of living, labor and materials? Take a look at THE CHRISTIAN SUN—the quality of paper used, the fine workmanship, and the inspiring messages that it brings to your homes each week. Where can you get so much for $3.00 per year or $5.00 for two years?

Don't let your subscription expire. Don't let THE SUN stop shining in your home. Urge others to subscribe for it, that they too may have "Christian Sunshine" in their homes.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

INCREASE IN PRICE OF THE CHRISTIAN SUN SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Effective July 1, 1950, the subscription price will be $3.00 or two years for $5.00.

Since 1844 THE CHRISTIAN SUN has been published by the Christians of the South. This paper is the only weekly religious paper now published by our denomination. THE CHRISTIAN SUN has perhaps been the most effective medium the Southern Convention and its institutions, boards and churches has had. The loss of THE CHRISTIAN SUN would bring great loss to the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, the Boards of Christian Education, Superannuation and Missions. The women's work and the work of our young people and laymen would likewise suffer greatly. The local churches would lose their most valuable medium of information. We cannot lose THE SUN.

For many years THE CHRISTIAN SUN has been a financial problem for the Board of Publications. Printing costs have increased substantially but an earnest effort has been made to keep the subscription price at $2.00 (the price of THE SUN for the past hundred years, while other periodicals have increased in price several times). At each session of the Southern Convention for the past six or eight years an increase in subscription price has been considered. At the 1950 session of the Convention there seemed to be no other way out. At the present time there is a deficit of over $1,000 on printing THE SUN, and the prospects for increased deficit caused the Convention to take action increasing the subscription price to $3.00 for one year, or $5.00 for two years. We believe the family of CHRISTIAN SUN readers will stand by THE CHRISTIAN SUN in this change. We hope no reader will let his subscription expire. We believe that with this increase in price plus the support from the Boards and Institutions of the Convention and the Conference Apportionment we will be able to prevent further deficits.

Please give your continued support to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Send your subscription of $3.00 for one year or $5.00 for two years to The Southern Convention Office, Elon College, North Carolina.

A NEW CHURCH AT BURLINGTON

The Mission Board with the cooperation of the First Christian Church of Burlington, N. C., on June 1 began the work preliminary to the organization of Beverly Hills Community Church (Congregational Christian). William T. Scott, Jr., a student at Yale Divinity School, is spending the summer months directing the work which will include a community survey, a vacation Bible school and directed recreation. It is expected that formal organization of the church will take place in the fall. This new work is being developed on spacious lots located in North Church Street and Friendly Road in Burlington. The site is a gift of Mr. D. R. Fonville, Sr., of our Burlington First Church, honoring the memory of his parents, Lindsey Jefferson Fonville and Sallie Walker Fonville. This new work gives great promise.

TOGETHER, WE DISCOVERED . . .

In Thomas Mann's great novel The Magic Mountain, an Italian political liberal and a Jesuit priest matched their wits and their faith to capture the soul of one young German, and symbolically the soul of all 19th century Europe. Published after the first World War, the story's scene was a tuberculosis sanitarium, high in the Swiss Alps. There sickness corroded all the characters as the conflict moved toward a tragi-comic climax.

That same sickness, physical and spiritual, has moved through Europe since the second World War. Years of wartime malnutrition have spawned in Germany a rapidly-progressing type of tuberculosis called, "Kallopierende Schwinvsucht." Hundreds of thousands affected since the war have six weeks to three months to live. There are no recoveries. For others affected with different kinds of tuberculosis, death comes more slowly, and recovery is possible.

Many pastors of Europe, like doctors, have had to stretch their working hours to the limit, and the work combined with poor food and housing has broken some of them in body and nearly broken them in spirit as well. Yet on these pastors depends in large measure the fate of Christian communities in many parts of Europe.

Shortly after the end of World War II in Europe, the World Council of Churches set up, as part of its program of relief and reconstruction, centers in Switzerland where ministers from Protestant and Orthodox churches throughout Europe could come to rest, to refuel their spirits, and heal their shattered bodies.

The tuberculosis sanitarium at Davos and Leysin on "magic mountains" in the Swiss Alps, have received European pastors, about twenty at a time, for treatment lasting usually three to six months. At Casa Locarno, near the Italian border on Lake Maggiore, twenty-four pastors at a time can spend four to six weeks in a rest cure of which many overworked pastors can only dream—plenty of food, sleep, sunshine, plenty of time to read, to think and to write.

For churchmen behind the iron curtain who cannot come to Switzerland and whose sickness and fatigue weigh them down, the World Council sends streptomycin and other drugs for the cure of tuberculosis. On doctor's written orders, shipments have been sent to pastors in Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Poland, Bulgaria and Roumania.

The whole health program of the Council is small—in view of the need, pathetically small. $80,000 a year is allotted out of the slender budget of the Council's Interchurch Aid department to carry on the work, both in Eastern Europe and in the "magic mountains" of Switzerland.

Yet on these mountains pastors have come to know, more clearly than they ever knew before, the meaning of that strange word—ecumenical. Writes a German pastor after his stay at Casa Locarno with pastors of many other denominations and nations; "Together we discovered the same Gospel, the truth of one Christ and one Kingdom."

From a Greek Orthodox Bishop—"In Casa Locarno, I first began to realize the impact of the ecumenical idea—to become aware of the spiritual unity of all Christians in Jesus Christ."

There were only two forces on Thomas Mann's Magic Mountain—political liberalism and authoritarian Catholicism. But perhaps on these other magic mountains another force is being created; an ecumenical force, out of sickness, tiredness and suffering; a force that, as neither liberalism or authoritarianism have been able to do, can fire the spirit of Europe.

CONSIDER THE CHURCHES IN BRITAIN

How fares British Christianity today? Is it true what they say about the churches and church attendance in Britain? If so, what are the reasons for this religious decadence? Is it apathy, atrophy or apostasy?

The Rev. R. David Say, Secretary of the British Council of Churches, is speaking in this country. Speaking during the Christian Convocation at Duke University, Mr. Say declared that the widely publicized decline in British Christianity has been arrested, and perceptible gains have been registered with valuable spiritual results.

It is difficult for us in America to comprehend the problems faced by the British churches. They still work under great difficulties. Fatigue, disillusionment, loss of property and leadership penalize the work of the church. Many churches were destroyed altogether, and others are now in the wrong places, since there has been such widespread changes in population. Time is required to redistribute such inadequate physical resources.

Mr. Say assures his American audiences that there are new signs of life in the British Churches. New communities of the Holy Spirit are being built. Education and evangelism are receiving new emphasis. Religion has resumed a place of importance in the universities. Religious broadcasting is a major agency in the religious renaissance. It is altogether reasonable to expect an acceleration of church life as a result of these interests and agencies.

The central emphasis in his message is concerned with the renewal of the life and leadership of the churches. Moreover, he adds, the movement toward cooperation is making considerable progress. The British churches are not content to remain on the receiving end of missions and philanthropy. They are assuming increasing responsibility for continental churches.

If the British churches, which have come up through great tribulation, evidence such marked progress, how strong and courageous should be our privileged churches in America!

DON'T SUBSCRIBE!

Come July first, the subscription price of this publication jumps to three dollars. Of course, it was slow jumping, but it is taking a mighty high jump when it does jump!

Don't subscribe; it isn't worth it. Three dollars? Brother, that's a lot of money. Why, three dollars will almost buy a shirt or a tank of gasoline, a roast of beef, or a leg of lamb. Money doesn't grow on trees you know, or does it? Do these people think subscribers are made of money? The idea of charging three dollars for one little subscription. Ridiculous!

People shouldn't spend their money carelessly. After all, it is true that the price of paper and printing have gone up—almost double, but church people shouldn't publish a paper for profit. The service-motive should predominate. Everything else should be forgotten. What we need is more faith.

Think how little you get for your money. They have cut it down now so there are only fifty issues a year. Why, there used to be fifty-two. The paper does have a variety of contributors—some of our ablest leaders write for it regularly. It does give us an intimate glimpse of many churches and institutions. It introduces us to many Christian leaders at home and abroad. We get into the maelstrom of missions, the calisthenics of Christendom and the etymology of ecumenicity.

Notwithstanding, the evidence to the contrary, three dollars is three dollars, and one cannot afford everything. After all, we can get along without a church paper. It's not like giving up smoking, the movies, or the funnies. Really, it just seems like three dollars is too much for a church paper. It has been published a half-century for two dollars a year. Why can't they go on just another half-century before changing so sudden-like? Don't subscribe. It isn't worth it.

Confidentially, there are yet a few days of grace. Subscriptions are received at two dollars until the end of June. There is just time to get your subscription or renewal in before the July deadline. Maybe it is worth two dollars. Maybe! At any rate, here's your last chance.

WHAT PRICE--CHRISTIAN SUN?

The Christian Sun has served the Church and the Southern Convention for 106 years. It has been a constant visitor and a faithful servant. Its services to the Church have meant information, efficiency, unity and progress. It would be difficult to determine what the Church would be if it were not for the weekly visits of our church paper. Through the paper, we learn of the plans, purposes and progress of other churches. We hear the united voices of the Church calling us to service and bidding us on.

When it came to the matter of founding and building a college, The Christian Sun espoused the cause of Christian higher education and challenged the Church to promote this cause.

Long before the Christian Orphanage was founded, The Sun sent forth appeals to the Church to give assistance to the fatherless and motherless of our constituency and of the various communities in which our Church had been established. Through the columns of The Sun, money was raised to begin this worthy undertaking.

THE SUN has been a missionary periodical since its founding. The voice of the Church has been heard through its columns calling on everyone to make his contribution so that the Gospel of Christ might go to the ends of the earth, and the kingdom of God might come in its fullness to all peoples.

For the last two biennial sessions of the Southern Convention we have been discussing the present and future of THE SUN. We have faced very frankly its financial difficulties. For a number of years the institutions and boards of the Church have been making generous contributions that THE SUN might continue to be published and circulated. At the recent session of the Convention, we faced the fact that with these subsidies, the income for THE SUN was not sufficient to meet the cost. It was recommended to the Convention, and the Convention voted that the price of THE SUN be increased to $3.00 per year or $5.00 for two years. This is a reasonable advance in price when you consider not only the cost of other papers and periodicals but the increase in personal funds—business salaries, etc. It is only fair and just that we pay more for our Church paper than we have been paying.

I was born and reared in Georgia. In 1904 I heard of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for the first time. It was an eight-page paper, the size of the average daily newspaper now. My father subscribed to THE SUN and paid $2.00 as the annual subscription. I believe that it has been $2.00 for the last 50 years. We should be ashamed of ourselves and apologetic for not increasing the price earlier. Some have suggested that we would lose half of the subscribers. I can not feel that we would lose any because of the advance in price. It is so reasonable and so necessary that I am sure that everyone will agree and will go along with the new subscription price. If you want a bargain, send $5.00 and the paper will come to you weekly for two long years. Let every present subscriber solicit one friend and the financing of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be secure.

A Statement of Faith*

By REV. HENRY E. ROBINSON.

I believe in God. I can accept a theologian's definition of God such as: God is a Spirit, infinite, eternal and unchangeable, in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth. These terms express the attributes of God in man's most exalted language. However, I must confess that the theologian's definition of God leaves God a hazy figure in my mind. Instinctively, I turn to the teachings of Jesus for a clearly defined picture. Jesus conceived of God as Father. God is a person, and as such communes with his children. He cares what happens to them. He watches over them and provides for their needs both physical and spiritual. Jesus' parable of the prodigal son throws more light on God's nature and his purposes toward man than any other revelation that has come to us. Man as the wayward son follows the devices of his own desires to inevitable despair and destitution. God as the loving Father eagerly awaits the day of the son's return to the family circle and rushes out to greet him, rejoicing that once again a child has sought his father's presence. This description of the character of God is satisfying because it touches our own experience at so many points. Their is another side of God's being, however, which must be recognized. It is God's otherness, that part of God which is ever over and beyond us which we cannot comprehend. In the Lord's Prayer Jesus taught his disciples to pray, "Our Father," then added, "who art in heaven." In this brief passage we perceive God's fatherhood and his otherness. We might think of "heaven" as perfection toward which we strive but never reach. God's "otherness" might be thought of as his creativity, purpose, order, morality, justice — those qualities which are incorporated in God's being in their perfect form. Thus man may know God and commune with him but must ever marvel at and be drawn to his perfection.

I believe in Jesus Christ. It is helpful for me to think of Jesus as the man of Nazareth who was born into this world, lived, taught, and was crucified. He was a man set in time and history about whom we have records and for whose deeds we have witnesses. The Christ is the living spirit of Jesus which is not bound by the limitations of time and space. The Christ is that which death could not hold and which rose victorious over death and the grave. The Christ lives today and stands at the door of every man's life seeking entrance that he might rule in every heart that will give him the place of authority. As we become followers of the way of life which the Christ brings we are called Christians after his name. It is my feeling that our religious thinking would be clarified at this point if we made such a distinction in the terms we applied to our Savior. Questions persist. How did Jesus differ from other men? Was he unique? Was he the final and ultimate revelation or may we expect another Messiah? Whether Jesus differed from other men in quality, I am unable to determine. That he differed from other men in degree is evident at every turn. Beyond all men of every age he possessed the power to know and to do God's will. This power made his life the answer to the prayer of humanity. This power has made it possible for him to rise above every accusation his enemies brought against him. Neither his own nor subsequent generations have been able to associate his life with sin. The suffering of the innocent to redeem the guilty is an ultimate in the moral realm. Beyond that one cannot go. The cross of Christ is final. Through his suffering we are saved. Through it we are made one with God. Those who turn away from the cross to seek salvation by some other way, or through some messiah yet to come seek in vain. Jesus laid hold upon the principles of eternity. If another were to come and save us, he could do more than that. Through Christ, God manifested his way and his purpose unto men. Christ is the way of salvation.

I believe in the Holy Spirit. Of the three persons of the Godhead the Holy Spirit is least understood. On several occasions I have had parishoners say: "But Mr. Robinson, what is the Holy Ghost?" The Father, yes; the Son, yes; but why a Holy Spirit? My own definition of the Holy Spirit may be unsatisfactory to the professor of theology, but to me it is meaningful. The Holy Spirit is God's working relationship with man. It is God's presence as the "still small voice" which sometimes we call conscience. It is God's presence to enlighten men and lead them to the truth. St. John speaks of this presence as the Spirit of Truth. It is God's presence in the time of trouble and sorrow. And again that presence is referred to as the Comforter. We might think of the Holy Spirit as the gardener of the soul, for through his work the processes of Christian growth and nurture develop in a life the virtues of sainthood. Between the fledgling Christian and the elder, tested and tried in the faith, stand the ministries of the Holy Spirit. What turns men's thoughts to God, what impulse in the human breast first cries out to the Eternal Being, what leads men to the fountain of living water? The answer is that aspect of the Godhead we have termed the Holy Spirit. God is one, but we know him in his three manifestations: The providential Father, the redeeming Son, and the ever present Spirit to guide, comfort, sanctify and lead us on.

To discover and to do the will of God is the chief end of man. A man may succeed in everything else; but if he has failed to know and to do God's will, he is a hopeless fugitive from that peace which passeth all understanding; he has failed to attain the purpose for which he was created. Any doctrine of man that I might formulate, and any basis of action which might issue from that doctrine, has as its inspiration the will of God. I believe that the will of God was the chief concern of Jesus just as it should be our chief concern. Because Jesus was able to know and to do God's will to a degree beyond anything other men have ever attained, our pattern of action is found in his life. The problem is clear: here is the supreme object of man's efforts; here is a man who has succeeded in attaining that object—the will of God. By what means did he reach the goal? Is there a pattern of action which stands out in Jesus' life on which we can lay hold? I believe there is. And the pattern is neither hidden nor complicated.

First of all Jesus knew his scriptures. He knew the law, the prophets, and the Psalms. His sayings are filled with quotations from his Bible, the Old Testament. Jesus found the scripture an authoritative guide to the will of God. This brings to the subject of the Bible. This body need not be reminded of the role the Bible has played in Protestantism. You know the story of how it became the last and final authority when Luther denounced the authority of Rome. The abuse of interpretation which the good book has suffered since that day is a story in itself. From its pages men have produced proof of every sort and kind of phenomena, scientific as well as spiritual. Protagonists at opposite poles quote from the book. Sects bizarre and fanatical claim its authority. In spite of its misuse the Bible lives. It is a pillar of spiritual fortitude for men in all walks of life. To the scriptures of Jesus the church has added the New Testament, which briefly, is the record of Jesus and the early development of the religious movement which he founded. We cannot make the Word of God identical with a book. The Word of God is not bound to a time, a place, a language, a group of editors, a printed page. Imagine every Bible in the world destroyed, imagine it blotted out from human memory, the Word of God would live, and find some other expression in human life. That the Bible contains the Word of God let no one doubt. Those who know that book are strong because they have tasted of eternal truth. Perhaps I am a bit out of date, but always I choose a sermon text. I do this for two reasons. I have discovered no better foundation upon which to weave a sermon. It is a practice helpful to me as a preacher. Then, I find the congregation responsive to the scripture passage as a source of truth. The people feel that their minister has at least started from some place whether he gets anywhere or not. That is infinitely better than neither starting nor arriving—just wandering. In our church schools we can do no better than to give our children an intelligent understanding of the Bible. If we fail in this we have taught in vain. Children should be encouraged to memorize the great passages. I believe the Bible to be inspired because it continues to inspire men. It is a light that shineth in the darkness. It is one way to know God's will. Jesus made full use of his Bible. Let us make full use of ours.

In the second place Jesus identified himself with the corporate worship of his time. He worshipped in the temple. It was his custom to attend the synagogue. Jesus was not a religious hermit. Jesus discovered that God's will was often made known to the group of believers, that the quest for truth was to be undertaken by the body of seekers, that God recognized his children not only as individuals, but also as members of a family. This brings us to the subject of the church. Our quest for God's will must be made in the circle of the church. Some of you will recognize the source of this definition of the church: "The church is a society of people of faith striving to learn and to do the will of God, looking to Christ for the way and the power." The word "church" is so loosely used that it has need for elucidation. Quite simply it has three legitimate interpretations. There is the church local. All of which together make the churches. The church in this sense is that which we join and in which we hold membership. Here we worship, hold offices, and have all manner of friendly relations. To this church we give our financial support, for its ongoing we hire ministers, organists, janitors, religious educators, etc.

Secondly, there is the church universal of which all Christians are members. When we speak of the church which binds all men together we are speaking of the church in this sense. St. Paul referred to it as the "body of Christ" in which all are members one of another. It is well to remind the members of the church local that they are members of the church universal. That church will not come into being with the fruition of the ecumenical movement. It already exists as the mystical body of Christ. The ecumenical movement is but an effort to give this mighty force an organizational expression that it may function more effectively. Finally, there is the church invisible which is composed of the multitude of Christian people of yesterday and tomorrow. To be numbered among this matchless company is the eager yearning of all who love the church of God. For this great church moves on unbounded by time and space. It is of eternity. Its place of abode is the presence of God. I cannot believe that the church sprang out of nothing, that it appeared as a new creation at Pentecost. The church has its roots in the synagogue. Its early members for the most part had been reared in the synagogue. This is not to say that the church and the synagogue are the same. Jesus stands between. At this point we return to our definition, "looking to Christ for the way and the power." He stands at the head of the church, is its inspiration and power. The church is not any group of people seeking God's will. The church is made up of people who look to Christ as their Redeemer and Friend. What is the task of the church? First, the church must lead people to God through corporate worship. Wherever else the church fails, let it not fail here. Corporate worship is the expression of our reverence and our love toward God as a body of Christians. The spiritual power manifest in a community is in proportion to the effectiveness of public worship and the attendance of the people upon

VIRGINIA VALLEY SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference Sunday School Convention was held at Antioch Christian Church, near Harrisonburg, Va., June 8. Nineteen of the twenty Sunday schools were represented by delegates. The attendance was large and interest in the improvement of our Sunday schools was deeply manifested. Special emphasis was given to the Sunday school as evangelistic agencies of our church. The principal address was given by Rev. R. A. Whitten, president of the Valley Conference, on the subject, "The God-Given Task of the Church School." Other addresses were given by Dr. L. E. Smith, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill and Supt. W. T. Scott. Mrs. Emerson J. Rohart and young people from Linville had charge of the morning devotions.

Mr. E. A. Showalter, treasurer, reported that practically every church in the Valley had sent the annual dues of 10c per member for the support of the work of the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention.

Mr. H. E. Liskey of the New Hope Church was re-elected president, which office he has held for the past several years.

GETTING READY.

By MAX VESTAL.

First of all let me express my sincere appreciation to the young people of the Southern Convention. They have shown more interest in this project of sending someone to an overseas work camp than I thought possible. They have given money; and, everywhere I've met them, I have received their best wishes. I thought it might be of interest to them and to all of you to know that I have been making a few preparations for the trip.

As I write this, I can look around my room and see a ski pack, a sleeping bag, a heavy raincoat, a flashlight, a mess kit, and many other articles that will be standard equipment in Europe. Everything must be carried by one person, and I am that person. The articles that I have just named were rather expensive. Some of the necessary preparations can be made free. The one I have in mind is the vaccination. And that should be plural. I've been shot so many times that I've lost count. Other than this, all I have had to do was to fill out enough forms to reach from here to Quebec.

I mention Quebec because that is where I shall sail from on June 20. The ship is the Samaria, a converted Army transport. This is a student ship, and I have several friends who will be on this ship. Sarah Cranford, from Asheboro; Boo Summersett and Fred Stanback, from Salisbury; and Nan Leonard, from Charlotte will sail on the Samaria. Boo and Nan will be going to Agape when I do.

Agape is in the Alps, near Turino, Italy. It is so far into the mountains that heavy machinery is not available there as in other work camps. About the only pieces of machinery are crude wheel-barrows. With the determination and hard work of the work campers, however, there is being built a very beautiful camp. I learned from Mary Ellen Harrell, who was there last year, that the buildings are of many-colored stones, which glisten in the sun. For their background these beautiful buildings have majestic, snow-capped mountains.

The following four paragraphs are from a booklet sent to me about Agape. It sounds like a wonderful place:

"When Agape is finished . . . to all who for the last four years have been daily struggling with the problem of Agape this seems like a dream; we have been having and have still such a struggle against obstacles of every kind that we can scarcely realize we are now approaching our goal, even though our way is still full of difficulties and hardships. It seems like a dream, and yet we cannot help feeling some misgivings; so far the Agape

AGRICULTURAL COMMITTEE OF NORTH FUKIEN SYNOD PLAN FOR REMAINING MONTHS OF 1950.

The North Fukien area of this Synod consists mostly of rural villages. Most of our church members engage in the agricultural industry. We have always paid great attention to rural work. A number of years ago, under the supervision of Dr. Bliss, a fine breed of milk cows was introduced from America. The introduction of improved seeds and the emphasis on training technical people for the agricultural industry has shown great results. At present, our country needs to increase rural production to develop further the agricultural industry. We, with the same spirit of serving as we have had before in our rural service, shall do our utmost to further develop agriculture in our area. Our personnel and finances being limited, we can only do a limited work. Our plan for the balance of this year is as follows:

I. Agricultural Education.

1. To print booklets of basic agricultural knowledge to be distributed to farmers.
2. To circulate the policy and laws of our government in order to dispel the fears and worries of the farmers towards production.
3. To publish articles in the church paper regarding agricultural knowledge, news or laws and to answer all sorts of questions.
4. To assist the Han Mei High School and Primary School in the teaching of agricultural knowledge.

II. Agricultural Promotion Activities.

1. To recommend and extend the free supply of fine vegetable and flower seeds.
2. To loan improved seeds. This year we plan to loan 2,000 catties of rice, 40 catties of corn, 200 catties of sweet potatoes and 100 catties each of peas and soy beans.
3. To aid and direct precautionary work against insect and fungus diseases.
4. To recommend or act as buying agent for purchasing all kinds of farming implements, seeds and animals.

5. To set up a storage bin to carry out small capital loans.

III. To Cultivate Improved Seeds and Seedlings.

1. To prepare a seedling bed at the North Gate peach orchard area. To be carried on by the secretary.
2. In case a larger amount of seedlings are needed than we are able to take care of ourselves, we propose to secure the help of surrounding farmers getting them to assist us in their cultivation.
3. The amount of seedlings this year to be cultivated is as follows: To cultivate ourselves 4,000 seedlings each of orange, chestnut, peach, loquat and persimmon. We plan also to cultivate one mou each of soy beans, peas, sweet potatoes and rape turnip.
4. To cultivate by assisting farmers, 2,000 catties of rice, 500 catties of soy beans, 50 catties of corn, 200 cuttings of sweet potatoes and 100 catties of peanuts.
5. To collect and distribute improved seeds to the entire area.

IV. Personnel and Location.

1. To employ a full-time rural secretary.
2. To use the North Gates peach orchard for seedling cultivation.

REPORT OF AGRICULTURAL COMMITTEE OF NORTH FUKIEN SYNOD—JANUARY TO APRIL 31, 1950.

1. The North Fukien Peach Orchard—Pruned the peach, pear and plum trees and removed weeds in orchard. Land around trees cultivated.
2. Cultivation of Seedlings—Planted one mou (1.3 acre) of peanuts, and 200 sweet potato seedlings. Planted 2,000 peaches, 1,000 persimmons, 1,000 orange seeds. Transplanted 2,000 orange seedlings, 200 each of peach loquat and chestnut seedlings.
3. The Promotion of Good Seeds—Loaned 450 catties of improving rice seed. Loaned 2,000 catties of taro for planting. Loaned 30 catties of corn seed. Loaned 2 catties respectively of pumpkin and melon seeds. Distributed 350 packages of flower seeds to North Fukien Churches.

AMERICA THROUGH INDIAN EYES.

"Americans are a cordial and hospitable people. The land is beautiful and the people are wonderful!" That is the highly flattering first impression of Rev. Prakash Shiwaji Bhonsle of Rahuri, India, Congregational Christian leader and educator who has just reached the U.S.A. for a year of graduate study, speaking and observation of work in the schools and churches.

"I was deeply impressed by the extremely cordial welcome I received from the United States Immigration and Custom Officers in New York even before I landed. These officers were so good, courteous and helpful to me, as were the passengers on the ship, that I immediately felt at home in this country and all my fears and nervousness disappeared," said Mr. Bhonsle in an interview on arrival in Boston, Massachusetts, at the international headquarters of the American Board of Foreign Missions.

"America is a country where civilization seems to have reached its zenith. Everyone seems busy. Public parks, theatres, and beaches are their recreational centers. They take life as it comes to them and try to make the best of it."

While his native tongue is Marathi, Mr. Bhonsle also speaks Hindu and most fluent English. Already his American friends have secretly named him "Mr. Personality Plus," for his contagious smile, gracious attitude and completely disarming friendliness make him an "Ambassador without portfolio" of whom India can well be proud.

During his visit in the U.S.A. Mr. Bhonsle has five objectives: To study church life in America; to attend young people's conference and camps in order to get a line on the present trends among Christian youth in America; become better acquainted with the personnel and activities of the American Board of Foreign Missions (Congregational Christian) take special graduate studies at Chicago Theological Seminary where he has a World Fellowship scholarship; and see all he can of "this great country," as he repeatedly describes the U. S. A. . . .

"The Hindu Maha Sabha (a leading Hindu religious and political organization) is taking a critical attitude concerning the progress of the Christian Church and in some places appears to be organizing itself to put obstacles in the church's way. So

HEARD AT THE ELON SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

"If in an evil society, a man is never criticized, he can't be a very good man."

"The church should be criticized more."
—DR. FRED WENTZEL.

When the peddler comes along the streets in Turkey and calls his wares, the call of "Nylon" means anything that is especially good, or from America.

Miss Margaret Blemker, now American Board Secretary of the Near East, made a splendid presentation on Wednesday morning of our Near East Missions. In giving social and political changes in Turkey, she listed:

1. Marriage customs—now the boy and girl can sometimes fall in love before marriage, whereas before, marriages were all arranged.
2. Abolishing of the Fez for men.
3. Adopting the Roman alphabet.
4. Emphasis on education.
5. Putting away the veil of the women.
6. Education of women.
7. Women in public life.
8. Harems not recognized as legal.
9. A democracy in Turkey.

Interesting color slides were shown of parts of Turkey and Syria.

The Near East, as women's groups will be studying it this year, will be composed of the countries where we are mainly represented: Lebanon, Syria, Greece and Turkey.

Only in Izmir (formerly the old city of Smyrna) has there been a Christian church continuously since the time of St. Paul.

Change in the Near East means challenge to our church and its mission.

On Wednesday afternoon, for two hours, Planning and Demonstration of Programs for Local Societies was led by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman and Mrs. Tucker Humphries. Programs presented were:

1. In the Fellowship of Our Church—explaining the six areas of work of the Woman's Fellowship.

2. That Little Democracy—a program on Family Life, to be used in local groups in May.

3. We Build for Peace—a United Nations Skit.

4. The Kingdom of Our Lord—Christmas Program.

All were well done and should be very helpful to all who are interested in planning programs. Such practical demonstrations should help us to become acquainted more with the materials we will work with for this year, as well as giving good ideas for carrying them out.

Probably the main regret is that many of those who are responsible for programs were not there to see the demonstration and get the good suggestions.

PROGRAM MATERIALS, ETC.

The Packet for this year is $3.25, including the study books and Bible study book. Without the study books, it is $1.00, probably. The new Year Book made its appearance at the School of Missions, and it is printed this time. It is included in the Packet, or it is 20c separately. Many groups are planning to use this as a local Year Book, as it is designed to be filled in later with program leader, worship leaders, hostess, place of meeting, and date. However, unless you have already placed your order with Pattie Lee Coghill in the Convention Office, you may not be able to buy enough for your society.

The most important books to get for your mission and Bible study this year are (for women):

Assignment: Near East by James Batal—$1.00.

Once There Were Two Churches by Wentzel—$1.00.

Great Bible Prayers—30c.

The original study picked out for our Bible study this year was the Book of Hebrews. However, the book chosen for the Hebrews study, The Superiority of the Christian Religion, was considered so difficult that it is not being recommended for general use. If there are groups interested in deeper Bible study, the book is, of course, available, and the price is also 30c.

The new Year Book does not include reports, nor does it include all local presidents and conference officers. The conference officers are to be filled in later after they are elected.

ATTENTION, PLEASE! ! !

Please send all articles for the Woman's Page to the Editor whose address is printed at the top of this page. It is very confusing not to know what material has been sent in to Mr. Kernodle, and he has made a specific request that all material be sent to the Woman's Page Editor. It is not Mr. Kernodle's job to arrange the material for the Woman's Page.

THROUGH INDIAN EYES.

the church in India has no easy path before it and is facing in many places difficulties of a peculiar kind. The missionaries are still welcome in India, but their activities are carefully watched and scrutinized by many."

India should work toward a United Church, in Mr. Bhonsle's opinion. "The time is ripe for various denominational churches to unite and unequivocally proclaim the good news of Jesus Christ to the many millions of India who are now willing to hear about Christ and His love for mankind. As long as we have denominations in India our message is weakened and we are divided in the eyes of non-Christians. A United Church would give force to our witness and remove much criticism against it."

While Communism is steadily at work in certain parts of India, and though its progress is being checked at present, Mr. Bhonsle says, "We cannot minimize its influence upon the millions of illiterate, starving and needy people of India. Our only solution to Communism in India lies in a constructive service for all classes of people and in an increasing prayer that India be saved from destructive atheism."

Whatever the difficulties Mr. Bhonsle is convinced that Christianity "has taken root in the religious soil of India" and that "one clear way for the Indian church to meet whatever difficulties may present themselves is by organizing itself into a strong, united, self-supporting and self-propagating indigenous Christ-like church for the spirit of Christ in all its work, ensuring its becoming a strong, helpful and witnessing church."

THE HELFENSTEIN BEQUEST.

Miss Anna Helfenstein has established at Elon College the David M. Helfenstein Memorial to assist in the instruction of ministerial students enrolled in Elon College. Miss Helfenstein left $1,000 to establish this memorial. She gave five $100 "G" Bonds before her death, and left instructions for an additional five $100 "G" Bonds to be purchased and forwarded to the college.

Miss Helfenstein was a member of the Elon College faculty on two different occasions; once as head of the department of speech and the other as Professor of Greek and Latin and Dean of Women. She had a brilliant mind, was cultured and always exerted a wholesome influence on the campus. The late David M. Helfenstein was her father. The Helfensteins have been connected with the Christian denomination since its founding, and were influential leaders in the denomination and religious organizations, in general.

Dr. David M. Helfenstein spent 65 years in the active ministry of our church. Had he lived six more days, he would have celebrated the 66th anniversary of his licensure to preach the gospel. His father was a personal friend of James O'Kelly, who was a frequent guest at his father's home in Virginia. Rev. James O'Kelly requested the privilege of naming the new baby, which was Miss Anna Helfenstein's grandfather. The name that the Father gave was James O'Kelly, which name he bore with great pride.

Miss Anna Helfenstein's father's father and her great grandfather were life-long laymen in the Christian Church.

By establishing this memorial, Miss Anna Helfenstein guarantees the inclusion of the name of Helfenstein in the literature and activity of the church for all time. Miss Anna Helfenstein has set a splendid example for the rank and file of our people. She was not wealthy, but she did divide what she had been able to accumulate, with Elon College as a memorial to her father. There are hundreds of our people who could do as much and perpetuate the memory and the name of those who have meant most to them.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Summer is here. The vacation time is approaching for some of our ministers. For others, it is the time for evangelistic meetings. Many of our rural churches still continue the program for special religious emphasis in their churches during the summer months. The greater part of our city churches hold their special meetings in the fall, winter or early spring. The college is continuous in its program. It has operated twelve months in the year since 1933. Our summer sessions are not as largely attended as a regular session, but we do have school.

Enrollment for the first six weeks of summer school is 235. As a rule, we are able to balance the budget for summer school. Salaries for the regular college year are earned in nine months, but paid on a 12-month basis, which means that our expenses are practically the same through the summer months as during the fall, winter and spring. Our needs are great. I trust that our Sunday schools and churches may be conscious of our needs and not forget us during the months of limited income with usual expenses.

GETTING READY.

experienced the happiness of a life in common and work in common, throwing themselves unreservedly into work. But when Agape is finished, where will all this enthusiasm flow? When it is no longer necessary to carry stones or to prepare quick-lime, will their love for Agape remain the same?

"This question might be disquieting, it would be so if we did not keep in our minds their enthusiasm, their dream has polarized our enthusiasm and sacrifices, our joys and sufferings: the youth of all over the world have sincere love, the joy of all those who were climbing to Praly, the sorrow of those who were leaving it; they are the marks of something deeper than a passing enthusiasm and an empty activity. Thus our misgivings are overcome and submerged by our plans, our hopes, our schemes for the future.

"This experience of a community of work has been too valuable to be abandoned as soon as its original purpose has been reached: Agape shall continue to be a work camp, a Praly, at Torre Pellice, anywhere an opportunity will arise. The buildings at Praly are important, but a far greater importance must be attached to the profound feeling of a service in common which our experimen has made us rediscover. It has been a camp of work, of meditation, of a life in common under the seal of love. On these lines our work camp must continue.

"But Agape shall be even wider in its action: It will be used for Summer and Winter Camps, as a center of studies and ecumenical meetings, for spiritual retreats and junior camps; the range of its possibilities gets wider and wider and our plans, too. Agape must above all go on being a center of communitarian life, the place where men different in their social habits, their culture, their country, in all that forms a barrier between men can gather for meetings which can be brotherly. Agape is a parable; a poor and weak parable, a sort of stammered indication, a hope which is being lived. Agape is not the Kingdom of God but it announces it joyfully; Agape is not a perfect community of saints but is living through God's grace and through His grace is a community. Agape is not only a village, the pride of contented people, an escape from everyday reality: it is a promise and a joyful service, anywhere God will lead us. Only Christ is really Agape; we are but its reflection, its shadows, its parable. The walls of Agape are but a call and a hope, our work but a service. Tomorrow as today only through grace. Only Christ is our Lord."

Thanks a million for sending me! I'm getting a round-trip ticket, so I'll see you next September.

ONE APRIL AFTERNOON.

Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbor.—Zech. 8:16.

Mr. Van Horn was extremely surprised when he opened the door, one sunny spring afternoon, and found Billy standing on the stone porch, his cap in one hand and a large rounded piece of something blue in the other.

"I—I—I—," Billy shuttered, partly because he had lost a front tooth that morning, and partly because he was a bit nervous. "I—I—I—I'm Billy Harvard. I came to tell you that I just broke your big blue vase."

The look in his eyes told Mr. Van Horn that he fully expected the worst.

"You broke my blue vase!" echoed the elderly gentleman. "Now how could you brake a vase of mine?"

"Well, I did, Sir. I didn't mean to. It was all an accident. You see, I was walking along your back garden wall. The flat stone one. I know I shouldn't have been there, Sir," he added hastily, "but I was cutting through the woods, and if there is something I love to do, Mr. Van Horn, it's to walk along the top of the wall."

Mr. Van Horn made a funny sound with his throat. Then he put his hand to his face as if he were rubbing his chin.

"I see," he said, trying to sound stern. "Go ahead."

"Well, I got to thinking how swell it would be if we boys had a piece of that level land behind your wall for a baseball diamond. Then I got to thinking about us boys playing baseball, and then I kinda though the pitcher threw the ball to me. Sorta warming up, you know. I reached out to catch it, and I lost my balance, and I fell off the wall. It was right near the fish pond, Sir. When I fell, I knocked over one of the big blue vases, and it broke. Here's a piece of it," he said as he held up the remnant he had brought along as evidence. "But I didn't mean to do it, and I'll do anything around the house or garden you say to pay for it."

Mr. Van Horn wrinkled his forehead and looked down at the freckled-face little boy who stood before him. The playful spring breezes blew a lock of hair across Billy's eyes, but he only squinted in his funny way. He was quite used to having his hair mussed. In fact, it was hard to keep it otherwise.

"Hm-m-m," said the old gentleman, watching Billy closely. The garden behind the house is quite a big one. The stone wall is at the extreme edge of the garden. No one can see the wall or the fish pond or the blue vase from the house, Billy. It might have been days before anyone went to the fish pond and found the broken vase. Then we would have thought a stray dog or cat passed through the garden and knocked the vase over. No one would ever have known you broke it, Billy."

Before Mr. Van Horn had a chance to say anything further, Billy's black eyes widened. He looked at Mr. Van Horn with great surprise as he promptly said:

"But, Sir, I know I broke the vase. It wouldn't have been right to sneak off without saying something about it. I couldn't do that, Sir. I couldn't do that and be one of the 'Loyal Boys.'"

"'Loyal Boys,'" repeated Mr. Van Horn with interest. "And who are the 'Loyal Boys'?"

"The boys of our Sunday School class, Sir. Mr. Andrews is our teacher. He's great, and we all like him very much. He teaches us to be honest and good and always to be truthful. Really, Sir, I broke the vase, and I'm willing to do any work you say, to pay for it."

"Mm-m-m-m," said Mr. Van Horn again. This time he really rubbed his chin with his hand, as if thinking about a serious matter. Whatever the job was, he would do it gladly to make up for the damage he had done.

Finally, the old gentleman nodded his head quickly and then chuckled. Then, as if remembering Billy, he dropped his hands to his sides and squared his shoulders. He cleared his throat in a stern way, eyeing Billy severely.

"Young man," he began in a firm tone, "this is a very serious situation. In the first place, that wall is on my property. It belongs to me, and you had no right to walk on it without first asking my permission. Do you understand?"

"Yes, Sir," came the weak reply. "I—I—I had no business to walk on it."

"In the second place," continued the stern voice, "that was one of my choicest vases. Young man, do you realize how much money that vase cost?"

"I—I—it must have cost a lot," came the even weaker reply.

"And, in the third place," continued the old gentleman, taking a step closer to Billy, "I've been on the lookout for boys like you. Boys who like to take short cuts through the woods and climb walls and," he paused as Billy's face became paler, "and to play baseball."

Then his tone changed so suddenly that Billy's eyes opened wide. So did his mouth. And the remaining piece of the blue-glazed vase shattered on the stone porch as it slipped from Billy's hand.

"Yes, sir!" continued Mr. Van Horn with a merry twinkle in his kind gray eyes. "I've been looking for a group of boys just like you, Billy. Boys who like to romp and play in the fresh air. Boys who are honest and truthful, and above all, boys who are not afraid to admit a wrong and take the consequences manfully. You see, Billy," he continued as he placed his hand on Billy's shoulder, "for a long time, I, too, have been thinking what a fine baseball diamond that level piece of land behind my garden would make. Come in," he said in a fatherly way as he pushed open the wide front door. "Let's think about it together."—The Magic Ring and Other Stories, Standard Pub. Co.

"I'll do it in the morning, Mother."

"To do that you would have to get up early, and you don't enjoy being an early riser."

"I'll get up early."

Nothing more was said. John was not up to give thought to his lesson, and it was not properly prepared.

Ten blocks away a somewhat similar dialogue took place.

"You haven't raked the lawn, as I asked you to do, Richard."

"I'll rake it in the morning Mother."

JACOB, A MAN OF STRIKING CONTRASTS.

LESSON I—JULY 2, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee whithersoever thou goest.—Genesis 28:16.

LESSON: Genesis 35:1-7, 9-12.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 91.

By the Grace of God.

This fellow Jacob was a man of striking contrasts. Perhaps the best word with which to describe him which is suggestive of just what kind of man he was, is "oily." He was a slick, sly, crafty, unscrupulous, cunning, cowardly fellow, and "spoiled rotten" by his mother. In fact much of the man's blemish of character was due to the attitude of his mother. She took sides with him against his father, and suggested the deceit which he practiced upon his father—an ugly chapter in his life. In his youth and early manhood, Jacob was not a very good example of high ideals or good character.

But the old fellow made the "Hall of Fame." Read Hebrews 11, and you will find him there along with the other immortal heroes of faith—Abraham, Moses, Joseph, Gideon, Barak, David and Samuel, and many others. How did he get there? What right has this old slicker to a place in the Hall of Fame? The answer is—by the grace of God. After playing fast and loose with moral ideals, after stealing the birthright of his brother, deceiving his father, and fleecing his father-in-law, Jacob had an experience with God that changed his life. Instead of Jacob the Supplanter, he became Israel a Prince of God. That night at Peniel marked the turning point in Jacob's life, and the beginning of a transformation in his character. With great magnanimity he made amends to his brother, gave undivide loyalty to Jehovah, and bestowed blessings upon his family. He was a scalawag in his youth but he became a saint in his old age.

But he did not get off so easily as one might think. The punishment for his early errors came upon him in spite of his reform. His favorite son, Joseph, is taken from him, and he almost loses Benjamin. He dies crying, "Evil have been the days of the years of my life." The marks of sin remain—even after forgiveness.

Giving the Devil His Due.

The story is told of the Negro minister who thought that he ought to say something good about a notorious character whose funeral he had to preach. So after admitting that the man stole chicks, shot crap, made moonshine liuor, ran with other men's wives, and refused to pay his bills, the minister said, "But I wants to say this—our departed brother was a good eater." As has been said, Jacob was a slick, shifty, spoiled, selfish character. But he had his good points. He was capable of great love—witness the fact that he served fourteen years in order to win the hand of the girl who had his heart. And in what has been interpreted as a bargain on his part, but which was more that likely a covenant, he promised to give God the tenth of all that he acquired in return for God's goodness to him. Jacob was like so many characters, a strange combination of vices and virtues, needing only the gracious work of God to make him strong and good.

MOSES WHO LED HIS PEOPLE TO GOD.

LESSON II—JULY 9, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant then ye shall be mine own possession among all people.—Exodus 17:5.

LESSON: Exodus 19:16-25; 35:4-5; 21.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Exodus 33:12-34, 9.

There may be some question as to how Jacob got into the "Hall of Fame" (Hebrew 11) and as to whether he belong there. But there is no question as to Moses' right to be there or to his secure place in it. He was one of the truly great men of all time, one of the greatest men who ever lived. As Dr. Frank S. Mead writes, "He served not only Israel, but he left his mark on the social structure, on the thinking, ethics, and religion of all to contend with, and no man, alone, humanity. No man ever had more has helped his brothers more."

From Rags to Riches.

The story of Moses' early life reads like the Horatio Alger stories—so prevalent and popular when the writer of these Notes was a boy. Here was a baby boy, born of slave parents, and saved from destruction at the hands of a Hitler-like dictator and tyrant, by the clever device of a mother who put her baby in a basket and placed him where she felt sure that somebody would find him, and take care of him. In the providence of God—it was not a mere coincidence—the baby was found by a member of the royal retinue of Pharaoh's daughter, who turned the child, all unwittingly, over to his mother to nurse and to nurture for a while. A Hollywood script could not beat that.

In due time the boy Moses was taken into Pharaoh's Court, where he was given the advantage of an education second to none—he was educated at the royal court itself. He became a favorite of the court, and had a great future before him, a future that gave promise of both prestige and possessions. High office and a big salary was his for the asking. Here was a success story indeed, that is judged by modern success standards.

From Riches to Rags.

But this young fellow Moses was made of good stuff. He went out one day and saw an Egyptian taskmaster beating a slave, one of his fellow-countrymen. Many a fellow with so much to lose would have shrugged off the matter. But not this man Moses. Forthwith he let go with a Sunday punch and almost knocked the other fellow's head off. As a matter of fact he did hit the fellow so hard that he killed him. And Moses had to flee for his life. He went away back in the "sticks" and for all practical purposes passed out of the picture of current events. Surely no one would have expected him to figure again in timeless influence upon mankind. But such folks reckoned without God. God had saved that baby boy for a great purpose, and God moves in mysterious ways His wonders to perform and His purpose to fulfil. If Moses had remained in the Egyptian court the world would never have heard of him.

But because by faith, when he was come to years, he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, but chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, because he esteemed the reproach of Christ greater than the treasures in Egypt, because he saw by faith, the One who is invisible, God honored him and gave him a name that is high on the list of God's sons and daughters of fame.

POWER FROM THE HOLY GHOST.

By JOHN F. C. GREEN, D. D.,
McKeesport, Pa.

Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you. . . . And when He had spoken . . . He was taken up.—Acts: I- I-II.

He that believeth . . . shall be saved . . . he that believeth not shall be damned.—Mark 16:14-20.

"Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." These are the words of the Lord to his disciples, immediately before his ascension. They had followed him for the term of His earthly ministry. He had given them all they could receive of His teaching. And still they misunderstood him.

The vast majority of those who had followed him, for a little time, had long since disappeared. Their interest had been sensationalism, wishing to see miracles: to have, perhaps, their sick healed, their dead raised. Had this been the mission of the Lord, why had he not simply abolished sickness, undone the last enemy, namely death? But both scourges of man remained.

And now his closest followers, the eleven, even after the Resurrection asked, in their worldly understanding, was He not going to re-establish the political power of Israel. They had not yet divorced their nationalism, their pride of race, from the religion of the Christ. Nationalism, racial pride is that way. Said, during the War a British clergyman: "Mine is a free pulpit. I can preach doubt as to the divine character of Christ; I may without protest from my people cast aspersions upon His Church. But if I should attack the naval preeminence of my country, I should be under severest criticism."

The nature of the ascension, humanly understood, could bring conflicting and irreconcilable opinions. How did Jesus rise? With what manner of body did he return to heaven? And we must answer these questions as St.

Paul explains the Resurrection. There is a material body and there is a spiritual body. There is a material world and there is a spiritual world. And the Ascension is spiritual truth, not a physical phenomenon.

Jesus had come, and He dwells in the hearts of those who love Him, not to do wonders for them, but in them. His followers are different from the world—or they are not His own. When they act like Jesus they are Christians, not when they merely use sacred phraseology, perform holy rituals. Of that we have His own words in the matchless parable of the judgment, in which he sends those who had used His name into punishment; where He called those blessed who had "done the will of the Father in heaven," had been brotherly to those in need—in His name.

The Gospel lesson states, very succinctly, that after the Lord was "received into heaven," when He had gone and left them desolate, they went forth and preached everywhere and "the Lord working with them—" they confirmed the words and did miracles. But—the miracles had first been worked in them.

There is a local church (and there are many like unto it) that had been in the doldrums. The spirit had been low. The people were disinterested. They grumbled about the work required, about the costs exacted. And the church building deteriorated; the people dispersed. Some sought greener pastures, in materially more flourishing churches. And the bank foreclosed the mortgage. Then came a new pastor, with a new approach. He was able to persuade the people that in themselves, not in their church with its burden of debt and the discouraged congregation was the secret of power; that they had to be different, and that then their church would also be different. They received power because a measure of the Holy Ghost came upon them. And their church is now, after a few years, a different thing to see. There is an endowment instead of a debt. There is a united people, rejoicing in work and worship. The people do not grumble; they are too busy serving.

What could not the Christian Church achieve, with and among men, if her people had the gift of the Holy Spirit?

Is it true that people lack time to serve their Church? Assuredly not: not for the majority. Organized play for adults and youth: theaters, of late also television, the comic books, Sunday supplements, the sports, motoring picnics, card games, and other forms of play take so much time and strength and money, that to speak of the lack of these for the service of the Lord, which is the cultivation of the soul is adding falsehood to ingratitude. For, if our gifts are of the Lord we owe to Him our sacrifice of self and strength and means. In the time of the greatest national income, the nation returns to the Giver of All Gifts the smallest portion ever offered Him.

Is it wise to train youth to get more and more for less and less? Is it good character-building? Is it sound religion? Can character be formed in more and more of play, and more and more of enjoyment? Is it not true, as it was also said of Jesus Himself, that in obedience and suffering, in subjection to discipline, youth grows in wisdom and stature and favor with God and man?

Most of those who saw and heard Jesus failed to understand Him, or if they understood they turned away from Him.

And still He calls. And still the way is broad and easy that leadeth to destruction, and many are they that walk therein. And narrow is the gate, and strait is the way of obedience, of service, of self-examination and conversion. "And few there are that find it." Sin means to miss the mark. And hell means waste; the waste of the soul. Of the soul that was meant for God!

"Made like Him, like Him we rise," sings the Easter-congregation. Like Him we rise, in ascension to the presence of God, if we give the Holy Spirit access. Jesus cannot work miracles in unbelief. He cannot give salvation to those who will not pay the price of conversion.

Those disciples who remained faithful, the few, they who saw Him ascend into heaven, went out and did His work. By the Holy Spirit they had become Christians.

That is His truth today, as even then. That is His call. And His own hear His voice and follow Him. Amen.

For a long, long time, now, this country has felt that it was not necessary to take radical measures in dealing with its drink problem. We are rapidly reaching the point where the country's right to live and to hold on to the characteristic things in its tradition, must take precedence over indulgences which make for weakness and corruption.

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Yesterday I called at a poor little home, and loaded five children into my car. Mrs. Truitt and I had visited them ten days ago after all their papers were in. We saw the need. As the Rev. Emory M. Carter, their pastor, expressed it, "They were a needy and pitiable lot." Thurman, the eldest, is ten. Clara Lee, the youngest, is four. The other three are in between—Jo Ann, Raymond and Bobby Jean. But I have not told you how really pretty they are! And smart, too. Thurman is old enough to know it means going away from home. He tried unsuccessfully to keep back the tears. Most of the time he did exceedingly well. He can have my hand for he is a brave big boy for ten. The way he tried to console his brother, Raymond, once on the way when he started to sob was sufficient for me. He is a good boy and a smart boy.

Well, it was something to answer their questions, or to evade some of them, and to wonder myself what the answer to some of them was. Their comments—if I could only reproduce some of them—were interesting. Their bright eyes saw so many things all along the way. We stopped once on the way for a bit of rest, a drink of water, and a cone of ice cream. The biggest boy had fifty cents, the next oldest had a quarter, next a dime, next two nickles, and little Miss Clara Lee had nine pennies. We found the other penny. I have that collection in my pocket now as I write this. I am going over to where they are in their two different dormitories in a few minutes to visit with them and to return every cent to them just as I promised I would, although they wanted me to "you have it." They are precious little children. Their father is dead. But the words of Jesus: "Inasmuch as ye do it unto one of the least of these"—those words are still living. We need your help in these summer months with money for our current expenses. Thanks.

A STATEMENT OF FAITH.

that worship. Worship together at least once a week is the renewing of our minds. We drift away lest we frequently humble ourselves before God. Let the current argument about the priority of worship over preaching be forgotten. The two go hand in hand to lead people to God.

Second, the church must repent of its worldliness and division. It must be purged that it may become truly God's instrument among men.

Third, it must declare that God has visited and redeemed his people. This is the church's mission. The entire world is her field. She knows no distinction in race and boundary. She firmly holds that God has made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the earth together. She knows that men can only be reconciled to their Father through Christ the Redeemer. To tell men everywhere is her task. The sending of missionaries, the erection of schools and hospitals, the teaching of better methods of agriculture and sanitation is only the outward expression of a great mission. We have heard the watchword: "Let the church be the church." She cannot be the church apart from her mission to all mankind.

Jesus sought God's will through the scriptures and through the temple and synagogue. Finally, he communed with God through prayer. Jesus frequently withdrew to be alone with God. He spoke often to his followers about prayer. He warned them against praying for show. He taught them at their request the greatest of all prayers. At times of crisis he found time to go into a garden and unburden his heart to a Father who knew and cared. The prayer life of Jesus is his testimony that God is personal, that he can be spoken to, and that he speaks to us. To affirm my belief in prayer is perhaps all that need be said in a paper of this kind. However, I shall add that prayer should be daily, and it should be formulated into language. To say that all of life should be a prayer is making the definition of prayer so broad as to become meaningless. True, we should live always in the spirit of prayer, but this does not excuse us from set times and places when we should pray. The great prayers of the Christian saints should be said along with our own prayers. The settings in which we offer prayer should be appropriate. Persistency in prayer is essential. If Jesus found prayer to be indispensable in his life, we dare not omit it from ours.

Every paper outlining Christian belief should include a paragraph on the Kingdom of God. Jesus came preaching the gospel of the Kingdom of God. This was the center of his message. We are all aware of the interpretation which many of his followers placed upon the kingdom. They thought it to be an earthly kingdom and were overwhelmed when Jesus was crucified removing all possibility of his setting up an earthly reign. Likewise, those today who think of the kingdom as the earth transformed into a paradise are overwhelmed at the scene before our eyes. But Jesus would not be overwhelmed. I think his message would be exactly the same today as it was then. "The kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel." This is why it is not necessary to look for other messiahs. The kingdom of God means the rule of God. Wherever that rule comes, there is the kingdom. It may be setablished in single lives or in communities. I am confident that it has been set up many times both past and present. If any man would attain the kingdom, let him surrender himself to God's will.

I believe in the life everlasting. Jesus taught concerning a quality of life that might begin here and now. It was of such a nature that it continued after death. He who lived eternally was one who discovered the eternal truths and made them a part of his being. That type of life would live forever. I believe in the life everlasting for two reasons. Jesus taught us about a new life—life eternal. I have faith in his teachings at this point because I have found his teachings trustworthy at all other points. In the second place I believe that life everlasting is compatible with the character of God. Man as God's most exalted creation was not made by him to be destroyed after a brief passage of time upon this earth. The nature of the future life is a mystery. We can say with confidence that that existence will be a moral one. This same moral laws which operate here on earth will be in force in the life to come. This is just another way of saying that God will rule there and that rule will be in terms of wisdom, justice and love.

I have tried to state my religious beliefs simply and without recourse to the belief of others. These ideas I hold with tolerance to those who differ with me. In summary I believe in God, in Jesus Christ, in the Holy Spirit, in the Bible, in the Church, in prayer, in the kingdom of God, and in the life everlasting as briefly set forth in the foregoing paragraphs.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

"But, Mother—"

"I want you to do it now, Richard."

Richard raked the lawn.

Which of these mothers handled the situation more wisely? Do not answer too quickly. Have we enough information on which to base decision? Must we not, at least, know the usual attitude of each of these boys towards his work and, also, his special reasons for wishing to postpone the waiting task, before we can decide?

John was an easygoing lad. He had not yet experienced sufficient satisfaction in doing any better than what was necessary to "get by" to make him do his best. At the time of the conversation referred to, he was immersed in a story of thrilling adventure. It would seem to have shown better judgment on the part of his mother to have allowed him to read to a good stopping point—limiting the time he might take to reach it—and to have required that after that he finish his lessons.

Now about Richard.

This boy was conscientious and industrious—very dependable. His mother knew this, but often she acted as though she did not. She prided herself on what she considered her ability to command perfect behavior on the part of her children. And obedience to the letter of her requirements satisfied her, even when the willing spirit was lacking.

As a school assignment Richard had been asked to write on the theme, An Unexpected Encounter. He had felt somewhat baffled, because he much preferred to write on some topic which would lend itself to research. But on the way home he met an old traffic policeman who, in the boy's kindergarten days, had been in the habit of seeing him safely across the street. How he had loved and admired John McShea, and until now he had not seen him for years! He was thrilled. When, at length, he was obliged to take leave of his friend, the thought came, "Oh, this was indeed an unexpected encounter." With joyful anticipation he made haste to start on his composition while the happy memories were so vivid.

Had his mother taken the trouble to learn why her son wanted to leave the raking of the lawn until the next morning, surely she would not have broken up his train of thought so ruthlessly and not thus have effected—as she unquestionably did—the sad weakening of the little essay that had started out with such high promise.

We cannot judge wisely, and certainly we cannot act beneficially, on behalf of a child, without some understanding of the circumstances that are causes of that child's behavior.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

He Took It Upon Himself.

That is the explanation of it all, that is the secret of the man's power. Bred in luxury, living on delicacies, basking in royal favor, in line for position and power and wealth, he turned his back on it all and identified himself with a group of slaves. Strange fellow, this fellow Moses—he preferred to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. But, Buddy, don't fool yourself. This man Moses was no crack-pot, no dreamy-eyed idealist, no sissy who did not know what he was doing and did not know he was getting cheated. He was one of the strongest, wisest men who ever lived. The point is that he did have a sense of values. He knew that there were causes greater than one's self. He wanted to put all that he was and had at the disposal of his more unfortunate fellowmen. He was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. And in losing his life, he found it. If he had remained at the king's court, he would have gone into oblivion. As it is he is securely enshrined in God's Hall of Fame and his name is written in the Lamb's book of life.

TODAY'S PIONEERS

By Charles A. Wells

We sometimes hear young people speak enviously of the old pioneer days when a fellow didn't have to hunt for a place in life, when the horizon was wide open. But did you ever stop to think what some of those old "moccasin men" would have said after taking a good look at our modern world? With their keen vision and courage they would have been more eager than ever to explore—for the mountain barriers, the wide turbulent rivers, the treacherous "bad lands" are still there. The call to adventure and courageous living, which the pioneers heard in their day, would not be silent in their ears now. The mountains of prejudice and selfishness divide our world into warring segments; the treacherous wastelands of economic strife separate labor and management who both want the same thing but can't find a way to say it to each other; the swirling rivers of racial hatred wash away some of the best of our "natural resources." Yes, the horizons of today are just as wide and challenging as in by-gone days for those who have the eyes and heart for pioneering.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JULY 6, 1950

Newly Elected Moderator of the General Council

Dr. Vere V. Loper is congratulated by Miss Helen Kenyon, retiring moderator

Vere V. Loper has been the minister of the First Congregational Church of Berkeley, California, since 1939. He is an Associate Professor in the Pacific School of Religion. A graduate of Grinnell College and Yale Divinity School, his major pastorates have been in Minneapolis, Chicago, Denver and Berkeley. His present church is a block from the University of California campus, where there are 20,000 students. He has a parish of 1,575 active resident members.

During World War II, Dr. Loper was president of the Berkeley War Chest and, preceding that, of the Berkeley Community Chest. He is now serving as president of the City Commons Club of Berkeley. Dr. Loper wrote the Fellowship of Prayer for 1947. This is the official Lenten devotional Manual of Protestantism for the United States and Canada. In 1947, Dr. Loper was presented the Benjamin Ide Wheeler Award as Berkeley's "most useful citizen." During World War I, Dr. Loper served as an artillery officer. In World War II, he made an 8,000-mile trip through Alaska and the Aleutians in company with a priest and a rabbi to address service men in remote camps.

Dr. Loper defeated the other nominee, Dr. L. Wendell Fifield, pastor of Plymouth Church of the Pilgrims in Brooklyn, New York, by a vote of 406 to 299. Dr. Loper is considered a powerful figure for reconciliation of the two groups split over the proposed merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

A MEMORIAL TO MILLS E. AND OTELIA D. GODWIN.

Oakland Christian Church was the recipient on Sunday morning, June 18 (Father's Day) of a lovely and lasting gift. The children of the late Mr. Mills Edwin Godwin and the late Otelia Darden Godwin—Mrs. Mary Lee Godwin Jones, Mrs. Mildred Godwin Knight, Mr. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., and Mrs. Leah Godwin Keith—presented to the church the following furnishings for the church: A sturdy and beautiful communion table, and lovely brassware altar furnishings, consisting of a cross, candlestands, and a pair of vases or urns. These articles lend beauty and dignity to the sanctuary, and are fine aids to worship. Placed as they are in the center of the church they are a fitting memorial to the Godwins in whose lives love and loyalty for home and church were central. The communion table and the altar set were dedicated "To the glory of God, and to the memory of Mr. and Mrs. Godwin" by a prayer of consecration by Dr. Hardeastle, and then were used for the first time at the communion service which followed. It should be added that the members of the Godwin family are carrying on the traditions of the Godwin family and are being good stewards of their fine heritage, by their love for, and their service to, the church, and the Kingdom of God.

SPECIAL SERVICE FOR CHILDREN AT INGRAM.

THE O'KELLY CEMETARY FUND.

It is of interest to all those who are concerned about the improvement of the O'Kelly Cemtery to know that the work has begun in earnest towards raising the $500.00 as authorized by The Southern Christian Convention at its recent session at Oakland, Virginia. While I have not contacted Brother Basnight, the treasurer, recently, I am satisfied that the amount received by him is nearing one hundred dollars. We are asking churches, Sunday schools and other organizations to send contributions at their earliest convenience to S. H. Basnight, Chapel Hill, North Carolina.

As secretary of the board of trustees and one who has been interested in this long neglected duty on the part of the church, I have volunteered to solicit contributions in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. My first plan is to appeal to Sunday school and individuals. Those schools visited have responded liberally. Those I cannot visit in person I hope to interest by personal letter.

C. E. NEWMAN.

KEEP THE SUN SHINING.

For a number of years THE CHRISTIAN SUN income from subscriptions has not been sufficient to meet the cost of publication. Each year there has been a deficit to be faced and provided for. Due to increased costs for paper and printing this deficit has been growing larger and larger until at our recent session of the Convention at Oakland it was reported to be more than $1,000.

Few, if any, things we buy these days could be purchased for the same price we paid for them even a short time ago. The subscription price of THE SUN has been only $2.00 a year since many of us older people were children while all other periodicals have raised prices; in many instances more than double former rates.

In view of conditions previously stated and being desirous to continue the invaluable service to our people throughout the weekly visits of THE CHRISTIAN SUN to their homes, the Convention set the subscription price of THE SUN at $3.00 a year or two years for $5.00.

We believe that our people will realize the necessity for the increase and will support our church paper, the paper which has served our church and the cause of Christianity for more than a century as it has kept us informed in matters of religion and the work of the church.

ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

THREE DOLLARS.

Beginning July 1 THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be $3.00 per year. It costs much more than that to prepare, print and post it. For instance, the Orphanage will pay $100.00 every month to help make it possible for you to receive your CHRISTIAN SUN each week. Other institutions and boards will help, too. By the help of the boards and institutions the reader is able to get his paper for the small sum of $3.00 for the year. Why we waited this long to ask the readers of THE SUN to pay a fairer percentage of its cost I do not know.

Perhaps there are some subscribers who will stop taking it because of the rise in price. There may be some who will begin taking it because of the fair increase. I should like to believe there are enough good business-minded men and women in our churches who would be glad to subscribe in order both to have it to read and also to help increase its circulation and value, to greatly increase our subscription list. Having had some connection with the business side of THE SUN for a number of years, I am in a position to say there have been those who stopped taking it under the present price. Let us not stop taking it, but let us start selling it to others if we love our church. If we could put enough into THE CHRISTIAN SUN to make it so helpful and interesting that the people felt it was indispensable, we would be better off in the long run. Everyone who can make it more newsy, or entertaining, or instructive ought, for the sake of the church, to feel it his duty to come to the aid of its columns right now.

A GLIMPSE OF THE GENERAL COUNCIL

There are a dozen "eye views" of a General Council Meeting. It could be viewed from the floor, platform, press box, pro or con contingents, or a dozen other ways. The layman and the minister cannot see it alike nor the casual visitor, but from any angle it is terrific! It takes time, money, patience and endurance to attend a full Council Meeting. The easiest and cheapest way to enjoy the Council is to read about it in The Sun.

The moderator is in a position of honor and strain. Upon that office falls the sternest type of parliamentary responsibility. The retiring moderator, Miss Helen Kenyon, did honor to the position with her poise, wit and femininity. One of the honors to befall a lady moderator is the presentation of flowers and corsages. Miss Kenyon was showered with flowers. She has alternated with orchids and beautiful leis.

Women are playing an increasing role in Council work and Mrs. Judson Feibiger (Mary Dennison to many of our readers) presided at two sessions, as the president of the Missions Council. A number of the speakers were women.

The election of a moderator was accomplished this time with quiet and little fanfare. All other officers are nominated by the nominating committee, headed this time by a woman and former Southern Convention neighbor, Mrs. Howard Stone Anderson. Mrs. Anderson attended the wedding of her daughter on Tuesday and arrived Thursday morning ready for action on one of the biggest tasks of the Council.

Present sessions meet in the Cleveland Auditorium and downstairs under the stage, is the press box and the press room. Here this editorial is written; here the ceaseless chatter of typewriters goes on, pencils are gnawed and releases prepared. It is the nerve center of a long ganglia of news nerves. The Christian Century's Harold Fey rubs elbows with AP reporters and even The Sun's editor.

A General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches is a tremendous undertaking, but a wonderful experience and one that every church member should taste in a lifetime. Short of this, one's churchmanship is incomplete.

There have been many resolutions presented to the Council. Here is one of crucial importance which merits widespread attention:

That this General Council heartily endorse the continuance of Our Christian World Mission Program for the ensuing biennium, pledges thereto its hearty support, and calls upon all the churches of our Fellowship to participate to the fullest possible extent, to the end that, under the leadership and with the help of the Holy Spirit, we may communicate by witness and works the full faith and fruits of the Gospel to the people "committed unto us."

THE STATUS OF THE MERGER

"What is the fate of the merger?" is the question on many lips. The General Council could give no conclusive answer to this question. The Brooklyn decision, estopping the E. & R. Marger, is being appealed. In the meanwhile, there is time to reflect on the fact that one merger has been consummated. That merger, overlooked by some and taken for granted by others, is now seen more clearly in retrospect and viewed by many with increasing satisfaction. The ecumenical movement is history as well as prophecy. Let us not forget that.

Those who care to study some of the inescapable issues involved will find help in the message of Dr. Douglas Horton, which will be made available to our readers. There is some ground for hope in the Resolution which was presented by Dr. L. W. Fifield and adopted by the Council:

That the Executive Committee appoint a special committee representing all points of view, to make a careful study of the principles and polity of Congregationalism. This study is to have particular reference to the spiritual and legal methods for the participation of the free autonomous fellowships in the ecumenical movement. The constituting of this committee is not to be interpreted as affecting any past decisions of the General Council. The Committee has no powers other than those of study and report to the General Council.

The Commission on Interchurch Relations and Christian Unity has had heavy responsibilities in recent years. Dr. Ferdinand Q. Blanchard of Cleveland has served as chairman of the Commission and such men as Drs. Roy C. Helfenstein and James H. Lightbourne have served on the Commission. Any fair record of our recent efforts should include the following report of the Commission which was submitted to the General Council:

Our Congregational Christian people as believers in Christ are under the inescapable compulsion to make the spiritual unity existing among all of Christ's people, the fullest possible visible unity. It is in this commitment that our fellowship has always supported the cause of Christian unity. When the National Council was formed in 1871, it adopted a strong resolution in favor of church union, and at successive meetings of the Council during the years since, this attitude has been reaffirmed.

To implement this spirit the National Council in 1895 established a commission to promote union.

In 1931 an outstanding demonstration of the Spirit of Christian unity was made when the National Council united with the General Convention of the Christian Churches, which latter body had as a basic principle these words: "The union of all followers of Christ." When the General Council was organized, it was provided in the by-laws that there should be a commission on inter-church relations and Christian unity. Its duty was thus declared—

“... ‘It shall make a study of church union, including its objectives, its feasibility, and its processes; it shall cultivate friendly relations with other bodies of Christians for the sake of those relations in themselves and in the hope of consummating further union; and it shall cooperate with like bodies of other denominations in fostering the spirit of oneness among the followers of Christ.’

“In pursuance of this duty the Commission on Inter-Church Relations and Christian Unity recommended to the General Council at Durham in 1942 that it be authorized ‘to explore the possibilities of organic union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church.’ This recommendation being adopted, there followed the steps which culminated in the decision at Cleveland and the special meeting of the General Council in 1949 to proceed with the consummation of a plan outlined in the Plan of Union and the Interpretations.

“Now that this union must wait the adjudication of the appeal from the judgment rendered by a Court in Brooklyn, New York, we reaffirm our adherence to this historic principle and attitude of our Congregational Christian Churches toward that union of Christendom as expressed during the years by the National Council, the General Convention and their successor, the General Council. We record our belief that under the guidance of God a way will be found for our churches to act in accordance with our historic principle and attitude, within the framework of legal procedure, while preserving the unity of our fellowship.”

The New Moderator Discusses . . .

The Inner Substance of Churchmanship

By VERE V. LOPER, D. D.

Churchmanship is a relatively new term in the Christian Church but is used increasingly in a sense roughly parallel to statesmanship. The politician becomes a statesman not through the office to which he is elected but by virtue of such superior skill in statescraft as Lincoln gave to the Presidency of the United States. So also, the clergy and laity attain churchmanship not by the responsibilities with which they are entrusted but by the superior knowledge, vision and consecration with which they serve the church.

Churchmanship exists in at least two basic forms. On the one hand, there are administrative procedures, program making skills, techniques for presenting religious truths, and all the outward paraphernalia of churchmanship. This is most important but not our particular concern in this presentation. On the other hand, there is the churchmanship which centers in the great intangibles of our faith as directing forces in the church. This consists in so building the inner substance of churchmanship that its outer forms may serve the highest Christian ends.

Let it be said at the outset that churchmanship requires that Jesus Christ be recognized as the leader of the church. Congregational Christians do not make the moderator the head of our church nationally. We do not exalt the minister as the head of the church locally. These high places are not given to any man or group of men. Like most Protestant churches, we believe that the church cannot attain its true magnitude with any leader short of Jesus. He is the only head of the church. At the very least this must mean that we will direct the affairs of the church exactly as we think Jesus would conduct them. At its highest level, we will attempt to discover what Jesus is doing already in the church and join Him in its accomplishment.

Such churchmanship is not easy to achieve. It has at least three levels, and none is reached in one bound. To lead the church to its highest levels requires growing understanding of what the church is in its larger dimensions. Penetrating thought must be given to such statements as that of John Knox, that the church is “not a memorial society with its eyes on a departed master; it is a dynamic community created around a living and present Lord.” Paul went even farther when he said that the church is “the body of Christ.” This is to say that Jesus is not only a Living Presence among us but also that the church in its pure form constitutes the body through which He expresses Himself. Mere manipulators of church affairs will be content with more obvious and simple concepts. They cannot lead the church to heights which they cannot see. This high achievement will be left for those who know the church in its spiritual magnitude as the body through which Christ continues to express Himself on earth.

We move to another level in Christ's leadership when we are able to follow Him because we are able to perceive Him. How shall we follow Him if we do not know Him? How shall we know Him if He is not in our hearts? The high churchmanship of spiritual perception starts in what Paul calls the Christ “formed” in us. By that which is Christlike in us we may see Christ in others. Thus we shall know Him when we are aware of Him in the church. We must become conscious of Him also in worship. It takes churchmanship of great spiritual maturity both in pulpit and pew to feel a thrill of recognition when we hear the words—“This is my body which is broken for you.” We must learn to see Christ in people. A Negro prisoner, who had been saved by Eugene Debs, said, “He is the only Jesus Christ I ever knew.” We have seen many in whom Christ lived. The Christ within, the Christ in worship, the Christ in people—these are but a few of the luminous areas in which churchmanship sees the Light of the World leading us in the contemporary scene.

Yet we must achieve another level in the leadership of Christ. This calls for the churchmanship by which we so build and conduct the church program that Jesus is actually “going on before.” This is quite possible in a worship service for those who are profoundly sensitive to the Living Presence. But a church program today has everything from a folk dance to a prayer meeting. Organizations spring into being; activities multiply; money is needed everywhere. The church is in peril of being like the horse which is mounted by those who ride off wildly in every direction. Yes! the church is in peril of secularism and confusion. Yet, Christ can live in church games without a sermon between halves. And Christ can exist within a folk dance without stopping the music to offer prayer. In these activities young people are finding each other preparatory to establishing a Christian home. Christ can be in church adult education purging men of stupidity and leading them into the truth which makes them free. Christ is in the humanitarian ministries by which the church reaches the needy of all the world. But even here churchmanship makes us more conscious of the voices of those to whom we minister speaking for Christ back across the world to say to us, “For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; naked, and ye clothed me." Churchmanship is a spotlight shining on the inner structure of the church to reveal Christ at work in our midst. It is for us to see Him and to follow Him.

In the second place, churchmanship consists in the building into the church of all possible experiences in which the soul of man mingles with the being of God. This is not easy. To gain and maintain the sense of God is one of the delicate and difficult tasks of life. But to use those high moments so that they not only yield their glory to your own heart but also become the building stones from which the church is made—this requires the artist and the architect in the human spirit. All beauty, all wisdom, all creation of human hearts and hands are designed by this churchmanship as the joint enterprise of God and men as fellow workers to be the building materials of a house not made with hands. This churchmanship calls for musicians who will make the song the vehicle of God. I have heard an opera star singing with the highest artistry fail in a church because he did not allow God to help him sing. In contrast, I can remember across more than a generation a high school girl in a Minnesota youth camp singing with God vitally present to her:

*Dear Lord and Father of mankind,
Forgive our feverish ways;
Reclothe us in our rightful mind;
In purer lives thy service find,
In deeper reverence, praise.*

She gave something that day which I have never lost. It is a part of me. It is a segment of the church. A million churches could burn to the ground, and it would still be intact. Music of that type is building of the church through a song which God and man help to be. This is churchmanship in music.

A woman placing flowers on an altar with the evident knowledge that she was not only arranging flowers but using them to praise God. She was causing Him to be in the church as Christ revealed Him on a hillside as he said, "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow, they toil not neither do they spin; yet I say unto you that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

Many of us recall the experience of early childhood when we first went to church with our parents. It was an awesome experience to see that these gods of our infancy bowed in reverence before a Presence which we could feel in the atmosphere and yet not see.

We glanced swiftly at father and mother as their gestures suggested their awareness of one greater than they, and then we also bowed our heads before a God who was to become greater as the world became greater in our growing minds. We gained our first glimpse of the fact that the distinguishing mark of the church was that God was present in its midst. Without speaking a word, our parents were exercising a churchmanship which made tawdry and sophomoric the efforts of those who would win their children to the church by bluntly compelling them to go to church or Sunday school. They were building the church in terms of vital religious experience in the hearts of their children.

A minister was praying, and suddenly it occurred to me—he was praying. There was no studied beauty in the words of his prayer. Apparently he was not aware of the sound of his voice. He was talking to some one as though he were standing there before him. Then I realized that he was talking for me also. Finally, I discerned that he spoke for all of us. My heart went through his to God. Later I came to realize that this minister was exercising churchmanship of the highest order. He was building the inner substance of the church, a house built with prayer.

A group of eager young students was listening to a preacher who had a profound knowledge of his generation. He preached the type of sermons which come alive because God is in them. He knew the problems of his world. He was aware of the momentous days in which we live. He was not baffled by terrifying danger because he knew of thrilling opportunity. He had heard of the Lord of history and believed in Him. He spoke to a group which included some whom he was confident would respond. I watched eager young faces, and I thought I saw several modern Isaiahs confessing in ancient terms, "I saw the Lord," and consecrating themselves quietly in their hearts—"Here am I, send me." I rejoiced in that leader who exercised the churchmanship which is making God central to man's willingness to build a better world. He was not lecturing on sociology. He was building the church in youth who would in turn build it in the world. I thought of Tittle's statement as I heard him plead for peace. "In a sermon on peace, I said the chief service to peace the church can give is to lift peace to the level of worship. This is the wisest thing I have ever been able to think or say about peace." These words are also the expression of what I mean by the churchmanship which builds the meeting of God and man into the very fabric of the church. Finally the inner substance of churchmanship is found in the directing conviction that the church is one church, operating in one world. The church politician sees his church as a local organization operating in his own community. The man of vision who achieves churchmanship is working on the total structure of the church when he is at work in his parish. It is not "my church" in "my city" as a part of "my denomination" existing with "my country," and perhaps sending "foreign" missionaries to far countries of the world. Our churchmanship leadership is eliminating these "my's" and asking us to think of one church to which we all belong. The phrase, "the church," is used to include, not exclude other Christians. I belong to the church. My Methodist friends across the street belong to the church. My Catholic and Episcopal friends belong to the church. The Negroes are members of the church. The man on the other side of the tracks belongs to the church. The dark men of Africa and Dr. Schweitzer who ministers to them belong to the church. The fuzzy-wuzzies who pressed through the underbrush to save our fallen fliers, explaining their good will by, "we Christians, too"—they belong to the church. Kagawa, with eyesight impaired through his service to the underprivileged peoples of Japan, belongs to the church. There is only one church—all of us as Christians belong to it.

It exists in one world. Modern science has broken down the barriers. We are living together whether we like it or not. We cannot protect ourselves from disease without fighting disease in India and China. We cannot sell our goods in Europe unless we help to undergird the economy of the nations across the Atlantic. We are told that we cannot defend ourselves against Russia unless we arm the Western Powers. We cannot protect our homes from the ultimate social and political effects of millions of homeless refugees unless we build shelter for those milling multitudes who are wanderers on the earth. We cannot save ourselves from communism unless we feed the hungry everywhere. We cannot consider the race problem in terms of what we will do with the Negro who might live in our block when we are now living in a world neighborhood in which the

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

THE SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

For a number of years our good women of the Southern Convention have been conducting a School of Missions at Elon College. It began with a one-day session, then later extended to a six-day session, and now they are crowding the School into a three-day session. This School has always met at Elon College. The recent session opened Tuesday, June 13, and closed Thursday, June 15. The School was well-attended, with a good representation from each conference.

An excellent program was prepared for the occasion. Visiting speakers were Dr. Ernest Trice Thompson, Professor at Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Virginia; Miss Margaret Blemker, Boston, Mass., Secretary for the Near East and Europe of the American Board of Foreign Missions, Congregational and Christian Churches; Dr. Fred D. Wentzel, Philadelphia, Pa., Director of Publications of the Evangelical and Reformed Church; and Rev. Arthur R. Detwiler, Lenoir, N. C., pastor of the Zion Evangelical and Reformed Church. Dr. Thompson gave lectures on the Bible. Miss Blemker spoke on the Near East and otherwise made helpful contributions to the School. Dr. Wentzel spoke on the Christian community and Rev. Detwiler had charge of the song service and fellowship occasions.

The evenings were given over to song services, the showing of a moving picture, receptions and the banquet. At the banquet, foreign representatives on college faculties and foreign students in American colleges and universities were introduced, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill presiding.

This occasion for fellowship, recreation and study was a very wholesome one and we trust profitable. It is always a pleasure to the college to have organizations visit the campus for their conferences, schools and organizations of varying types. We were happy to have the women of the Convention here for this important occasion.

DR. LAUBACH RETURNS.

Increasing government interest in the literacy work in which Christian missions pioneered was the trend stressed in New York at an anniversary luncheon in honor of Dr. Frank C. Laubach, literacy expert and pioneer missionary educator for 20 years.

Dr. Laubach returned last week from a 30,000 mile, six month's tour of nine African countries where he and a five-man team conducted literacy campaigns in 23 African languages. In 20 years, he has traveled 365,000 miles, reduced 206 languages to phonetics for rapid mass education purposes and aided missions and governments in nearly 70 countries to launch campaigns for literacy.

At the luncheon, given by the Committee for World Literacy and Christian Literature of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, which sponsors the work of his literacy team, Dr. Laubach reported that his team now has more requests for aid than they can fill and half the requests come from governments.

His statements on government interest were underlined by two other speakers.

Miss Norma Bloomquist, a Lutheran missionary to Liberia, described to church and mission leaders at the luncheon a nation-wide literacy campaign in that country which she headed on behalf of both government and voluntary agencies. Dr. Laubach said she was "probably the only missionary in the world acting as a representative of both government and missions." She commended the active cooperation of Liberian President William V. Tubman.

Earlier, Mr. Frederick Rex, from UNESCO, now acting as consultant to the Committee, reported that the largest literacy program in the western hemisphere is under way in Brazil, a campaign using the inspiration and methods of the Committee.

Christian missions, Mr. Rex said, are "the pioneers in literacy and literature work, who, with meager resources and few trained people carried the ideal of social progress and salvation forward to the point where national and international recognition is being given to their work."

Reporting on the six month's tour of nine African countries from which he returned this week, Dr. Laubach cited other examples of government cooperation in Angola and Uganda, pointed out that the government of the French Cameroons, revising their former position this year were taking an active interest in literacy.

Dr. Laubach said that literacy was also a bulwark against Communism.

The peoples of the backward areas of the world are determined to better themselves, he pointed out, and, "if we do not help them, their determination can be dangerous."

He added however, "if the entire population rises up the educational ladder together and enjoys the fruits of a rising standard of living, the chance of Communism's success is slight."

He also noted that in countries where Protestants predominate the literacy rate is higher than in other countries. He said that in countries where the majority of people are Christians, an average of nine out of ten are illiterate in countries where Catholicism is the majority faith, he added, the average illiteracy rate is 50 per cent.

Earlier the Rev. Alfred E. Moore, executive secretary of the Committee on World Literacy and Christian Literature, reported that in countries where missionaries are engaged in nation-wide literacy campaigns increases in the number of literates range from a quarter of a million a year, in Ecuador, to 14 million a year, in China. Other gains he cited were 20,000 new literates a year in Sierra Leone and an average of 400,000 a year in nine states of India.

"As an evidence of the part the Christians play in this general rise in world literacy," Mr. Moore said, "reports show that Christian communities are commonly from 12 to 20 per cent more literate than the people among whom they live."

Dr. Laubach's method of teaching with phonetic picture charts is so simple that he also developed the "Each One Teach One" system, by which each new literate promises to teach an illiterate.

SENTENCE COMMENTS ON PRES- ENT TRENDS RELATIVE TO OUR MISSIONS IN CHINA.

Missionaries.

1. There are 57 American Board missionaries now in China. The families include 16 children (11 in Foochow, 5 in the Peking area).

2. The missionaries now in China wish to remain until their furloughs are due, even though their activities are restricted somewhat.

3. Government permission to enter China is being sought for only one new missionary ready to sail in August—Miss Jean Littlejohn—who is to go for social service work related to our Foochow churches.

4. The eleven China missionaries who have retired or are retiring this year are not being replaced now.

5. Permits to enter China for any purpose have to be secured from the People's Government. Few of these are being approved these days and it appears that so-called evangelistic missionaries are being denied entrance; those falling into the categories acceptable to the government are being granted.

Property.

6. The government in Peking is in the process of preparing decrees to be issued soon governing church and mission property. Detailed procedures concerning registration, taxation and ownership will probably be issued soon. Meanwhile no changes in title to property can be made without government approval.

Foreign Exchange.

7. U. S. currency, drafts, personal checks are negotiable in China at a varying rate of exchange. On March 9 in Foochow the exchange rate was $38,000 to $1 U. S. In late May it was less than that. US drafts presented at the local banks are exchanged for payment in local currency at once over the counter or for deposit in the bank to be withdrawn by check as desired.

Christian Institutions.

8. Churches, schools, hospitals and social service agencies are being permitted to function with restrictions which vary from place to place and time to time, with a gradual tightening up of controls or pressures.

9. Students have been given specific representation (usually about one-third of the membership) on the important administrative committees in the high schools and higher institutions of learning—namely on the school Administrative Council, the Finance Committee, and School Life Committee. They have a big voice in determining what fees are to be collected, what salaries teachers are to be paid, what the other school expenditures are to be.

10. Student religious activities are limited to home and church. They must not be a part of the primary school life or high school educational program, or interfere with university classroom work.

11. Church attendance seems to be on the increase in many parts of China.

In General.

12. Reports from Chinese in North China indicate that conditions are better this year than they were a year ago.

13. A goodly number of government officials admit that Protestant Christianity has social values which should be conserved.

14. Premier Chow En-lai requests that the missionaries and church leaders be patient while the government studies its manifold problems and gives grounds for hope that an adjustment can be worked out which will permit the continued Christian contribution to China's welfare.

15. Just at the time new doors of opportunity are open for extended services (through city and rural service centers) in China we are unable to send new missionaries and we are telling the field administrative committees that we have to make cuts in the grants for these projects during 1950-51 because of the expected deficit in the American Board budget.

NORTH CAROLINA COUPLE TO WORK IN MISSION WORK CAMP.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Cobb, Jr., of Burlington, N. C., will leave there on June 21 and fly from Miami to Puerto Rico to engage in the activities of the mission work camp in Las Cabezas. The Cobbs are members of the First Christian Church and go out under the sponsorship of the Pilgrim Fellowship of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches.

Mr. and Mrs. Cobb have been active in church life, singing in the choir, teaching in the Sunday school, and entering into the activities of the Young Adult Class.

On Sunday, June 18, at the morning worship service, the Rev. Henry E. Robinson, pastor, conducted a commissioning service stating the purpose and objective of this endeavor, closing with a prayer.

Las Cabezas is located on the eastern end of Puerto Rico. It means "the heads." It is on a beautiful bay with mountains rising up in the short distance. Picturesque fishing boats with their sails flapping gracefully in the wind dot the scene. Not so far away is the city of Fajardo, which has a population of about 15,000. About seven miles away is a high mountain range called "El Yunque" (the Anvil). This spot has the most beautiful tropical foliage that one can see anywhere. And, of course, the blue Atlantic Ocean with its marvelous white sandy beach is a part of the landscape at Las Cabezas.

The houses of the people are dismal huts made out of wood. Many of them are made of straw-like substance. These houses have but two rooms for the most part. A family of six is the average. Many of them have no sanitary facilities. They have to carry their water from a distant source.

The work campers will live in two places both adjacent, a room behind the church and the parsonage. These places possess sanitation and water facilities.

Their diet will consist largely of seafood, rice and beans, eggs, cheese, bananas, coconuts, pineapples, breadfruit and many other local vegetables and fruits.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MONTICELLO WOMEN HAVE INTERESTING YEAR.

The Women's Missionary Society of Monticello has had several interesting meetings so far this year. At our annual Installation Service-Birthday Party, our retiring officers gave brief instruction and commendation to the incoming group of officers, followed by a dedication ceremony. A cake with candles lighted in honor of each past-president was brought in and we laid our gifts of silver coin on the table around the cake.

We observed World Community Day and World Day of Prayer by inviting groups from other churches of our own and other denominations. Four groups were invited to meet with us for the showing of a film on "Stewardship" in February and for our Fellowship Supper in May. Mrs. W. T. Scott spoke to us on the theme "Our Daily Bread" at the May Fellowship Supper.

In March, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill brought Miss Frances Thompson to discuss her work in the Philippines.

Several of our own members contributed much to the success of our programs these past months. Mrs. Cleo Faucette, who conducted our Bible study sessions, did exceptionally well in comparisons of the first three Gospels and a detailed study of the Gospel of John.

Mrs. Joe Hardie, Jr., reviewed the Home Mission study book, Blueberry Acres, at our May meeting.

MRS. GLENN WALKER.

A NURSING CALL IN PEKING, NORTH CHINA.

As told by Edith Galt in Letter of the Month for May.

We set off with the delivery bag, following the husband who had come to get us, through the city gate and the dark streets to a red-walled temple. The family lived in the outer courtyard of this temple. When we opened the door the first thing we saw was a plump new-born baby girl lying naked on the earth floor where the cold wind blew on her from a wide crack under the door. There were a couple of sheets of brown paper over the baby, but nothing else. The mother was lying on the bed wrapped in quilts, and two old ladies were standing by. They explained that the baby had been born about an hour earlier, just after the father left to call us, and added that since the baby seemed cold they covered her with paper! Fortunately, the cord had not been cut, since the baby was lying on the dirt floor. Tetanus of the new-born takes a high toll in China. The baby was icy cold to the touch. The student hastily scrubbed her hands and cut and tied the cord. I had the old ladies find me a couple of bricks on the other side. I shook the mercury in the thermometer down to the lowest point, 92. In taking the baby's temperature it did not go up a bit, so we did not know what her actual temperature was. We gave the baby some warm water to drink, and, after fixing up the mother a bit, we left since there was nothing more to do. The next day when we went back the baby was warm and rosy with a normal temperature and never showed any ill effects from her cold introduction to the world! The Chinese show an amazing resistance at times. But on the other side of the picture is the appallingly high infant mortality. It is a common thing to ask a woman how many children she has had and find out she has had ten and only three are living.

WILL LOVE GROW COLD?

For the past five years as we have come together on World Community Day to dedicate ourselves anew to the cause of peace, we have given tangible evidence of our concern through our offerings and the gifts of our hands. In 1950 we complete the age cycle as we think of the needs of the "hard core," the older refugees many of whom are ill from exposure and lack of food. To these, the forgotten, among the needy peoples of the world, we express our Christian brotherhood—first, with our hearts, our concern and our prayers—then with our minds, our understanding of their needs and of our capacity to help. Then we are ready to give with our hands. Our offering will help in the work of the Church among the neediest and with our hands we are to knit a warm garment for one of these older refugees. "There can be no human unity—the personal relationship of 'I and thou' will collapse, if the relationship of 'mine and thine' is not controlled by the principle of Christian brotherhood."

In the face of continued suffering and need—will the love of Christians grow cold?—The Church Woman.

POINTS TO REMEMBER IN GIVING A BOOK REVIEW.

1. Don't talk too long—thirty minutes to an hour is enough.
2. Have the book in hand well in advance of the meeting time and become thoroughly familiar with it.
3. Read it through one time for content, then go through looking for special emphases and points. It is good to make an outline and not look at the book so much.
4. Do not read too many quotations from the book. A few well-pointed ones are sufficient. Don't give many statistics.
5. Stick to the book. Don't try to go off on a tangent.

COURTESIES TO THE SPEAKER.

At our School of Missions last week, Mrs. F. C. Lester told us some of the things to remember in being courteous to a speaker whom we may ask to our meetings. Some of these are:

1. Give the speaker a subject—don't tell him to speak on anything he would prefer.
2. Tell him how much time to use.
3. Tell him where his part will be on the program.
4. Tell him what comes before and after his speech.
5. Do not give a lengthy introduction, taking too much of his time, but if you know of any personal things which would tie him a little closer to the group, use these.

In thinking of courtesies to a speaker, the following question and answer which appeared in The Church Woman may be helpful:

"Q. To settle a discussion we had recently at our club, will you please tell us: Do you consider it bad form for a woman to knit while she is listening to a lecture?"

"A. Yes! I consider this one of the most discourteous things—absolutely inexcusable. If you have ever given a talk or speech to a group of women, some of whom were knitting, you will know what I mean. A woman who insists on knitting during a lecture should stay home and pursue her knitting grimly and alone. No woman is so busy that she has to be so inconsiderate!"

THE CAMPS AT CRABTREE PARK.

Three different camping groups will be at Camp No. 3 of Crabtree State Park, on Route 70, between Raleigh and Durham, during the month of July.

July 12-14 there will be a Junior Camp for boys and girls, ages 9, 10 and 11. Registration will begin on Wednesday at 3:00 o'clock, and the last meal will be served at noon. The program will include classes, hobby groups, vespers, games, worship and fun. The directors will be Rev. and Mrs. Carl Wallace of Franklinton.

July 14-16 will be set apart for a Family Camp, the registration beginning the afternoon of the first day at 3:30, and the camp closing Sunday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock. There will be something for parents, young people and children to do. Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman will have charge of the camp, and that will insure a good time for all.

July 16-22. As the family groups are leaving the Junior High boys and girls will be registering for a full week of study, worship and fun. Rising at 6:45, their day will include breakfast and devotions at 7:30, study periods at 8:30 and 9:15 and, after general assembly at 10:00, another at 10:50. The afternoon and evening will be given over mainly to recreation, rest and worship. Mr. John S. Graves will serve as dean of the camp. Head counselors are Bill Tolly and Mrs. C. J. Stuckey. Bob Murray will be the recreation leader and life guard.

The business manager for the three camps is Rev. Raymond Grissom and the registrar, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill.

THE CHRISTIAN YOUTH MOVEMENT IN JAPAN.

By MASAO TAKENAKA.

It is my greatest pleasure to have the opportunity to speak about Christian Youth Activity in Japan. This afternoon I would like to introduce about three characteristic present tendencies in the Christian Youth Movement in Japan.

1. The first tendency is to unite in Cell Fellowship. In other words, to have small groups in the name of Christ. As Jesus said, "Where two or three are gathered in my Name, there am I in the midst of them." These Cell groups are praying for each other, encouraging each other, sometimes studying together, discussing each other's problems. It means living together and growing up in love.

I want to introduce our Cell Fellowship in Kyoto as an example of these groups. Five of us theological students in Doshisha University united in a small group two years ago. Each of us comes from different backgrounds of education. We could exchange different kinds of experiences which we have had. The purpose of our group is to clarify the truth at this time. Truth is one from the beginning of the world. Our group named itself "arkei," using the Greek from John, meaning "In the beginning."

In the last year we have had early morning prayer meeting twice a month, spending most of the time in silent meditation. Since last April we have started weekly meetings every Wednesday from 7:00 p. m.-9:00 p. m. for group discussion and thinking together. We discussed the most significant problems of Christianity. We publish a little magazine quarterly. In February we found a small house eating together, thinking together, singing together and living together. We are a very small group but now we numbered nine, and we have had many signs of our influence on those around us. For instance, a Shinto priest has become interested in our group activity. And he sometimes joins in our group thinking time.

2. Secondly, there is a decided international tendency in our Japanese Christian Youth Activity. This is a time when Japanese young people are looking for International Relations. It is our conviction that without a Christian spirit, international relations is meaningless. The Christian fellowship is the real source of an international spirit. Sometimes Communists sing their Internationale song but it seems to me to be the song of totalitarianism.

The real bridge between the nations is the Christian spirit. From this urgency, there are many activities going on in Japan. For instance, the International Christian University is going to be built near Tokyo. I do not doubt that this University will be great International Center of Japan. The International character will be emphasized by the fact that at least half of the faculty members will be Japanese while the remaining members will be of other nationalities yet living together.

Another example is the Tambo Club in Kyoto. This name came from the Scripture John 17:21—"That all may be one." This is the motto of the W.S.E.F. The purpose of the Tambo Club is to help make all people one in the name of Christ. They are studying the Ecumenical Movement through moving pictures and the Christian activities of many different countries and they are interested in having contact with youth groups of many different countries through letters and correspondence. Dr. Ruth Seabury is here. She once joined in our Tambo Club as a guest speaker and she introduced to us the Christian Activities of Indian students.

3. Thirdly, one of the present tendencies of Japanese Christian Youth is the desire to express the Gospel through action. Japanese Christian Churches have been too theologically minded in the past but faith is not merely knowledge but also action. In other words, faith is life. From this idea, there are now many different kinds of Work Camps in Japan. For instance, after the last big earthquake at Fukui City in Japan, summer before last, in which about two hundred thousand people lost their homes, we Doshisha Christian students—100 of us—went to Fukui and served in a nursery school, a Milk Center and a Medical Center in three different localities. It was a wonderful experience for the people and for us. Last year we had International Work Camps in three places in Japan. That was also a splendid experience. They showed goodwill among the people contributing to the physical and spiritual reconstruction of Japan.

This year the International Work Camps will be held in four places in Japan and Okinawa and Korea also. I think our Christian Social Action is the strong answer for the challenge of the Communists.

In many parts of the world today, there is darkness and fear. I believe this is the time our Light will have to shine before men. We have to tell the good news not only by our voices, (Continued on page 14.)

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

Bible School over in your Church or just beginning? We had ours recently and I taught ten juniors, eight of whom were boys. We had perfect attendance and a good time.

We studied the Psalms and they enjoyed looking for passages in the different books. We learned that ten of them began with the words, "Praise ye the Lord" . . . and we learned to say one of them—the 146th.

Friday we brought sandwiches and cookies and some of the ladies from church served us with a cold drink. We went to the park and sat on the grass and ate together. It was very pleasant.

Our Bible School was a little different because we held it in a real school building. Our Sunday school was burned and is not rebuilt yet; so we sat at desks and worked in school atmosphere.

We had the most fun spatter-painting. Leaves were collected and a beautiful piece of fern. We pressed these and spattered on a gray background and had the words, "Praise the Lord," across the top. It was greatly admired at the exhibit. We used polish for our paint as it washes off hands and clothing and floors with greater ease than paint.

Another interesting project was the peep show of Noah's Ark that we made for the beginners. We put the background around three sides of the box and then set up our carefully colored animals. After that, we scotch-taped them to the floor for steadiness. We used an opaque paper on top that let in light but could be seen through, and cut our peep hole. The kindergarten class is going to enjoy it, but at the exhibit, their mothers and fathers liked it, too! They kept peeking.

Here are some of the passages which you might like to look up.

Psalms 146:1-2 tells about how long we shall sing praises. Psalm 95:1-7, why we want to sing praises to God. Psalm 108:1-5 tells where we shall sing the Lord's praises.

We also found some passages that told us some things were sure.

Genesis 8:22, Mark 4:28, Psalm 104:19-24, Psalm 125:1-2 tell us of things we can depend on.

You will find others as you read the Psalms.

HELPING CHILDREN TO BECOME RESPONSIBLE BEINGS.

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Take off your coat, Lucy, and I'll hang it up for you," said her mother when Lucy came home from kindergarten.

"I can hang it up myself if I climb on the chair," Lucy answered hopefully.

"No, you musn't do that," was the reply.

In kindergarten Lucy hangs up all of her wraps, because the hooks are arranged so that she can reach them without difficulty. It is always interesting to watch the independence of kindergarten children as they hurry to get dressed before the final bell rings. In many homes, too, the mother has some of the hooks in the clothes closets placed low enough for the children to reach them easily. Then there is no need for assistance on the part of an adult.

Joan Stone, Lucy's cousin, has reached the age when she begs her mother to let her do the dishes. She has been in the habit of helping in lesser ways, so Mrs. Stone is quite willing to have her start this new venture. She covers Joan's dress up with a large apron and gives her the not-too-difficult pans to wash. The child has fun, works hard, and really does a very good job. She always hovers around the kitchen when her mother is making cookies and is usually allowed to cut out most of them. She is only four years old, but there are a number of things that she can do and loves to do, and she saves her mother many steps.

On the other hand, Lucy's parents, like a lot of other mothers and fathers, do not have this farseeing sense of the value of allowing children to share in the home experiences. Lucy's Uncle Edward had been brought up the same way. He never had been given a chance to do anything in his home. If he tried to bring a chair from one room to another, his mother would call out, "Let the maid do that, Edward." When the doorbell rang and Edward started for the door, he would be called back. His father, too, was constantly restraining all initiative on the boy's part. No wonder Edward did not succeed in his business when he grew up! No wonder he had no feeling of responsibility about anything! No wonder he had no executive ability! He was the result of years of "Let Anne do it, Edward." His mother expected stability in her son, and she could not understand why he had none of the qualities for responsible living that some of his cousins had.

Permitting a child to have some living creature of which to take entire care helps to develop reliability. Of course, the parent must see that the pet is properly tended, because sometimes an ordinarily careful boy or girl will forget. So there is need for supervision—for the sake of the child as well as for the sake of the pet. Whatever our children do, or do not do, affects their character growth. We are helping greatly, when, as unobtrusively as possible, we make sure that each undertaking is correctly carried through.

When conditions make it impossible or at least unwise, for a child to have an animal to care for, and attractive plant or a seed box will generally prove to be a fairly good substitute.

Jack was fortunate enough to live where a small garden could be started. His dad gave him the use of a plot of ground. But neither of his parents said, "Plant what you like and be sure you take good care of it." No; the three talked over together—what did Jack wish to plant, what would grow best in that special soil and location, and soon. And then the parents explained what would need to be done and advised him that to get satisfactory results he would have to give his garden good care. Jack felt the sympathetic interest of his parents and was encouraged by it. He wanted to measure up; he wanted to do his best—and he did.

SYNODS AND PRESBYTERIES.

Mr. Matthews writes, "This Synod is waking up to its possibilities and responsibilities. I am struck by this phenomenon every day. The new revision of the Constitutions is being put into effect; there is a new spirit of unity and cooperation, lay leaders are coming to the fore—all in all, things are moving in a way that seemed impossible a year or two ago. . . . We are not conscious of doors closing. On the contrary, doors are opening on every hand and we must choose which ones to enter."—From The Church, Bulletin of the Church of Christ in China.

RUTH, A SYMBOL OF FAMILY LOYALTY.

LESSON III—JULY 16, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Ruth said, Entreat me not to leave thee and to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.—Ruth 1:16.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Proverbs 31:10-31.

(These Notes are being written at the Y.M.C.A. Camp on the Shore Drive where the Junior High Camp of our Eastern Virginia Conference is being held. A rustic bench serves as both a table for the typewriter, and a seat for the typist. Overhead can be heard the roar of Uncle Sam's planes, while from the classroom nearby comes the sound of the teacher's voice as he talks with the class of fine boys and girls about the Bible—"The Greatest Book in the World." Live oaks furnish shade, and the wind blowing gently through the trees provides a fine background of music. It is one of those rare days in June about which the poet wrote. One could well be lazy and loaf under such surroundings and circumstances, but "the show must go." As one of my professors in the Seminary used to say, "It is good for a dog to have a reasonable amount of fleas; it makes him know he is a dog." So instead of saying, "Doggone it, I've got to write these Notes," I will instead give thanks that I have this privilege. Here ends the reading of this preamble. Now for more serious things. H.S.H.)

A Gem of a Short Story.

There are few stories anywhere in literature that equal the story of Ruth, and none that surpasses it. It has all the factors or qualities that are basic to a good short story. It is told that when Benjamin Franklin was at the Court of France, a group of well educated people were discussing short stories and good literature. According to the story, Franklin read the story of Ruth. Those present did not seem to know that it came from the Bible. But they were lavish in their praise of this gem of literature. They were surprised and embarrassed when he told them that it was taken from the Bible. It is full of drama, human interest, and has romance in it. Read it not critically, but read it simply as a short story. Read it with your heart as well as with your head. Your heart will be strangely warmed if you do this.

Highlights of the Story.

Most Sunday School folks are familiar with the main facts of the story of Ruth. Or are they? In brief they are as follows: A prominent and perhaps prosperous farmer, living near Bethlehem, because of a drought and the inroads of marauding bands who pillaged his crops, took his wife and two sons, and moved to Moab across the Jordan River. He settled down there, and later his sons married and settled there. But in the course of time, both of the sons died, and Elimelech himself also died. Here were three widows in all their loneliness, apparently unable to make a living for themselves. In despair, Naomi, the mother-in-law, decided to go back to her home community, Bethlehem. She thought she would have to go back alone, and she steeled her heart to say good-bye to her daughters-in-law. It would be terribly lonely without husband, sons and daughters-in-law, but Naomi refused to give way to self-pity. Nor did she demand that her daughters-in-law go with her. Her courage and unselfishness at this point is often overlooked.

One of the young women, Orpha, just could not bring herself to leave her homeland and to go with her mother-in-law to a foreign land. She bade Naomi farewell and turned back home. But Ruth was made of the stuff of heroines. In words that stir one's heart even today, she affirmed her purpose to forsake her homeland, her home, and even her religion and to go with Naomi, for better or worse, until death did them part. She was not to be swerved from her purpose, and Naomi soon discovered that. So back to Bethlehem the two women came.

Tongues began to wag, and gossip waxed fast. But the two women soon settled down and took their places in the community. Naomi proved to be a woman who was tactful, resourceful, sympathetic, alert to the main chance.

At her suggestion Ruth went into the field of Boaz, a wealthy farmer, to glean. At her suggestion Ruth became acquainted with this very eligible and very desirable bachelor. And as it often turns out in the story books, "they married and lived happily ever afterwards."

A Practical Lesson from the Story.

There are many, many practical lessons or truths in this short and sublime story. There is, of course, the matter of loyalty as it found expression in Ruth's life, loyalty that led her to leave her home and home folks, and even to give up her religion, which for her was a very significant thing to do. There is the lesson of Naomi's fine spirit and her moral and spiritual courage. There is Boaz in his chivalry and strength of character. And so on.

But the lesson has a very practical and personal point for many of us. There are in America today, and in some of our own communities many women—foreigners—who have married American boys. These women have left home and loved ones, and in instances they have also given up their religion. Here they are, in a strange land, living among strangers, oftentimes lonely, discouraged, and seemingly almost friendless. Or here again are foreign students in our schools and colleges, lonely, confused, and oftentimes discouraged. How much the friendship of an older woman or an older man can mean to these people. What an opportunity they present for friendly service. This applies also to Displaced Persons. In many communities there are people, sometimes whole families, who have been uprooted and transplanted to a new land and a new kind of life. It can mean so much to them if there are Naomis in the community to give them guidance and understanding and sympathy and religious faith. And if there are Boazes to give them employment and to apply "fair practices in labor."

It should be noted that this Ruth, who was a Moabitess, was the great grandmother of David. Thus she has her place in the ancestry of our Lord Jesus Christ himself. This in itself is a rebuke to the selfishness and the exclusiveness of the Jewish people; and to us with our racial and national and religious prejudices and bigotry.

The Christian conscience has to be aroused, not merely to the enormity of the liquor traffic, but to the enormity of the sin of doing nothing about the liquor traffic.—John G. Woolley.

WHY GO TO CHURCH?

First: In this actual world, a churchless community, a community where men have abandoned and scoffed at or ignored their religious needs, is a community on the rapid down grade.

Second Church work and church attendance mean the cultivation of the habit of feeling some responsibility for others.

Third: There are enough holidays for most of us. Sundays differ from other holidays in the fact that there are fifty-two of them every year. . . . Therefore, on Sundays go to church.

Forth: Yes, I know all the excuses. I know that one can worship the Creator in a grove of trees, or by a running brook, or in a man's house just as well as in a church. But I also know as a matter of cold fact the average man does not thus worship.

Fifth: He may not hear a good sermon at church. He will hear a sermon by a good man who, with his good wife, is engaged all the week in making hard lives a little easier.

Sixth: He will listen to and take part in reading some beautiful passages from the Bible. And if he is not familiar with the Bible, he has suffered a loss.

Seventh: He will take part in singing some good hymns.

Eighth: He will meet and nod and speak to good, quiet neighbors. He will come away feeling a little more charitable toward all the world, even toward those excessively foolish young men who regard the church as a soft performance.

Ninth: I advocate a man's joining in church work for the sake of showing his faith by his work.

—Theodore Roosevelt.

A TIME OF TESTING.

"But it is only stating a fact to say that the work of the western missionary has been greatly limited in the liberated areas. He cannot travel freely as before; he cannot engage in certain forms of work; he serves less in administrative capacities and more as a counsellor and friend. To some missionaries that has brought discouragement and a feeling of frustration. Others are adjusting themselves to the new conditions and are finding new opportunities for service, or they are willing to wait for conditions to improve.

"Another fact to be faced is the measure of suspicion under which missionaries now labor. The reasons are many: The century of western imperialism during which Protestant missions entered China; the association of missionaries in the thinking of the revolutionary group with aggressive policies of western countries or with old regimes and systems in China; misunderstanding at times of the purpose and motives of missionary service; the fear of spies; and a resurgent national spirit that demands freedom from any suggestion of direct or indirect foreign control.

"It is true that the Chinese people are well-disposed toward the people of all countries, and that missionaries have a wide circle of friends who understand them and appreciate them. However, this is a testing time for missionaries as well as for the Church in China, a testing time for their faith, their patience, their true love of the Chinese, their willingness to serve in humble ways, their ability to learn new lessons, their spirit of sacrifice and their vision of the future. Missionaries are still needed not only for the special contributions they may make to the Christian movement in China but also as personal links with the ecumenical church. The missionary today who can rise above his own nationality and above the tensions and conflicts within and between nations has a message for the country from which he comes and the country in which he serves; moreover he is helping to build a spiritual world community around the unifying faith of the Christian gospel."—From an Editorial in The Church, Bulletin of The Church of Christ in China, April 1950.

THE SUBSTANCE OF CHURCH-MANSHIP.

colored peoples constitute an overwhelming majority. We are being reminded by men like Herbert Agar that the white race better join the human race before we find ourselves on the wrong end of a Jim Crow car.

Yes, it is one church in one world. Some have not discovered we are one church. They are robbing the church of its power, making it at the points where they stand a petty, provincial concern which men of vision scorn. Some have not discovered we are one world, and they are bring us to the brink of catastrophic war which may leave the world in ashes.

But some have discovered it. They take no satisfaction in the strength which comes to their parish at the expense of another church. They do not boast of converts from other churches. Their concern is with the unchurched. They weep with neighboring churches in difficulty, for they know that the weakness of one church reflects upon all. They rejoice in the strength of their neighboring churches, knowing that this lifts the whole enterprise to higher levels where the finest are drawn to the church making the strength of one the strength of all. They are not drawing circles which shut out other churchmen because they have different creeds, ceremonies and orders. They make the circles which shut others within the same fellowship of the church. They know that their denominational divisions frequently are but the relics of ancient quarrels which have no present importance. They are trying by every sound, brotherly and effective means at their disposal to merge churches, to federate churches, to secure co-operation between denominations and to give strength to cooperative church enterprises. Thus would they fulfill the prayer of the Master, "that they may all be one, even as thou, Father, art in me and I in Thee—that they also may be one in us."

They know that there can be no "foreign churches" in one world. They love their country, but know that they are called both by God and the hard facts to be world citizens as well as patriots. They realize that the phrase, "Foreign Missionary," is a misnomer. They are ashamed they ever talked of the "white man's burden" and used such words as "heathen." They have stopped talking of "native" churches and started to consider the ecumenical church where every church is equal before God ministering and being ministered unto by Christians in other lands. They are giving power to such global expressions of one world as the World Council of Churches which will yet assist us to formulate Christian strategy for one world and to unite the power of Christendom to make that program effective. They are singing today—

*Christ for the world we sing
The world to Christ we bring.*

And these churchmen are working and praying that this song shall help them to build a "new heaven and a new earth." All of us like to think that we belong to this company vision of one church in one world raises them to the level of churchmanship. We shall at least try to be worthy of them. So shall we build the inner substance of one church in such a manner as to make more hopeful the outer form of one world.

He that fears death lives not.—Geo. Herbert (1593-1633).

It is not too late for other churches and friends to plan to give a vacation to some of these children. Please do. One good friend read my letter in THE SUN about the five Arnold children and sent us a check for $100 to help with them. In the summertime we are running very low financially, and need now all the help we can muster. If you are thinking of helping us soon send your check during the slack summer period.

You will see that the South Norfolk Church and friends in that church are doing a noble part by these children here. Others greatly helped us to make a fine report this month. Thanks so much.

A NECESSARY INCREASE.

Most of us are very proud of our CHRISTIAN SUN. Filled with news, programs and personal notes it brings a wealth of friendship each week. How much is it worth to you?

As most of you know, our subscription price was increased a dollar per year the last meeting of the Southern Convention. Some folks have said $3.00 is too much. Is it? The news of your church and your friends comes to you for a little less than 6¢ a week.

The increase in price will, we hope, balance the operating budget of THE SUN. Will you think in terms of cost per week and then be sure to renew your own subscription and secure new ones that others may share the joy you have in your church paper?

The climax of the service was reached when the Rev. R. T. Woodruff challenged us, in his usual fine way, to make a secure world for our children. His message seemed to have special significance as the audience looked into the faces of the vested junior choir which formed a fitting background for the message.

Announcement was made that the annual Daily Vacation Bible School would begin June 18. Miss Elise Satterfield, a local college student who has won many honors, will direct the school.

American Board President Honored by the Council

A Resolution Presented by Dr. Russell Clinchy, Minister in Hartford, Connecticut

Russell Henry Stafford was elected the eleventh President of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions at the Annual Meeting in 1940. Previously to that he had been elected a member of the Prudential Committee in 1936, and had served as Chairman of the Committee, so that his whole service to the Board has covered a period of fourteen years.

There is no way in which service to a cause can be measured wholly by the enumeration of the names of committees on which a person has served, but it is certainly true that the unique functioning of the committee structure of the Prudential Committee calls for continued and devoted service of a most intimate nature, and no person can serve upon such committees without sustained devotion. It is therefore, a declaration of the quantity and the quality of his service that we record that he has served on the following committees: India, 1936 to 1950; Home Department, 1937 to 1941; Appropriations, 1937 to 1950; Foreign Policy, 1937 to 1950; Personnel and Salaries, 1937 to 1950; Rules and Subcommittees, 1938 to 1942; Library, 1947 to 1950; Additional Income, 1943 to 1950; Chairman, Committee of Nine, 1942 to 1950; President of the Board of Trustees of Anatolia College, 1929 to 1950. Serving on these committees not only means meeting with most of them once a month but also carrying the burden of the work in foreign lands, and upon the home base, within one's mind and heart through all the days between meetings. It is in the light of such responsibility that the service of Dr. Stafford to the American Board can be appreciated.

His work as president of the Board has been carried on during a period when he has carried the fundamental responsibility for two great tasks in the fellowship of our churches. For the first five years of his presidency he was minister of the Old South Church in Boston, and for the past five years he has been president of the Hartford Seminary Foundation. Each of these places of privilege and responsibility demands the full exercise of one's mind and heart and body, and his record as the minister of a great church, and as the administrative officer of a university of religion for the training of Christian workers, has proved that he has given of himself without stint or limit to these supreme tasks to which those who trusted in him have called him. This outreach of his power led him to accept appointment as one of the forty-five delegates from the United States and Canada to attend the International Missionary Council in Madras, India, where the Christian leaders from all the countries of the earth counseled together upon the missionary program of the future.

The years of his presidency of the Board coincided with the momentous years of decision of the war period, so vitally affecting every realm of the missionary work of our churches. His wisdom, his breadth of understanding, and his ability to perceive the implications of events as they would affect the future, were the hallmarks of his service as president.

But no word of appreciation would be complete without a recognition of his abounding vitality of courage and of faith as a Christian minister and leader, not alone exemplified by a torrent of fluent speech which has so amazed and stirred us all, but also by an inclusive friendship which has bound us to his companionship. His realism has always erased any tendency to sentimentality; his incisive thinking has illumined the paths of duty when our sight has been dim; and his infectious buoyancy of an unconquerable faith in Christian experience has led us on with a great hope. He accepted a post of dignity and duty; he maintained it with integrity; his successor will rejoice in the name and work of the man who preceded him. For all this we thank Russell Henry Stafford.

NUMBER 27

New Lebanon Church (N. C. & Va. Conf.) Dedicated

Sunday, July 2, was a memorable day at New Lebanon Christian Church. Supt. W. T. Scott was present and assisted the pastor, Rev. Percy H. Ricketts in the dedication of the new church building.

This church originated in a Sunday School held at Bason school house. A ministerial student from Elon College, L. I. Cox, began preaching services there in 1897. Rev. P. T. Klapp was invited to assist in the organization of the church. Four of the twenty charter members are living today; namely, Mesdames Mollie M. Sharp, Dora M. Sharp, Ida Sharp Barham and Ellen Moore McCullum. Dr. J. O. Atkinson led in the dedication of the original building on the second Sunday in July, 1899.

The new brick structure stands only a few yards from the location of the forty-six-year old white frame building. This new building includes the sanctuary, a social hall and seven class rooms. Oil heat has been provided. Approximately $20,000 has been expended.

During the years the church has been served by the following pastors: Revs. L. I. Cox, W. L. Wells, J. V. Knight, R. A. Whitten, J. L. Neese, F. E. Church, M. T. Sorrell, and P. H. Ricketts. The active membership stands at 120, and 110 pupils are enrolled in the Sunday School.

The Daily Vacation School at Mt. Hermon was conducted this year by Mr. E. C. Hobgood. The attendance was very good, the enrollment being about the same as last year. The revival will be held September 3 to 8. Rev. Carl Wallace will assist the pastor.

Rev. S. E. Madren, a former pastor of Pope's Chapel assisted Rev. E. M. Carter in a meeting there the last week in June. Attendance was good, the congregations increasing each night. There was a large number of reconsecrations, and three members were received.

Miss Hazel Carden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Carden of Burlington, N. C., was united in marriage with Lester C. Newlin, son of Rev. and Mrs. E. D. Newlin of High Point, on June 24. The bridegroom's father, assisted by Rev. Walstein Snyder, the pastor of the bride, heard the vows.

Minnie Maxcine Self, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Self of Walkertown, N. C., became the bride of Henry Carl Murray, the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Murray of Belew Creek, N. C. on Sunday, June 11, at 5:30 P. M. at the Belew Creek Congregational Christian Church.

The Annual Children's Day Program of The Congregational Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., was given Sunday June 18th at the Sunday School hour, under the direction of Mrs. W. M. Stevens, with the assistance of the teachers of each Department. Eighty children participated in this special program.

Lura Lee Neal became the bride of Charles Max Marshall, and Maragret Doss Neal became the bride of Jack Leonard Flinehum in a double ceremony on June 18, at 5:30 P. M. at the Belew Creek Congregational Christian Church. The brides are the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Neal Sr. of Belew Creek, N. C.

Rev. E. M. Carter reports: "Our meeting at Fuller's Chapel during the week of June 12 was fine. Rev. T. Fred Wright assisted me there. The Daily Vacation Bible School was conducted in the morning of each day. The attendance was excellent. The local talent conducted this school assisted by Mr. Wright."

A series of evangelistic services was held at Salem Chapel Congregational Christian Church on June 4 through June 9. Rev. W. J. Andes, pastor of the Winston-Salem Congregational Christian Church, was the guest speaker. Miss Marlyn Johnson and Miss Lou Ann Marshall united with the Church by profession of faith.

PRESIDENT STEVENS URGES COOPERATION.

By action of the recent Session of the Southern Convention the subscription rate of THE CHRISTIAN SUN was increased, as of July 1, 1950, to $3.00 for one year or $5.00 for two years. Many of us had hoped that this would not be necessary, however the continued rise in the cost of paper and labor which are essential to publication of THE SUN has made it absolutely necessary to have more revenue from the paper itself to insure its publication.

I would like to urge the members of our churches to continue to subscribe to and read our Church paper. Please renew subscriptions promptly, as we have no margin in our funds to compensate for unpaid subscriptions.

W. MILLARD STEVENS,
President, Southern Convention.

EASTERN VA. SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION TO MEET.

The Annual Sunday School Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference will meet in a one-day session on Tuesday, July 18, 1950, at 10:00 a. m., with the Cypress Chapel Christian Church, near Suffolk, Virginia. Approximately 300 delegates and visitors will attend according to Mills E. Godwin, Jr., president of the convention, who added that this year's program will be built around the theme, "Consecrated Service through Sunday School." Rev. Duane Vore, pastor of the Suffolk Church, Rev. Earl Farrell, the pastor of the host church, Dr. W. T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention, and others will appear on the program. Reports will be received from the 44 Sunday schools of the Conference and matters of general interest to all of the Sunday schools will be discussed. Lunch will be served by the ladies of the Cypress Chapel Church.

PLEASANT GROVE CHURCH AND THE O'KELLY CEMETERY.

Seldom it is my pleasure to have a more delightful trip than the recent one to Pleasant Grove Sunday School to present an appeal for a contribution towards the improvement of The O'Kelly Cemetery in Chatham County, N. C. The people gave me a hearty welcome and a liberal contribution.

It was my privilege while there on the 3rd Sunday to teach the two adult classes sitting together as one. It was the largest in numbers that it has been my pleasure to teach.

Misfortune visited Rev. and Mrs. Melvin Dollar and Mr. Roland Allgood while attending the Council. Mr. and Mrs. Dollar received slight injuries in an automobile accident while driving to the Council session one morning, and Mr. Allgood's father died suddenly in Norfolk, Virginia. We regret these misfortunes among our delegation.

The Council was attended by delegates from the entire constituency, there being approximately 1,000 in attendance. The program was in high order and a good spirit prevailed. The question of the proposed merger between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Churches was faced and considered in good spirit. The predominating spirit of those in attendance favored the merger and while the completion of the merger is blocked for the time being by court rulings in New York, there seems to be a desire for church unity in uniting with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. There was no attempt of those in attendance to disregard the feelings of those against the present merger and constructive action was taken in the appointment of committees representing both opinions of the merger. This gives promise of finding a solution to the present complications. The historical position of the Christian Church has been Christian Union and we rejoice that the ideal has a chance of realization above partisan feelings.

It is a great privilege to attend a General Council meeting because there one gets a prospective of the greatness of our denomination. The Congregational Christian Churches are a great fellowship and we are humbly grateful that the Southern Convention is considered a vital part of that fellowship.

EDITOR SCOTFORD RETIRES

John R. Scotford, Editor of Advance since 1943, has relinquished this important national post. For seven years he has not only recorded history, he has made journalistic history. His editorials have not been "out of this world," they have been very definitely and luminously a part of this troubled world. His quick and analytical eyes have surveyed many situations and unnumbered readers have found in him a ready and reliable diagnostician. His incisive journalism has helped to make the church paper more readable. His spade work in religious architecture has had a salutary influence on Protestant church building, ridding it of much excess baggage and blending in an unprecedented manner the American pattern of utility, beauty and economy. He has exposed Protestant worship to sympathetic but relentless analysis. Our generation is indebted to John R. Scotford for a new understanding and appreciation of expurgated worship.

Now free from the restrictions of editorial responsibility, Dr. Scotford is at liberty to follow his erstwhile proclivities as free-lance writer and architectural consultant. He is booked already for a seminar on architecture in Norfolk this fall. As he roams across our country many people will have the opportunity to see and hear the author of "Church Beautiful."

During the entire Scotford editorship, Advance and The Sun have enjoyed most cordial relations. The Sun has been able to publish a number of articles and reviews which otherwise Advance would have consigned to file No. 13 (the waste basket). Editor Scotford has been generous in forwarding items for our weekly which could not be used in the delayed appearance of his monthly.

Advance is the national journal of Congregational Christian Churches, continuing the Congregationalist and The Herald of Gospel Liberty. Eugene M. Bushong is chairman of the Editorial Board, and Andrew Vance McCracken is serving as interim editor.

ANENT SUBSCRIPTIONS

A subscriber calls our attention to the fact that the subscription price of The Sun has not been $2.00 from time immemorial, but was increased to $1.50 when the paper was changed from eight to sixteen pages and so remained until 1918.

This information should be a part of the record, although it does not put our present situation in a different light. Few items, if any, have remained at the same price from 1918 to 1950. Prices in general have soared by leaps and bounds. Even today, prices are listed with the statement, "Subject to change without notice."

It is anticipated that some may not renew their subscriptions at the new price. That has been the expedience of other publications in similar circumstances. The subscription norm is usually resumed after the first or second year.

A goodly number of people are saying that The Sun is indispensable and that it is cheap, even at $3.00. Many look to it regularly for local, denominational and interdenominational news. Some, lukewarm in their approbation, inevitably turn to it for special purposes. One subscriber recently included The Sun among his "greatest weekly anticipations." A veteran Christian minister in Connecticut drives down to Hartford periodically and reads The Sun in the Seminary library. A couple in the mid-West vie with each other to see which will read each issue first.

Certainly no fair-minded person would want his church paper to continue longer with inadequate financial support. There is a limit to economy as well as the patience of those who have borne the financial shortcomings of the publication. After our financial equilibrium has been restored, we should have an era of tranquility in publication.

GENERAL COUNCIL DIGEST

Another General Council meeting has been concluded. The Council meeting, when it was originally scheduled, was designed to lead to a union with the General Synod of the Evangelical & Reformed Church of Christ. Although this action was approved last year, a Brooklyn, N. Y., court enjoined the Council from uniting itself with any other body. An appeal is pending from this injunction, but prior to the decision no further action toward the union may be taken.

In the meanwhile, a constructive meeting of the Council was held in Cleveland. More than 2,000 delegates and alternates attended. Dr. Leslie Cooke was the messenger bringing greetings from the Congregational Churches of England and Wales. A broad program for the extension of mission work in this country and in foreign lands was presented.

AN HONEST CONFESSION

No, the editor has not sent that contribution to Treasurer Basnight for the O'Kelly Cemetery improvement fund. He has thought of it and intended to do so, but has omitted one important detail, the sending of the cash.

If it is true, as some maintain, that it is possible for a denomination to over-emphasize its temporal leader or father, our denomination is not guilty on that score. We have neglected the founder of The Christian Church. These are days of grace. Let us redeem our poor record, respond to Dr. Newman's appeal and manifest appropriate reverence for the name and heritage of James O'Kelly.

"Of Equability and Perseverance In Well Doing"

An Address by DOUGLAS HORTON, Minister of the General Council

Since we last met, an issue of unusual interest and of prime importance has arisen among us. At first we were somewhat shocked by it, but now that we have had a chance to assess it and to measure its ramifications both for American Protestantism today and for our whole future, we are awed by the engagingly dangerous opportunity it has brought us.

This issue is of the nature of uranium or helium. That is to say, its value depends upon how we handle it. We can use it to destroy our own fissionable fellowship and others with us, or we can deal with it so constructively that our own churches and the larger Church of Christ will through us be blessed by it.

The issue is as to the structure of the Congregational Christian denomination.

The finger of God in history now points to you and me and requires that we say what we are. We have a deep and invincible feeling that this fellowship of ours is a pearl of such great price that any person would be well advised to go and sell all that he has in order to obtain it. We have announced again and again that it is the veritable koinonia of the New Testament, that it is the treasure which God through us has been saving for the ecumenical Church, but that it is a fellowship at once so flexible and so firm that it is the natural form for the Church of the future to assume. But now we have come to the place where we can no longer cherish it as a comforting communal blur of spirit: for our children we must delineate it. Circumstance is now saying, "If you cannot define it properly, you can no longer have it."

Surely we shall all be agreed that the wrong way to meet this issue is blindly to take sides about it, running with the enthusiasm of ignorance either to the conservative or the liberal banner. This way leads to acrimony and recrimination, and so to the destruction of the very fellowship we are seeking to define. If we use it this way, our helium is helium, our uranium anything but uranic. Fortunately, there is no reason to believe that we shall take this destructive course: our long training in Christian democracy should protect us from it.

We shall be equally agreed that the right way to treat the issue is first to study it, looking at all sides of it. Since there is no better companion to study than discussion, it is hoped that the issue will be the theme of many a public meeting and private conversation. If such debates be postulated upon the experience of most of us, that values are seldom all on one side of an argument and none on the other, we shall seek—and find—mutual understanding; and in the end we shall arrive at a definite consensus which will form the intellectual core of our fellowship and impart to us robustness for a new era of development. In the strength of it we shall be able to lend strength to others, especially in the exciting ecumenical movement, which is the growing edge of Christianity today.

The Immediate Past and Near Future.

The story of how the issue has arisen illustrates the truth that problems come only to the living and working. There are ordinarily no issues in a country churchyard, unless a Thomas Gray or some living person happens to be there writing his elegy or doing something else. There are no issues in a denomination willing to sleep with its fathers. But we have not been that kind. With us the zeal to take our place in the march of the new Protestantism by uniting our fellowship with that of the Evangelical and Reformed Church has brought us into a law court—and the law court has brought us to this issue. There have been moments when it has seemed strange to me that in the very midst of union controversies and lawsuits we have increased our membership to an all-time high and lifted our giving to an unprecedented peak for our generation. Second thought has reminded me, however, that the apparent embarrassment and the record-breaking are both in the same class: they are alike the product of strenuous living. You either push up issues or you push up daises.

This afternoon I shall not speak at all about the proposed union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church: the negotiations are at a standstill and must remain so until the case of the Cadman Memorial Church versus the General Council is out of court. Nor shall I speak of the suit, except to attempt to answer questions as to procedure, past and promised, which many of you are asking. I want only to give you my thoughts upon the fundamental issue, the matter of our polity, and then listen to yours.

The suit had its official start with the serving of a summons on the day after Easter in 1949. The trial began in the Supreme Court of the State of New York on November 14th of that year, and with a week of recess at Thanksgiving time and a month at Christmas continued until January 24th last. . . . On the 26th of January a complete decision was read from the bench. To this was added the judgement, which contained certain declarations and injunctions, on the 20th of February. . . . It is hardly necessary for me to tell you that they completely restrain this Council from proceeding with the proposed union.

During the session of the court we ministers heard good-natured references from the lawyers of both sides to the inexactness of ecclesiastical language. It is now my turn to point out that according to the accuracy of the law in the State of New York the Supreme Court is actually the lowest court having jurisdiction in cases of this sort. An appeal was therefore possible; and soon after the signing of the judgment—on March 1st of this year—your Executive Committee voted to appeal the case to the Appellate Division, a court which is held also in Brooklyn and on whose bench sit five judges. The appeal will probably be heard by this court in the late autumn or early winter. This is the middle court having jurisdiction in the state, the highest being the Court of Appeals, which meets at Albany, the capital of the state, and is composed of seven judges. The appeal to this court is possible when provisions of the constitution of the State of New York are directly involved. There are those who say they can already feel the breezes of the Potomac blowing softly through the issues in this case. The court held in the hall on the banks of that river would be the fourth and last to which appeal could be made until we gather at another river. The Supreme Court of the United States counts nine judges.

The Issue.

The issue which the court has brought before us is as to whether we are governed by the ecclesiastical philosophy which I shall call Congregationalism A or by that which I shall distinguish as Congregationalism B.

In two features these polities are as alike as peas in a pod. According to each of them:

1. Each local church has control of its own affairs; and
2. The organizations in which local churches are united—which we call Associations, Conferences, and the General Council have no control over the local churches.

This is the chorus in which we all lift our voices. Our fathers suffered too much at the hands of Elizabethan bishops for us to be happy in any system of church government which permits inroads on local congregations from outside. The mighty opening of one of the early Scottish covenants comes to mind here: it reads, "In the name of God and the dead generations." In that name and in that memory we unite to keep the local bodies free to rule their own life. At this point Congregationalism A and Congregationalism B are implacably unanimous.

With this, however the similarity ceases. The peas are no longer of the same pod. According to Congregationalism A, the organizations like the General Council are controlled by the local churches. According to Congregationalism B, they are controlled by their own members and are in cooperation with the local churches and all other groups in the fellowship. This may seem on the face of it an inconsequential distinction indeed, but actually it is a continental divide. Follow the one idea down the stream of its implications into its broadening rivers of thought and you come finally to one set of institutions. Follow the other and you arrive at last at another set so different from the first as to constitute a separate civilization. The distinction is important enough to be pointed up by repetition: according to Congregationalism A the organs like the General Council, the Conferences, and the Associations are controlled by the local churches, whereas according to Congregationalism B they are controlled by their own members and are in fellowship with the local churches and all other groups within the communion.

Congregationalism A.

In Congregationalism A these organizations of fellowship are dependent upon the local churches. According to this theory the constitutions of these organizations are in effect the articles of agreement under which the local churches work together. Though provision for amendment by the members is made in these constitutions, no amending can be done, under this theory, without at least the tacit consent of the local churches; for in this view a change made by any of these organizations in its own constitution against the will of any of the local churches would be an altering of the terms of an agreement without the approval of some of the parties to that very agreement. In Congregationalism A the local churches are the only ultimate existences: all else is the shadow of the local churches. According to this view the independency of the local churches involves the dependency upon them of all other groups in the denomination.

This dependency is high-lighted when property relationships are introduced. In this view, the property on the books of the organizations of fellowship (to borrow from the language of the Brooklyn judgment) is held by them "in trust for the benefit, work interest and activities of the Congregational Christian Churches and for the purpose of carrying out and aiding the Christian way of life through the basic principles, usages and polity of the Congregational Christian Churches, and may not be alienated or diverted from these purposes." Congregationalism A would here interpret the phrase, "Congregational Christian Churches," not as the name of the denomination as a whole but as a reference to the local churches as such. From this angle, every charter and every constitution of the organizations of fellowship has an overriding limitation. According to this theory these charters and constitutions may not be amended, except with the complete accord of all local churches, for the property is held for the local churches' "benefit, work, interest and activities" and, therefore, these churches as the beneficiaries must all approve of any change made in the trust for their benefit.

In a word, "the fellowship" in Congregationalism A is made up of, by and for the local churches. One court witness said, "... the local churches hire the State Conferences and hire the officers of the National Council. They are our servants." (Minutes p. 287.) Here the organs of fellowship are seen as the agents of the local churches and not as free agents. So, according to Congregationalism A, the local churches, be it one or a dozen, must have the say as to whether or not the General Council is or is not to join with another body to create a new General Synod, and indeed they are, under this view, the only authority, for the General Council is their "servant" and must abide by the direction of its 5,700 masters. Under Congregationalism A the Associations, Conferences and General Council are designed to enhance the fellowship of the local churches, but they are not part of it. They have an ancillary, but not a principal role, for only free agents can belong to a true fellowship. Full citizenship in the democracy of Congregationalism A belongs to the local churches and to no other groups whatever.

If Congregationalism A is assumed to be the polity of the Congregational Christian Churches, it would follow that the members of the General Council, nominated at large or by units of 1,000 church members, coming from the Associations and the Conferences and acting in their membership capacity, are without power to do anything unless specific authority has been granted to them in advance by all the local churches. This philosophy of Congregationalism holds that the General Council, lacking a precise mandate from the local churches, has no power to join in creating a new body to which members could be elected by the Conferences, even though the churches voting would not be bound by anything that it did, any more than they are bound by the acts of the General Council today.

Congregationalism B.

Now let us have a hard look at Congregationalism B, another philosophy of our common life.

The organs of fellowship, like the Associations, the Conferences and the General Council, are clearly not local churches. Local churches are self-perpetuating, direct-membership bodies, each member of which has a vested and direct interest in the church property. The Associations, Conferences and General Council are always bodies of elected delegates. Apart from the few ex-officio members, there are no voting members of this General Council elected to it by the General Council itself. The voting members in general are elected by the Associations or Conferences. This system allows, in a democratic way, for denominational extension and unification.

At one all-important point, however, according to Congregationalism B, organizations like the General Council are like the local churches of

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

A NEW INTEREST FOR ELON COLLEGE.

Before the founding of Elon College, the Church recognized its need of such an institution and its responsibility for the college's support. The Church has considered Elon its major responsibility. It has not always discharged this responsibility completely, but from year to year it has given the college its attention and support. Considering the present condition which church colleges are in, and Elon is no exception, the Church realizes that Elon must have increased support, that it must find more money from some source if it is to continue its program without embarrassment.

At the recent session of the Southern Convention the needs of Elon College were brought to the attention of the Convention and action is being taken to provide additional support. In a resolution voted, the churches were asked to contribute to Elon a minimum of $1.00 per member, the money thus raised to be known as the Elon College Sustaining Fund. The purpose of raising funds is for the erection of a Young ladies' dormitory on the campus. It was specifically stated that the money might be used for other purposes should an emergency arise.

A Committee on Policies and Program was appointed, consisting of representatives from:

The Board of Trustees of Elon College—

Mrs. W. V. Leathers
Mr. A. H. McIver
Rev. Stanley C. Harrell
Mrs. Russell T. Bradford
Mr. Cyrus Shoffner
Hon. Mills E. Godwin, Jr.
Mr. George D. Colclough
Dr. L. E. Smith (ex-officio)
Dr. W. H. Boone, (ex-officio)

The Elon College Foundation—

Hon. Thad Eure
Hon. Shirley T. Holland
Mr. Clyde W. Gordon
Dr. Darden W. Jones
Dr. W. M. Brown, (ex-officio)

The Convention—

Mr. S. Ray Barrett
Mr. I. H. Vickery
Mrs. W. E. Wisseman
Rev. F. C. Lester
Rev. R. A. Whitten
Mrs. Garland Spratley
Rev. Jesse H. Dollar
Rev. Robert Lee House

Sup't. Wm. T. Scott, (ex-officio)
Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, (ex-officio)
Rev. W. Millard Stevens, (ex-officio)

This committee was called to meet at Elon College on Thursday, June 15, at 12:45 p. m. The committee in session reviewed the action of the Convention, discussed the ways and means of making the resolution effective, and of securing additional funds for the support of the college. An executive committee was elected, as follows:

Hon. Mills E. Godwin—Gen. Chairman
Rev. W. Millard Stevens—Co-chairman
Mrs. O. H. Paris—Co-chairman
W. M. Brown—Executive Secretary

From the Southern Convention:

Mrs. W. T. Harrell
Rev. R. A. Whitten

From the Board of Trustees, Elon College:

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell
Mr. George D. Colclough

From the Board of Directors, Elon College Foundation:

Hon. Shirley T. Holland
Mr. Clyde W. Gordon

Ex-officio:

President L. E. Smith
Superintendent Wm. T. Scott
Mr. James F. Darden
Miss Pattie Lee Coghill

The executive committee was called to meet at Henderson, N. C., Thursday, July 6, at 10:30 a. m. The purpose of this meeting was to consider ways and means by which the action of the Convention may be implemented.

It is the purpose of the committee to form a complete organization that will, in addition to the committee on Policies and Programs and the executive committee, consist of conference committees and a committee for each local church. This is not to be a campaign for the primary purpose of raising money, but it is to be an organization charged with the responsibilities of carrying the college and its needs to the local church and acquainting each member the action of the Convention, and expressing hope that they will cooperate 100%.

It is not necessary to re-state the Church's need of Elon College for the training of its youth or the responsibility of the Church for the college. We are all aware of these facts, and we are committed to a program to sustain the college in its program of service to the Church and the public. As a definite result of this effort on the part of the Church and the cause of the college projected into the homes of our people, it is hoped that there may be a new loyalty on the part of the families of the Church who have children to go to college. The Church has done its best to build a college, to create an atmosphere that will be conducive, not only to the preparation of mind, but to the training and preparation of the heart and spirit of the students who attend. It has always been, and is the purpose of Elon College to enrich and develop the whole life, to make more attractive and more dynamic the individual's personality as he faces the obligations and responsibilities of life.

Do you have a son or a daughter in college today? Where? Do you have one to enter in September? What are your plans? There are many ways in which you may strengthen our Church for the task ahead.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The responsibilities that we do not like or appreciate become irksome as they occur. On the other hand, responsibilities that we welcome and appreciate delight us as they occur. I trust that our Sunday schools and churches may consider it an opportunity an a privilege to give quarterly support to the college. Some other interests of the church call on our Sunday schools and churches for monthly support. They need this support. The conference has provided for it. Elon College needs generous and constant support, but by the action of the Convention, the Sunday schools and churches are asked to make a contribution quarterly. Surely with these contributions coming only four times during the year, they will be generous, particularly so since the needs of the college are so acute at this particular time.

Christian Missions

At Home and Abroad

CHRISTIAN SUN Friends:

The Board of Publications and the Managing Editor have asked me to write the Mission Page for this paper. The Mission Board has expressed a similar desire.

It has been a long time since material from my typewriter was used on this page—a long time according to the calendar and in experience. Since that far away date my ninety-year-old mother, with whom I lived most of my life, has slipped away to the heavenly home, and I have passed through “the valley of the shadow of death.” Even yet strength is not adequate for daily duties, but good health is gradually returning. To write or not to write is a question.

But it is not a question of interest. My interest in Missions is abiding and consuming. Since that day as a college student I signed a Student Volunteer card saying that I would go as a foreign missionary, if the way ever opened, I have studied missions and hoped that I might be a missionary. The way never opened—not yet. Perhaps it never will for me; but it has for others.

At the General Council meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, recently, we were told that the Gospel has a greater chance in the world today than at any time since the Roman Empire. Our denomination has seven thousand stations (churches) around the world. Men and women of Christian faith stand at these posts witnessing, working and praying. In every nation there are Christians. Christian world brotherhood could become a reality in our time. People are anxious to find religious faith that is adequate for a time of conflicts, fears, bombs. Doors are open, and messengers are scattered through the earth.

But those of us, we are told, who live in luxury unsurpassed at any place in any age are now giving a less percentage of our incomes than in former days, that the cost of missionary activity is constantly rising, and that our American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions now faces the necessity of decreasing the field force rather than increasing it. These seem to be the facts.

What can one write for a Mission

Page in a paper like this when the facts are such as stated above?

There are literally hundreds of places in America where we should establish churches. Several of these places are within the borders of the Southern Convention. But there is no money with which to build. General MacArthur has pleaded for hundreds of missionaries to Japan. Our Navy begs for missionaries for the islands of the Pacific. Atheistic Communism challenges Christianity around the world. What do we do about it? Look at the budget of your church for the answer. How much do your members give each week for missions? Maybe it is two cents; it is probably less than a nickel. Will that save the world?

From a sick bed in Florida went a telegram to the Southern Convention suggesting that we undertake to raise a half-million dollars during the next two and one-half years for missions. This would show our interest in making a Christian world, I thought. It would be about fifteen dollars in two and one-half years for each member of our churches. What response? Some two weeks later I received a letter saying the telegram was received and that the Convention hoped I would get well.

To write or not to write? That is the question yet unanswered. Someone should write until we are aware that the cheapest and best way to preserve peace and to get a good world is not through war but by out-reaching a hand of brotherhood and Christian fellowship to all those who stand at Christian stations around the world.

With all my heart I believe that God still gives us a fighting chance to win the world for Christ in our day. We have the money, the people, the transportation, and the methods of communication. But the day of grace will come to an end. If it comes before we do our best, and we with our children are destroyed, we cannot blame the disaster on Him who gave his Son for our salvation. It will be our own fault.

Enough for now, and perchance for a long, long time.

NEW INTEREST IN CARROLL COUNTY.

Effective June 1, Rev. and Mrs. James W. Madren took up their work as full-time leaders in our Carroll County Mission. They have moved into the parsonage at Elk Spur, and under their leadership the churches will again take on a full-time program. Mr. Madren, for the past year, has been doing part-time work at Elk Spur and Rocky Ford. Under his leadership the work has gone steadily forward.

Last summer the Rocky Ford members, with some assistance from the Mission Board, painted their building inside and out, and wired the building so they now have electric lights. The road to the church has been very greatly improved and a new interest is manifested. The parsonage at Elk Spur was painted inside and out, and it, too, has been wired. The members of the Elk Spur Church expect to paint that building inside and out during the summer. These improvements have been largely inspired by Mr. Madren's work.

With the parsonage wired, we now would like to install a bathroom. Mr. Madren and his people can do the labor if the material can be supplied. We invite some church, Sunday school, or individual to make a contribution towards an electric refrigerator, electric stove, hot water heater, kitchen sink, bathtub, lavatory, and other fixtures.

Our Carroll County Mission is located near the Blue Ridge Parkway, and the whole area gives new promise of development.

The membership at Elk Spur Sunday school averages about 75, one-half of whom are young people; the Rocky Ford Sunday school will average about 50, one half of these also being young people.

Let us renew our opportunity and service in Carroll County. If you are interested in helping to make these improvements, thus assisting in this work, please communicate with the undersigned; or you can write directly to Rev. James W. Madren, Fancy Gap, Virginia.

"OF EQUABILITY AND PERSEVERANCE."

Congregationalism. They are free. They are controlled by their own members and nobody outside their membership. They and they alone can say who shall be their members and how they shall be elected.

In the theory of Congregationalism B, the constitutions of these organizations are their own. They are not merely the articles of agreement under which local churches work together. They are the articles of agreement under which their own members work together to give aid, advice and fellowship to the local churches; and the Associations, the Conferences, the Mission Boards, the colleges, and the other groups within the denominational framework. Amendment can be made in these constitutions without consulting the several local churches and without fear of lethal veto. The right to elect members to the General Council arises out of the constitution of the General Council, and does not exist as a right or privilege vested in the churches or the Associations or Conferences. It can be taken away or modified by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Council. Congregationalism B holds that local churches as such have never had a right to vote in these bodies. The members of many of these organizations are also members of local churches, but within these organizations they cast their votes as members not of local churches but of the organizations. According to this view the independency of the local churches does not blight the independency of Association, Conference, Council, Board, college, or any of the other denominational units.

The freedom of these organizations, according to Congregationalism B, is freedom in Christ, that is, freedom to be Christianly responsible. In this spirit the primary responsibility of this General Council, as its constitution shows, is "to foster and express the substantial unity of the Congregational Christian Churches in faith, purpose, polity and work." Congregationalism B takes this to mean that this Council is concerned to discover the will of the fellowship and express it nationally as it is interpreted by its membership. In this theory the members of the General Council are free to act without reference to any other denominational body. Each member has come from a unit of churches or an Association or Conference, and, theoretically at least, has been selected because he is competent to express the views of the bodies from which he comes. It is according to Congregationalism B for these members to seek confirmation of their views by asking the advice of the other bodies in the denomination, but in all cases it is for the General Council to decide these matters as a responsibly free Council.

Congregationalism B would hold that when the local churches are divided upon an issue a Council like this should find out what they think; but that, having found out, it would not need to wait for unanimity among them: it would decide for itself (and only for itself) what was best for the total fellowship and vote accordingly, believing that in that very act it was doing the will of the denomination. It holds that to be the democratic way, and the demand for complete unanimity against this background would seem to be the autocratic way, inasmuch as a single church could be the autocrat controlling all the others. At times the Council can and must amend its own constitution in the light of what in its own judgment is best for the whole fellowship. That is its responsibility to progress. . . .

When the word "fellowship" is found in the literature of Congregationalism B, it includes more than the local churches. It includes all the free organizations of the denomination. It includes the Associations, which may freely, for instance, if they will, reject an ordination recommended by a local church if they feel it is best to do so for the fellowship as a whole (though the local church is itself free to ordain the man for itself, without denominational standing). It includes the Conferences, which may freely, for instance, if they will, for the sake of the larger fellowship reject the recognition of an Association formed by local churches (though the local churches are themselves free to form the Association without denominational affiliation). It includes the General Council, the Boards, and all the other bodies able similarly to act in their own spheres and willing to cooperate with each other in the Congregational Christian fraternity. Each one of these controls itself under Christ through its own members. None are regarded as being agents of the others. The Associations and Conferences were all brought into being by the joint activity of local churches, but many a local church has been brought into being by the activity of an Association or Conference. Between the various bodies in this kind of Congregationalism there is no master-servant relationship: it is that of friend and friend. The organs of fellowship serve the local churches not because they must but because they may, and in the same spirit the local churches contribute to the organs of fellowship. The fellowship of Congregationalism B is a kind of spiritual solar system, the force of its gravitation being the recognition which is given by each to all and by all to each, the central Sun which has called each of these bodies into being, around which all revolve, and whose warmth is felt as the animating center of each, being Christ Himself.

It is undoubtedly because your Executive Committee believed that what I have designated as Congregationalism B is the actual polity of the Congregational Christian Churches that they voted to appeal from the ruling of the court. This is certainly the polity, according to the overwhelming majority of us, which the Basis of Union was designed to perpetuate. It is the Congregationalism which is known by the International Congregational Council. . . .

Choose Ye . . .

My interest at the moment, however is neither in the action of the Executive Committee, in the Basis of Union, nor in the International Congregational Council. It is simply in pointing out that the two views which I have outlined have been and are held by reasonable people. This would seem to imply that they may be reasonably debated, and interestingly debated, too. I am well aware that the very business of stating the issues always inclines the scales in the direction of the views of the one who states them. Others who do not share my viewpoint should also state them as they see them. If all of us regard the ideas which are at issue as the honored opinions of colleagues and remain determined not to mutilate the courtesies, we shall not only reach the conclusion regarding ourselves which the times demand of us but we shall do so in a way to add splendor to the fellowship we are seeking to define.

Between the two philosophies of Congregationalism you will have to make your own choice, and for your own reasons. Let me briefly give you my reasons for believing that Congregationalism B has been and should continue to be the actual structure of our Congregational Christian communion.

Congregationalism A is, I believe, unable to meet the evils of today's society. It may have been effectual in the days of an agrarian economy, when the village was the pivotal point of the nation's life. No strong county, state or national units were needed then as they are today. Now, however, in order to out-guess and out-manoeuvre anti-Christian forces which are organized at higher levels than that of the village or local district, it is necessary to have a flexible church unit with sufficient authority over itself to be able to act unrestrictedly at those levels. This is provided in Congregationalism B. Let the children of light go to school to the children of this world: consider what chance of success the Democratic or the Republican Party would have against the other if it wiped out its National Committee or tied that committee to the whim and provincialism of all the local committees in the land. I am for giving the denomination an advantage against Satan at least equal to that enjoyed by one of these political parties against the other.

Congregationalism A is, I believe, a preventive of spiritual growth in the denomination. Under it, the fellowship as a whole could be no more adventurous than the most conservative of its local churches. There is nothing in the present injunction to prevent us from cooperating with other denominations, as long as we do not lose our life in the process, but the need for unanimous consent from all the local churches ere we enter into any novel situation might one day embarrass our relations even with the interdenominational federations. In any case we are shut out from organic union, even through this involved only the General Council. We can make no special contribution to reducing the number of the 250 sects in this country. Furthermore, frozen to the formations of the past as any minority of local churches may interpret them, we become religiously static in a changing world which cries for an alert Christianity to minister to it. Under Congregationalism B, however, the fellowship does not need to delay advance until all its parts are ready. The various groups within it can develop according to their own best lights without concern for anything except decent respect for the opinions of the others. The progressive groups can inspire, though they cannot force, the others to follow. There you have a dynamic interdependence which under Christ can mean that the fellowship will finally be no less adventurous than the most forward-looking of its divisions. The rocks are full of fossils of species not flexible enough to change with the changing times and grow with the growing world; but I do not believe that the Congregational Christian Churches are destined to be bed-fellows to Brontosaurus.

My own witness would be that the individual autonomous church is strengthened by joining with others in the manner of Congregationalism B. To be divided is finally to be conquered. Though these last years have been years of firm onmarch for our fellowship, and though the momentum we have gained will carry us through any temporary crisis, we

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

This month is the anniversary of the death of Johannes Sebastian Bach, the great German composer and organist. He was a fine man, with a family of twenty-three children and a passion for ornamenting his music. In his day, musicians were mostly heard in church, and he became famous as the foremost organist of his time. Naturally he composed music suitable for church playing and left quite a collection of hymns, preludes, chorales, airs and masses. Some of his music was written for his children either to teach or amuse them.

There is a story that Bach once toured the German countryside dressed as someone else so that he could judge the quality of the organists and church music. In one village he was greatly impressed with the playing and confided to the musician that he too was an organist. Then and there the organist challenged Bach to a friendly competition and the playing began. In a few minutes the church organist laid his hand on the master's shoulder and said, "Sir, you are either Bach, the master, or an angel from the devil." He was happier than most composers but was often shided and admonished by the church officials not to embellish his tunes with so many turns and stops. Those are the things for which he is now famous.

Last month I heard a young harmonica wizard playing. After his formal presentation he gave several informal encores, explaining the music he was to play. By coincidence, the young musician's name was John Sebastian. He told that he was going to play a dance called a "Bouree," which was an English country dance, by Bach and then with a twinkle in his eye, he explained that he was not kin to the famous John Sebastian Bach. He further explained that the dance was composed for organ and that he would play on the mouth organ. He did a good job too.

If you know anything about harmonica playing you will recall that the music is made by inhaling and exhaling in tempo. This young wizard, Sebastian, also played an air that he composed which is played on a "minor" harp for exhale notes only.

It was great fun and very tuneful and appropriately called "Serenade for Exhale Notes."

Not all of us can play Bach on the mouth harp but we can hear his music. A few of the Easter and Christmas hymns are set to his tunes. "O Sacred Head Now Wounded" is an excellent example of his type of air and embellishment. "Jesus, Joy of Man's Desiring" is a chorale of unmatched beauty and dignity in all of musical history. Do hear it by concert, radio or record.

WHY DOES JIMMY SULK?

By JANICE A. McDONALD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Why Jimmy! Why those black looks? Who's been mistreating you?"

Your friend's little boy looks unhappy and sullen. He turns his head to the side with a jerk and does not acknowledge your greeting. His lips are tightly closed, and his whole attitude is disagreeable.

"Oh, he's sulking again!" your friend says. "I can't make him out."

Jimmy seems to retire deeper into himself. You do not like the look in his eyes. He offers no comment, but his eyes say plenty that is not good.

"Cheer up, Jimmy!" you say. "It can't be that bad!" You would like to help, but "Cheer up!" does not make any impression, as when does it? Do not most grownups like to come out of their dark moods alone, without another person advising to "Cheer up!"?

Jimmy is angry. We know that, but he is not telling why. He is nursing his self-pity wordlessly, but the reason for his upset should be discovered, and he should be urged to talk it out.

Jimmy is just a child, but your friend must realize that even his life is not all roses. Why not say to him: "It is tough—" adding "that can't go," or "do what you want," whichever the case may be. Jimmy thinks so, and he feels resentful. If a mother says flatly, "You can't go, and that is all there is to it. I don't want to hear any more about it!" she may not hear any more about it, but she will be more distressed by her child's sullenness than she would have been had she let him talk it out.

Mrs. Smith, your neighbor, weeps on your shoulder, so to speak, and you help her with friendly advice and constructive criticism. Why not use this method with Jimmy? A gentle, "Isn't this rather foolish, Son? If you'll tell me what's wrong, perhaps together we can fix it," will work wonders. Another child or some adult may have vexed him. Jimmy needs to "get it out of his system" just as much as Mrs. Smith does her troubles. Sympathy, friendliness, and a receptive attitude on his mother's part will do the trick. "Now don't sulk about it," is more likely to make matters worse. So is walking off and leaving him "until you can show a smiling face."

Why does Jimmy sulk? Maybe his mother unthinkingly broke a promise made to him. If so, no wonder Jimmy is upset; he is nursing his self-pity and his resentment in a more lasting method than mere tears could do. He feels self-righteously angry. Children are sometimes hurt by a scolding because it seems to tell them they are not loved. And if the scolding was given in haste, when Jimmy felt that he was in the right, he is likely to be extremely angry. A "No matter what you do, I still love you," attitude would make him feel a lot better.

If "talking back" is considered almost unforgivable and the culprit believes that his only chance lies in explaining, he may resort to a long sulk, as the odds appear to be against him.

Mother is supposed to be Jimmy's friend. If she is always ready to hear him out, having humor and sympathy to apply to his occasional upsets, she will have no worries about his exhibiting his resentment with silence and sulking.

FAMILY CAMP.

The first Family Camp in the history of the Convention will be held this week at Crabtree. The dates are July 14-16, and the Wisseman family of Greensboro will serve as directors. Already a number of registrations have come in. A fine program has been planned with plenty of time for relaxation and family fun.

Registration blanks were not sent out. Each family interested in coming was asked to write the registrar—Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Elon College, N. C., giving the ages of the children in their family.

This Family Camp is a new venture in the work of our Southern Convention, but it promises to fill a real need in our church life.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

SAMUEL THE UPRIGHT JUDGE.

LESSON IV—JULY 23, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Samuel grew, and the Lord was with him, and did let none of his words fall to the ground.—I Samuel 3: 19.

LESSON: I Samuel 7:3-6, 15, 16; 12: 1-5.

DEVOTIONAL: Proverbs 11: 1-14.

A Boy Well Born and Well Bred.

This man, Samuel, was well born and well bred. He came as an answer to prayer. His mother regarded him as a sacred stewardship and consecrated him to the service of God even before he was born. As soon as he was weaned, she took him to the temple and placed him in the care of Eli, the priest. He was a kind of page for Eli, waiting on him in the simple tasks around the temple, or rather the sanctuary which was the fore-runner of the temple. The boy, Samuel, gave promise early of spiritual sensitiveness and of spiritual courage. For when the voice of the Lord came to him in the night he rose up to do the bidding of the inner voice. And when on the morrow Eli asked him what the Lord had revealed to him, the lad courteously but courageously told Eli all, even the sentence of the Lord upon him and his household.

A Man of Religious Zeal.

Samuel was a real patriot, one who loved his country. When he saw the idolotry and the influence of false religions on his people, he set himself with zeal and enthusiasm to effect a reform in Israel. He saw, as did many of the men of God who followed him, that many of the national evils that had befallen the land were due to the fact that the people had forsaken the worship of the true God. Accordingly, he got the people together, rebuked them boldly but lovingly for their sins, and summoned them to repentance. As a result of his personality and his persuasive powers, the children of Israel did put away the Baalim and the Astoroth, and served Jehovah only. A fast was proclaimed, the people confessed their sins, and turned back to Jehovah to walk again in his ways.

A Man of Integrity.

"And Samuel judged the children of Israel in Mispah. And Samuel judged Israel all the days of his life. And he went from year to year in circuit to Bethel, and Gilgal, and Mispah; and he judged Israel in all those places." As the verse indicates, he was a kind of circuit judge, going about from place to place, to hear cases involving disputes between the people, and rendering decisions, from which, apparently, there was no appeal. It was a position that lent itself to bribery and graft. Ancient and modern history afford many illustrations of men who could not resist the temptation to take bribes or "hush money" when placed in similar circumstances. But throughout a long life as a judge, Samuel preserved the integrity of his character. There was no breath of scandal concerning his long career as a judge. There was no suspicion concerning his honesty, both in not taking a bribe, and also in rendering his decisions according to truth and justice. He submitted his record to the people, he was willing to have the floodlight of searching investigation turned upon his private and public life. He was the prototype of many a man in public office who has kept his integrity of character through a long career of service under circumstances that test men's souls. Thank God for public servants who are not for sale.

A Man of Fine Spirit.

Samuel did not think it best for the children of Israel to have a king. He thought they wanted to much to be like the nations around them, that it was a case of keeping up with the Joneses. He saw the danger involved in a kingdom and warned the people against them. But he also recognized the inevitable, and cooperated with it. He did not go off and sulk. He assured the people that he would exercise intercession for them in the new venture. And he lent himself to the revealed will of God in anointing the king apparent, young David, the shepherd lad. There are many people in every church who want their own way, and if they cannot have their own way, they will get in a huff and refuse to cooperate. But thank God, there are others who will freely express their convictions, will fight for their cause, but will, when outvoted, yield to the will of the majority—where moral principles are not sacrificed—and will then give themselves with loyalty and devotion to the plan that has been adopted. The world needs more men and women who have the spirit that the prophet Samuel had.

On the Side-Lines, But a Valuable Player.

The time came when Samuel could not play the game as an active player; he had to sit on the bench and see the younger players carry on. But he was a valuable asset to the team just the same. He told the people that although he could not do the work that he once did, he would pray regularly for them and their cause. Even as an old man, he exerted a powerful influence for righteousness until the day of his death.

What potential power for righteousness and the growth of the Kingdom of God there is in folks who have retired, in folks who because of age, or because of disabilities, or because of other circumstances, have been forced to get out of the active work of the church. Think of how much influence these people could exert through a continuous and constructive use of intercessory prayer. Many shut-ins could work wonders in their prayer-chambers or in their prayer-time if they did as Samuel did.

Perhaps these comments may come to such an one as a challenge to the ministry of intercession. Pray for the pastor and the people of your church, pray for the unsaved in the community, pray for the leaders of government, pray for the missionaries, pray for our enemies, pray without ceasing. More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of. There is, come to think of it, no retirement in God's service. In his wisdom and goodness, He has made it possible for even those who are old, and invalid, and poor, and shut-in, to serve Him in many ways, not the least of which is intercessory prayer.

A Vacation Church School was held jointly with the Fulp Moravian Church at Salem Chapel Congregational Christian Church from 1:30-4:00 P. M. each day, June 19-23. All the workers were from the local churches and they conducted a very successful school with an enrollment of sixty children.

could not hope to carry on permanently in strength under Congregationalism A. For living up to one's destiny, a sense of mission is necessary; a fellowship must believe in itself; each organ of the fellowship must believe in itself—but how can an organ believe in itself when it is only the shadow of something else? When there are no powers left at national, state, or association level, no committee or executive can feel certain of their programs. When we realize that Social Action, Foreign Missions and Home Missions are by no means universally supported, but are only the result of the consecrated judgment of the bulk of us, and when we remember that one local church was definitely able, with the help of the state, to arrest what was regarded as progress by the majority of the churches, Associations, Conferences, and the members of this General Council, we can understand why a tremor of unsureness begins to characterize the denomination above the local level. Through not serious now, it could become so if the situation were made permanent. We should continue to exist for a long time, but we should know that the Congregational Christian idea which has lived, thriven, and grown during the last generation, had lost its elan. We know more than one denomination today which continues to go through the motions of being alive, but which reminds one of nothing so much as the archimime of classical antiquity, a mimic who led the procession, dressed like the deceased and imitating him in speech and gesture, while the man himself, now a corpse in the coffin, rumbled toward the pyre. This role is not for the Congregational Christian fellowship.

Congregationalism A is not in my opinion sufficiently well established on a theological base to be satisfactory.

What is it that gives a local church its authority? What is the rock upon which it is founded? A greater than Peter is here. The answer to the question is well given in the message from the International Congregational Council to the churches of the world: "As Congregationalists we base our churchmanship upon the amazing assurance that 'where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them'." That is the heart of it. P. T.

Forsyth called the local church the outcrop of the Church Catholic in a particular place. In that local church is everything that is in the greater Church, because Christ is there—and Christ is all in all. This is the beginning of all authority in the Church, a worshiping company in one spot inquiring for the will of God with Christ in its midst. Here lies the ageless power, here lies the historical inevitability of Congregationalism.

When, however, you have accepted that thesis, you have also acquired a new conviction. You have stepped from Congregationalism A into Congregationalism B. Where two or three are gathered in the name of Christ in a meeting of one of the organs of fellowship, is He not in the midst of them? Two or three are gathered together for sixty hours of worship and discussion in ordinary meetings of the General Council. You and I have almost been able to see the Holy Spirit at work in some of these gatherings. I pray that Christ may be with us here, and believe that He will be as certainly as I believe that the sun is shining overhead. Here you have the same outcropping of the Church Catholic as elsewhere, when a company is at prayer. That is the reason we dare to celebrate Holy Communion here, and solemnly recite our covenant "with the Lord and one with another."

But Christ's presence means authority where two or three are gathered. No other body or bodies can know so well what we ought to do as we know or shall know, bowing in Christ's presence. Not even the local churches from which we came can know what we ought to do as we shall know it when Christ speaks among us. When our fathers were told that not they, meeting together with Christ, but some other body, some magistrate, some royal or archepiscopal court had the true authority over them, they resisted. This was the beginning of modern democracy. We feel the same ancestral tides of resistance rising within us when we are told that this body in Christ must depend for its authority over itself upon outside groups. We feel this is to separate ourselves from the fundamental Christian principles of our democracy.

But we do not make the mistake of the authoritarian denominations and go on to believe that because we are met in the presence of Christ, He thereby empowers us to rule over the churches, telling them what His will is for them. He speaks to them directly, too. We are an autonomous body, but without ecclesiastical authority in that sense.

This is Congregationalism B. It seems to me to take seriously the theological truth that authority emerges where Christ is, and that Christ is to be found where two or three are gathered together to wait upon His will, that is, in His name.

The Next Steps.

We must be agreed that it is in the spirit of this Christ that we should ask the question, What now is to be done? For answer I go back to the title of one of the good John Robinson's essays, "Of Equability and Perseverance in Well Doing." Equability is the quality of not being easily disturbed—a virtue which would seem to be at highest premium at this time. . . .

And can we not with equability, until we know the law of the land in its final form, maintain our fine friendship with the Evangelical and Reformed people, which has been celebrated with enthusiasm among us both by those who have advocated the proposed form of union and those who have not? The more we have come to know their leaders, the profounder our affection for them has become. No one conversant with the history of our negotiations since 1938 can argue that we have not given them occasion to reproach us. They have been asked to make change after change in documents already mutually agreed upon. They have been asked to give up elements in their own polity to accept ours. But in all matters they seem to have asked only one question: what is the will of Christ? To crown all, they have recently been requested, on behalf of the Presbyterian family of Churches, to enter into negotiations for union with them—a wholly commendable request, since the Presbyterians are interested in ecumenicity, as we are—and though there are a score of attractive reasons why the Evangelical and Reformed Church should accept the proffered hand of Presbyterianism, their leaders have indicated that their answer will be in effect, "We have made a promise to Congregational Christian Churches, and because they are temporarily in trouble, we do not intend to go back on our promise." This illustrates the gallant quality in Christian integrity. . . .

As soon as the case is out of court, whatever the outcome may be, representatives of all groups concerned

DEAR FRIENDS:

Two things go up to God. Prayers and alms go up to Him. Do you give your prayers and your alms generously? Read Acts 10:4: "Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God." God has given his people a double safeguard against miserliness and spiritual poverty. He has given us the privilege of praying and the joy of giving. Keep those two channels open and your life will be happy. Matthew 6:19 says: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal; for where your treasure is there will your heart be also."

Yesterday I watched six fine boys at work in the wheat field; at the same time three others were harvesting hay with a baler; and as many girls were at work helping prepare dinner, keep house and launder the clothes. Your gifts were helping them to help themselves, and at the same time giving them a fine, healthy chance of becoming real assets in life. How happy they were! How they greeted me with a joyous note in their voices! They were becoming men and women. They had a place in life. Your prayers and your alms were put into the lives of these lads and lassies.

Are you losing the joy of real friendship with God? Pray and give. Do not spend all of your money on yourself, or turn it back into your business. Give some of it to God. Lay it up in heaven. I could send you to some mighty fine Christian men and women who are making good success in the financial and business world who could tell you of the joy of giving. They practice it, and their religion is sweet to them. God blesses them for they are his partners. They are unselfish and happy, and their friends feel good in their presence because they are following the true ways of happiness. Are you thinking of self? Think of God and others. A new day will come into your life. Your bank account will grow. Proverbs 28:27 tells us, "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord."

These eighty children need right now a gift from you. They are poor. All they have is us, and God. Do not wait until you can give a big sum. Your small gift now will bring you joy and help us here immeasurably in the "low summer period." True we have had funds sent us, but much of it was designated for the repair of rooms. We need money with which to pay bills and wages. Send us a large or small gift today.

Thank you, and God bless you.

DR. HORTON'S ADDRESS.

Even though we occasionally run quite long articles, it is usually with a sense of what possibly might be termed reluctance on our part. Certain we are that on those occasions briefer articles of local interest are not crowded out. This time, however, we have broken all precedent. One article of more than twelve columns has crowded out much other matter.

"Why?" you ask. The answer is that this address by Dr. Horton is such an admirable exposition of the theory of Congregationalism that it would be a sin of neglect not to give the opportunity to our constituency to read it. Please do not pass up this opportunity.

PLEASANT GROVE CHURCH.

This church was organized in 1803 by Rev. James O'Kelly, just nine years after he led in the organization of The Christian Church. The history of Pleasant Grove is a most interesting one. I had recently completed this history and while there presented a carbon copy to the church secretary, Miss Nannie B. Farmer. A copy is ready to be placed in the Elon College Church History room.

While I have not the exact amount in the treasury of the O'Kelly Cemetery Fund, I am of the opinion that it is a little over one hundred dollars. The Convention authorized the raising of five hundred dollars, and recommended this be done by churches, organizations and individuals. Send contributions to S. H. Basnight, Chapel Hill, N. C. and he will forward receipt for the same.

WAKE CHAPEL.

The Wake Chapel Christian Church recently completed its most successful Vacation Bible School with 125 pupils. The school was under the direction of the pastor, Rev. Fred P. Register, and there were 22 full-time helpers, with the ladies of the church serving refreshments daily.

At the last worship service of Juniors and Intermediates, there were seven professions of faith.

During the same week, the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches also held their Bible schools.

One of the outstanding reasons for the success of the school was sufficient space, our Christian Education Building now being in useable form.

The Sunday School bus was used to bring in rural children with no other means of transportation.

On June 23, we closed a six-day series of evangelistic service with Mr. Register doing the preaching, and Mr. Joe Stephenson leading the singing.

Thirty-six members (most of them adults) were taken into the Church, 17 on profession of faith and 19 by letter of transfer. Within the near future, a number of others are expected to join.

Prior to the services, the Young Adult Class of the Church sponsored a program of visitation evangelism with cottage prayer meetings held the week preceding the revival.

With about 20 active members of the Sunday School away on vacation, we were pleased to have 180 present for Sunday School on June 25.

Mrs. A. GLENDON JOHNSON.

WINDSOR, ISLE OF WIGHT, MT.
CARMEL AND ANTIOCH CHURCHES.

I began my duties as pastor of this field on February 1, and up until now I have been so busy getting to know the people I have neglected sending a letter to THE SUN.

Upon arrival on the field, every one of the churches began to make our coming a joy. Mt. Carmel on the very first Sunday loaded the pastor's car and pantry with good things to eat, then the Windsor Church had a reception in the Science Hall of the Windsor High School, and at that time more was added to the pantry of the parsonage. Antioch and Isle of Wight followed suit.

The churches of the field and the churches of Windsor—Baptist, Methodist and Christian—worshipped together during Holy Week. There was a good attendance each night and a capacity attendance on Easter Sunday morning Sunrise Service. The Holy Week Services were held in the Windsor Baptist Church.

The old church that stood on the corner of Court Street and Highway No. 460 is gone and in the place of it, a new and beautiful Temple to the glory of God is rising. The work was begun on June 13. We are happy and thankful that God has made it possible for us to build. The Windsor Sunday School meets each Sunday in the High School building and the worship services are in the Methodist Church.

We began our Community Bible School in the Windsor High School on June 26, the other churches of Windsor, and Antioch having a part.

The Mt. Carmel Church had the closing service of the Daily Vacation Bible School on Sunday, June 18. We had an average attendance of 50. There were 43 Certificates awarded on Sunday night. The school used as its theme, "Jesus Teaches" and "Living Together." We had a make-believe village, with its Village Square, Mayor, Town Crier, Village Well, and Village Snack Bar. The school had Mrs. Shirley Jane Carr as its superintendent. The pastor acted as director. The Isle of Wight School will be in cooperation with the churches in that community July 7. The attendance has increased and a great and growing interest is evident in all of these churches.

As pastor of these fine churches I feel it an honor and sacred privilege to stand in the pulpits where so many of our great and good ministers of the past have stood.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all of my friends in the Southern Convention who remembered me and my family while I was in the hospital and confined to my home.

I am attending Duke Summer School from July 5-August 12. The churches are giving me an extra week of vacation.

ELLIS CLARK, Pastor."OF EQUABILITY AND PERSEVERANCE."

should, I believe, get together for a conference or a series of conferences. To such a gathering should be invited Congregational Christian leaders who have been actively opposed to the union as outlined, those who have actively supported it, and those who occupied a middle and mediating position—as well as leaders in the Evangelical and Reformed Church. . . . In the spirit of Christ and with a full measure of equability, we should come out of the present crisis stronger than we were when we entered it.

But equability was not John Robinson's only emphasis: he spoke also of perseverance in well doing. There is Our Christian World Mission. There are the enormous and unresolved problems of the Displaced Persons and Refugees of stricken Europe. There is the aching and misery in almost every continent of the world, which the people of Christ must have their part in assuaging. There are new nations aborning, needing the nature of the Gospel. There are, in short, all the momentous matters which we are to take up in this Council, not to mention all that confront the Conferences, the Associations, and the local churches.

Not in spite of our difference, but because these differences arise from vital though varying conceptions of God's will, shall we not redouble our ministries in the area where His will is crystal-clear to us all? When a man's right arm is atrophied of otherwise incapacitated he is likely to cultivate amazing powers in his left arm. His difficulty does not prevent him from developing strength, from writing or even painting. So many it be with us. Our ecumenical arm may at the moment be injured—but this does not prevent us from playing our part strongly in the expression of truth and the creation of a world which accords more perfectly with the mind of Christ.

BRIEFS FROM THE GENERAL COUNCIL

Moderator Kenyon Speaks

More men showed interest in church work during the past two years than in many years past, Miss Helen Kenyon, first woman moderator of the Council, reported.

Recognizing the traditional interest of women in church work, Miss Kenyon declared her most "thrilling experience" was the sight of young men in newer communities helping to build new churches. "In church after church I have fun reciting the actual manual work these men have put into church building. But it is not only the tangible but the spiritual values these men have put into the new churches that is most promising."

Discussing her observations of the past two years among women churchgoers, Miss Kenyon declared she was impressed by the fact that women appeared so much better informed than men on matters of international and national importance. "It is the women of our churches who constantly seek to know more about the United Nations. The women have a wide picture of the religious tensions of the people of the Middle East and the sociological and economic problems they face."

She attributed a great deal of the laywoman's knowledge of world-wide affairs to the interest women take in missionary work here and abroad. "They work so closely for it, sending gifts, clothing and other things, that their knowledge has grown with their giving. It is gratifying to see how women's interest in missions is reaching out to give them fresh understanding of the international scene."

Our Missionary Stewardship

Members of the Congregational Christian Churches contributed $11,188,043 for missionary work in this country and abroad during the past two years, announced Dr. Albert D. Stauffacher, executive secretary of our Missions Council, at the General Council meeting.

The amount is the highest in Congregational Christian history, with the exception of a two-year period in 1920-22, when a special drive was conducted. The current total is 171 per cent higher than it was ten years ago, being among the highest rates of gain of any Protestant denomination.

For the first time in 2,000 years, Dr. Stauffacher declared, "we are now in a position to make the Christian message effective in the world if we will adequately support the program." He reported that there are now 7,000 Protestant missionary centers in all parts of the non-Christian world. From these, he said, has grown a world-wide Christian community which awaits a program to spread Christianity universally.

Church Extension Score

New churches have been established at the rate of one every two weeks during the past two years by the Congregational Christian Churches, reported Dr. Truman B. Douglas, executive vice-president of the Board of Home Missions. The Board has thus exceeded the quota it set for itself two years ago.

The need for the new churches is "tremendous" and their growth, once organized "is rapid, sometimes spectacular," declared Dr. Douglass. Some new churches have been organized with 200 to 250 members and have grown to 400 or 500 members within a few months. By contrast, a new church which progressed to a membership of 100 within five years was not long ago considered making favorable progress.

Despite considerable gains, Dr. Douglass stressed that the program is now inadequate. "Our goal was adopted," he said, "when estimates indicated an increase of ten million in population. The first summaries of the 1950 census show, however, that the gain is about eighteen million. This means that, while we have kept substantially ahead of our original quota, it must now be revised upward."

Women's Gift Multiplies

Presentation of "The Women's Gift" totaling $192,100 was made at the General Council by Mrs. Harlan E. Walley of East Chicago, Ind., chairman of the National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women. The gift is presented in a service of dedication at each General Council meeting.

The Women's Gift was almost five times the amount it was eight years ago, when it totaled only $40,000. It was $162,000 at the last Council meeting in 1948.

The Women's Gift helps support mission stations in many countries, in promoting literacy, distribution of literature and work with women. The legislative committee, the Family Life Commission and the various state conferences also share.

Franklin Church has Reception for New Members

The Rev. W. A. Grissom has completed his first year as pastor of the Franklin Congregational Christian Church. One major achievement of the year was the reception of forty new members into the fellowship of the church.

The Women's Auxiliary sponsored a reception for this fine group on the evening of June 30 (several could not be present when the picture was made). Headed by the pastor and his wife, the new members stood together and received the hearty greetings and handclaps of more than a hundred fellow-members. The splendid fellowship which prevailed during the evening was the finest part of the program. Old members and new, alike, were enveloped in a genuine spirit of friendliness. There was ample time for everyone to get acquainted and the new members went away with the feeling that they were part of a delightful and redemptive fellowship. It was an unforgettable experience.

Growth in membership is one test of a successful ministry. The pastor and members of the Franklin Church are to be commended on this splendid evidence of a growing and vigorous fellowship.

THE O'KELLY CEMETERY.

Appeals are being made to the Sunday School for assistance in raising the $500 for the improvement of the O'Kelly Cemetery and they are making a liberal response. I learned that a representative will be appointed to present the appeal to each of the Sunday school conventions at their approaching sessions. This is not to ask the convention for an offering, but through the convention to bring the appeal to each local school.

Since I last wrote I have visited Hebron and Union, N. C., Schools. Each received me graciously and listened attentively as the appeal was made and responded liberally. It is hoped that the money can be in the treasury in time for the trustees of the foundation to have a meeting and arrange to make present needed improvements before the winter. While I have visited several Sunday schools within my convenient reach, I shall visit a few others. Schools on learning of the call, are beginning to take an offering, or vote a contribution from their treasury. Among these are Danville and the group of which Walstein Snyder is the pastor.

DAMASCUS HOMECOMING DAY PLANNED FOR FIFTH SUNDAY IN JULY.

The Damascus Christian Church will hold its Annual Homecoming Day on July 30 this year. The church is prominent in the history of the denomination. Notable in the list of preachers who served Damascus are Doctors W. S. and Dan Long, Dr. W. W. Staley, and Rev. J. W. Holt. Dr. W. S. Long was first president of Elon College and Dr. Staley was Elon's second president.

Many of the older friends of Damascus will remember the High School which was operated in conjunction with the church. Rev. Herbert Scholtz was president of the school and pastor of the church. The old bell house is still on the grounds.

The old rock wall which was built over 75 years ago by the members of the church has been extended and the wall encompasses the new and old parts. This new wall will be dedicated at a special service in the afternoon. Mr. E. W. Neville, member of the Chapel Hill Church, who was largely responsible for the new wall, will be in charge of the dedication service.

The program for the day will consist of the Homecoming Service, picnic dinner on the grounds, and dedication of the cemetery wall. All friends of Damascus are cordially invited to attend these exercises.

PLAGUED BY PLAGIARISM

Plagiarism is the besetting sin of ministers. Few escape the temptation to appropriate and give out as their own the homiletic achievements of others. Some flirt with plagiarism, others become confirmed plagiarists. Few avoid it altogether.

It is difficult for a minister to remain entirely free of plagiarism. The duties of the modern minister are multiplied to such an extent that he has insufficient time for serious study and original thinking. Living under such heavy schedules, it is understandable that some ministers have taken the line of least resistance and habitually use ready-made or "canned" sermons.

The magnitude of this problem is indicated in the realization that some of the great preachers have not remained free of plagiarism. For instance: when Mrs. Peter Marshall selected and edited the sermons in that popular book, "Mr. Jones, Meet the Master," in some instances she found it difficult to identify passages which her husband had written himself and paragraphs and sentences which Dr. Marshall had culled from and quoted now and then verbatim from the works of others. Three such sermons had to be omitted from the new edition. They were based on or adaptations of published and copyrighted sermons by Drs. Leslie Weatherhead and James A. Stewart.

It used to be said that a sermon by George Matheson seized the hearer, would not let him go, and accompanied him through life. Some ministers were afraid of reading his sermons because of the danger of someday using not only the thoughts but the very words. That was because of their freshness and originality and arresting power of expression.

The Editor received a sermon sometime ago which had been used as a radio message and was then submitted for publication. The title and wording appeared strangely familiar. After thumbing through the files of The Christian Century Pulpit, the identical sermon by a prominent American preacher was found. This sermon, with slight omissions and modifications, had been preached and was offered for publication without any credit being given to the author of the sermon. That is unmitigated plagiarism. Happily, the editor was able to detect this bold venture in plagiarism and divert the copy from publication.

Now this preacher was capable of writing his own sermon. He had received excellent training, and that training had been supplemented by wide and interesting experience. If he was incapable of preparing one or two sermons a week, he could most assuredly prepare one original sermon a year for publication!

The church paper can help at this point. Few of us are able to produce original work of a high order consistently, but all of us do have flashes of inspiration occasionally. We do preach sermons from time to time without conferring with flesh or blood, sermons which are our very own. They may not be great sermons, but at least they are original, and not second-handed. These are the sermons which should be submitted to the church paper for publication. The editor should have a supply of sermons and articles of this type on file at all times.

Moderator Helen Kenyon said in Cleveland that she would like for that General Council to be remembered as the Council of the Holy Spirit. To be sure, and the editor would like for this publication to be of the Holy Spirit. When the Holy Spirit speaks to us, ministers and laymen, we should endeavor to make that message permanent in writing. As we publish these messages, we allow the Holy Spirit to speak not only to us but through us. Thus we are able to have in our own day the witness of the Holy Spirit. Brethren, "Quench not the Holy Spirit"!

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The sanctuary of Shallow Well Church was filled last Wednesday with delegates to the Eastern North Carolina Sunday School Convention. President Rex G. Powell had prepared an excellent program and he presided with kingly grace over the morning and afternoon sessions.

The Rev. W. J. Andes, chairman of the Convention's committee on Christian Education, was the guest speaker. He pointed up the opportunity of the Sunday school in an era when both home and school have largely abrogated their responsibility for Christian teaching. He went on to emphasize the necessity for properly financing an adequate program of Christian education.

Morrisville received the Missions banner, Liberty Vance the Attendance banner, and Beulah the banner for over-all progress. The Rev. Fred Register is the new president. Mrs. B. B. Johnson was re-elected treasurer. Next year's session will be held at Wake Chapel on Wednesday, June 27.

Shallow Well is exhibit A in the field of Rural Christian Education. This church, a brick-veneered structure, with social hall and a series of class rooms, occupies a place of eminence and influence in this prosperous community. The Rev. R. T. Grissom has led the church in its program of expansion.

The resolutions committee, headed by Dr. Will B. O'Neill, called upon the Sunday schools to give their hearty support to the United Evangelistic Advance.

It was regretted that a number of schools failed to report.

Character is not made in a crisis—It is only exhibited.

Christian Stewardship is Basic

By REV. WARREN H. DENISON, D. D., Dayton, Ohio

God created the earth. He stored in it all the materials which man needs, but He did not reveal and give them to man all at one time for his use and enjoyment. An all-wise God opens them up as man especially needs them. Coal, oil, gas, waited for our day. They were put there by his love and kindness and are brought forth now in the time of our growing needs and increasing population. God seems to deal that way. He unfolds as we need.

In the same way Christian stewardship is not something read into the Bible now. It is not a new scheme, nor an extra-curricular subject. It has been in the scriptures all the time, but largely hidden, and now in our day its need is so keenly felt that it is ready to yield its riches and infinite resources to our lives, to our homes, our churches, and help meet the demands of the complexity in Kingdom building. Let no one think that this wide wave emphasis upon this great basic truth is something worked up, some creation of man, some scheme of denominational officials. It is of God. In many cases it is handled crudely as yet, just as many discoveries in the material world were first in crude state, but were perfected as methods and attitudes gave way to deeper insight.

Let no pastor, no department of finance in your church, no denominational secretary, no teacher in your church school, ignore or underrate the importance of this basic principle in this very time when it is so sorely needed.

At least three outstanding reasons demand urgency:

1. In order to deepen and enrich the spiritual life of the church in this, her crisis hour in a chaotic world;
2. In order to save the soul of America;
3. In order to meet the tremendous spiritual and material needs of humanity, the people of the world.

Some years ago, the Board of Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., said, "Much stewardship cultivation has erred because it has sought to deal with the larger aspects of the stewardship of all of life, which is the supreme business of religious education; and religious education has erred because it has failed to come vitally to grips with the Christian's relation to material things."

Versteeg, in his book "Save Money," says, "Stewardship has often been regarded as the Cinderella in the household of faith. It was the kitchen slavey doing the dirty work financially. But when stewardship is the philosophy of obligation, it becomes the princess of the realm. . . . Unless stewardship is to be spread out so thin that it means everything, and hence nothing, the property relation must conspicuously be the proper relationship for stewardship."

With such statements as these I am in thorough accord. Experience, study, observation, have taught me that when one becomes a steward of his material possessions, not merely a generous person, but one who systematically sets aside first a fair, decent, honorable share of his income, usually starting with the tithe, for Christian work, that such persons give time, talent, influence, to kingdom work according to their ability and opportunity. There may be exceptions, but I have yet to find them. I do find many who give their time, service, and talent to church and to Christian causes who never think of stewardship as applying to their possessions.

Someone has said that stewardship is a "philosophy of obligation." It is a spiritual obligation. As I understand it, it is not the primary business of stewardship to raise money, as important as that is, not the primary business of stewardship to provide support for causes as worthy as they may be, but it is its business to develop givers. When this spiritual philosophy of obligation is established, ample treasure will be poured out for all worthy causes. To that end we should double our diligence, increase our study, develop a technique that trains our pastors and our other leaders, induce classes, brotherhoods, groups, to really study some basic stewardship books, insist that all of our promotional activities be based on the solid rock of Christian stewardship. It should be our definite policy to place in leadership positions only such persons as are definitely committed to its basic principles and practice it in their own lives.

As I see it, and as I believe it, the scriptures teach that Christian stewardship has to do primarily with the oikonomos; the economic area of life, all our relationship to things and material possessions. This relationship is one of the most vital responsibilities that face us. Jesus had much to say about it. The New Testament has more to say about man and his possessions than about man and redemption. The way one acknowledges his stewardship, handles these responsibilities and obligations, how he acquires, uses, shares, and disposes of his possessions reveals his inner life. There is a vital relationship between what we are and the way we handle what we have. Dr. McConaughy expressed it in the naming of his book, "Money, the Acid Test." One's religious faith is not merely a matter of mental equipment, it is a religious force; not merely a matter of comfort to our souls, it is a matter of conduct of our lives. One does not own what he possesses. He is a steward of it. A steward is more than a trustee even, for a steward handles what he possesses in the spirit and the mind and the motive of the owner, while a trustee may have only care and accuracy without the spirit.

No other theme is treated so often in the scriptures as man's relationship to money, wealth, possessions. In amount, prominence, frequency, parable, interview, the gospels treat of its importance. Paul does not omit it from any book he wrote. Was there ever a mightier plea penned than the last book of the Old Testament for a nation to turn from its error and sin and seek righteousness and live. That book has one theme, one actual thought and text—money. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me, even this whole nation." Is God speaking through Malachi to the United States, the richest nation in the world, the nation with the highest material standards of living ever known, the nation with only six percent of the world's land area, with only seven percent of the world's population, yet with eighty percent of the world's gold, seventy-two percent of the automobiles, fifty-eight percent of its telephones, sixty-two percent of its oil, etc.! Is God speaking to the United States, a nation that spends on luxuries and has more left for savings after payment of all expenses, taxes and luxuries than most nations have for their national income? Is He speaking to our nation when our total per capita giving for all forms of privately supported religious, educational and benevolent organizations, including the Community Chest, Red Cross, and various

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

A UNITED EFFORT FOR OUR COLLEGES.

The pending plight of the small church college has been made known to the public through newspapers, periodicals, magazines and books. It is emphasized that on account of increased enrollment and assistance from the Veterans Administration for G. I. students, these colleges have been able to conduct their programs without embarrassment for the past three years. During this period of comparative prosperity the majority of our State or tax-supported colleges and many of our privately-endowed institutions have expanded their facilities to accommodate a constantly-increasing enrollment. Now that the tide is turning and competition for students is becoming keen, many institutions have more space than normal conditions would require. With a reduced enrollment, which means a shrinkage in revenue, and the rapidly-declining enrollment of veterans, many of our institutions are confronted with financial problems that are not easily solved.

The Southern Convention in recent session voted requesting every member of our churches in the Convention to contribute $1.00 each for the college, and authorized and instructed the officials of the Convention to set up an organization to implement the Convention's action. On June 15 the officials of the Convention, the college, the Elon College Foundation and the alumni association, met as a Planning Committee and appointed an Executive Committee. This executive committee was charged with the responsibility of forming a complete organization that would include the Convention, the various conferences and the local churches.

The executive committee met on Thursday, July 6, at Henderson, N. C., elected officers, determined the types of organizations necessary for the effective operation of the program, and determined certain general principles for the conduct of the organization to secure an amount equal to $1.00 per member as a Sustaining Fund for the college. The following officers were elected:

Hon. Mills E. Godwin, chairman; Rev. W. Millard Stevens, co-chairman; Hon. Shirley T. Holland, co-chairman; Mrs. O. H. Paris, co-chairman, and Dr. Wm. Moseley Brown, secretary.

Members of all conference committees were nominated, and the executive secretary will undertake to secure their acceptance. When the organization is complete, it is contemplated that there shall be either a meeting of the general committee, which would include the conference committees and representatives from each local church in the Convention, or that the conference committees' representatives from each of the local churches within each conference will meet separately; that is, instead of one mass meeting, there would be a mass meeting held for each conference.

The executive committee recognized that we face a pretty big undertaking, but that it is necessary and essential. All seemed to be hopeful and enthusiastic about this united effort in behalf of the college.

Until the organization is completed, everyone can make a definite contribution that will mean success for this effort. That contribution is not necessarily in money, but in approval and confidence. A good word spoken will pay good dividends for this united effort for our college.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUMMER CONFERENCE.

This may seem to be a belated report, but the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN should know something of the very splendid conference held at Elon College, July 2-8, under the auspices of the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention.

The following officials served: Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, dean; Mrs. Mark W. Andes, hostess and head counselor for girls; Baxter Twiddy, head counselor for boys; Mrs. James R. Hailey, nurse; Rev. Arthur Detwiler, director of music and recreation; Miss Elizabeth Hoffman, organist; and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, registrar and treasurer.

A fine faculty was constituted from ministers and Christian workers of the different churches within the Convention.

The mornings were given over to classes, consisting of Bible study, instruction in leadership, churchmanship, recreation, etc. The afternoons were given over to instructions in groups, games and direction as to proper behavior on the part of Christian young people in present-day society. As the evening hour there were instructions in group singing, vesper services, and there were public addresses by prominent speakers on current topics.

There were more than 100 enrolled in the school, in addition to the faculty. It was a happy privilege on the part of the college to entertain these young people from our church. It is right and proper for our young people to become accustomed to coming to Elon College for their meetings. We are always anticipating the enrollment of our own church young people in our college for training and direction at the college level. There were some decisions made to enter Elon College this fall. Others expressed their intention of entering later as they completed their high-school courses. There is always a cordial invitation to individuals, organizations, classes and clubs of any kind representing our church, to our campus for their meetings and planning for the future.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Individual giving is the proper way to support the Church and its causes. True, the Convention apportions certain amounts to be raised by the different conferences; and these conferences, in turn, apportion the amounts to local churches. The local church looks to all of its organizations to assist in raising its apportionment. In the final analysis, it is the individual who does the giving. If every member in every local church would contribute his share, the total amount would be secured at once. When a single individual fails to contribute his share, that means that somebody else in the organization must give more than his share. It takes the individual to point the way, to give the inspiration, and to assist in securing the total amount needed. No individual should refuse to cooperate in the common task. It is the opportunity and privilege of every individual member to contribute so that his church may stand out on the honor roll as one that has met all requirements and has perhaps gone the second mile.

Systematic giving for any needy cause is desirable, particularly when the giver is limited in his means. To give a large sum at one time might be out of the question entirely. To contribute a nominal sum each week might be possible. When you add up the 52 separate contributions, the total will in all probability exceed what the giver would have given in a single offering. As a rule, we earn our money day by day, week by week, month after month. As we earn it, if we will set aside one-tenth of our earnings, we will find that our giving is a joy, and the amount will be surprisingly generous.

As we contribute for Christian causes such as our college, we should not think of our contributions as gifts, but as investments that will bear rich dividends in human character and personal conduct as those who are benefited by our gifts live their lives and do their work.

SECOND CHURCH, NORFOLK, BUYS NEW CHURCH SITE.

The congregation at Second Church, Norfolk, Virginia, has recently purchased a new church site approximately three miles from its present location. The newly acquired property is located in the 500 block of West Sewells Pt. Road and has a frontage of 350 feet. The location is in the center of an area embracing approximately 2,000 families, 65% of which are home owners. There is no other church in walking distance. The new site is on a main through-fare and only five blocks from the largest suburban shopping area in Norfolk.

The Congregation is exceedingly proud of having been able to acquire this choice piece of property, though it has necessitated an expenditure of $9,000.00.

The church has voted a $50,000.00 financial campaign for the erection of a two-story brick Christian educational building. The plans are only in the formation stage at the present and no date has been set for the beginning of construction.

For approximately forty years, Second Church, formerly Old Zion Christian Church, has served the area where it is now located. However, the shift in population has removed many of its members from the immediate vicinity of the church. In addition, the frame building, a portion which was constructed over 50 years ago, and formerly occupied by the Zion Methodist Congregation, will soon need extensive repairs. Also, the Norfolk School Board desires possession of the land on which the present building is located (The church is surrounded on three sides by the school playground.)

With these problems confronting the church, it seemed only reasonable that a new church location should be acquired. The one which the Congregation has just purchased was the best that could possibly be found.

It has been well said that "the future belongs to those who plan for it." This being true, the Second Congregational Christian Church is looking toward a rich future.

J. EVERETTE NEESE, Minister.

LONG'S CHAPEL.

The members of Long's Chapel church are very happy for the progress made within the last twelve months. The Women's Missionary society raised funds and had the church painted the outside last July.

In April of this year the men, together with the women decided to beautify the interior and also to add to the comfort. They ceiled the church throughout with a beautiful wall board, (it had been wall papered) and painted all the inside woodwork, laid a hardwood floor and finished it in first class shape, which altogether was rather expensive. The women were not satisfied until they had a priced carpet laid, which makes our church one of the finest rural churches in the community.

Just a few years ago we had no parsonage and had only part time service. Now we have a good building for our pastor and have full time service. Long's Chapel is the only small rural church in the conference that has a full time program.

Our revival began June 25, with Rev. K. D. Register preaching. Services are held each evening at eight o'clock.

The Vacation Bible School was a decided success. It was carried on with local talent. There were 65 children who received certificates, the largest number we have ever had.

graduation of these consecrated young people. In order to supply ministers for our churches, however, at least fifteen ministerial recruits should be entering Elon College this fall. These recruits must come from our homes and our churches. Parents, pastors, Sunday school teachers and all other Christian people should be concerned and should consider it their duty through prayer and words of encouragement to influence young men for the Christian ministry of our church.

At Home and Abroad

A LONG DELAYED LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

Union High School,
Foochow, Fukien, China,
May 11, 1950

DEAR FRIENDS:

We're still getting mail from the outside, and your letters are more welcome than ever. If you can enclose pictures of yourselves and news clippings, so much the better. The radio is our only source of outside news, excepting, of course, the daily propaganda newspaper. It's weird to read such things as: "The countries of the world are following two roads: one group led by the Soviet Union is following the road to world peace; the other group, led by America, is following the road to imperialism and war"; or "Production has fallen off in the western European countries," followed by statistics proving how badly production is dropping in the west, even including America, with figures about the bad unemployment there. But we're lucky; we don't have to take an examination on such publications to prove that our ideas have been properly changed. The Chinese teachers do; and they are concerned over what may happen after their first exam.

Concerning our status here, we on the field alternate between pessimism and optimism. Some think we foreigners will be "squeezed out" within a period of from six months to two years. Still others say we have reached the nadir of our fortunes and are on the way up, and we won't even have to go at all. None of us knows what to expect from one day until the next.

Furloughs are coming due, and missionaries leave with reluctance, since no one has been allowed to re-enter. Our Foochow missionaries are doing their best to bring in new blood, however; six babies have been born since liberation, and more are on the way (including ours, due in October).

The sounds that now come in the windows of our home here by the agricultural school are the same age-old sounds of China: the man hollering at his big water buffalo as they plow the watery field; the myriads of frog voices from rice paddies around us; the man shouting "Aw bowe!" as he tries to sell his dump-lings; the woman beating on a tin to keep the birds from eating the harvest (this time strawberries): the children of the primary school reciting lessons in loud unison. A couple of weeks ago, around Easter time, there was the sound of firecrackers and occasionally wailing from the hills back of us as young and old, rich and poor, came for ancestor worship at the graves. For days, there was always someone on the path to the hills. Some, no doubt, merely came to clean the graves; but the many fluttering bits of paper (money for the dead) placed on the tombstones evidenced the large number of superstitious people here in this somewhat modern city of Foochow. The sight made us missionaries heavy-hearted. Easter's new life in the Christ meant nothing to these who spent so much money they could ill afford on incense, paper money and fire crackers for their dead.

Even now, a little family is waiting on the hill outside our dining room window. They are removing an ancestral grave with the proper ceremony. Judging by the small size of the grave and the few bones, this man's remains have been moved before. The family must be having bad luck again; there they go with the tiny coffin on one of the "funeral director's" shoulders. They are spending much to fix things properly for this discontented ancestral spirit who prevents good fortune from coming to them.

But these down-to-earth, age-old sounds and sights make us hopeful for what may become of China in her Communist-sponsored "new day." Perhaps the new rulers can pry her loose still further from the bondage of the past; and perhaps she will not allow them to bind her too closely to everything in their program. Though the new regime will admit of no progress but its own, many of the things they claim to do were begun by their predecessors and others. True, progress has seemed stalemated; but women were achieving status, communications had been improved, educational opportunity increased, even a few halting steps taken to simplify the written language—an absolute necessity if literacy is to be achieved.

If the new rulers can press these things nearer achievement, China may be the better for these troublous times, though at a great price; some foreign to the Chinese culture and freedoms are decreasing rapidly and everyone is getting poorer. Life is harder for all. Some things utterly not an improvement on it, may be forced on the people in some areas, e. g., communal living (rather than family), learning for the purpose of absorbing propaganda rather than discovering truth. But China is old and has seen many "new days"! We hope that in time she will take the good from this movement, and even profit from its mistakes.

For some of the students in this agricultural-vocational school, the months since "liberation" have been exhilarating in a way; but for others, the deep thinkers, these months have been filled with concern. Propaganda meetings, government projects, student's own projects, have made school work itself, even the holding of classes, a minor activity. In the days since our school began this term, there have been many days off for various purposes. But our students fare better than those in the city proper. There has been no trouble making for the purpose merely of troubling so-called "reactionary" teachers or halting school work completely. Our students' attitude is good; they are hard workers, and the religious life of the school is continuing.

About fifteen of our students attended a recent Student Christian Youth Conference. In that meeting, we saw evidence of the conflicts within Christianity, deeply sharpened by the present crisis. As these young people read their new political science crudely slanted by Communism's dialectic materialism, they wonder: "How was the world created? What is man? Is the Bible true?" These problems which any nation's youth may face, are urgent to these young people. If a boy or girl chooses to believe in God, he takes a stand that will bring sharp questioning, criticism and ridicule from his associates—not to mention the reaction of his family, if it is not Christian. There will be no possibility of his getting a government job, and other fields may be closed to him, too. It really matters over here when someone decides to become a Christian. Some, in their fervor, swing to such extremes that they condemn any Christian who does not pray just as they do or believe in baptism only by im-

MY IMPRESSIONS OF THE SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

By MRS. LEWIS G. BROTHERS, Suffolk, Virginia.

This was my first attendance at the School of Missions, and I am greatly impressed.

I am impressed with the comprehensiveness of the program.

I am impressed with the theme for the year, "Thy Will to Do," which was so earnestly and effectively presented by Mrs. W. T. Harrell.

I am impressed with Dr. L. E. Smith's gracious and cordial address of welcome.

I am enlightened by Dr. F. D. Wentzel, who made us aware of our community responsibility.

I am spiritually uplifted by the devotionals conducted by Dr. W. M. Brown.

I am strengthened by the interpretation of the Book of Hebrews, which was so ably presented by Dr. E. T. Thompson.

Miss Blemker brought the Near East nearer and made it more personal.

I was much impressed and benefited by the practical presentation and demonstration of programs by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman and Mrs. Tucker Humphries.

May I use one of their illustrations and say the whole program of the School of Missions has been an index finger pointing out the way to our areas of work.

During the Fun and Fellowship periods, Mr. A. R. Detwiler, with his zip and pep well rounded out our program.

The meals, including the banquet, were delicious and well served.

We have been physically well cared for and nourished; mentally enlightened and alerted; spiritually uplifted and inspired.

The societies represented in the School of Missions should have a successful year.

Like all of you, I have fallen in love with Miss Pattie Lee Coghill.

I especially enjoyed seeing and being with Dr. and Mrs. John G. Turritt, my former pastor and wife.

The Communion Service at the close of the School of Missions, conducted by Dr. W. T. Scott and Dr. John G. Truitt, was in truth a service of dedication—"They will to do."

CARROLL COUNTY NEEDS.

The women of the Southern Convention have for the past twenty-five years had a vital interest in our mission work in Carroll County, Virginia. Because of the lack of pastors for the past several years, we have had to use a supply minister in that parish. We are glad to announce that on June 1, 1950, Rev. and Mrs. James W. Madren began giving their full time to the leadership of the Carroll County Mission. They have moved their residence to the parsonage at Elk Spur, and under their good leadership the work will take on a new strength.

The parsonage has been wired, and we would like to put water in the house and install bathroom facilities. Mr. Madren and the men of the churches can do the plumbing if somehow the materials can be supplied.

The needs are: electric refrigerator, electric stove, hot water heater, bath tub and other fixtures.

The parsonage was furnished twenty-five years ago, and much of the furniture is still being used. They need living-room furniture and a bed-room suite.

If your group would like to furnish one of the above items, it would be greatly appreciated. You can communicate with Dr. W. T. Scott, executive secretary of the Mission Board, Elon College, N. C., or directly with Rev. James W. Madren, Fancy Gap, Virginia.

WORLD COMMUNITY DAY LITERATURE.

You had better order your World Community Day literature now. We suggest:

GLEANED HERE AND THERE.

Mrs. Garland Spratley of Dendron, Va., is confined at the Retreat for the Sick Hospital in Richmond, after a major operation on July 10. Her condition is reported satisfactory. Mrs. Spratley is chairman of the Family Life Department of the Southern Convention, as well as being chairman of Interdenominational Cooperation for Eastern Virginia. Our greatest sin toward God, said Dr. E. T. Thompson, at the School of Missions, is not disobedience, but neglect. We may neglect our friends, and then when we need them they are not there. If we neglect God, then when we need him he may not be so easy to find.

YOUTH RALLY, WESTERN N. C. CONFERENCE.

The month of July has been a very busy one for many of the young people of the Southern Convention. Many of us have attended the Summer Conference, the biennial meeting, Summer Camp and the Sunday School Convention. With these meetings in the past we young people of the Western, N. C. Conference can look forward to the Summer Youth Rally being better than any meeting we have had in the past. This Rally will be held the fifth Sunday of this month, July 30th, beginning at 3:00 p. m. at the Ether Church.

Many times we say that if we were in someone else's place we would do different. During our program we are going to have some fun as the Rev. Clyde Fields makes a talk on "If I Were a Young Person"; Jack Shoffner, "If I Were a Minister"; and Alma Russell, "If I Were A Minister's Wife." Don't miss this because you will really have some fun.

At each Rally we have a time for special singing and group singing. The singing has turned into a must at our Rallies because everyone is enjoying it more and more. There will be several quartets and trios from various churches to sing for us and if you have special singers bring them along. The Rally will close with a play by the Seagrove young people.

Please bring sandwiches for the picnic supper. The host church will provide the drinks.

BILL SIMMONS,
President.

EN ROUTE TO ITALY.

DEAR FRIENDS:

This letter is being written on a rolling ship more than half-way to Le Havre. Since I left home I have had many interesting experiences, all of them pleasant but one. Yes, I was seasick! More about that later.

We arrived in Montreal last Monday, June 19, at 8:00 p. m. It is a beautiful, French-speaking city, but most of the people speak English too. We had very little time to see the city, because we left for Quebec at 11:00 p. m. I say "we" because by the time we left Montreal there were 15 or more of the World Council work campers. At Quebec we met the others, and there are now 44 in our group. In Quebec we attended orientation meetings at the Anglican Cathedral. This cathedral has a very interesting history. It stands on the spot where Quebec was founded. It is a rather plain, but very old building, and it is very beautiful on the inside. This, as you know, is the official Church of England. The candle sticks were given to the cathedral by King George III. If I remember my history, he gave the thirteen colonies nothing but trouble.

We had three rather distinguished guides to show us the many interesting places in the city. They were an archbishop, a very reverend, and a reverend. We walked through the narrow, climbing streets to the fort that was built by the British to defend it from the American colonies that were revolting. It is a very good fort, and it is quite understandable why we were unable to take Quebec during our revolution. The fort, however, was not there when Wolfe, the Englishman, defeated Montcalm, the Frenchman. We visited the Plains of Abraham, where this famous battle occurred. It seems almost unbelievable that the English were able to climb the cliffs and defeat the French. But they did.

It was at Wolfe's Cove, where he led his men upon the Plains of Abraham, that the Samarita was waiting for the 44 of us, and some 1,500 others. It looked rather small as we looked down from the hills. It has proved itself seaworthy since then.

The Samarita is a 20,000-ton liner, 647 feet long and 74 feet wide. It is the favorite ship of the 1,500 students on board. This is not just because it is the only thing that keeps us out of the water.

The stewards are nice; the crew is friendly; we have a daily paper; the food is delicious. Perhaps you would be interested in some of the activities on the ship. This being a British ship, it has about as much tea inside as it has water outside. One wakes in the morning with a cup in his hand. Tea is also served morning and evening, and at each meal. It is difficult to write a letter without spilling tea on it. Each morning at 10 o'clock there is an orientation period sponsored by the Friends' Service Committee. We have heard some very good lectures—from "How to Introduce a Rabbi" to "How to Run the British Government." Seriously, many very helpful things have been said.

Our World Council group meets each day at 11:00 a. m. We discuss the problems that are peculiar to us. It is very difficult for many to understand why anyone would go to a foreign country to work without pay. I speak for the group, I think, in saying we do not feel we are making a sacrifice, but an investment. We are concerned about the war in Korea, because we have some young people heading for a work camp there. Our group has a lot of fun, and does quite a bit of singing, but all appear to realize their responsibility. We do not expect to cure the ills of the world. We want to live simply as Christian young people, as we work, study, worship and pray with the youth of other lands.

Our group has three leaders aboard ship. I know them simply as Roddy, Ed and Carl. Roddy is a minister. Ed teaches at Lafayette University. Carl Merryman has spent three and one-half years in Europe. He is the leader of the group going to Agape. They have all been very considerate

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

I was once looking over some discarded papers that came from an old desk. Among them was a letter from Dr. George Washington Carver. He had written to a teacher who had asked him to speak to his class. He said, "No, I wish I could, but I can't come. I have the 'flu' and feel weak. I believe my life is about over." But it wasn't. He lived fifteen more fruitful years.

Do you know about this man? He was born the son of slaves, and never knew his father, because he was sold before the boy's birth. He was soon lost from his mother, and grew up alone—that is, alone except for God's love and care.

He picked out the name, "George Washington," because he admired the father of our country. He wanted to learn about God's world and asked God to show him its ways and laws.

Once Dr. Carver told a newspaper reporter that he asked a favor of God, and God replied, "You ask too much, pick something small." So he picked the lowly peanut. He found a dozen different things within its tough hull: dye, ink, a powdered milk, peanut butter, oil and other things. He asked God again to show him the universe, and still he felt that God said to him, "Too big, pick something small." And then he picked the sweet potato. It, too, had hidden secrets of tar, dye, resins, oils, paint and other products.

So he lived and learned; poor but happy, seeking but content when God gave him small tasks.

A CHILD'S MANNER.

By MARY ELIZABETH THOMAS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Mrs. Dorothy Marvin and Alice Wilson, her friend, were enjoying a cup of tea in a quiet corner of the restaurant, when they noticed Mrs. Parker come in with her two daughters—pretty little girls of five and seven years of age. They sat at some distance, but Celia, the elder girl, faced them. Although she knew both ladies quite well, she gave no sign that she did. Her pretty face was a mask as far as they were concerned.

"Isn't she a lovely child, Alice," exclaimed Mrs. Marvin. "Such perfect features and such pretty eyes! Julia is pretty, too, but she seems fretful. I wonder why."

"Her mother babies her too much," returned Alice. "Yes Celia is certainly beautiful, but she isn't very popular with the other children. See how she ignores us—that is how she acts at school; many of her classmates say she is 'stuck-up.' Good looks are a definite asset, but they don't go far in attracting others if good manners are lacking."

"I wonder if she really is proud and haughty," mused Mrs. Marvin. "When I was young they used to make similar remarks about me. I must have looked and acted much the way Celia does, yet I really felt quite timid and awkward. Perhaps it's the same with Celia."

"It may be. In any case, her mother is probably to blame. She is a nervous, fussy woman, never finding anything to admire in any but her own children. As for boys, she actually dislikes all of them. She classes them as rough and bad and not fit for her girls to play with. Such an abused notion!"

"My own mother had some such ideas, Alice. Until I left home to go to boarding school I never had the chance to know any other children intimately. It proved to be a heavy handicap for me. The mother who is too possessive and too fussy does a great deal of harm to the children she wishes to guard so carefully. She forgets that these children of hers will have to go out into the world and mingle with all sorts of people. By her actions one would think the mother expected the children would always be under her protection."

"What Mrs. Parker needs is four boys like my sister Jenny has. That would knock a lot of silly ideas out of her head and would be the salvation of those girls. Nothing like a large family for putting each member in his or her place! Come, Dorothy, we will go over and show Celia we can be sociable. Perhaps it will help her to thaw out."

LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

mersion or the like. They spend a lot of time and fervor arguing with, even condemning the scientifically-minded Christians. What a need there is for good books in Chinese to put into the hands of these young people to help them in their thinking. And what a need for trained leaders of their own.

News from Shaowu indicates that the Synod Annual and Spring meeting was held in April. Representatives came from all stations in the synod. This is the first meeting since the entire area has been "liberated." A young man, Ch'iu Shan Pao, was elected secretary of the synod. We have great hopes that the church will go forward under his leadership.

As for our little family, we're managing very well. Lewis takes everything from water buffalo to police state as naturally as an American child in America takes the ever-present automobile. Typically enough, the car is his favorite object in life or pictures, superseding even the thrilling moo-cows that daily go by.

Our mission group is trying to study up on the "new" philosophy and our Christian philosophy. We hope our minds will grow, and our faith, in these experiences we are privileged to have first hand, here in a focal point of the great conflict rocking the world.

Cordially,

and helpful. I am one of the youngest members of our group, but I have tried not to cause them too much trouble.

Continuing with the ship's activities: in the afternoon there are many long classes. I study Italian. There is also another general orientation meeting and more lectures. I then have some fun from 4:30 to 7:45, when dinner is served.

At our night sessions we usually sing folk songs. The meeting last night ended with a discussion on the Holy Communion.

Perhaps I haven't mentioned our early morning devotional services before. Anyway, for Wednesday morning, before we land on Thursday, we have planned a Communion service for our group.

I'll close with an Italian word that means, "So long, I'll see you later." It is pronounced, "Chow."

DAVID A KING WHO HONORED GOD.

LESSON V.—JULY 30, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Thou art great, O Lord God; for there is none like thee.—II Samuel 7: 22.

LESSON: II Samuel 7: 1-6, 17-22.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I Chronicles 29: 10-19.

As one attempts to condense in the brief compass of these NOTES the story of "David, a King Who Honored God," he understands the plight of the elderly negro preacher who stated at the beginning of his sermon that he "was going to try to define the undefinable, and to unscrew the inscrutable." The fact is that one can only emphasize a few of the highlights of the long, interesting and inspiring story of David, one of God's great men of all times.

From Shepherd's Staff to Scepter.

Here is another "rags to riches" epic. To be sure, David was a boy well born, a member of a rather large family. He was hale and hearty, and as a lad was assigned the task of tending his father's sheep. He was evidently not only strong and sturdy, but courageous as well, for on several occasions he slew single-handed wild animals that tried to run off with his father's sheep.

Of course the convincing evidence of his courage, physical and moral, is the story of his duel with Goliath, the giant of the Philistines. With confidence in himself, born of strict discipline and rigorous training, and with confidence born of faith in the moral order and the God in whom he trusted, the young man, using only a sling and stones, boldly went forth to meet the fully armed giant, and did him to death. He thus delivered the Israelites from bondage to their hated enemies.

In due time Samuel was commanded to go to the house of Jesse, to anoint by token the one who should succeed Saul as king of Israel. One by one the stalwart sons of Jesse were passed before Samuel, and one by one they were rejected. Upon inquiry as to whether this were all of Jesse's sons, it was disclosed that there was another son, a comparative youngster who was tending sheep in the field. He was forthwith summoned, and with spiritual insight Samuel knew at once that this was he who was to be the Lord's anointed. Thus David was set aside as the next king.

Through a long period of waiting, and through many trying experiences with Saul, David behaved with tact and decorum, and proved himself a real man. He also demonstrated a capacity for forbearance and for real friendship. At long last he became king when Saul, at the end of a career that began with high promise, fell upon his sword and died a pathetic figure, at his own hand. Thus it was that by dint of discipline and study David rose from a shepherd lad to become king of Israel. He was perhaps Israel's greatest king.

A King Who Reigned Well.

David had a long and successful reign. He was a man of energy, foresight, insight and initiative. He subdued the enemies of Israel, brought internal peace, promoted building projects, and put the life of the nation on a sound basis. He was intensely human, but he was also intensely religious, and with all his limitations, it is recorded of him that he "was a man after God's own heart." Readers of the Bible are familiar with the dark chapter in his life concerning his relations with Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah the Hittite, and his sins resulting therefrom. But once convinced of his sin he sincerely and earnestly repented. Psalm 51 undoubtedly records the agony of his spirit during those dark days.

A King Who Honored God.

David was a religious man. He had a love for God and a loyalty to God. It is a mistake to think that David wrote all of the Psalms—it is not so stated as a matter of fact—but he did write many Psalms, and his songs reflect deep piety and genuine devotion.

Furthermore he had an uneasiness about the vast difference between the kind of houses in which he and his fellow-countrymen lived and the tent in which rested the Ark of the Covenant. It was incongruous and unthinkable to him. Accordingly he set about to do something about it. He was denied the privilege of building the Temple, but he did prepare for it, and to him goes much of the credit.

In passing it might be said that there are many churches which need more of the spirit of David concerning the dignity of the house of God. Members of the churches often live in fine houses and have the best of everything that money can buy, while the church in which they worship is unattractive, dingy, dirty, cheap and sometimes even shoddy. The church ought to be one of the most attractive buildings in the town, for the glory of God.

David showed great magnanimity to the crippled son of Saul, who was in line for the throne. In the custom of that day it would not have been considered too much of a sin if David had exterminated the last living relative of Saul. Instead, David sent for the crippled heir and made sure that he was provided for for life. Reference has already been made to his fine spirit in dealing with Saul, who on more than one occasion tried to kill David.

A King Who Wrote Hymns.

That is what the Psalms are—songs or hymns. They are, of course, of many kinds. Most of them are very personal and reflect religion in its most intimate aspects. There is no doubt concerning the fact that David wrote many of these Psalms. Many of them are attributed to him in the superscription.

Here was a man of large affairs, administering a great kingdom, with many demands made upon his time; but he kept alive his devotional life, and he wept alive his love for and his loyalty to Jehovah. He believed he had a great God and a good God, and he was humble before Him. Indeed, one of the marks of David's greatness, as it is the mark of true greatness everywhere, was his humility.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP IS BASIC.

character building institutions, is less than two-thirds of a nickel a day?

Talk about the giving of the tithe as taught in the scriptures, the tithe terumoth, the basic giving for all of us! Talk about giving the fifteen percent which our government recognizes and which it will deduct from our income tax! Instead, as our property has increased, the percentage of our income dollar given to churches and charities has struck a new low—the mere one percent of our income dollar, one-tenth of a tithe. As our prosperity increases, the percentage of our giving to Christian causes has decreased. Our nation is being paralyzed with selfishness and greed.

Is God speaking to us as a denomination when we find ourselves standing far beneath many of our sister denominations in our per capita giving? Is He speaking to us when according to a recent release from the office of the secretary of the United Stewardship Council, where a comparison between the percentage of increased membership and increased percentage of giving to church causes for the period 1924-1949, twenty-five years, of fifteen denominations, we note that ours is the only one of the fifteen whose percentage of increased giving is less than its increased percentage of membership?

Is God speaking through Malachi to you and me personally when we look into our own Christian giving and compare our investment in religion with our investment in any one of the other seven majors of life—food, clothing, home, recreation, education, business, government?

My friends, we have not yet learned how to give. Only here and there do we have one who really knows the joy of giving, realizes it as a function of the soul, as an investment rather than an expense, as God's divine plan to make us like himself. To all too many of us, giving is yet "talking money from the pulpit," "paying church bills," "meeting apportionments," "raising money," "putting on a drive," "running a bazaar," and other money making schemes.

I speak to you purely on Christian stewardship. I am not speaking on behalf of our Christian World Mission as such, but I do wish to say, that if you allow it and accept it, it may bring to you personally and to your church exceedingly rich blessings and a new spiritual glow, to say nothing of helping to meet the tremendous needs of a world.

Its challenge is not large enough, for it does not shake us out of some small percentage increases, to the place where it sends us to our knees as a people, causing us really to give sacrificially. Those who have given fifties need to give hundreds. Those who have been thinking hundreds need to venture into thousands.

When one becomes a real steward, a proportionate giver, taking out a definite, fair and honorable part for God's work first, not only will there come the joy of the song, but there will also come to the stewardship giver a keener sensitiveness to the spirit, plans and work of Christ. There is something about it that expands his life and develops it. His emotions, conscience, imagination, and other faculties, that before were more or less dormant, now spring into life, and self-indulgence, selfishness and covetousness come under control.

If our material possessions are to be managed and shared as God would have us, people must be informed as to what is right and wrong in the matter of:

Acquisition of property and things, for there are many ways of acquiring, such as wages, fees for professional services, salaries, gambling, business, bonuses, investments, graft, royalties, theft, driving a sharp bargain, crime, commissions, trading, speculating in stocks, inheritances, etc.;

Using that which I possess, such as my house, my car, downtown rental property;

Spending the dollars in my purse. Shall my standard of living be simple or luxurious as to food, home, clothing. What is necessity, comfort, luxury?

Saving for old age, illness, the rainy day. How shall I save, what shall be my real motive in saving, when does saving become hoarding?

Disposing of a residue at the close of life. Will my last will and testament stand the eye, not only of the local court, but the approval of the all-seeing Eye? Is my will full of me and mine?

Maybe your will needs to be rewritten. The faithful steward will find a real opportunity to extend his life long after he is gone, through his church, missionary and other philanthropic causes. What a chance Christian attorneys have to do good when they write wills by kindly suggestion to ask if one has thought of extending his life influence by giving to worthy Christian causes.

Something will happen in your church, large or small, rich or poor, and your people will be happy about it. There will come a spiritual power you have not had before and can get from no other source. Many petty problems will automatically be solved. New money and new workers will be discovered, and the actual power of Christ will be demonstrated.

Let me offer the following as among my deepest convictions:

1. That Christian Stewardship offers the only sound, permanent foundation for the financial affairs of the church and kingdom; that a carefully planned and prepared for every-member canvass is one of the richest experiences a church may have, if conducted on a stewardship basis; that proportionate giving and tithing are the most Christian and the most productive methods of kingdom finance; that no church, large or small, can afford not to conduct an annual every-member canvass on such a basis.

2. That a thorough going campaign on proportionate giving, beginning with the tithe is one of our outstanding needs; that denominational leaders, pastors, Christian education staffs, should whole-heartedly and aggressively cooperate with the efforts of our Fellowship of Tithers. Many are missing the blessings of tithing due to a mistaken idea that tithing was for some nationality, and for some period of time. Not so. Its practice is as old as the human race. There is no point in saying "it is legalistic" because some nation or persons at sometime lost the motive and spirit of it. The law of the tithe, like the law of the Sabbath and the law of marriage, was from the beginning. Jesus made the Sabbath mean more to human life, but he did not annul it; he made the tithe a doorway into the riches of Christian stewardship but he did not annul it. It expands one's thinking, widens one's vision. It is the doorway into a more complete consecration of our total life.

3. That we take a great care that we do not confuse the development of Christian Stewardship as a basic philosophy of life as it relates to things and possessions with the immediate promotion of fund raising.

4. That every agency among us—denomination as well as local church—should lay great emphasis on the teachings of the stewardship of our material possessions to our youth during

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

DEAR FRIENDS:

About the fences and hedge rows that surround pasture lands and farm lands, many blackberries are ripening. The children are paid a small fee for all they bring into the kitchen. How they like that! And how they like the berries served with cereal and in great pies!

I bought several quarts for myself and family, and I paid a fairly good price. When their salesmanship soared, I complained of the high prices I had been paying. Think of my surprise and joy when a half dozen charming little girls came to my door the next day with a full gallon of choice berries, and the best barter of all: "Dr. Truitt, we picked them everyone for you for free." Some of these girls were so small, I asked them if they helped too, and with one accord they all replied yes. "But you do not mean for free?" I asked. The answer was yes, for free. They had their joy in picking them just for me! Now how about that? I felt rich in their sincere friendship and love. I shall never forget it. They laughed and chattered and rubbed it in when they saw how happy I was.

Listen, it doesn't take much of the right sort of thing to make a person happy. We need money here now, and need it badly. A little from many people, many Sunday schools and churches, would ease the tension of the bills that have mounted from trying to bring this place into better repair of almost everything.

I am here to rise or fall with these children. I mean to give them my time, my talent—what little I may have—and the best that I can be. I am going to help at nights in a revival meeting at Belew Creek soon, and I expect to tell the congregations there that every nickel, dime or dollar they give me for my services shall be turned right over to the present tension here. I see the need, and as best I can, I expect to do my part to supply it. There are children to feed and children to clothe, and there are matrons to pay. We have better gardens, but that will not pay a more than $1,300 coal bill, nor our share of more than $500 on a community fire truck, nor replace a leaking roof, nor replace a clogged and tree-broken sewer line, nor rebuild a falling down milkhouse.

We are thankful for our gardens, our milk and our pork—children tire of pork in summer, yet they are a healthy, happy lot. They do not have to wonder whether the rain will finally ruin that acreage of wheat yet in the fields, nor what we will do about some of the oats that are already gone. They greet me with the brightest faces you ever saw, and tell me their many wonderful experiences, and I come to be just as happy as they.

It is your thoughtfulness, your goodwill, your gifts, that make this place serve as it rightly should.

Thank you!

ing their early years. The unconscious atmosphere absorbed in home, school, church school, young people's conferences, as to things, finances, possessions, money, not only molds their attitudes and decisions on financial matters in mature life, but more probably than any other training molds their attitudes and decisions on the other major considerations of life.

5. That life consists not in the abundance of things one possesses, that they are not life but the scaffolding to make life. It is the function of money and possessions to produce the spiritual. It is a Christian challenge, a spiritual challenge to put our economic life under the dominion of the eternal. Stewardship places property at the service of personality; it makes the financial the scaffolding for the spiritual; it recognizes that consecrated giving is proof of eternal living.

DEAN POPE HEADS SOCIAL ACTION.

Dr. Liston Pope, dean, Yale Divinity School, was elected chairman of the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches. Dean Pope, a former Methodist, has come to a place of leadership in the affairs of our denomination.

"From its earliest days in America, Congregationalism has encouraged social action and has accepted social responsibility. At the beginning, the Pilgrim fathers went even to the extreme of having the church control the government. Their successors have been active in the Abolition Crusade, the Social Gospel movement, the crusade for peace, and innumerable other controversial and pioneering movements," said Dean Pope, speaking at the General Council.

"Congregationalists have loved freedom for themselves—and for their brothers. They have generally been wise enough to see that freedom and pure individualism are not the same thing—that, as a matter of fact, freedom can be defended and extended in society only by common action and concerted effort.

"In the twentieth century the Congregational Christian churches have maintained their leadership in religious social action. Their programs in this field are widely regarded in other denominations as being the most effective and the most genuinely religious ones in American Protestantism. Scrupulously avoiding any alliance with Communism, the Council for Social Action seeks courageously and intelligently to promote social justice and democracy in loyalty to Christian ideals alone.

"At the halfway mark of the world's most tumultuous century, the Congregational Christian Churches are required to increase their programs of social action if they would be true to their own tradition and competent for the demands of these times. This fellowship of churches is not accustomed to retreat from difficult days, or to accept outworn dogmas in lieu of living ideas. Congregationalists will not be deceived by those who seek to diminish freedom under the pretext of trying to save it. Nor will they be distracted by loud propaganda which insists that there is no alternative to omnipotent statism on the one hand or the creed of sheer individualism on the other. Our religious forefathers played a central part in creating the tradition of social responsibility in America; as Christian churchmen, we are called on to preserve and strengthen the tradition.

"The answer to Communism is not to be found in a mere negative repudiation of it. The answer lies in a positive program of social improvement, stemming from a religious faith more profound and enduring than the superficial tenets of Marxism. To develop such a program of positive social action is the principal imperative for the Christian world in the decade just ahead," he said.

Congregationalist Heads Planning Commission

The Rev. Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield of Elmhurst, Long Island, has been appointed administrative secretary of the planning committee of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A., according to an announcement by the Rev. Dr. Earl F. Adams, executive secretary.

The National Council is a new church agency being sponsored by 26 Protestant and Orthodox denominations with a combined membership of over 26,000,000, and will combine eight national interdenominational bodies, including the Federal Council of Churches.

DR. FAIRFIELD

Dr. Fairfield, who assumed his duties this month, will assist Dr. Adams in helping to expedite the administrative details among the eight Protestant agencies in preparation for their formal merger at a convention in Cleveland, Ohio, November 28 to December 1.

At the same time, Dr. Fairfield will maintain an advisory relationship to the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, one of the eight merging agencies. He has been a secretary for general administration of this organization for the past five years. His appointment with the planning committee is effective until next December, when the National Council is to be officially launched. He will then return to his post in the new division of foreign missions of the National Council. Miss Sue Weddell has been appointed to carry executive responsibility for the conference during this period.

Dr. Fairfield was for nineteen years a missionary in China under the American Board of the Congregational Christian Church. He served that organization for sixteen years as secretary for East Asia.

Dr. Fairfield is a member of the executive committees of Church World Service, the Protestant Radio Commission, the Associated Boards of Christian Colleges in China, and other interdenominational agencies. He was the first director of the Church Committee for China Relief.

Widenhouse Heads American Missionary Association

The Rev. Philip M. Widenhouse has been named the new General Secretary of the American Missionary Association. Mr. Widenhouse has served churches in Chicago and Atlanta. He was the director of the Department of Research and Planning in the Washington Federation of Churches before he went to New York, where he has served in the Division of Church Extension of the Board of Home Missions. From his study of trends in the denominational and national life, Mr. Widenhouse arrived at this thesis: "Since 56 per cent of the population has changed since 1940, it is apparent that an immobile church cannot meet and serve a mobile population."

REV. PHILIP WIDENHOUSE

Since Phil Widenhouse was born in North Carolina and has served a church in Georgia, he knows the South from first-hand experience and not from hearsay. Training and experience have given him the sociological skills to interpret this amazing region. The American Missionary Association gives opportunity on a large scale for this churchman, statistician and sociologist to exert a salutary influence in the field of education and human relationships.

We felicitate both the Board of Home Missions and Mr. Widenhouse upon this most fortunate appointment.

IMPORTANT CONFERENCE HELD BY SUFFOLK CHURCH.

At the July Conference of the Suffolk Christian Church, its Trustees presented the following bequests to be used as memorials: From the estate of Miss Zadie Crump, $500.00, to be used as a memorial to Mr. and Mrs. John King; from the estate of Miss Mabel L. Leete, $200.00, as a gift to the church, and from the estate of Miss Buena E. Griggs, $23,863.00, as a memorial to her brother, C. O. Griggs.

The Board of Trustees asked the conference to elect a committee of fifteen members, representing each department or division of the church, to make recommendations to the trustees as to the types of memorials to be used.

At this same meeting, the conference adopted a constitution for the church as presented by the Board of Deacons. While the church had operated under an unwritten constitution during many years of effective service, the conference felt that the adoption of such a document was important for its future life and service.

The Board of Finance proposed a tentative budget of $24,649.00, which the conference adopted. The month of September was designated as Stewardship month. The third Sunday in September will be Loyalty Sunday and the Every Member Canvass will begin on the fourth Sunday.

V. T. CRAWFORD RETURNS TO PORTSMOUTH.

Dr. V. T. Crawford, expository preacher, lecturer and Bible teacher, has assumed the pastorate of the Shelton Memorial Church in Portsmouth, Virginia.

Dr. and Mrs. Crawford and their son Van were welcomed into the new parish recently at a dinner and reception given by members of the church.

The Crawfords are natives of Virginia; Dr. Crawford was ordained to the ministry in The Christian Temple, Norfolk, and his first pastorate as a regularly ordained minister was the Elm Ave. Congregational Christian Church in Portsmouth.

Dr. and Mrs. Crawford are receiving a warm welcome from their many friends of other years, as well as from the fine people of their new parish, which makes their coming to Portsmouth a delightful experience indeed.

As pastor of the Shelton Church, Dr. Crawford is participating in the Union Sunday evening services scheduled by the Park View churches, and is speaking in the union services on July 16th and August 27th.

NEWS FROM GEORGIA.

Dear CHRISTIAN SUN Family:

It has been a long time since you have heard from me. I thought maybe some would like to know what had become of me. I am still in South Georgia doing my best as an humble pastor. I serve Ambrose half time, Richland one fourth time and the new baby church at Douglass one fourth time. My work is going well. It could and should do better. We have good Sunday schools at all of these churches. We are having some additions to the churches, although we have not yet had any of our revivals. Please pray that we may have great revivals at all the churches.

Perhaps you would be more interested in the new church at Douglass, since it is the baby of our association. It was organized this year, April 9, with nine charter members. We are renting a building at the present to hold services in. We have bought a couple of lots on the corner of Madison and Alonza Streets on which to build. The lots are clear. We are now laying the foundation for the temporary chapel in which we plan to worship while we build the first unit of the church plant. Then the chapel can be easily converted into a parsonage at which time we hope to have grown to where we can have full time service. It is an inspiration to witness the courage, determination, and consecration of this faithful group. I am serving as best under the circumstances without price. However, they never fail to pay me some for each effort.

This is not intended to be an appeal for help, but I am sure if you could (Continued on page 7.)

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS.

One cannot attend four Sunday School Conventions in a single month, meeting with many of the 2,213 earnest and consecrated superintendents, teachers and officers of the 190 Sunday schools of the Southern Convention, without realizing anew the great potential power there is in the Sunday school.

The Sunday school has been the strong arm of the church in the past, and if the church is to be strong in the future, it must continue to develop the Sunday school. The controversy which has largely excluded religious education from the public school system has placed a new and increased responsibility upon the church to do a better job of teaching religion than ever before. For most of our churches, the responsibility for the teaching work rests with their Sunday school teachers. The three North Carolina Sunday School Conventions and the Eastern Virginia Convention meeting in July has each sounded the note for more efficient Sunday schools, and in this there is great hope.

Meeting at Union Grove Christian Church on Tuesday, July 11, the Western North Carolina Convention was well represented by delegates. The attendance was the best in years. President S. H. Pell and his fellow-officers built and executed an excellent program around the theme: "The Sunday School Geared for Service." Besides addresses by the Convention Superintendent and Dr. Wm. Moseley Brown, the program included worthwhile workshops for superintendents, teachers and young people. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill presented the literature and other helps available for making the Sunday school more effective.

The Eastern North Carolina Convention met at Shallow Well on Wednesday, July 12, with President Rex G. Powell presiding. This session was well attended by representatives of over half of the Sunday schools. Included in the program were addresses by Rev. W. J. Andes, chairman of the Board of Christian Education; Miss Coghill, Dr. John G. Truitt and Superintendent Scott. A set of interesting objectives for improving the quality of the Sunday school was offered by President-elect Fred P. Register.

The North Carolina and Virginia Convention was held at the Third Avenue Church of Danville, Virginia, on July 13. The attendance was very good and the interest keen. President Algie H. Blalock is to be commended for the excellent program built around the "Purpose and Job of the Sunday School." An interesting panel discussion on the theme: "The Purpose of the Sunday School," presented the job of the Sunday school in a novel and challenging manner. Participating in this discussion were: Rev. Wm. J. Andes, Dr. L. E. Smith, Mrs. John G. Truitt and Rev. M. T. Sorrell. Rev. Henry E. Robinson of Burlington made an effective presentation of Visual Aids as an effective means of better teaching. Discussion groups for workers with children, young people, adults and superintendents afforded a fine opportunity for sharing effective and tried ways of teaching.

"Consecrated Service through the Sunday School," was the theme of the 81st annual session of the Eastern Virginia Convention held at Cypress Chapel. The sanctuary was filled to capacity with delegates and pastors. An interesting and constructive program was well received. This program included addresses on "Christian Education and Our Sunday School," by Superintendent W. T. Scott; "Our Young People Looking Ahead," by Jack Byrd; "A More Effective Church through the Sunday School," by Rev. Earl Farrell; "Consecrated Service through the Sunday School," by Rev. Duane N. Vore; and "The Purpose of the Sunday School"—presented by a teacher,

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THAT REMARKABLE BOOTH FAMILY

General William Booth founded the Salvation Army in 1865.

Evangeline Booth, his daughter, was born that same year in London, and died in Hartsdale, New York, on July 17. Her career in the organization began as a child in London where her father preached in the slums. The old General is said to have liked his tea like his religion—hot!

A leader in the Salvation Army in the United States for 30 years, Miss Booth became international commander in 1934. For her services in World War I, President Wilson awarded her the Distinguished Service Medal. She retired in 1939. She was the first woman general in the Salvation Army's history.

Here is one of the many interesting stories about her life. As Miss Booth got her first lessons in the salvation of souls in London's Limehouse and Whitechapel districts, the toughs taunted her at first, but later formed a bodyguard for her and named her their "White Angel."

Another story shows how brave and unorthodox she was, as well as how effective she was in dealing with human relations. In 1939, Hitler reversed an order limiting activities of the Army in Germany, after she wrote the Nazi Fuehrer a letter saying she could not be sure whether he was a "dunce or a devil."

In a world where countless people have banned the word "salvation" from their vocabulary, the remarkable Booth family has placed it at the forefront of their organization which has enlisted the participation of nearly 4,000,000 persons. The neglected phases of Christianity have received priority in the Salvation Army. Care for the unfortunate has been the first item of concern. Miss Booth led in the establishment of working-men's hotels, industrial homes, shelters for children, maternity centers, suicide bureaus, prison and rescue work. Severe disciplines have been imposed, thus enabling Army personnel to survive being ridiculed or ignored. With unnumbered rescues to its credit, the movement has been true to the ideals of its founder—it has been a SALVATION army.

Mrs. Victoria Booth Demarest, granddaughter of General Booth, holds her membership in the Flatbush-Tompkins Congregational Church in Brooklyn. She was the guest preacher in that church on Sunday morning, May 28. One can read between the lines, so to speak, on noticing her subject: "Priests and Kings." That is a kind of motto for the Salvation Army.

Mrs. Demarest has dedicated her life to Christian service on two continents. Last year the New York City Congregational Association formally ordained Mrs. Demarest to the Christian ministry, thus giving the recognition of ordination to her useful lay ministry over many years. This is one of many instances in which the Congregational Church has been a haven for those of varied fellowships and has not hesitated to confer ordination upon women, even though the practice is frowned upon by other communions—and even by some within our own communion.

Here is an indirect way for Congregational Christians to claim kinship with the Salvation Army. General Booth was an ex-Methodist (as was James O'Kelly), and his granddaughter received her ordination in the Congregational Church.

EXPANDING STEWARDSHIP

Dr. F. C. Lester was conducting a discussion period on Stewardship at the Family Life Conference which was held recently at Crabtree State Park. Every member present was avowedly committed to the practice and principles of Christian stewardship. One unavoidable problem was the limits of stewardship in the low income bracket of the average lay or ministerial home. Sacrifice, under such stringent circumstances, cannot achieve staggering results. The Kingdom lags for want of adequate support. Every institution of our church is crippled by lack of funds. Christian materialists are needed. What can be done to improve the work of the Kingdom? How can our stewardship be expanded?

Dr. Ralph A. Felton tells the story of Paul Doran, a young minister, who went to a rural parish on Calkiller River in White County, Tennessee, in 1917. He found four weak churches with memberships ranging from 12 to 40, poor farms, low-grade schools, a discouraged people. Twenty-eight pastors had come and gone during a period of twenty-five years. With the coming of Paul Doran, this dreary history was ended. He stayed for twenty-seven years, renewed the spirit of his people, and helped them change the face of the community.

This minister saw from the beginning that the life of these four churches and the life of the countryside were so closely bound that no one could tell where one stopped and the other began. In order to save one, he had to save both. That is what he set his mind to do.

These farmers had long been careless and irreverent in their attitude toward the earth. They had cut down and sold timber on the hills and plowed up the new ground and planted for quick returns. They had raised no cover crops. Soon the rich topsoil was washed away by the rains, and the fields stood bare, save for deep and ugly gullies. As the topsoil went down toward the Gulf of Mexico, incomes went down too. Low incomes meant poor schools and churches. Over half of the school teachers in 1917 had not finished the eighth grade. The average school term was three and a half months. Children truged over muddy roads. There was not a mile of improved road in the whole county. The main church on Paul Doran's parish had only two paying members.

Resourceful and determined, the youthful pastor bought a small farm and set aside two acres for demonstration plots. He knew he must raise the economic level of his people. So, while the farmers watched, he spread lime on his fields to counteract acidity and planted such soil-building crops as soybeans, crimson clover, alfalfa and lespedeza. He introduced Hampshire sheep and Jersey cows and white Leghorn chickens. During the winter months, when evenings were long and work slack, he invited the farmers to meet at his home for five evenings during each week.

Before many years passed, the average yield of corn per acre was increased from 18 bushels to 42, the parish boasted 110 miles of improved roads, the people were proud of their painted houses and the landscaped grounds, and the old preaching places had been replaced by beautiful little chapels, built of native stone quarried and hauled and put into place by the hands of the men whose despair had turned into joy. A new community came into being on Calfkiller River.

Does this story give one a clue or answer to the problem of expanding one's giving? Are there other ways by which the resources of the church can be multiplied? Are there untapped sources of revenue waiting to be discovered by Christians? Have we failed to make intelligent application of Christ's parable of the talents? Have too many Christians been "harmless as doves," but not "wise as serpents"? Does the need of the Kingdom not demand a new order of Christian materialists? What can you and your church do, within the framework of Christian stewardship to provide more financial support for the crying needs of the Kingdom?

"In the Name of the Father"

General Council
Lecture

By REVEREND HOWARD CONN
Minister, Plymouth Congregational Church
Minneapolis, Minnesota

In an eighth-grade Sunday school class to which my sister belonged, the teacher asked the children one morning what they would like to talk about. "Well, let's not talk about God," one girl promptly volunteered; "that's all we've studied since we started Sunday school!"

In contrast to this frank expression of a youth is the equally frank statement of a prominent churchwoman that in her years of church attendance she had heard sermons on almost every conceivable topic excepting God!

The contrast of these two statements reveals the predicament of our modern age. On the one hand we have talked a great deal about God; but on the other hand we do not know him. We have built strong churches in his name but have filled them with such busy programs that he has been crowded out. We have invoked Divine blessings on our meetings and then have proceeded to neglect its implications. We have professed our dependence upon God, but have followed too much the devices and desires of our own hearts. We have sung his praises, but have not sought to do his will. As a result, this great nation of ours, founded by God-fearing people, stands today in desperate need of a mighty spiritual revival. Like Job, you and I have heard of the Almighty by the hearing of the ear; but now we yearn to see Him with the eyes of faith.

I count it a privilege to be asked to speak on the first person of the Trinity since there is no task of the ministry more joyous than to lift up one's voice with strength and say unto the cities of Judah, "Behold your God." Yet I do so with considerable misgiving borne out of recognition of my own limitations. When one of my parishoners learned that I had been given this assignment, he quite properly asked, "Don't you think you should speak on some subject you know more about?" I acknowledge the justice of this remark. I am not a theologian whose mind has been concentrated on intellectual development, but a parish minister whose many responsibilities require that he scatter his attention widely. As a Congregationalist, I am not an authoritarian to give pronouncements, but am myself a seeker after truth. As one minister addressing many others, there are few things I can say that are not thoroughly familiar to all.

Yet within these acknowledged limitations I count it a privilege to give a personal testimony. Religious experience cannot be shut up within oneself. Those truths which we believe, we instinctively desire to share with others. When Alexander Woolcott said that his first impulse on reading a good book was to trundle a wheelbarrow load of copies to his friends, he was expressing this same desire to testify that prompted the Psalmist to say:

I will teach transgressors thy ways,
And sinners shall turn back to thee.
Deliver me from silence, O God:
My tongue shall sing of thy faithfulness.
O Lord, open tho my lips,
And my mouth shall show forth thy praise.
I do believe in God, infinite in wisdom, goodness and love. I believe that he is the creator and sustainer of all life. I know that his purpose runs through all things, and that his power is available to all who are in harmony with that purpose. There is such a multitude of truths that any one of us could say about the Almighty that a speaker must confine himself to limited area. My mind has always been intrigued by the fact that God is so great that we may say apparently contradictory things about him. Thus, I should like to discuss three of these paradoxes of God: His Immanence and His Transcendence; His Universalism and His Particularism; His Judgment and His Mercy. I select these three out of the many paradoxes with which God confronts us because each of them deals with an aspect of religion that is a daily concern.

I. HIS IMMANENCE AND HIS TRANSCENDENCE.

Let me preface my consideration of the immanence and transcendence of God by first enquiring as to the situation out of which comes our awareness of the divine. Many persons neglect religion because they think they have sought for God and have not found him. With what they think to be commonsense realism, they point out that the deity eludes man's persistent search. He cannot be located from the highest mountain nor in the deepest sea. He is not discovered by test tube or microscope. He has given his signature to no book and has left unanswered countless prayers that have been lifted to him. We can quite agree that God is not to be found as though he were another object among many, but our awareness of him comes in the midst of human experience itself when we analyze the implications of that experience.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS.

As I read the church calendar, the last of the annual Sunday School Conventions of the five Conferences constituted by the Southern Convention has been held.

It was my privilege to attend the Conventions in the Valley Conference, the Western North Carolina Conference, and the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. All three of these Conventions were very good. In many instances, those who were listed on the programs as speakers were not present, and substitutions had to be made. I was delighted to find that the programs for the Conventions that I had the privilege of attending had to do with the Sunday school, its work, and opportunities. These programs perhaps could have been a bit more thorough, but on the whole they struck the right note and pointed in the right direction. I am glad to see that the program-makers for Sunday School Conventions are getting away from the usual pattern for the annual Conference meetings. The different institutions, boards, and organizations should be permitted to participate in our Sunday School Conventions, but for the sake of the Sunday school and not for the sake of the institutions, boards, and organizations, themselves. It is the church's responsibility, and I mean the whole church, to put the emphasis on the Sunday school. The time has come for a new emphasis on Sunday school work in the local church and in our local Conferences.

In many respects, we are missing some fine opportunities to begin new churches in new communities. The Sunday school has always pioneered in the matter of organizing new churches. It has the opportunity of gathering to its weekly sessions, all ages and all classes, particularly the children. Truly a little child shall lead them. When the children of a home begin attending a new Sunday school, if that Sunday school is conducted correctly and wisely, it will soon become a church. This is the way we grow churches. The churches that feed on the Sunday school grow rapidly and mightily. The churches of our Convention should take advantage of these opportunities. They confront us on practically every side.

It takes money to build churches, but first of all it takes vision, determination, and consecration. These three will somehow find necessary funds with which to build.

ELON SUMMER SCHOOL.

It has been the practice of Elon College since the summer of 1934 to conduct summer school. The summer quarter is divided into two sessions of six weeks each. The summer sessions were started for the convenience and assistance of students who had difficulty with one or more subjects during the regular term and for teachers in service who wished to improve their teaching certificates.

When the summer school started, we considered the enrollment excellent if it reached 150 for the first six weeks and 100 for the last. When the war came along, the government requested all colleges to inaugurate an accelerated program for the benefit of young men who were taking special training for selected work in the Army, Navy, or Air Corp. Elon was prepared and ready to comply. All that was necessary was to add the required subjects for special training. Enrollment in the summer school increased and took on a semblance of more importance.

Two summers ago, the peak enrollment for our summer school was reached. For the first six weeks we enrolled approximately 350; the second six weeks, 250. For the present summer session we enrolled 250 for the first six weeks, and approximately 200 for the current term.

Some of our friends contend that it is a mistake to conduct summer school at all, arguing that both faculty and students need relief from the grind of college work, and that it is preferable to take four years for undergraduate study rather than to crowd it all into three. There are others that contend that it is a wise plan to have summer school, that the church has its investments in buildings, grounds, equipment, etc.; that you can operate more cheaply during the summer months—the coal bill is negligible, the electric light bills are considerably reduced. The value of the summer school is debatable. Perhaps we should reach a compromise and have only six weeks of summer school. The matter will be discussed and a definite decision reached before the summer of 1951.

The enrollment for this summer has exceeded our expectations. We are now looking forward to the enrollment for the regular fall term. Prospects are very good, but not as encouraging as has been the past two or three years. Economic conditions and military demands will, as a matter of fact, affect enrollment in college for the coming year. Let us hope that conditions will improve and prospects will become brighter.

When you influence a young person to enter college, you render that person a lasting service.

THE ELON COLLEGE SUSTAINING FUND.

The executive committee of the Sustaining Fund organization is undertaking to organize the five conferences constituting the Convention to give information, inspiration, and direction to the membership of our church in the Southern Convention to implement the Convention's action in recent session at Oakland Christian Church, Chuckatuck, Virginia, authorizing the Elon College Sustaining Fund.

The Western North Carolina Conference Committee, Rev. Clyde Fields, chairman, is called to meet in Asheboro, Monday of this week at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The North Carolina-Virginia Conference Committee, Rev. W. J. Andes, chairman, is called to meet in Greensboro, Tuesday at 8 p. m. The Eastern Virginia Conference Committee, Rev. Duane Vore, chairman, is called to meet in Suffolk, Wednesday at 2 p. m. The Valley of Virginia Conference Committee, Roy Larrick, chairman, is called to meet in Winchester on Thursday. The meeting for the Eastern North Carolina Conference Committee will be arranged at a later date. Complete information of the meetings of these committees and actions taken will be given to the entire membership of the church.

We trust that you will keep the Sustaining Fund and its purpose in mind so that when the opportunity comes, you will be in a position to give full and complete cooperation. The college needs your encouragement.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Contributions from the churches and Sunday schools of the Convention to the college have held up well. In fact, the total amount given to date is slightly in excess of previous years. Of course our apportionment is larger, which calls for increased payments from each local church. Even so, it is encouraging to know that our Sunday schools and churches realize that the college must be supported and that its expenses are continuous throughout the year. In fact, our expenses are heavier during the summer months than any other time.

The Elon College faculty is employed on a 9-month basis—salaries are earned during nine months. The faculty members are paid, however, on a 12-month basis; that is, they earn their salaries in nine months, but are paid in twelve equal installments. In addition to their regular salary schedule to be paid during the summer months, summer school salaries are required, and this has become quite an item. When your salary scale runs $12,000 a month plus, and then add $3,000 a month plus to that, the college has quite an item facing it every month.

You may feel that the $10, $15, or $50 that you send from your Sunday school would help but little; but if 198 Sunday schools and churches would all send in equal amounts, the total would be substantial. This can easily be done. Did you send a contribution for last week? Will you send one this week? Thank you very much.

S. S. CONVENTIONS.

Miss Virginia Brinkley; by a layman, J. Letcher Eley; by a minister, Dr. H. S. Hardcastle. The worship services, conducted by Rev. James H. Lightbourne, Jr., Rev. Stanley Carne, and by the Cypress Chapel Young People, gave a deep spiritual setting to the entire meeting. Hon. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., president, and his associates in office are to be commended in carrying on the long tradition of effectiveness in the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention.

The above four Sunday School Conventions, together with the Valley

Convention held in June, under the leadership of President H. E. Liskey, have given a healthy stimulation to teachers, officers, pastors and pupils in our Sunday schools. In the Sunday school is given a great opportunity for lay activity. Our laymen ought to find a renewed interest and concern in the Sunday schools of our Convention.

It is through the Sunday School Conventions that much of our leadership training begins. The Board of Christian Education is anxious to see a large number of our youth begin training for Christian leadership, and the board sponsors Leadership Training Institutes by areas for teachers and officers. Much of the financial support for the Board of Christian Education comes from our Sunday schools. The convention dues, from 10c to 15c per member, paid by the schools provides funds which make possible the services of Miss Coghill and the Convention Superintendent.

As a part of the "Mid-Century Advance for Christ and His Church," a call is given for strengthening the Sunday schools of our Convention.

NEWS FROM GEORGIA.

witness this challenge of an opportunity to serve and build the Kingdom of God as our church represents it here you would be glad of the opportunity. If any one or group should have a good piano that they would sell at a good discount to us for use here, we would be glad to get in touch with you. A letter from our mission board says, "Our funds are exhausted. We are over appropriated more than $300,000." This means that if we go forward with this work, we are foured to do it the hard way which, under God, we will try to do. It is a long hard road with many disappointments. We will need your prayers and encouragement.

Recently I was privileged to go back to my old home town of Roanoke, Ala. and assist my friend, Rev. Roy Walker in a revival at Lowell. We had a wonderful revival and a great experience. We made our home with the pastor and his good family, the gracious hospitality of which we shall never forget. I just hope that the meeting was as great a blessing those who attended as it was to me. Our dear old Bro. G. D. Hunt is making his home with Bro. Walker, who is his son-in-law. It was a treat to have fellowship with him. He attended most every service.

Revival meetings and summer camps will soon be in full swing here. Pray that we have a great spiritual harvest with many uniting with the church. We are anxious to see people converted. Then we are just as anxious to see them united with the church. A Christian in the world is as much out of place as a sinner is in the church. A new born Christian is just a baby ready to grow and develop. I fear that many of us preachers unintentionally discourage many young converts, not by holding too high a standard but by leaving the impression that one must reach this standard before professing and uniting with the church, which is the beginning of the climb toward perfection. Jesus did not call men because they were perfect, but because they were willing to forsake sin, trust and follow him. He said, "Come and I will make you to become." Let us likewise encourage people to come to Christ, uniting with his church, confessing their sins and trusting him to help them to become the kind of Christian that they hope to be, by a gradual, but steady, sensible growth in peace.

WILL IT BE YOUR LIQUOR?

The American Tract Society tells of a tragedy which occurred "one Saturday night when an automobile in which a young couple were driving suddenly crashed. The young man was killed and the popular high school girl, 17 years old, was seriously injured. They were taken to a hospital and the father and mother of the girl were called. The mother had been unable to sleep that night, for she thought she had seen a bottle in the young man's pocket as the couple left the home.

"On reaching the hospital, the parents learned that both young people had been intoxicated at the time of the accident and that a bottle had been found in the car. The father went into a rage and exclaimed: 'If I can find the person who sold those children that whiskey, I'll kill him!' As they returned to their home the father felt he must have a drink to steady his shattered nerves. Going to the place where he usually kept his liquor, he found instead a note in the handwriting of his daughter: 'Dad, we hope you won't mind our taking your whiskey along with us tonight.' It was the father's own whiskey that had killed the young man and critically injured his daughter."

Christian Missions

HOW MUCH IS $8.00?

Eight dollars is not a lot of money to many Americans, but it is a big sum to the Ovimbundu women of Elende, West Central Africa. A check for $8.00 has just reached the Congregational Christian Service Committee, 110 E. 29th Street, New York City, from the Christian women of Elende as part of their Woman's Day of Prayer Offering which they wish to go to the people in the world less fortunate than themselves.

If the husbands of these women are unskilled workmen they earn around 12c a day, and if skilled they are in the "upper brackets" and get 75c a day.

The Congregational Christian Service Committee functions in close connection with the American Board of Foreign Missions to render mobile, short-term emergency service in areas of critical need around the world regardless of race, creed or nationality. It is now helping rehabilitation projects in Germany and doing relief work in Greece, India, China, Italy and Lebanon. In Lebanon it supervises a dozen schools conducted for Arab refugee children.

The Committee recently sent 30 tons of powdered milk for use in the Madura area of India where there is a food deficiency.

NORTH CHINA MISSION TREASURER PASSES.

James Hamilton McCann, for 32 years missionary in China under the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, Massachusetts, died Thursday, July 6, 1950 in Glendale, California just five days before his 84th birthday. A layman, born in Killenchy, Ireland, near Belfast, Mr. McCann did farming in California for ten years before going out to Lintsing, China, prior to the Boxer Rebellion as an independent missionary. He then went into the mercantile business in Chefoo for a year but in 1901 because of his sound business judgment and deep consecration to Christian service was made a missionary of the American Board serving as treasurer and business agent of the North China Mission.

In 1933 Mr. and Mrs. McCann were made Emeritus Missionaries of the American Board. Mrs. McCann survives her husband.

Mr. McCann was noted for his ability to judge men and also to adapt himself to Oriental life and to understand Chinese psychology. He established the business department of the North China Mission on a firm foundation and it was through his business ability that several splendid sites were secured for the American Board and other missions in Tientsin.

REV. ELEANOR WILSON AND THE MARSHALL ISLANDS.

Trim and alert in his Navy uniform, Captain J. P. W. Vest, U.S.N., came to Boston international headquarters of the American Board one morning in May, to plead for more missionaries for the Marshall Islands, South Seas. Captain Vest was for two years governor of the Marshalls where, under a U. N. assignment, the United States is working out something new in the government of dependent peoples. If the non-profit making, non-exploiting, democratic plan that our Navy is seeking to set up in the Marshalls succeeds it may raise a standard for all other dependent peoples of Asia and Africa. Its success depends upon keeping the people united. How, then, does the Congregational Christian missionary fit into such a picture?

In 1852 the American Board sent pioneers to the Micronesian Islands. Between 1856 and 1948 it had sent six of "God's Little White Ships" (Morning Stars I to VI) to carry the missionaries and the people from island to island. Morning Star VI, a sailing vessel with Diesel engine, left Boston, June 1947.

Our missionaries built firm foundations. During 30 years under Germany, and another 30 under Japan, the Marshallese Christians remained loyal to their first real friends. When our Navy arrived in World War II, they found "America the most loved country in the world," as Captain Vest expressed it. The Protestant pastors of the Marshalls have been the leaders of the people since early days.

After World War II, we sent back one veteran missionary, Rev. Eleanor Wilson. Miss Wilson is the only Congregational missionary in the entire Marshalls. She is respected and loved, not alone by the people, but by the Navy personnel as well—and that is a real achievement. She administers, teaches, preaches, and counsels over a wide area. She has even studied some books on navigation and taken on the Morning Star VI as ad interim skipper. She has examined candidates for the ministry, baptized babies and performed marriage ceremonies. She flies in Navy planes, travels on trading ships and in outrigger canoes. Last year she prepared for printing Christian Endeavor topics for the year and mimeographed the Sunday school topics and teaching helps for each week.

When the food supply on Ron Ron was practically exhausted, she gave them all the food she had—and then prayed. The next day new supplies arrived. Last Easter She visited a little island 40 miles from Kwajelein for the first time. The people were joyful.

DISPLACED PERSONS SPONSORED BY BURLINGTON CHURCH.

The Social Action Committee of the First Christian Church presented a recommendation that this church sponsor a displaced persons family. This proposal was accepted by a vote of the church on May 7th.

Assurance papers were forwarded immediately for the family of Pawlo Kluczyk consisting of husband, wife, and one child.

Mr. Kluczyk (31) is a native of Poland and was forced into labor by the Germans when they overran Poland in the early years of the war. When peace finally came he was not allowed to return to his Polish home by the Russians. For five years he has lived in a D. P. Camp of the Western Zone in Germany doing railroad, construction, and other similar work. About two years ago he married Ingeborg, a German girl who is now 23 years of age. The Kluczyks have one son, Petro, 13 months.

In signing assurance papers the sponsors agree to pay transportation charges from the port of entry into the United States and to arrange job and housing opportunities.

The church groups are planning various occasions for the collection of clothing, kitchenware and furniture in addition to housing. Every effort will be made to resettle this family in their patron land in such a way that they may have a full chance of work, worship, and the pursuit of happiness in freedom and understanding.

BOOK REVIEW AND ICE CREAM SUPPER INTEREST VALLEY WOMEN.

The Women's Missionary Societies of three churches—Antioch, Linville and New Hope recently enjoyed a special meeting in the home of Mrs. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Virginia. All three churches were well represented, and the women also brought their husbands along.

A good song and prayer service opened the meeting. Mrs. E. J. Rohart wife of the pastor of these churches, gave a review of the mission study book Which Way Japan. She gave many highlights and fascinating stories about Japan and its people. She is a most interesting speaker.

After the program, everyone enjoyed the social hour. The women brought cookies (every woman brought a different kind—what a variety!). The men made the ice cream. One man brought a car full of folding chairs, and there was ice cream and chairs enough for many more than were present.

SUFFOLK WOMEN HOLD ANNUAL OUTING.

The annual outing of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church was held last Wednesday afternoon at Planter's Club at Driver. Rev. Duane Vore, pastor of the church, conducted vespers on the lawn using as his theme, "Will- ingness to Serve."

Mrs. M. F. Hall, president of the society, opened a brief business meeting with meditations and prayer. Plans were formulated to serve suppers to the Youth Fellowship during the month of September. Mrs. J. C. Webb was appointed chairman of the program committee. Assisting Mrs. Webb will be Mrs. Philip Hill and Miss Virginia Reidick. This committee will plan the work for next year. Year books will be presented at the September meeting, this meeting to be in the form of a cover dish supper held at the church.

Mrs. Hubert Young reported on the Elon School of Missions which she attended as delegate at Elon College in June.

At the conclusion of the business meeting, dinner was served in the dining hall of the clubhouse with Mrs. Marvin Whitley acting as toast-mistress. Mrs. Whitley presented Miss Shirley Richardson in several piano selections.

There were 60 members and guests present.

REIDSVILLE WOMEN.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Reidsville Church was shuffled at the beginning of our conference year. From the four circles, eight were made, with an average of thirteen members per circle. This change has given a greater opportunity for closer fellowship. The first half of the year it has been our aim to meet our conference apportionment. The latter half our aim is to be of aid to our church.

At the third quarterly meeting, a candle light service was held for two of our members: Mrs. Carrie Fields and Mrs. D. H. Haizlep. Mrs. Fields passed away in May. She had been our president for many years. Her consecrated life has been an inspiration to the auxiliary.

The Friendly Service gifts were dedicated by the captains of the circles.

Mrs. Gerringer, our vice-president, was unanimously elected president.

During the fellowship hour, we enjoyed a "swap" supper. Two identical numbers were made. Then each member drew a number, and so found her eating partner. Each member brought two refreshments alike, and swapped with her partner.

Our first project was to aid our newly organized scout troop in purchasing equipment, such as tents, flags, etc. The next proposal is to modernize our parsonage kitchen.

MRS. CHARLIE MCKINNEY,
Secretary.

FAMILY FILM STRIP TO BE AVAILABLE.

"A Family Affair," film strip, records and script, has just been purchased by the women of the Convention. It may be borrowed by any group, and the only charge is for postage, either back to the Convention office, or on to the next place desiring the use of it. It concerns the everyday living of a family, from grandma to grandchild, and offers sensible solutions to family problems. It is good for most any age group in the church except the children.

MISCELLANEA.

"Don't be afraid of the radical," said Dr. F. D. Wentzel at the School of Missions, "but use it, and be glad for it."

"God will either change us or change circumstances, when we pray. The thing we ask for may not happen, but He will prepare our minds to meet the situation," stated Dr. E. T. Thompson.

Instead of having a regular meeting during the month of August, the Winston-Salem women are planning a lawn supper on the regular meeting night—the first Friday. Money received from this project will help to boost the special fund of the Woman's Association. This special fund is used to help pay for things which the church needs and cannot pay for otherwise. Recently the women have helped to renovate the pastor's study.

Our parsonage in Carroll County, Virginia, is being renovated and made more livable. They need several large articles of furniture, as well as fixtures for the bathroom and kitchen. Maybe your woman's organization could give some help along this line, and help make our parsonage better and more convenient for the minister and his wife. Since the people are willing and anxious to do the work, we should encourage them by helping supply the money needed for these improvements.

However strongly others may testify as to the existence of God, each of us must find him in his own experience. Otherwise the historical record of previous revelations will fall upon a skeptical mind. MISS ANN TRUITT, Associate

MAX VESTAL WRITES FROM CAMPO DI AGAPE.

Prazi di Perrero,
Turino, Italy,
July 5, 1950.

Dear Friends:

It has only been a week since I last wrote you. So much has happened, however, that it seems much longer. I don't know where to start. Perhaps the best place is Le Havre. We arrived at Le Havre at 4:30 a. m., June 29. The fog prevented us from docking until about three in the afternoon. When we did dock, the sun was shining brightly. There were landing barges shot to pieces on the beach. There were also many bombed out buildings. It's hard to realize that it was our bombs that did the damage. The town is rebuilding very fast. The railroad station is the most beautiful I have ever seen. We bought some orange juice there, which must have been made from the peelings.

Paris was our destination for the night, and we arrived there at 9:00 p. m. We were met at the station by a Mr. Sievers, who took us up to a tent camp near Napoleon's tomb. We had eaten on the train. This was possible because of the food we took from the good ship Samaria. We had cold showers, slept a little, and had breakfast for 145 francs. That is about 50c. Then we were off to Paris. The first place of interest was the American Express, where we cashed checks and bought maps, etc. There is drinking water there. This is rather rare in Europe. That is not true, of course, of Agape, which has acqua fresca from the mountains. We were also able to get ice cream and "cokes" in Paris. Our brief glances then fell on the Cathedral of Notre Dame, Sans Chapelle, St. Etienne, the Louvre, and many other spots of interest, including the Eiffel Tower. We walked and rode the "Metro" (Parisian subway) until all of us were exhausted. Then we caught a train to Bicoris.

Because we were so tired of walking, we decided to hire four taxis to take our baggage to the station. Half a dozen boys went with our baggage. The rest of us got on the train and went to Massey Polaiseau, where we were to change for Bievres. Our baggage and boys were not there. Two went back to look for them. These two got to Bievres at midnight. The rest of us sat and waited from 6:00 to 7:30. We were glad to see our baggage come in in time for us to catch the last train for Bievres. Every one came through the incident without loss of baggage. We learned the hard way to always keep our baggage with us, as we had been advised.

The ones left with our bags had been prevented from getting on the train, so they had loaded our packs on three cabs and had gone to another station. Here they were permitted to load our several tons of baggage. Ed Dowdy, the professor from Lafayette, was diligently searching for his pack until he found he had it on his back. This added a humorous note to the whole affair, because such is the typical behavior of all professors!

After all this trouble and waiting, Bievres was like heaven to us. We were met at the station by George Booth, who is head of all World Council work camps. He hauled our troublesome baggage to the house in a station wagon. This house, which was our home from Friday night till Monday morning, has a very interesting history. It was here that Louis XIV gathered his friends before going hunting. During World War II it was occupied by a German major. When he was forced to leave by circumstances beyond his control, he blasted part of the house. The Americans came then and used the beautiful chapel back of the house as a garage. The chapel has been repaired and most of the house. There is one room that has not been rebuilt.

We were greeted here with a good supper and a good night's sleep. Saturday was spent in discussion, which was led by Mr. Hoffman, a Swede. He is an expert on conditions in Germany. In fact, he had just returned from a visit to the American zone. I might mention, too, that he is a good volley-ball player. He played a couple of hours late Saturday evening.

Sunday was a very pleasant day for us. We had a church service in the morning and more discussion in the evening. Collene Townsend, the movie actress who gave up her job to do religious work, was at Bievres when we were there. She is working in a camp near Paris. "Coke," as she was called, seemed very nice and sincere.

We went to Versailles for a show. This was a most magnificent display of fireworks, fountains and classical dances. The beauty defies description. Even the rain that soaked us couldn't dampen our spirits. Singing folk songs, the 45 of us returned to Bievres.

Monday morning we left Bievres and spent a rather uneventful day in Paris. At 8:45 p. m., we took the train for Turino, Italy. Because of the hard work and many hours of talking of Carl Merryman, this long trip cost us only $5.15 per person. We rode all night, with very little sleep. We arrived at Turino at 11:30. Three of us brought cheese, bread, oranges and tomatoes, about enough lunch for everyone. We had "cokes" and icecream with our lunch. This will probably last us for a while.

Before I stop, I want to tell you I've reached Agape. A more thrilling bus ride you'll find nowhere. We wound up a very narrow road with great drops over the side. Chances are we won't make the trip very often. It is, however, well worth the risk. Agape is in a valley that is nearly a mile high. There are mountains on every side that tower two or three thousand additional feet. They are snowcapped and are often crowned by clouds. A more beautiful place is a product of imagination. The buildings of Agape are very beautiful.

I'll stop now and leave details of the camp for later. I will say that I am impressed with the spirit of friendliness and godliness that hangs over Agape. It is something I may not be able to explain in words. I'll try at a later date.

Yours,
MAX VESTAL.

WESTERN N. C. Y. P. TO MEET.

The Western North Carolina Youth Fellowship rally will be held at Ether Christian Church on Sunday, July 30, 1950.

The rally will begin at 3:30 in the afternoon and continue through the evening. Each person or group is asked to bring a picnic supper. The drinks will be furnished by the Ether young people.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

DEAR GIRLS AND BOYS:

I like to see a good movie. Don't you? Sometimes I see one at church school. As I think about movies I sometimes think that one is pretty good, but could be better. I saw one while attending the General Council at Cleveland that I thought was perfect. Let me tell you about it.

It was the story, or the parable, of "The Lost Sheep," you know, that wonderful story of the love and care that Jesus told. The actors were realistically carved and painted marionettes. The lambs were fashioned of white fur and moved with spry steps and springs. Jesus, the main character, looked happy, friendly and strong. There was a fruit vendor surrounded with the most luscious looking fruits.

Their costumes were very pretty and bright. The film is in technicolor. The music and sound seemed just right for this production. It was not too long either, and I think anyone from the age of six through 60 would enjoy it.

Have you ever seen marionettes operated? They are the ones controlled by strings and cross sticks. Puppets are worked by the fingers or hands. These little dolls were manipulated in fine fashion and moved ever so realistically. If you have never given a marionette show, I think this would inspire you to want to do one.

If you would like to see this movie, tell your teacher or minister about it. It was filmed by the Protestant Radio Commission and is available through them.

POLICEMEN ARE ROBIN'S FRIENDS.

By HARRIET C. ANDERSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

A small boy of about five attracted my attention as I stood near the door of the crowded Youth Building on the Fair grounds. As I watched him, it became very evident to me that he was searching for someone; however, he appeared to be perfectly calm and composed.

He would squeeze his way in and out among the crowds, walk down the length of an aisle and stop and peer first this way and then that way. Then he would turn and start down stopping at the corner and looking earnestly among the crowds.

Ever interested in children and their problems, I watched him. His expression was one of intense concentration, but there was no sign of fear or confusion on the sweet child-face.

When he came near the door where I was standing, I smiled at him and received an answering smile. I wondered why one so young was wandering about in such a crowd alone. He came to stand beside me, trying to get a view of the doorway through which people were crowding.

"Looking for someone?" I asked him. He turned his face up to me with an expression of complete trust and answered, "Yes'm, I'm looking for a policeman."

"A policeman?" I asked.

"Yes'm." He nodded his curly head. I lost Mommey, so I'm looking for a policeman to find my mommey for me."

I took over from there. With his small hand in mine we made our way to the First Aid Station, which was located in a large tent.

I had not expected to find his "Mommey" at the station, but there she was; and the little fellow took it as a matter of course. What surprised me most was to see the mother so perfectly calm and confident. She told us she knew that Robin was safe and that he would remember just what to do. She expressed her gratitude to me for having helped Robin find his way to the First Aid tent, to which she had come to ask the help of an officer in locating her young son.

I spoke to her of my interest in the small Robin's calmness when lost, and she kindly gave me the reason for his attitude. The explanation seems to me to be worthy of repetition.

"One of the first lessons we taught Robin," the mother said, "was to consider a policeman a real friend and one in whom he could place confidence. So, I knew that when we had become separated Robin would instinctively do the thing he has always been taught he should do in just such a situation—look for his friend, the policeman."

Several policemen and other Fair officers who were there in the tent had been very much impressed by this extremely wise action on the part of so young a child. When they had heard the mother's explanation, one policeman said to Robin's mother, "Lady, my years on the police force would have been much easier ones had there been more mothers like you. Many youngsters are taught to fear or hate a 'cop' and that makes it difficult for us to help them sometimes."

Robin called a cherry "Bye!" to all of us as he left the First Aid tent with his mother. We all felt happier for having met these two.

One of Robin's first lessons in human relationships had been to look upon law-enforcing officers as friends of the people and to express gratitude for them. Fortunate is the child who learns, early, lessons like this which will help him to become a good citizen.

MARX VS. CHRIST.

Communism, Socialism, Nazism, and Fascism are fundamentally the same. Karl Marx, a clever, wicked infidel, continues to corrupt the minds of individuals who prefer his teachings to those of Christ.

There can be no ism without a dictator. With a dictator, all personal rights vanish. The individual becomes a cog in a vast machine, the sole aim of which is to destroy the individual initiative and rights of human beings.

When Christ was offered bread in exchange for his mission, he issued a clarion call to all humanity, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." American democracy is not perfect. However, no better form of government has ever been devised by any group of men. Under our American democracy, America has become the admiration and envy of the world.

Free enterprise, individual initiative, and the gifts of the Creator in the physical resources of America have given us a standard of living undreamed of in 1776. Christ himself approved personal ownership of property, individual initiative, and private enterprise. He was supported, during his lifetime on earth so far as his physical needs were concerned, by these things. Wherever Communism, Nazism, and the other isms have been tried, they have left a record of murder devastation, slaughter and indescribable suffering. Isms have filled the world with exiles and have been made human life of less value than a chattel.—David Hogg, The Protestant Voice.

Sunday School Lesson

ELIJAH, A COURAGEOUS PROPHET.

(TEMPERANCE LESSON.)

LESSON VI—AUGUST 6, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: How long go ye limping between two sides? If the Lord be God, follow him.—I Kings 18:21.

LESSON: I Kings 18:30-39.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 27.

I have just finished reading the story of Elijah's life as recorded in the Scriptures. It embraces only a few chapters; but it makes interesting reading. As one reads it he feels like saying with Elisha that he would like to have a double portion of the spirit of this man of God. One feels that he would like to have more of the moral and spiritual courage of this wiry and fiery prophet in his witness, his worship, and his warfare against evil. The loyalty and devotion of many of us is a weak and watery thing as compared with the spirit, the vigor and zeal of this preacher and prophet.

We know little about the man's background or his early life. Without any fanfare he appears on the scene with the following introduction: "And Elijah the Tishbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead. . ." He was a native of Tishbe, and he came from Gilead, a rough and rugged section of the country that was mostly desert. Later in the narrative we are told that "he was a hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his lions." (II Kings 1:8.) He was probably lean and lanky, tanned and tough, thoughtful and temperate. He was of the type of Amos and John the Baptist. He was fearless, uncomoromising, and dangerous to any enemy. He had a zeal for Jehovah, a love for his people, and a high sense of duty.

There was nothing luke-warm about Elijah. He was a man of fire. When he proposed a test between Baal and Jehovah, it was to be a test by fire. And when he left the earth, he went away in a chariot of fire. Fire burned within him. He had zeal and enthusiasm. He was a burning and a shining light. And he shone because he burned, as is always the case.

One of the most dramatic incidents in Elijah's life—and he was always doing the dramatic—was his contest with the prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel. He had no stomach for half-heartedness, for indecision, for being first on one side and then on another side of a moral and religious issue. Accordingly he challenged the people, and the prophets of Baal, to a practical test as to the relative values of the respective religions; and he summoned the people to give allegiance to the religion that proved its superiority. He gave the religion of Baal and its devotees great odds. He allowed them to have first "bat" and gave them unlimited time to demonstrate the power of their god. When it came his turn "at bat" he soaked the altar and the space around it with water so that there could be no charge of trickery against him. There he stood, one man against four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal, staking his very life upon the ability and the willingness of Jehovah to send fire upon the evening sacrifices. He stands in sharp contrast to the prophets or priests of Baal: they chant and shout wildly, and cut themselves with knives in a vain endeavor to get help from their god; while Elijah calmly and quietly calls upon Jehovah, confident in His power to meet the test. And meet it Jehovah does. Fire fell, consuming not only the sacrifice, but the altar itself. It was more than a physical miracle; it was a demonstration of the struggle between decency and immorality, between monotheism and idolatry, between personal conscience and kingly tyranny, between nationalism and foreign influence, and of the superiority of the worship of God over all other forms of worship.

It might be said in passing that this issue on Mt. Carmel has its counterpart in a way, in the struggle today—world-wide between Christianity and Communism. To be sure Communism is not, strictly speaking, a religion, in fact it is atheistic and naturalistic. But for millions it represents a way of life, and the powers that be are trying to make it appear that it is the best way of life. It stands opposed to Christianity, and is a menace to Christianity. It cannot be defeated by military might. The issue between Christianity and Communism ultimately is to be settled only as Christianity demonstrates in a practical way that its philosophy and its way of life is actually superior to Communism. One of the weakness and the dangers of the Christian movement is the fact that there are all too many of us who are "halting between two opinions," who do not have any zeal for God and who do not bear our witness to our love and loyalty to Him in any measurable way. If the Christian Church had the zeal and the passion that Communism has it would be a different story. Now is the time for all good church members to come to the aid of the Church.

One of the dominant qualities of Elijah's character was his sheer moral and spiritual courage. He was not afraid of a king, nor was he afraid of four hundred and fifty priests of Baal. He was willing to stand alone, if need be, anywhere, and any time. Inasmuch as this is a Temperance Lesson it can well be said that there is great need today for something of the spirit of this prophet on the part of both young and old. There are many of both who need the courage to say "No" to invitations to drink alcoholic beverages. There are a number of young women who need moral backbone enough to refuse to smoke a cigarette. But more. All of us need courage to espouse the cause of brotherhood in actual practice, to oppose segregation of races, to stand for the rights of minority groups, racial and religious and economic, courage to bear witness to our faith in Christ and our loyalty to the Church of Christ. Ministers need a double portion of the spirit of Elijah's courage. It is so easy to preach what people like to hear; it is quite difficult to preach what people need to hear.

One wonders what Elijah would have to say to many members of the Church today whose loyalty and zeal to God and the Church find such little expression. In countless numbers of church members' lives the Church of Christ and His cause get little if any loyalty as expressed at services of worship, in giving to Kingdom enterprises, or in service for and in the Church. One suspects that the great enemy of the Church today is not antagonism but indifference, not bad-heartedness but half-heartedness. When the Holy Spirit came on Pentecost it appeared as cloven tongues of fire. We need more fire in religion.

realization. A chasm opens between him and his world. But primitive man moves beyond this first sense of terror with a second reaction, the sudden feeling that he is not alone in this situation. There is an Other Mind involved with him. Thus he attributes human qualities to nature, and religion is born in the form of animism or spiritism. We must not allow the primitive character of this reaction to obscure the basic religious element involved, because our own spiritual quest is but a more sophisticated development of the same.

Man feels his own helplessness and at the same time acknowledges the power and abundance of another mind in this situation. Man expresses this dual recognition in several forms: "I know not, but he knows." "I cannot; but he can." "I am unworthy; but he is worthy." William Ernest Hoeking makes of this situation an adaptation of the ontological argument for the existence of God. Who is this Other Mind? It is not another finite human mind because as yet in the social situation we have not learned to recognize any such. Therefore, the Other Mind must be God, who as the source of my idea can get me out of solipsism or isolation and become the ground from which I can move on to the recognition of other persons in the social context. My idea of Other Mind is thus an idea which must have objective reality in order to be the basis for all the experience which I later pursue with intelligence and meaning.

I am not as much concerned with this train of reason as a proof for the existence of God as I am with the point that this description of man's conscious finitude in the presence of an Infinite is the raw material of all our religious experience. When man has said, "I know not; but he knows," he has opened the way for science to explore the fields which become human knowledge. The original chasm between finite man and the vast unknown which terrorized him has now been bridged. Increasingly he can begin to trust and to overcome what at first was wholly alien. Man's original response of animism develops into religion, and his first attempts at control through magic are the forerunners of science. Both come from the same situation.

To me the Book of Psalms is perhaps the greatest single book of religion ever written, because it records in magnificent language those basic human reactions which are the raw material of religious experience. The primitive response of man to his universe which I have just described philosophically is given stately expression by the Psalmist. What else but this conscious finitude prompted the Eighth Psalm?

When I consider thy heavens,
The work of thy fingers,
The moon and the stars
Which thou hast ordained;
What is man that thou art
Mindful of him?
And the son of man, that Thou visitest him?

The Psalmist knew the problem of the temporal and the eternal, of the finite and the infinite; and he possessed the insight to declare that man is part of an orderly universe whose wise and good creator has made him but a little lower than the angels, so that there is fellowship between the two as "deep calleth unto deep."

The entire problem and its answer are set within the framework of the Ninetieth Psalm, which begins with that majestic affirmation of the reality of God: "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations." Behind the mountains and all nature stands the one abiding presence, who "from everlasting to everlasting" is God. The Psalmist reflects that, in contrast, a thousand years in man's reckoning are but as yesterday to this eternal reality, and that man is as frail as the grass which in the morning flourisheth and in the evening is cut down and withereth. Such a contrast could be the ground of utter despair, as it was originally for primitive man and still is today for multitudes of agnostics and cynics. But for the Psalmist the contrast is the setting for a deep religious faith. This eternal God looks upon the affairs of men. He can satisfy us with his mercy and make us glad in the very years in which we have seen evil. And on his part man can reach up to the perfection of the eternal, as he comes to number rather than waste his days, and to apply his heart unto wisdom. The crowning joy of this relation of the finite to the infinite finds utterance in the final prayer of this Psalm:

And let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us:
And establish thou the work of our hands
upon us;
Yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.

By the immanence of God we denote his presence or indwelling within the world. By his transcendence we mean his apartness from or elevation above the world. The question at hand is where we shall find the deity, in the world or above the world.

It is extremely interesting to note the historical development of this problem because theologians have alternated between immanence and transcendence in relation to the problem they had to solve. The early Church inherited the two strands of Platonic transcendence and Stoic immanence. Clement of Alexandria, for example, said that, as the Absolute, God is remote, but as the Logos he is present. The subsequent identification of the Logos with the Second Person of the Trinity narrowed the sphere of God's immanent activity to Christ so that the general Catholic doctrine came to deny the immanence of God in the world apart from the Church.

The Renaissance brought a new appreciation of nature and a glorification of the creature, which in many instances introduced a concept of immanence that came dangerously close to pantheism. The mysticism of Meister Eckhart and John Tauler is an illustration. They made religion to consist of losing oneself in God, though Tauler escaped pantheism by stressing the majesty of God and the meanness of the creature.

During the Reformation, the movement was back toward transcendence as John Calvin put the emphasis upon the will of God as something apart from man. The 17th and 18th century Deistic movement emphasized transcendence as physical science pushed God out of his universe. The 19th century Romanticists brought him back again, as Schliermacher identified religion with the feelings. He found the individual to be only a differentiation of the Infinite.

Paley's Natural Theology, in 1803, thought of the world as a watch, in which case God must be transcendent even as the watch-maker is outside his handiwork. But modern science has repudiated the once-and-for-all concept of creation for the evolutionary theory, the universe growing because of the interplay of forces long active. Thus God is considered to be at work in the processes that are unfolding, and to give spiritual meaning to them. These latest turns of thought bring us to the contemporary discussions in which some theologians identify God with Process and others describe him as a Person wholly other than the created world.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

DEAR FRIENDS:

There is plenty of corn, beans, potatoes, tomatoes, squash, blackberries, milk, butter and pork meat coming in from our farm right now. Messrs. Wagoner and Hilliard are doing an excellent job. I want you to know it, and show your appreciation in whatever ways you can. Vegetables come in spurts according to the seasons we have. Right now they are fairly plentiful. Tonight I ate supper in our large dining room, and I found hot biscuits—plenty of them, and as pretty as you could wish for—from wheat of our own raising, big dishes of corn and greenbeans cooked together, nice brown squash cooked deliciously in bacon gravy, salmon cakes, milk, butter and molasses. And what is more still bright faces were as sweet and bright as the fresh flowers on every table. No, they hadn't fixed up for me because they didn't know I was coming to supper with them until the last minute. I have matrons whose eternal vigilance is inspiring. Our farmer, Mr. Wagoner, and our dairyman, Mr. Hilliard are right on the job too. Rain is holding them off of fall garden planting, although the land is ready and the seed waiting to be put in. The rain is playing havoc with that big half of our wheat too.

Now that I have given you my gratitude for some of the goings on on here I wish to save a space to thank you, and to commend you. You haven't forgotten us. The record shows that. Thank you, and thank you. Seventeen churches this week and many friends have remembered us. Friends, Sunday schools and churches who help these little folks will not be any the poorer thereby. A good percentage of the money coming in is designated for special repairs, etc., so that we are greatly in need for funds with which to pay current bills. Sometimes I want to ask whether or not we couldn't give just a little more undesignated funds during the summer for current bills. This week a very lovely friend sent us a check and wrote, "use it where it is most needed." Such money can help on insurance, replacement of wornout machinery, salaries, coal bill, clothes, lights, laundry, our share in the local church, our share monthly on THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and other necessary items.

Two helpless children from Reidsville are knocking at our doors. Two others from the Eastern Virginia Conference have interested neighbors pleading for them. All these pleas are being made by Christian church people. There are others, but these four are most urgent. What must I do? I have consulted the budget. There's no room in it. But sometimes I wonder if the Lord consulted the budget before he helped the poor and needy. And I wonder if He consults the budget in his providence and blessings upon us. You can get along out there everywhere without us but we cannot get along here without you. We are dependent upon your goodwill, your interest, and your help. You see by the report I have causes sufficient to be most grateful.

HINGERTY.

WHEREAS, God has in His infinite wisdom and love seen fit to call to her reward our beloved sister and co-worker, Mrs. Maggie Johnson Hingerty, and we, as a church and individuals, desire to record our appreciation and sorrow in our loss;

Therefore, Be it Resolved:

1. That the Windsor Ladies Aid Society of the Windsor Christian Church, of which she was a member, has lost one for whom they mourn.

2. That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and earnest prayers that God's blessings may fall upon their sad hearts and give them comfort.

Mrs. J. C. ROBERTS,
GLADYSE JOYNER HOLLAND.

BURTON.

On Sunday, May 14 God saw fit to call to her reward, Miss Lilly Burton. The Wakefield Church, of which she was a member, has sustained a severe loss in her demise.

Through constant loyalty and a deep spiritual vision she endeared herself to the church and community and the niche she filled shall long remain vacant.

Miss Burton was 82 years of age and her entire life was lived in the immediate vicinity of Wakefield. She joined the church at a very early age and through her entire career gave unstintingly of her time and means.

We honor her memory and consecrated life.

Mrs. W. L. WOOD,
Mrs. WALTER SEELY.

IN LOVING MEMORY OF MY MOTHER.

Mrs. Mary Ella Harcum.

Who left me one year ago on July 17, 1950.

Through the valley of the shadows,
Down the road we all must tread,
One we loved has gone before us,
And now waits for us ahead.

May we meet this sorrow bravely,
Knowing on some distant day.
We will be again united
With the one who is away.

Her life was filled with kindness
Her heart was filled with love
Her memories linger ever near.
Though she has gone above.

Warm and tender, sincere and true,
Each day, dear mother, brings sweet memories of you.

Lonely daughter,
Mrs. J. W. TIDWELL.

JOHNSON.

On Easter Sunday morning April 9, 1950, Mrs. Clelia Watts Johnson passed to her eternal reward while teaching the Ladies Star Class of Bethlehem Church (Nans. County) of which she was a member. In her death we feel a deep sense of loss, yet are strengthened by the faith and hope that were hers. May God bless her memory to us all.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That our church has lost a devout member and her family a loving, thoughtful and mother. We extend to them our deepest sympathy.

2. That we honor her memory by carrying on the work so dear to her until that day when we shall know even as we are known.

Mrs. J. E. HARRIS,
Mrs. TOM POOLE,
Mrs. ANNIE R. SMITH.

CADDELL.

Dr. S. W. Caddell, a resident of Elon College for many years, passed away after a protracted illness on April 23, 1950, at the age of 90 years, 10 months and 7 days. The son of Stephen and Patience Caddell, Dr. Caddell was born in Moore County, North Carolina, June 16, 1859. He received his medical training at the University of Tennessee and was a practicing physician in Randolph and Alamance Counties for more than 50 years. Dr. Caddell was a life long member of the Christian Church, and was a faithful member of the Elon College Community Church.

Dr. Caddell is survived by his wife, Cora Siler Caddell; three daughters, Mrs. H. L. Scott, Mrs. K. K. Hughes, and Mrs. L. A. Simonson; four sons, James M., P. E., Dr. Fred S. and M. D.; one brother, L. V. Caddell, and thirteen grand children.

Funeral services were conducted from Whitley Memorial Chapel, Elon College, April 24, 1950, by Dr. Jesse H. Dollar and the writer. Interment was made at Alamance Memorial Park Cemetery.

WM. T. SCOTT.

JACKSON.

Rev. William Parkyn Jackson, pastor emeritus of the First Congregational Christian Church, Asheville, North Carolina, passed away at his home in Asheville on June 16. Mr. Jackson was 77 years of age and had retired from the Asheville pastorate in 1945, after five years of service there.

Mr. Jackson, a native of Canada, was ordained in the Congregational Christian Church in 1895. After serving a number of years in the Congregational Christian ministry, he became superintendent of a community club for young men and boys in St. Albans. During World War I he was called to represent the War and Navy Departments commission on training camp activities, and he was given charge of recreation outside of the camps at Fort Niagara, N. Y., New London, Conn., and Camp Dix, N. J. For more than 20 years following World War I, Mr. Jackson represented the National Recreation Association in various capacities until 1938, when he retired and came to Tryon to live.

When the First Congregational Christian Church of Asheville was without a pastor in 1939, Mr. Jackson consented to serve as a part-time pastor, and was then persuaded to come out of retirement, move to Asheville, and accept the pastorate of the church. He served most effectively and influenced a host of young people and adults toward a more wholesome life.

Mr. Jackson is survived by his widow, the former Miss Cora Mae Kenny of Madrid, New York.

Funeral services were conducted at 11 o'clock Sunday morning at the church where he had served, with the pastor, Dr. Earl R. Weed, officiating.

W. T. SCOTT.

IN MEMORIAM.

On January 20, 1950 at 6:30 p. m., God in His infinite wisdom saw fit to call from our midst Mrs. Cora Lassiter Hoffer, 87 years of age, who was a faithful and loyal member of Damascus Congregational Christian Church of Sunbury, North Carolina.

The influence of her smile, her ever ready word of cheer, her thoughtful solicitude of others and the love which dwelt in her heart have left an indelible imprint upon the memory of those who knew her.

Therefore, we, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of which "Grandmammy" as she was affectionately called, was a charter member and faithful worker, wish to express our grateful appreciation of her tireless efforts in behalf of the Kingdom of God and to emphasize our deep affection for her by adopting the following resolutions:

1. That we realize God doeth all things well. While we mourn the loss of one who has meant much to us, and others as well, we bow in humble submission to His divine will.

2. That we keep in lasting remembrance the high Christian standards and ideals of service, kindness, and unselfishness and joyfulness which were in her daily living.

3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to her family who ministered to her so faithfully during her illness and commend them to our Heavenly Father who said, "Let not your heart be troubled."

Mrs. L. E. MCOY,
Mrs. I. H. PEARCE,

HOLMES.

On May 19, 1950 Cecil C. Holmes passed from this earth at the age of 66. Cecil, as he was affectionately called, was not any worse than usual, so far as others knew; he had worked most all day, came into the store, sat down and without a struggle, his spirit went out to meet his Savior. He was a deacon of Pope's Chapel Christian Church and had filled that place for many years. In that relationship he was most loyal and devoted to every duty that came before him, as he was in serving in the church in any way. He was not a man of many words but his sincere Christian Character gave evidence to the position he took on all questions. His neighbors trusted his judgement in matters of business. The church looked upon him as a leader and feels so very keenly its loss. The prayer of the church now is that the Lord raise up another who will take his place.

We wish to express to his wife, Mrs. Myrtle Holmes, his brother Wesley Holmes, two sisters, Miss Corena Holmes and Mrs. B. T. Stretcher our sincere sympathy and best wishes.

To the church, we would commend his unquestionable devotion and loyalty and urge that we strive to emulate his Christian character to the best of our ability; that we realize that the Lord permitteth that which is best, and that we bow in humble submission to His divine will

The funeral was conducted at the church by the pastor, Rev. E. M. Carter assisted by Rev. S. E. Mercer. The interment was in the Church Cemetery.

THE GREAT SILENCE

The most disturbing thing in connection with the alcohol problem in this country, is that many of the responsible leaders are struck dumb, not to say petrified, with fear, whenever they come face-to-face with the problem.

How else can you explain the fact that they will discuss at great length, vital social, economic and political problems which are inextricably entwined with the problem of alcohol, and yet not mention whiskey, wine or beer, not even to the extent of a word?

Take the matter of safety on the highways: Approximately one-fourth of all the fatalities on the highways are due to drinking on the part of a driver or pedestrian, and yet we can name men in places of high responsibility who will discuss that problem on occasions of national importance and not even hint that they are aware that liquor is involved in any way or to any extent. The cold truth is that whiskey, wine and beer are responsible for about 8,000 deaths on the highways each year, and perhaps a quarter of a million injuries which should be described as "mutilations." Do these gentlemen know it? Apparently not!

The Federal Bureau of Investigation reports indicate a 32 per cent increase in crime since Repeal, and yet we doubt that there are a million people in this country who know this; untold numbers of them think that Repeal put an end to a terrible saturnalia of crime.

How many people are aware that there was a 266 per cent increase in the number of dependent families from 1932 to 1947?

How many of them know that there has been a 52 per cent increase in women sentenced to Federal prisons since National Prohibition passed from the scene?

How many American citizens are aware that there was an astounding 272 per cent increase in the number of dependent children from 1933 to 1947?

We can understand the wet politicians—the liquor traffic is contributing heavily to their campaigns; that explains that.

The fact remains that there has been a great deal of neglect in other quarters, or the people would be better informed as to a matter which constitutes a serious national weakness in a time of world emergency.

We are inclined to give the press a reasonably clean bill of health. It is still guilty of peccadilloes, of which it is very much aware, but there is no overlooking the fact that the reportorial treatment of what is going on in our great cities in connection with liquor, deserves a "B-plus," if not an "A." We doubt if the churches themselves, could demand an "A" with any justification.

We just call it "The Great Silence," and let it go at that. Maybe there is something cosmic about it; maybe the sun spots have something to do with it; it certainly cannot be satisfactorily explained by this Editor.

Dr. Weir is cooperating in this important and comprehensive study. His experience in the ecumenical field is invaluable for the proper understanding and interpretation of our total mission in the Southeast.

HOPEWELL HOLDS BIBLE SCHOOL.

Starting on Monday, July 24, and through the following Friday, the Hopewell Congregational Christian Church held a very successful Bible School, under the direction of Mr. William Tolley, a Christian education student of Elon College. Classes started each morning at 9 o'clock, and provision was made for groups of ages six to 16. Mr. Tolley spoke at the evening services on Sunday, July 23. Rev. Durant D. Nash is the pastor of the Hopewell Church.

POYTHRESS AT DAMASCUS HOMECOMING.

Homecoming Day at historic Damascus Christian Church, near Chapel Hill, had a special feature this year when a $10,000 stone wall was dedicated at the cemetery.

The special dedication sermon and picnic were held at the church, beginning at 11 a. m. on Sunday, July 30.

The sermon was given by Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk, Va. Mr. Poythress is a native of Orange County, and it was as a member of this church that he decided to become a minister. The service was followed immediately by a picnic lunch, and that by the dedication ceremony and special music at 2 o'clock.

Two ministers have gone from this church, Mr. Poythress and Rev. Joseph E. McCauley.

HOPE MILLS HOLDS REVIVAL SERVICES.

Beginning on Sunday, July 30, and continuing through this week, Revival services are being held each night, including Saturday. The pastor, Dr. Robert Lee House, is preaching, and his subjects are: Sunday, "The Witness and His Testimony"; Monday, "Fishers of Men"; Tuesday, "The Conditions of God's Healing"; Wednesday, "Jesus' Theme Song"; Thursday, "The Master's Contemporary Call"; Friday, "Qualifying as Christians"; Saturday, "What about Your Soul?"

The Daily Vacation Bible School is being conducted each afternoon from 2 to 4 o'clock. The pastor is teaching music and Bible, and Mrs. House is teaching nature study and handwork. Teachers of the Sunday school are assisting.

CAROLINA VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Carolina Christian Church had a record breaking attendance for its summer Vacation Bible School, July 3-4. Both the enrollment and the average daily attendance were the highest in the history of the church. There were 86 enrolled, and the average attendance was 67.

Mr. William T. Tolley, Christian education student at Elon College, directed the school; and he was assisted by 11 teachers. Several of the teachers spent their entire vacation helping with the Bible school. The parents assisted by serving refreshments each day and fixing a picnic lunch on the last day.

The commencement was held with the church filled to capacity, and each child took a part in the program. Certificates and prizes for those having perfect attendance were given. The parents visited the classrooms where the work of the children was displayed.

The community people feel that Mr. Tolley did a fine job with the children and that the school was a great success.

BIBLE CLASS OF WINDSOR HOLD ANNUAL SUPPER.

The Ladies' Bible Class and the Men's Baracca Class of the Windsor Christian Church held their regular annual supper at the Lee Jordan club house on Monday night, July 24.

Among those attending were Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Holland, Mr. and Mrs. B. K. Johnson, Bruce Johnson, Jr., Dr. and Mrs. F. E. Steele, Mr. Lee Barrett, Mr. E. R. Laine, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Turner, Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Holland, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Holland, Mr. Clarence Holland, Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Gwaltney, Mr. J. W. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Joyner, Mrs. R. T. Turner and Mrs. J. M. Raby.

Others attending were Mrs. D. L. Godwin, Martha Lee and Frances Godwin, Miss Florence Watkins and Mrs. Cordelia Watkins of Norfolk, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gwaltney, Mrs. J. H. Gwaltney, Mrs. A. P. Beale, Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Alphin, Mr. and Mrs. John Alphin, Bob and Billy Alphin, Mrs. Hattie Griffin, Mrs. Hattie Filton, Miss Violet Griffin, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Griffin and Carolyn and Howard Griffin.

THE O'KELLY CEMETERY.

The James O'Kelly Cemetery is not to remain in its present condition. Treasurer Basnight informs me that contributions are coming in from Sunday schools and from individuals.

Since my last writing, it has been my pleasure to visit Ingram, Apple's Chapel and Hines Chapel. Pastors of these churches and the superintendents of the Sunday schools extended me every courtesy that could be desired. A liberal offering was made by each school.

It has been a real delight to visit nine of the Sunday schools of the N. C. & Va. Conference. It is with regret I cannot visit all the schools and make an appeal in person. The schools that have not made a contribution are being contacted by letter and asked to do so on the fourth Sunday in July or as near that time as it is convenient to do so.

Dr. W. T. Scott had the call presented at each of the Sunday School Conventions meeting in July and in this way we are hoping to get the appeal before each individual school.

The trustees of The O'Kelly Cemetery Foundation will have a meeting at an early date and if sufficient VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS.

The young people of the Elon College student body who have been assisting our churches with their Daily Vacation Bible Schools this summer are to be greatly commended. They have been most helpful in every instance, and in some cases the schools could not have been held without their cooperation. Reports from the schools have been most encouraging, and we are looking forward to even better results next summer.

TIMOTHY CHANG.

Timothy is attending the Summer Conferences in the various parts of the eastern part of the United States. He began his summer at Elon College for the Women's School of Missions, going from there to New York for two conferences. His remaining itinerary includes conferences in Michigan, Massachusetts, and Virginia. He will be returning to Duke Divinity School to continue his studies the latter part of September. We have received many fine tributes regarding Timothy and quote here one from Rev. Arthur K. Blane of the Medusa (N. Y.) Youth Conference:

"Faculty and students felt Timothy added real power to our Conference. His charming personality soon endeared him to all of us. Personally, I feel he pays a high tribute to the work of Christian Missions, in the fact that he is of the third generation who have come under the sway of the lowly Nazarene. His life is a grand witness to his Lord. Thanks again for having a part in making it possible for Timothy to be with us."

TRIPPLE ORDINATION SERVICE.

A service of unusual interest took place at Palm Street Congregational Christian Church on Sunday evening, July 23rd in which three young men were ordained for the Christian ministry. They were: James R. Hailey, formerly of Leaksville, now Elon College, pastor of Mebane and Damascus Churches; John R. Lackey of Greensboro, pastor of Apple's Chapel Church; and Carl E. Wallace, formerly of Greensboro and now of Franklinton, N. C., where he is serving as pastor of the Franklinton Parish. These young men graduated from Elon College this year and will assume pastoral duties of churches in connection with their seminary training.

The ordination service was under the authority of the North Carolina-Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches. Dr. Wm. T.

REV. JAMES R. HAILEY is pastor of Mebane and Damascus churches. He is serving also as field secretary for Elon College during the summer.

Scott, Elon College, Superintendent of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, presided and Dr. W. E. Wiseman, pastor of the First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C. and Chairman of the Committee on Ministry of the Conference, delivered the sermon. Assisting them as members of the Ordaining Prebytery were Dr. D. J. Bowden, Elon College; Rev. Thurman F. Bowers, Greensboro; and Rev. Mack V. Welch, pastor of the Palm Street Church, Greensboro.

The Significance of a Missionary Career

The retirement of missionaries is an event which should give pause for reflection. Consider the initial decision to give one's life to work on the mission field. What must have been the antecedent influences which led to this momentous and destiny-shaping decision? Visualize a life spent on the mission field; the deprivations cheerfully borne, the sacrifices freely made, the victories heroically won. Strange as it may seem, we live in a world where some people still take Christ seriously and bet their lives on God. The influence of such lives is multiplied and made permanent in the lives of countless others.

Back of every missionary career some sponsoring and sustaining agency must stand. Think of it, since 1810, there has been an American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Through the years this great board has not only commissioned missionaries, it has supported them with unflagging zeal. Today, it continues its persistent activity in our Christian World Mission.

Here is the news that two beloved missionary families known to many of our readers, have served their generation and now reached the age of retirement.

THE CHRISTIANS

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard J. Christian of Claremont, California, Congregational Christian missionaries, have just been retired by the American Board, with a vote of deep gratitude for their devoted service of forty years in its Foochow Mission, where they did educational and evangelistic work and where Mrs. Christian was for several years treasurer of the Foochow and Shaowu missions.

Leonard Christian enlisted at a youthful age in the United States Army, and saw active service in the Spanish-American War, also serving in the Philippine Islands, Cuba and Hawaii. After a severe bout of typhus, he was given an honorable discharge, but returned to the Army as a nurse. During the Boxer Rebellion in 1900, he was a young guard at the American Legation in Peking.

A lay missionary, Mr. Christian did general educational and church work as well as much relief service. He was in Foochow during the Japanese air raids in World War II.

Mr. Christian was born in Albany, New York, and educated at Oberlin College.

Mrs. Christian was born in Chicago, and was educated at Wheaton and Oberlin Colleges. She first went to China in 1909, as Agnes Meebold, and three years later was married in Foochow to Leonard Christian. Supervising Christian schools was one of her many jobs as well as the important post of treasurer of the American Board Foochow and Shaowu missions, which entailed handling foreign currency in a scrambled money market. Her sister, Miss Louise Meebold, is still in China.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Christian have lived in China through periods of civil war, international war, invasion, occupation, famine and flood.

THE CHANDLERS

Rev. and Mrs. Robert E. Chandler of Auburndale, Mass., for 39 years missionaries under the American Board in China, were recently retired with an official vote expressing deep gratitude of their consecrated service. Thirty years of this period was spent in North China, two years in South China, and seven and one-half years in Boston, while Mr. Chandler was acting secretary for China and later candidate secretary.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Chandler have an unusual international background. He was born in Batlagundu, India, of missionary parents, and his genealogy runs back over 117 years of missionary service. Mrs. Chandler, the former Helen Davis, was born in Kyoto, Japan, the daughter of pioneer American Board missionaries who helped to found the first Christian university in Japan.

In China, Mr. Chandler did educational and church work in Tientsin, North China, and surrounding villages. He developed schools for Chinese Christian lay workers and sent them out to be local Christian leaders. For five years he held the important post of general secretary of the North China Kung Li Hui (the Chinese Congregational Churches) and was a member of the National Christian Council of China four years.

In 1938, Mr. Chandler was called to Boston for secretarial service; but in 1946, he and Mrs. Chandler accepted a special two-year assignment in the Fukien Province of China with their headquarters in Foochow. There they acted as senior advisers to the Chinese churches as well as to the new young American missionaries.

Mrs. Chandler, following the Great Famine of 1920-21, founded and directed a remarkable piece of work called the Hsiku Women's Industry in Tientsin, an economic venture to meet the needs of hundreds of destitute Chinese women and girls. While in Foochow she aided in writing the script and acted as adviser to the filming of the beautiful American Board colored movie, "Letter from China."

Both Mr. and Mrs. Chandler have seen China in fair and foul weather. They were there at the beginning of the Sino-Japanese War, and saw their Chinese friends living with steady dignity under the "enemy occupation." At this time Mr. Chandler traveled among anti-British and anti-Chinese barricades put up by the Japanese military and in an atmosphere of constant sporadic guerrilla warfare. The Chandlers also did relief work in several periods of famine and flood, including one of the worst floods China has known.

The Chandlers have been for over 35 years the missionary representatives in China of the First Congregational Church of Cambridge, Mass., Dr. John H. Leamon, minister. With their retirement, the new representatives of the Cambridge Church will be the Rev. and Mrs. Gordon Earl Dalbeck, who sailed for Japan on July 13.

judices. While our feelings may incline us Godward, they must continually be brought to judgment before the exalted majesty of a Transcendent God whose standards are high above our own.

The great spiritual leaders have always proclaimed this message. The argument that religious sentiments are only the projection of man's wishful thinking is dramatically answered by the historic record. All true religion has declared that God demands of his children ethical attainments that are far above their actual practices. The "Thus saith the Lord" of prophetic religion is no more projection of human sentimentality, but the rigorous challenge of one whose righteousness is higher than man's as the heavens are high above the earth.

When the Psalmist lifted up his eyes unto the hills, and knew that his strength came from the Lord who made the heavens and the earth, he was worshipping a God who though hear his people was nonetheless high above them. The Psalmist was thinking of the same Lord whom the young Isaiah encountered in the temple, the Lord who is high and lifted up, whom the whole earth may glorify but who must also be conceived in such transcendent terms that he can only be approached with the words, "Holy, Holy, Holy." By the holiness of God we mean this fulness this perfection, this majesty which are beyond comprehension.

God is so great that we must affirm both his immanence and his transcendence.

This has important implications for the problem of worship, for in that essential replenishment of the human spirit both these aspects of God's nature are involved. I was born into a good Congregational home and early learned from my mother that a person can pray while doing the housework or occupational routine. The God who is all about us is ever-present in every time of need. I am obliged to agree with the golfer who tells me that he can worship God as well on the golf course as in the sanctuary. I am obliged to agree that of course he can, but I am likewise compelled to add that I nonetheless doubt that he does! Mere nature worship too easily degenerates into pleasantly comforting thoughts that serve to bolster the individual in his own selfishness and pride. True worship not only comforts a person by releasing infinite resources to flow through his finitude, but it also stimulates the hu-

Of course, God is in his world. We Congregationalist have long accepted the liberalism which finds a congeniality between the beauties of nature and the idealism of human spirit. Horace Bushnell as a boy wandered over the lovely hills of Litchfield County and witnessed the spirituality of a devout mother. From these experiences he came to teach that every youth should feel himself a child of God rather than an alien creature to be redeemed before a sovereign potentate. In our summer conference today we have lakeside chapels and candlelight communions to sharpen the sensitivity of young people to the God who is all about them. We subscribe to the insight of the Oxyrhynchus papyri: "Raise the stone, and there thou shalt find me; cleave the wood and there am I." Like Wordsworth, we have felt

A presence that disturbs us with the joy
Of elevated thoughts; a sense sublime,
Of something far more deeply interfused,
Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns,
And the round ocean and the living air,
And the blue sky, and in the mind of man;
A motion and a spirit, that impels
All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things.

We also believe that God is within people, and that the picturesque story of Genesis in which the Creator breathed into man the breath of life is another way of saying that God has planted something of himself in every human soul. We thus admire our Quaker friends as they look for "that of God" in one another, and we appreciate the "reverence for life" which Albert Schweitzer has taught. We are interested in the movement to develop a sense of Christian "vocation," so that every individual in his daily vocational life can feel himself a co-worker with the divine.

We thus affirm that religion is one of the elements of human experience, and that God is to be found as an active presence within his world. We reaffirm these aspects of immanence in the face of some neo-orthodox claims that God is wholly other and unknowable in his world. If, however, we support an unchecked doctrine of immanence we encounter serious difficulties intellectually as well as become untrue to the full meaning of our experience. The doctrine of God's immanence is in danger of becoming pure pantheism, wherein God and nature become so indented that the deity is no more than the sum of all parts of the world. Much neo-orthodoxy is a protest against this sentimental indentification of which liberalism has too frequently been guilty. Someone has pointedly said that the liberal mixes himself up with the landscapes and calls it religion! Even though God may first be known through the intimations we have in our daily experience, we must go on to affirm that much of the content of God's will is to be recognized as transcending human judgment. All that we behold of God in nature is in truth but the outskirts of his ways, and but a whisper of his magnitude.

Rudolph Otto and the Barthians tell us that when we confront God we are confronting the "Holy Other" who in no manner can be reduced to the human level. Isaiah expressed the gulf between the piteous errors of man and the majestic holiness of the divine.

Let the wicked forsake his way,
And the unrighteous man his thoughts;
And let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him;
And to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.
For my thoughts are not your thoughts,
Neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord.
For as the heavens are higher than the earth,
So are my ways higher than your ways,
And my thoughts than your thoughts.

We need to keep this contrast in mind, lest we find in God merely a cosmic prop to support us in our pre-man side of his nature to aspire beyond itself toward the perfection seen in Godhead. When the 17th century Quaker Isaac Penington advised a friend to "Take up from Christ's nature what is contrary to thine own," he was recognizing a transcendent element rarely considered on the golf course.

When we come into the sanctuary on a Sunday morning are we not conscious of the Almighty in both his immanent and transcendent aspects? We come out of the background of another week, bringing with us our anxieties, our disappointments and our frustrations, as well as our joys and triumphs. We come knowing that God has walked with us through every step of that week. He has been with us in our work and in our play, in our homes and in our offices. But we have found the pressure of life to dim some of our perception, to dull some of our enthusiasm, and to drain some of the zest of living. The week has also been the occasion for our stumbling. We have again fallen short of our best, if we have openly sinned. And so we come on Sunday morning into the house of the Lord where we may be still after the week's distractions and once again behold him who can give power to the fainting and strength to them that have no might.

The modern minister in conducting that worship brings the world and the besetting problems of daily experience into the service so that the church is never an island cut off from life's ebb and flow. In keeping with the immanence of its Lord, the church is active in the world in which it finds itself. And yet the very reason we come to worship is that we may meditate quietly in the presence of the Eternal God who is above the world. Before him we confess our sins, acknowledge our dependence, give our thanks for his blessings, and pray for his guidance. We ask for a renewed vision of the whole-idea that of an inner necessity diminishes as we use it in our routine. We thus move out from the self-centeredness which would make of God an adjunct of ourselves, to that God-centeredness by which we become instruments of him. We listen to the proclamation of the Divine Word as it is read from Holy Scripture. We hear the exposition of that Word as its truth is set forth in the sermon. What we thus get in church we cannot possibly get on the golf course is an experience of a transcendent God who gives us a message, a commission and a power we do not find in our hearts or among the trees.

If we are to comprehend the full breadth of God's dealings with us, we must acknowledge both his immanence and his transcendence. The words of Frederick L. Hosmer suggest this paradox:

O Thou, in all thy might so far,
In all thy love so near,
Beyond the range of sun or star,
And yet beside us here.

II. HIS UNIVERSALISM AND HIS PARTICULARISM.

The second of the major paradoxes of God deals with his universalism and his particularism. God, to be God at all, must be a universal deity. He is not to be confined to any period in time or any point in space. His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and his dominion extends to the ends of the earth. Yet every religion is particular, beginning at a precise moment in history and usually addressed itself to people in a localized area. We say that God himself is one, but we are confronted with a multiplicity of religions which seek to bring man into relation with the deity. What relative emphasis will we give the universality of God and the claims of our particular faith?

This is a real problem which faces us as we plan our evangelistic program. Shall we win men to Christ as the only way to God? Is the any salvation outside the Christian faith? The answer of Christian orthodoxy has been quite clear. It has accepted the dictum of Cyrpian, Bishop of Carthage, "salus extra ecclesiam non est." The fourth chapter of the Book of Acts records Peter as having preached that "There is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Jesus himself in the familiar words of John 14 said: "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me" At the funeral service of every good church member I repeat the first half of that statement, but I confess that I cannot bring myself to speak the second half. It seems to me that the spirit of Jesus was on the side of universalism rather than exclusivism. When the Samaritan woman, confused by the claims of rival sects, asked our Lord the proper place to worship, he gave a reply which to me is of the essence of true religion: "Woman, believe me, the hour cometh when ye shall neither in this mountain nor yet at Jerusalem worship the Father. But the hour cometh and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth." (John 5:21, 23.)

At the International Congregational Council at Wellesley last summer my good friend, Truman B. Douglass, gave a brilliant address in which he took a position with which I find myself in disagreement. He pointed out that the modern age desires the abstract and the general. It is looking for synthesis. The Word of God which the church must proclaim is repellent to our contemporaries because it begins with "the scandal of particularity." To a society that wants universal blendings, Christians dare affirm stubborn and concrete particulars—One book, the Bible; one people, the chosen medium for disclosing God's will; one atoning act; one community of redemption. In a similar vein I have heard Reinhold Niebuhr speak disparagingly of the study of comparative religions because God has given the complete revelation of himself in Jesus Christ.

Dr. Douglass and Dr. Niebuhr have given expression to the mood in modern theology to reaffirm the uniqueness of Christianity by stressing the priority and all-sufficiency of its particularity. Though there are wholesome corrective values in such a mood, I believe that it does violence to the contrasting universality of God. And I consider such neo-orthodoxy to be denial of the distinctive witness of tolerance that has been characteristic of Congregationalism in the past half century. We have a liberal fellowship to welcome those worshippers who have been repelled by the exclusivism of other denominations. In our church in Minneapolis we have enough renovated Lutherans to organize a good Scandinavian parish! The situation in which many of you are located must be similar. We are surrounded by Lutherans, Roman Catholics, and Fundamentalists. Minneapolis is the headquarters both of the Youth for Christ movement and of Evangelist Billy Graham. In the midst of those who claim they have the only way to God, the pulpit of Plymouth Church can lift up the Lord Jesus Christ while at the same time appreciating the insights of those who in all earnestness prefer to approach the Almighty by other paths.

The Eternal holds before everyone of us the opportunity to share in a vital experience. We can accept that opportunity only as we rise above the creeds and dogmas by which we shut

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

THE CONFERENCE COMMITTEES OF THE ELON COLLEGE SUSTAINING FUND MEET.

During the past week, Superintendent William T. Scott, Dr. L. E. Smith and Dr. W. M. Brown traveled to each of the five conferences of the Southern Convention to meet with the Sustaining Fund committees of these conferences. In four days, five committee meetings were held, at which the attendance was excellent and the interest in the Sustaining Fund was unanimously favorable.

On Monday, July 24, the Sustaining Fund Committee for the Western North Carolina Conference met at Asheville. Rev. Clyde L. Fields presided as temporary chairman and was made permanent chairman at this meeting. Mr. George T. Gunter was elected secretary.

On Tuesday afternoon, July 25, the committee for the Eastern North Carolina Conference met at Durham, with Dr. Robert Lee House presiding as temporary chairman. He was elected permanent chairman at this meeting, and Miss Margaret Allston was chosen secretary.

The same evening, the committee for the North Carolina-Virginia Conference held its initial meeting in Greensboro. Rev. W. J. Andes presided as temporary chairman. He and Mr. J. H. Rountree were elected co-chairmen, and Mrs. M. W. Andes was chosen secretary at this meeting.

On Wednesday, July 26, the committee for the Eastern Virginia Conference met at Suffolk, with Rev. Duane N. Vore presiding. Mr. Vore was elected permanent chairman and Miss Virginia Rebeck was made secretary of the committee.

On Thursday, July 27, the committee for the Valley of Virginia Conference held its initial meeting at Winchester with Mr. Roy A. Larrick presiding. He was elected permanent chairman and Rev. S. E. Madren was made permanent secretary of this committee.

At each of these meetings, the Sustaining Fund program was outlined by Dr. Smith, Dr. Scott and Dr. Brown. Many questions were asked and, we hope, answered satisfactorily. At each of these meetings, certain important decisions were reached, among which were the following:

1. Each of the Conference Committees voted to request the Executive Committee of its particular conference to constitute it as the official Sustaining Fund Committee for that conference. In the case of the Valley of Virginia Conference, this action has already been taken by the conference's Executive Committee. It is expected that similar action will be taken in the other four conferences in the very near future.

2. It was also voted to call a meeting of the ministers of each conference as soon as practicable to meet with the Sustaining Fund Committee for that conference for the purpose of discussing the Sustaining Fund in General, and providing for the appointment of a local Sustaining Fund Committee in each of the 195 churches of the Southern Convention as far as this may be practicable. According to present plans, these meetings will be held in August or early September.

3. It was also decided to request the local churches to observe "Sustaining Fund Sunday" on October 22, with the understanding that the decision rests with the local church as to whether this or some other date will be observed in this connection.

In consequence of a recent decision of the college administration, the following very important scholarship announcement was made to each of these Conference Sustaining Fund Committees and is now being publicized generally among the churches of the Southern Convention:

"A scholarship valued at $100 is offered to every church in the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches which reaches or surpasses its goal of not less than $1 per member for Elon, before the end of the Conference year of 1950-1951.

"This scholarship will be awarded to a young man or young woman, who is a bona fide member of the church winning it and who enrolls as a freshman resident student at Elon College not later than September 1, 1951. The usual college entrance requirements must be met in each instance, of course.

"There are no strings attached to this offer. The size of the church's membership and, consequently, the total amount of its contribution to the Sustaining Fund do not affect the scholarship as long as the above conditions are met. A certificate from the pastor or the chairman of the Board of Deacons, stating that the church's goal for the Sustaining Fund has been raised and giving the name and address of the scholarship recipient is all that is necessary to take advantage of this offer."

We feel very much encouraged at the prospects for the Sustaining Fund. We are confident that our people will respond enthusiastically to this appeal for undergirding our college so as to enable it to render even larger service in the future than it has in the past, to our Church, State and Nation.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

We have been taught all our lives, and have found by experience, that the church and her institutions must be supported. This privilege is accorded to those who constitute the church and who realize the importance of her institutions. The needs of Elon College are continuous, and are increased with the passing years. To meet the expenses of the current year will not satisfy the needs of the college for the following year. Some are inclined to feel that when they contribute this year, that should be sufficient. We all realize, however, that these needs recur year after year. If they are not met by those who belong to the church, they are not likely to be met by others who have no connection with the college through the church or otherwise. When we think of what Elon College has meant to our church, we should be encouraged and should count it a privilege to give it support.

No Offering from any Sunday School or Church this week.

JOHN GRAVES DAY AT BURLINGTON.

John Graves has completed three years as Youth Director at the First Church, Burlington, N. C. Having graduated from Elon College, he is leaving shortly for Hartford Seminary. He was honored last Sunday with the following resolution presented by Rev. H. E. Robinson.

At Home and Abroad

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

Union Hight, Foochow
July 7, 1950.

Dear Southern Convention Friends:

Although little news can get to you from this side of the Iron Curtain, you can probably guess that the invasion of South Korea by the Communists, and the quick action by the United Nations carried out at once by the U. S. have had a tremendous effect on the Far East. United, Co-operative international action of this kind is heartily approved everywhere by people who know the truth and who love freedom.

Unfortunately, in China, unless a person listens to the Voice of America (which is illegal to do) he does not know the facts. The government controlled press has not printed the text of President Truman's speech in full but has only picked out certain sentences for refutation. It has not mentioned that the United Nations made the decision to help South Korea and that the U. S. is acting in accord with international decision. According to local newspaper reports, the South Koreans started to invade the North. Then, when they began to lose, the Americans decided to interfere in Korean affairs by helping the South Koreans under the leadership of the running dog President Rhee. The paper is full of vile accusations against America. Parades and demonstrations are being organized against American imperialism.

We Americans still living in China (about 1800 missionaries) are quite dismayed by the turn of events. We are practically unanimous in approving the United Nations decision. Some of us are not so sure about President Truman's action regarding Formosa where the U. S. is acting on her own and not on the basis of a U. N. decision.

These days have been full of meetings and discussions trying to decide what we ought to do. Not only are we discussing the question, but our Chinese colleagues are doing likewise. Gradually the opinions seem to be converging to one decision—now is the time for Americans to leave. Bishop Michael Chang of the Anglican Church, a person of great ability and Christian character, and for many years a trusted friend to foreigners, said recently, "I think that the time has now come for our American and English friends to leave us for their own as well as for our good. If the situation takes another turn for the worse, we cannot help you and your being here may cause us as well as our church to come under suspicion by the government. We thank you for your help in past years and we shall do our best to carry on after you have gone."

Whether we can get out or not is still a big question. It is not certain whether the mouth of our Min River has been mined. Ships are afraid to come in unless protected by special radar equipment. So we will just have to wait until some evacuation plans can be worked out.

Many of you will ask, "After you leave, then what? Can Christianity and the church survive in the fact of government opposition?"

We believe they can and will. People who have lived through revolutions in China before say there is this difference this time—the church is not as often accused of being a "foreign" church. The Protestant Church especially, has become a Chinese institution. As such, it will not be suppressed. The greatest problem for the church will be that of financial support. One of the worst mistakes we missionaries have made is that we have kept our work too dependent on American funds. The people are poor and it is extremely difficult to raise money locally so we have taken the path of least resistance and relied on money from outside. Now the test is coming. When American funds are withdrawn, what will happen?

Strong churches undoubtedly will continue although some of the weaker ones may have to close up. In some instances, ministers will have to find other work to support themselves and their families, only giving part time to the work of the church. Last week two North Fukien pastors came to Foochow. In the course of the conversation about our North Fukien work, I asked them when U. S. funds are cut off, what will happen to our five churches? They answered without hesitation, "They will all continue. We cannot keep up the present scope of our work (i.e. running of schools, hospitals etc.,) but the church will go on." A letter from North China says, "A deepening spiritual fervor is already noticeable in many parts of the country, where Christians can depend upon one source of confidence and help alone—God. Spiritual movements often take forms reminiscent of those conditions in the early Church which caused St. Paul considerable anxiety, but nevertheless do betoken that spiritual vitality which is the hope of the future." Other letters report a new vigor among many of the church members. For these and other hopeful signs, we thank God and take courage.

We do not know what the next few days or weeks will bring. In China things have a manner of changing very suddenly in ways that are least expected. Of one thing we are confident: He who has come with us thus far will be faithful to the end, nor will He desert His Church and His people in this great land.

Dorothy and Lewis join me in sending our greetings to you all.

Cordially,

DICK JACKSON.

CYPRESS YOUNG PEOPLE MEET.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Cypress Chapel Christian Church met on Thursday night, July 27, with Eloise and Edna Earl Bunch. There were 28 members and one visitor present.

The meeting was called to order by the president, Jack Byrd. James Boyette was welcomed to the society as a new member.

The program was presented by Mrs. Roger Knight, with Edna, Dorothy and Nancy Brinkley and Edna Earl and Eloise Bunch, and Mrs. James Boyette having parts. Games and contests were played and the meeting adjourned to meet with Bobby Asbell and Elmer Brinkley, Jr., as hosts next month.

Things move more slowly in the tropics than in cooler climates, but both the school work and the spiritual life of the student at the Training School in Truk are improving. Recently a student named Frank died. He was a much loved and very promising lad from Uman. Before his death he called his mother to him and said, "I am going to die, Mother, but don't be afraid, for I have learned that Jesus is waiting for me. Don't cry and be sad for me. I am going to my Father in heaven and I will be waiting when you come."

WOMEN OF OAKLAND REPORT.

Besides the regular meetings, Mission study courses, Friendly Service projects, Bible study, and special programs and projects which have claimed the attention of all our women's groups this year, the ladies of Oakland had the privilege of playing hosts to the women of Eastern Virginia for the Family Life Institute in March.

In May, it was the distinct pleasure of our church to entertain the Southern Convention. For this wider contact with the people of our denomination; we are deeply grateful.

In February of this year, we joined Berea (Nansemond) in welcoming to this field Dr. and Mrs. Harcastle, under whose leadership and guidance we hope to continue our service to our Master.

In November, the Auxiliary sponsored "Newman Night" as a public manifestation of the love and esteem we at Oakland have for Dr. N. G. Newman, and as a token of appreciation for the splendid work he has accomplished in improving and beautifying our cemetery, which recently, by vote of the church conference, was renamed the Newman Memorial Cemetery. A supper, to which all members of our church and Sunday school were invited was tendered "Cousin Nat." Our beloved Dr. I. W. Johnson was the speaker of the evening, and in a most excellent manner he expressed our sentiments for the "Gentleman of the evening."

A new year in women's work approaches, and we at Oakland look forward to doing our part and to enlarging our service to further the Lord's work.

MORRISVILLE WOMEN ORGANIZE.

The Missionary Society of the Morrisville Church was reorganized in April, with nine members. The society was named the Pugh Missionary Society, in honor of Miss Lessie Pugh and her mother, the late Mary Ellen Pugh, who have given many years of faithful service to the church.

Mrs. R. H. Cotten was elected president, and samples of literature for selecting a course of study were ordered. The Friday night before each first Sunday was selected as the time for meetings, which will be held in the church in summer and in members' homes in winter.

Mrs. J. F. Hilliard reported that she was holding for the society a $25.00 War Bond, which was bought in 1943, before the former society disbanded during the war.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Dr. and Mrs. Frank Laubach will be in Winston-Salem on October 6-8, sponsored by the churches of the city. Our Winston-Salem church is planning to have them speak to the Woman's Association on Friday evening, October 6. The meetings will be open to the public, and any interested people from other places may also attend.

It is interesting to know that the Home Mission study book for this year Once There Were Two Churches, written by Dr. Fred D. Wentzel, tells about one of Dr. Wentzel's former pastorates. He says that the eyes of the typical church are turned inward, instead of outward to its surroundings. The typical church should be community-minded, and realize that communities as well as individuals can be changed by a church being conscientious.

A picture map, "Bible Lands Today," may be ordered for 75c from the Friendship Press, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y. It is a work map for illustrating on map and insert sheet the religions and the peoples of Bible lands today. Some pictures represent Bible times.

Assignment: Near East, one of the Mission studies for this year, was written by an American newspaper man of Arab background, who recently spent two years in the area. It is well adapted for reading and study and provides background information for all responsible for planning programs on the Near East. It has a tipped-in map in color. It is especially recommended for Young People and Seniors, but may also be used for adults. Price $1.00.

MISS ANN TRUITT, Associate

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS OF NEWPORT NEWS REPORT.

We have met each Sunday at 2:00 p. m. this past year, our programs consisting of worship and discussion. We were in charge of the worship service in the adult department one Sunday in May, using as our theme: "Living Courageously."

Christmas we went to the Patrick Henry Hospital for the sick and aged. We took a basket of fruit and sang songs to the patients.

In February we celebrated the 69th birthday of Christian Endeavor with a special program and party.

In May we had the background study of our Mission Book on the Migrants, and Mrs. Williams reviewed the book for us.

For our mission project, we made "Health Kits" for the Migrants."

We had a very interesting series on the study of the church. Why it was founded. Why we go and meaning of the various symbols and sacraments of the church.

We have a chapel in our Educational Building. One Sunday we devoted our whole session to the study of the stained-glass windows and other symbols within this room.

The material for our programs during the year is taken from the "Junior Christian Endeavor Meeting." This is published quarterly and we think it is a very fine book. The Juniors lead the worship and lead the discussions.

We feel we have had a fine year together and hope other Juniors have had the same. GRACE SPIVEY.

MORE NEWS FROM CAMPO DI AGAPE.

Turino, Italy,
July 11, 1950.

Dear Friends:

AGAPE.

The sky's the bluest I've seen
The trees, the greenest green
At Agape, where we work for love
And don't just sit and dream
Of better worlds to come
Or days that used to be,
But where we work and think and pray—
The more like Christ to be.

The day is spent in working
With those of many lands,
In eating, laughing, praying—
And without thought or plan

Of saving all the world
Or filling all its needs—
We humbly try to serve Him
With actions and with deeds.

And when the day is through,
And we all stop to rest,
'Tis then we think of others
Who're not so greatly blest,
Who cannot know real love of Christ
As we who are here can see—
At the camp of love and work we know
And call Agape.

This poem was written last Friday evening after work. It was our second full day of work. We were very tired, but the beauty of the sky and mountains overcame us. I didn't write this with the idea of publishing it, but the other campers said the poem expressed their feelings. It will be in the next issue of Agape News. I'm sending it to you, not for its poetic value, but in an attempt to make you feel the spirit that prevails at Agape.

In 1947 Agape had its humble beginning. The Waldensian Church tried to buy some army barracks near here. The Catholic Church prevented this deal from going through. So Pastor Vinay and fifteen Italian youths started to build Agape. They asked the architect for plans for a project that would cost six million lire. He came up with an eighty million lire plan (6 lire equals 1 cent). This, of course, called for outside aid. In 1948 the first foreigners came. This caused quite a bit of excitement in Ghigo and the seven other villages located in the Pealy Valley. The campers lived in Ghigo. The resentment soon vanished, however, when they discovered the increased business brought in by the new project. The natives are very friendly now. At Agape there are now about 80 campers. This number varies every day. There are 10 countries represented at the present. Agape is now a camp for the youth of the world. All workers will be welcomed at any time. There will also be international youth conferences held here. Plans are not definite now because of lack of money. The camp is now in one of its most difficult financial conditions. Vinay, who is still the director, explains that the camp will continue. He has always had faith and he trusts that things will come out O. K. (By the way, every Italian knows the meaning of "O. K.")

The idea at Agape is that work is prayer. We really pray hard. The hours have been cut down from 10 to 8. This is greatly appreciated by those of us who need time to learn about the people and to write. We believe, too, that more can be accomplished by working hard 8 hours than by loafing 10. Perhaps I should tell you of a typical day in camp. I'll tell of Saturday, which is like every other day, except the social hour at night.

I was awakened by the Italian boys in my barracks room at five o'clock. This was an hour earlier than usual. One of the campers was leaving at 5:30 and they were up to say "Goodbye." So I got up to say "Goodbye" to someone I hardly knew. Breakfast was served at 6:20. This meal is always the same—hot milk, minestra (macaroni with nothing added) and bread. Bread is different from what we are used to. In fact, it takes experience to crack the hard crust on the roll. Rolls are scattered over the tables when we walk in the dining tent. Many campers carry rolls in their pockets up to the camp. Some are fearful of germs, but I doubt many germs having courage enough to tackle one of those crusts! Kidding aside, it's pretty good bread.

We start to work at 7:00. The camp is a 10 minute walk up the side of the mountain. There are five of us who work on the rock pile—two Italians, Archimedes and Eurenio, and three Americans, Bill Corzine from Illinois, Carl Bede from St. Louis, and I. It is our job to dig the stones from the side of the mountain and load them on little cars, called "carella," which run on a narrow track. They run off nearly every trip, and we pry them back. Once we loaded an especially heavy rock on our only flat car. It took five of us to load it. Afterward the Italians gathered flowers and placed on it. When we tried to explain to them that Bill was married, they had a very difficult time understanding us. Finally one of them started humming, "Here Comes the Bride." Carl and Bill dropped a rock on Bill's finger and hurt it quite a bit. We started calling Carl "Careless Carlos." This pleased the Italians after they learned its meaning from my pocket dictionary. The day is filled with incidents such as these.

We go back to work at two o'clock. We continue the same sort of work FAMILIES A LA CAMP.

We packed our wonderment with our sheets, towels and blankets that the little yellow sheet advised us to take. We were on our way to the first Family Life Camp held at Crabtree State Park near Cary, N. C. We did wonder what would happen, who would be there, and what we would do.

Once our luggage was stowed and the family in and we were off, we wondered about the weather. Late-ly our area has been in a "monsoon season" and every day has brought its downpour. We had not long to wonder—it poured and the House family arrived to eat supper by lantern light in the big hall and to listen to the dripping eaves.

Dr. and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman were in charge, assisted by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Miss Elena Maquiso, Betty Burt Hight, Mrs. James Hailley, Miss Melva Foster, Mr. Baxter Twiddy, and others. These leaders were introduced as were the families who were seated by groups.

There were the Cecil Thomas family from Norfolk (three charming little daughters, Debbie very young); the Lesters from Asheboro (Elizabeth, Dorothy and Harry); Mrs. Orva Brown and Jimmy from Asheboro; the Prices and Hillards from Greensboro with Rachael Hillard nursing a nail-stuck foot. Miss Julia Woodson of Burlington introduced an assortment of children beginning with her minister's daughter, Jane Robinson, and ending with an assistant cook.

That evening was devoted to song and play. Stories were told and friendships made. It was very interesting to see the congeniality of such widely spread age groups. Seven-month old Debbie crowded and cooed while the 2-year old got into the fun. So did the 30 and 40-year olds join the fun!

It was a new experience for the majority of the children to use lantern light and to sleep on straw mattresses. One little boy on hearing the description "straw tick" began looking for a round, fat insect! The cabins were nice and rustic, the rain continued its dripping and soon the little folks succumbed to Sand Man who must get his sand from the Sandhills of Carolina!

The rising gong found the camp alive with youngsters eager for the new day. The breakfast devotions were given by Dr. and Mrs. Lester and their children. Each one shared in giving us a thought for the day.

After breakfast, we discovered a list had been posted with KP duties and housecleaning in general began. Two of the boys found terrapins and tried to arrange a race, but one terrapin refused to cooperate.

The children were led in classes by teachers and the adults gathered in the main hall for a discussion on "money and its relationship to the family," was led by Dr. Lester. Fairly well divided among lay and clerical families, the discussion was interesting, timely and provocative.

Next came the swimming. The creek was swollen by the rains, and the water muddied, but practically the whole camp immersed itself. Other families were arriving all the time and by noon the Robinsons of Burlington were present, as were the Coghills of Henderson, who brought the D.P. family from their church, who have two lovely children, a blonde boy and girl, and the Rev. Raymond Grissom of Jonesboro.

Dishwashing and wiping fell my lot at noon. The chief dishwasher was Dr. Wisseman. He was assisted by Dr. Lester, Elean and Mr. Price. There were several inspectors with keen eyes and ready tongues! Naptime followed.

Saturday afternoon was given to crafts. Miss Margaret Rowland of Greensboro brought metal for making trays, ashtrays and bracelets. The sun shone obligingly so youngsters could gather flowers and leaves to make blueprints of them. The rain began again and the young artists went in doors to continue hammering their metal and painting their pictures, some of which were very modernistic. I remember one that had violent red and blue rocks with green rain falling on them.

After supper Miss Woodson led in some games, Jimmy Brown and his mother did some magic, the Rev. Thomas gave a painful monologue on a trip to the dentist (I can still hear his screams!), and then Miss Woodson and Janie Robinson borrowed part of the audience to give a convulsing description of an old lady's death. I told some stories, my husband led some songs and then we had a contest in clay modeling. I remember that Asheboro won high honors with a likely looking cow, a monstrous alligator and a turtle. More stories and songs and a friendship circle eneded Saturday night's doings. I shall never forget that evening in the dim light, seeing six footers singing and folk dancing with three footers—all happy, all a part of the fellowship of Christian families!

Mr. Thomas led the discussion on Discipline Sunday morning after the morning devotions were observed in family groups, using literature provided for them. Dr. Wisseman then preached and Elena sang "Trees"—hers is such a moving voice, it is an inspirational experience to hear it!

We went home without our wonderment but carried with us our praise and delight. The next morning our Andrea Lee said, "Let's go back to family camp right now." I hope there will be many more and that more will partake of their joys!

LESSON VII—AUGUST 13, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: This day is holy unto our Lord; neither be ye grieved; for the joy of the Lord is your strength.—Nehemiah 8:10.

LESSON: Nehemiah 8:1a-4a, 5-6, 8, 10, 18.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 119:91-112.

"The Walls of the City."

The story is told about a man who visited the city of Sparta. He was impressed by the fact that unlike so many other cities of the time, it had no walls for defense, and remarked upon that fact. The next day his host took him out to a broad plain on which the men of Sparta were drilling. "There," said his friend, "are the walls of Sparta, every man standing like a brick in his place." Incidentally, according to one writer, this is where the expression, "That man is a brick," originated. "The men of the city are the walls of the city," said another man of old time. These pithy sayings contain a sober and startling truth. It is just another way of saying that character is the only ultimate safeguard of a nation. Civilization cannot be built permanently on money or material or military power. It can be built only on manhood.

Now all this is in point with today's lesson. For it deals with a people who were building, or rather rebuilding a city and, in a sense, a civilization. After a long captivity in Babylon, Cyrus, the conqueror of Babylon, allowed the Jews—such as would avail themselves of the opportunity—to return to their native land. Under the leadership of Nehemiah a large group returned and rebuilt the walls of the city and large portions of the city which had been destroyed and which had laid waste for a long time. The people had walls around their city, they had clothes, they had food, they had homes, at least of a sort. But they had no spirit, no inner drive, without which a man or a nation can do little that is worth while. Thus it was that Nehemiah set about to make the people familiar with the Scriptures, which the scribes had carefully compiled during the Exile. He commissioned Ezra, a leading scribe to initiate this important but neglected work. The problem was essentially spiritual. The neglect of the Law had caused the collapse of the nation. If the Jews remained spiritually illiterate, the same evils could befall the nation again. A knowledge of the Law was the first step toward the building of a righteous Jewish nation, the cornerstone of a more enduring civilization.

The Reading of God's Word.

Ezra had prepared a large wooden pulpit—this is the first and only reference to a pulpit in the entire Bible—on which he and thirteen other men took their places. Before them was gathered a great congregation of men and women, and those "that could hear with understanding." One by one the men on the pulpit read from the Law—the first five books of the Bible—and after he had read a few verses, another of the men would interpret the passage, making clear to the people what it meant. Two things stand out in this connection: First of all, those who read in the book, in the Law of God, read distinctly. The people could hear them. There is a lot of shoddy reading of the Word of God in public worship. Ministers ought to read in a clear, crisp, distinct and dignified way from the Bible. It is God speaking to the people. Let the Word be read so that the people can hear what God is saying. In the second place, it is recorded that "the ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the Law." The people gave attention to the men who read, read distinctly.

Jesus was always urging men to take heed how they heard. If ministers are at fault in not reading the Scriptures as well as they should, people are also at fault in not giving attention to the reading of the Scriptures. Let anybody look around in the average congregation and see how many people are inattentive when the Scripture lesson is read. And yet this is about the only time that many people ever hear anything from the Bible!!! How eagerly they ought to listen to what God has to say to them!!!

Making the Meaning Clear.

"And they gave the sense, so that they understood the reading." That was another reason why the people listened attentively—the Scripture was interpreted in words that they understood. There is all too much preaching and teaching that is meaningless to the hearers. The preacher or the teacher does not put the message in words that the people can understand. One reason why "the common people heard Jesus gladly" was because he talked in language that they could understand. A thing can be simple even though it is deep and profound. Jesus put the loftiest thoughts into simple words. He spoke of the unknown in terms of the known. This does not mean that religion must be mere nursery jumbles. It does mean that the message of Christianity ought to be put in words that men and women and young people can understand, aided by the grace of God. There are some sermons and lessons that even the grace of God has a hard time in making clear to everyday folks.

Bringing the Lesson Up to Date.

There is a great need for a return to the Bible today. Some years ago, President Wilson said that "civilization can not survive materially unless it is redeemed spiritually. . . . Here is the final challenge to our churches, our political organizations, and to our capitalists—to everyone who fears God or loves his country." John Foster Dulles in his statesmanlike book, War or Peace, brings that splendid book to a close with a very thoughtful and thrilling chapter on "Our Spiritual Need," in which he emphasizes the same theme. It is only as the Word of God becomes the foundation of national life that our nation can be strong in the best sense of the word. And there is a close and vital connection between personal and national strength of character and the basic truths and principles of God's Word. Our modern world needs a personal knowledge of this Book, and nations need to make its principles and spirit the foundation stones on which they build. That great Christian soldier and statesman, General Douglas MacArthur, said on the deck of the Missouri, "The problem of the postwar world is theological," which was another way of saying that it was spiritual. And his eagerness to supply the Japanese people with Bibles and his commendation of the work of missionaries gives meaning to his words.

out those who do not interpret life in the same distinctive terms as we. It is the vision of the universal aspect of God that can truly liberate the spirit within us. Saint Peter summarized the essence of religion when he said, "As many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the children of God." We need not be concerned what particular name men use as a rallying point if only they are led by the spirit of the Infinite and Eternal Father.

III. HIS JUDGMENT AND HIS MERCY.

Out of the many paradoxes of God I want to mention one more because of its close relation to our ministry. This is the durability of God's Judgment and his Mercy. These elements are perfectly familiar to all of us who have been in the Christian tradition, but the proper balance between the two of them is of such vital importance that a consideration of the deity would not be complete without at least a mention of this problem.

Most of us take for granted that God is merciful. Yet this is a daring affirmation of faith. Whitehead has said that one of the greatest intellectual discoveries in the history of religion is Plato's final conviction that the divine element in the world is to be conceived as a persuasive agency and not as a coercive force. The power of Christianity lies in its revelation in fact of that which Plato set forth in theory. Robert Browning's poem, "An Epistle," holds us to sense the daring of this affirmation as it purports to give a letter sent by a young Roman medical student who in Palestine had encountered the new Christian religion. The Roman is skeptical, and yet feels himself drawn by the claim that at the center of the universe is a heart that cares.

So, the All-great were the All-loving too—
So, through the thunder comes a human voice Saying, "O heart I made, a heart beats here!"

Christianity twice affirms the mercy of God: once in the very love of God to send his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life; and again in the moral example of Jesus who extended mercy even to forgiveness of those who were crucifying him. In prayer and in doctrine we reiterate that God desires not the death of a sinner, but that he should turn from his ways and be saved. Our faith is posited on the conviction that the universe is not blind or accidental, not cold or cruel, but guided by a spiritual being whose purposes are achieved through merciful guidance.

On the other hand, Christianity likewise affirms the judgement of God. Without judgment all moral values become obliterated. God must therefore give punishment or penalty to those persons who do not measure up to standards in accordance with which he expects human beings to live. From the earliest times men have been tempted to think of themselves as favorites with God and therefore as being secure from affliction. The Old Testament prophets found Hebrews in their distress crying to Jahweh to deliver them. The message of Joel, of Amos and Isaiah was that those who look for the Lord's coming might perhaps better be in terror than in anticipation. "Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord. To what end is it to you, The day of the Lord is darkness, and not light!" (Amos 5:18). Jesus spoke many harsh words of judgement against those hypocritical, selfish or shallow in their faith. The writer of the Christian book of Hebrews knew that "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."

The two contrasting elements of mercy and judgment must be brought together in any adequate conception of God, but in practice we often fail to do this. Some of us preach sweetness and light, while across the street our pentecostal brother thunders of the fires of hell. The trouble is those who talk about sin talk about it too much, while those who are silent on the subject are too quiet. Dr. Ralph W. Sockman seems to me to be America's strongest preacher for the reason that he has the faculty of bringing together in nearly every sermon these elements of God's judgement and mercy. He recently described his ministry by saying, "It is my business to comfort the afflicted and afflict the comfortable."

Jesus in his experience of the Fatherhood of God laid the foundation for the Christian doctrine of the deity which holds in perfect balance the two elements about which we are speaking. God is neither a sovereign judge nor an indulgent sentimentalist. He is a Father who loves his children to the uttermost, but who in his wisdom finds that some punishment is to the best interests of their development. The good parent does not overlook the moral deviations of his offspring. He must be firm in calling the erring son to a new loyalty in ethical standards, but his firmness is always comingled with tender affection.

Many are the practical mistakes which we in our daily life constantly make because we do not sense these implications of Fatherhood. We think of the deity as a protective covering for our persons, our loved ones, and our interests. When all else fails we call in the Lord to take our side. We expect him to rescue us from our difficulties.

We plead for God's help and we claim to be his defenders. Yet between us and him we have erected prejudices, misconceptions, secondary loyalties which have cut us off from true spiritual nourishment. Ministers are invited to invoke the deity before all manner of meetings which then proceed to develop their pet programs without reference to this common base from which they all started. God's name is invoked, but few persons take seriously his mercy or his judgment.

We have all strayed from his ways like lost sheep. We need to cultivate the silences in which God speaks to us rather than we to him. We must read again the spiritual qualities which his Son revealed. We must heed the seers of many generations who have beheld the light which is supernal. Like the Psalmist we must be still, and know that God is God. Only then will he become a living Presence with whom to walk in quiet confidence, with whom to serve in self-giving love, and with whom to build in hopeful permanence.

In the retreat from Burma during the winter of 1941-42 a young American missionary, Paul Geron, cared for the sick and the wounded. Often in pressing water to parched lips and fevered brows, he remembered the words of Paul that we are all of us earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God and not of us. Paul Geron's prayer could well be ours:

"Thou everlasting God, accept the praise of him who gives this water, that he has been, like the cup, a vessel between man's need and thy compassion. Amen."

In that spirit all of us would speak and live.

What is an individual? Just a bit of life shot off from the one Life in the universe—just a bit of love and truth dropped on this globe, just as the globe itself was once a bit of light and heat dropped from the sun.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

We finally had enough sunshine to harvest that wheat. God was good to us. Also we had some extra hogs and two cows, $1,946.45. That helped us with the rebuilding of the milk house bills, and other pressing bills. We needed as much more but we are so thankful for what we got. Last night I received $57.12 from Belew Creek for my messages during a series of services. I worked here until five o'clock and rushed up there and preached, and returned home each night to be here ready for my duties next day. The people were very kind, the fellowship was sweet, their pastor and his family were a joy. A daily vacation Bible school was conducted during the mornings of the week by the pastor and his helpers, from which the Orphanage received $5.25. During the week six churches sent us $70.47. For these contributions and the others listed in the attached report we are most grateful. May God's blessing rest richly on everyone. The Belew Creek funds will show in next week's report as they were received after this report was made up.

This morning I received a letter complimenting my letters in the CHRISTIAN SUN and enclosing a check for $100.00. This week a dear friend in Burlington came up to see me and brought $50.00. These friends of little children who have become charges of the church have done more than they realize to lighten the burden right now. Others will generously help.

We have not been able to contribute anything as yet on the much needed fire-truck for the Elon community. One generous friend in Burlington who knows our need in this community of fire protection made the first donation toward our share in the truck. Thanks be unto him. May there be many more.

This week we received two children from the Eure Christian Church community in the Eastern Virginia Conference, and two children from the Reidsville Church. We are trying hard here to do all we can to merit your help and to serve the absolutely dependent and needy. The work is thrilling. The children become dearer every day. I hardly know which I like better the little boys and girls who are almost under my feet wherever I go, or those of high school age who show such appreciation for every service and help. They are all really fine children, and you can be justly proud of what you are doing for them. Please help us to have a good report next week and every week until we are "in the black again."

ages of the congregation by teaching, calling, and assuming many tasks when others failed to respond;

And whereas his personal behavior and conduct has been consistent with the Christian faith which we hold, revealing by example the kind of life we cherish for our children;

And whereas the unselfish spirit which has been evident in day-by-day living has lent a contagious atmosphere of good will to the groups of which he has been a part;

And whereas his spirit of service has been manifest not only in the life of the church but also on the campus and in the larger life of the community, giving many good causes the inspiration needed for success;

And whereas he has always taken the rough places and difficult situations without malice, loss of temper, or thought of reprisal, but with forbearance and patience which proved the law of love.

BE IT RESOLVED: that the members and friends of the First Congregational Christian Church of Burlington, North Carolina, go on record by these acts in the presence of this congregation as conveying to Mr. Graves their heart-felt appreciation with every good hope for his future labors of mind and spirit; that full health bless his body; that all future opportunities to serve may be met with equal if not greater zeal for the Kingdom of God with the assurance that wherever he is our thought and our prayers will attend him.

PIERCE.

The Woman's Auxiliary of Berea Christian Church, (Nansemond) sustained a great loss in the death of one of our oldest and beloved members, Mrs. Bernice Pierce on June 16, 1950.

She loved the church and Societies and was a faithful member, always ready to respond to every good for the cause of Christ.

She had great interest in all church work, being present at all meetings until her health began to fail. She will be greatly missed.

We wish to extend to her bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and earnest prayers that God's great blessings may always be with them and give them comfort.

Mrs. W. B. WARRINGTON.

PARKER.

We, the members of the Oak Grove Congregational Christian Church and Sunday School, of Sunbury, N. C., offer the following resolutions of esteem and respect for Waverly K. Parker who lost his life in an accident on July 14, 1950 at Suffolk, Virginia. As secretary and treasurer of the church, and superintendent of the Sunday School, he was efficient and punctual in performing his duties.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. We shall miss his fellowship, but we shall cherish his memory.

2. We bow in humble submission to God's will and ask Him to give us grace to bear all burdens.

3. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved family and commend them to God, the great comforter, whose Son said, "Let not your hearts be troubled."

Mrs. O. B. Jones,
Mrs. T. R. ELLIS,
Mrs. ELSIE A. EASON.

BAGWELL.

On April 4, 1950, Mrs. Mattie Morris Bagwell, age 84, passed away after eighteen months of lingering illness. She spent her childhood and youth in Morrisville. After marrying W. Burke Bagwell she moved to Durham where she lived until her death.

From childhood Mrs. Bagwell was a devoted member of the Christian Church. She was a charter member of the Missionary Society in Durham. She gave cheerfully of her time and means in supporting the church activities. The fine example of her life is exemplified in that of her surviving son and daughter.

As a church and as individuals, we wish to express appreciation for her life of service and sorrow at her passing, and we shall honor her memory by carrying on the work of the kingdom to which she was so devoted.

Mrs. R. J. KERNODLE,
Mrs. ROBERT S. SMITH,
Mrs. D. M. ESTES,
Committee.

ALLGOOD.

The passing of the years removes from our fellowship those who have won for themselves a place in the hearts of men. Such was the loss of the Second Congregational Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., in the passing of Mr. R. F. Allgood on June 22, 1950. He was a Christian gentleman, deacon, trustee, teacher and friend.

We feel the loss very deeply and share the grief with the family. We commend his example of love and loyalty to God's Kingdom to all who found him a friend.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we humbly submit to the Father's will, knowing that He doeth all things well.

2. That we extend our sympathy to the family in the words of the Master: "Let not your hearts be troubled. . ."

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Family, a copy entered in the church records, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun.

C. C. ETHERIDGE,
Sec. of Deacon Board.

SPIVEY.

William Andrew Spivey, age 68, of 3509 King St., Portsmouth, Va., died on April 4, 1950. Funeral services were conducted April 6 in First Christian Church.

A native of Nansemond County, Va., he was the son of the late Peter and Mrs. Martha E. Spivey. He had resided in the Portsmouth area for 44 years.

Reared in the Christian denomination, he attended Liberty Spring Christian Church, Nansemond County, Va., and Suffolk Christian Church during his early youth. After moving to Norfolk, Va., he became a member of the Christian Memorial Temple, which later became a part of the present Christian Temple. In 1920 he moved his membership to the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, where he served for many years as a deacon and president of the Men's Bible Class. At the time of his death he was deacon emeritus of this church. These and other officers he held with fidelity and distinction.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Grace Luter Spivey, one daughter, Mrs. Harrell Byrd, and three sisters.

W. STANLEY CARNE.

TALLEY.

Nathaneal M. Talley, son of the late B. B. and Margaret Hite Talley, died at his home near Buffalo Springs, a few minutes after he was taken ill, on Monday June 26, 1950 in his 73d year.

The funeral and burial were at Gravel Hill Church on Tuesday, June 27, conducted, in the absence of his pastor, Rev. M. W. Andes, by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Travis of the Baptist church.

Brother Talley had been a member of Hebron Christian Church for nearly sixty years and for a number of years the senior deacon. He leaves his wife, who was Miss Florence Hightower, and children as follows: Mrs. William Webb, Walter H., Nathanael Marvin of Buffalo Junction, Va., and Mrs. Frank Pittard of Nelson, Va. There are three brothers, Bob, Hurley and Clarence and one foster sister, Mrs. Nannie Tuck.

There are also thirteen grand children and one great-grandchild.

The home has lost a kind husband and a devoted father; while the community a good neighbor and useful citizen.

Hebron Church mourns the passing of a member of wise counsel and an exemplary Christian gentleman.

MORE NEWS FROM CAMPO DI AGAPE.

until five in the evening. It is interesting to watch the sun set on the mountain to the west of us. It begins to set on the side of the hill about four o'clock. When we quit work at Agape, the sun is shining brightly. Down in the valley the sun has set. This Saturday evening I was invited to tea by Mrs. Vinay. She invites ten or so campers every Saturday evening. I rushed from work and shaved for the first time in a week. We had tea with cookies. We then sat on the floor and sang folk songs. Most Italians and other Europeans know English and American folk songs.

At 7:30 dinner is served. This consists of some sort of pasta, which is macaroni, and a second course. This is always potatoes with either corned beef, fish, or cheese. Lunch is very, very similar. After dinner each night there is a worship service. This is in Italian and English. It is very good to hear the Lord's prayer repeated in several languages. We also have songbooks printed in several tongues. We're tired, dirty, and sleepy; but still we have a good worship service.

On other days sleep is the first thought after dinner. But not on Saturday. We have a social hour. At the request of the others, the American group sang several Spirituals. The two girls from Egypt sang also. Then the German band played a couple of selections. An Italian girl, who sings beautifully, sang two songs. Then the Italian group gave two skits that were funny. The three from New Zealand sang a rowing song. Two girls from Canada sang an Indian song. John, our Scotch friend, favored us with a dance. Then the Italian group sang a very beautiful song. The day was long, but we had had lots of fun. Nevertheless we were sleepy. So far now—Good Night. MAX VESTAL.

WINDOWS

By A. DONALD OLSON

A CHURCH—the sharp light from without softened by the stained glass depicting Biblical scenes, the peal of the organ, and then the soul-stirring, masterfully blended voice of the choir leading hundreds of others.

The desert—a man is staggering over its hot, swirling sands, cursing it for trapping, or begging his Creator for deliverance from it.

The most of us have never had to stagger through a blinding sandstorm. A great many of us attend church. In the course of the services, we regard the windows. We are conscious not only of the scenes depicted therein, but also of the soft, harmonious blending of the reds, yellows, browns, greens and blues. We momentarily marvel at the skill of the artizan in glass. And then, we further realize that even his skill would be of little value were it not for the sand, say, that very sand there under Christ's feet. But even that sand could not be depicted were it not for proper pigments that were processed into its otherwise transparentness. And even this processing would be impossible without the artizan's knowledge of the properties of each grain of sand he was using. Here, he is no longer regarding sand as a cruel, relentless entity that swirls about on the desert, driven by the winds of chance. Instead, it is his understanding of the properties of each grain of sand out of which he compounds the pigments, and then proceeds to blend them as his inspiration directs him.

As we give more time to this thought, we see a symbolism as applied to human life and endeavor throughout history. When regarded as merely "the masses," people, like the sands swirling about on the desert, also remain—or become—only an unstable and treacherous entity. Bigotry, corruption, self-complacency and authoritarianism are the winds by which one is driven.

Throughout recorded history, there have been men who stood out above all others in defying these winds. Foremost of these in our minds we see Christ. He had the vision through this understanding of the individuals to permit him to foresee the future of the world. Since his crucifixion there has evolved the science of lens polishing that now permits a scientist to see millions of light years into the universe. But at the same time, he cannot see even a thousand years—to say nothing of light years—into the future of mankind. The lens through which he peers into the universe is compounded of only a few elements. In attempting to foresee the future of mankind, he must deal with people, not the masses, but individuals. They are the pigments in the stained-glass window of life. Just as it is the understanding of the properties of the chemicals that nature has compounded into the pigments that are responsible for the blendings and contrasts in the window, so it is true of our fellow-men. In them we see the myriad gradations and blending of happiness, sorrow; humor, pathos; kindness, cruelty; generosity, avarice; honesty, dishonesty.

We are, at one and the same time, each the pigments and the artizan. As the artizan, each is working on the stained-glass window of life to glorify his name. Although it has this myriad of hues and tones, the property of visibility is still in it; the beauty that we see in the window does not shut out the light. It is this light filtering through it that develops our faith in our fellow-men and assures us that the beauty on the other side is still there.

COUNTRY CHURCH MOVES TO TOWN

The road to success for many churches includes three steps: a new location, a new building and a new parsonage. Damascus Church of Sunbury, North Carolina, has happily emerged from these three stages.

Damascus was organized in 1832. In 1887, more space was added to the small structure. On her 100th birthday, 1932, Sunday school rooms were added. On July 8, 1940, the church voted to buy land and build a new church plant in a more desirable place. The last meeting was held in the old building in June, 1945. For about a year the members held meetings in other churches in the community, later holding services jointly with Oak Grove Christian Church.

In July, 1946, work began on the new building, which was completed at a cost of $30,268.00. In the early months of 1949 the church began work on a parsonage, which was completed in July at a cost of approximately $7,500.00. The church owes only about $3,300.00 on the church building and the parsonage.

Damascus, Cypress Chapel and Oak Grove are now in a field being served by Rev. Earl T. Farrell.

News Flashes

Rev. and Mrs. A. Lanson Granger are spending a part of their vacation at Lake Chataqua, New York.

Rev. and Mrs. Duane N. Vore are spending part of their vacation in Los Angeles, California, with Mr. Vore's parents.

Miss Ada Sutton and George Elmer Knight, Jr., were married on July 29, at the Carolina Christian Church. Rev. B. A. Leebrick officiated.

The department of Stewardship and Finance of First Church, Burlington, have arranged to have two coats of paint put on the outside trim of the church this summer.

Rev. G. H. Veazey will conclude his ministry at Long's Chapel at the end of this conference year. Substantial improvements have been made to the church property during Mr. Veazey's ministry. Mr. Veazey has had successful pastorates in Alabama, Virginia and North Carolina.

N. C. & VA. CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches is to meet on November 14 and 15, 1950, with the Shallow Ford Church, near Elon College. All churches are asked to be represented by their delegates: at least two from each church, and one for each additional hundred over the first hundred. C. M. A. NOTICE.

A meeting of the officers of the Eastern Virginia Christian Missionary Association was held at the home of Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk, Friday afternoon, August 4. Rev. Luther B. Grice was absent due to illness, and Rev. Johnson Griffin acted in the secretary's place.

It was voted to ask all ministers and Sunday school superintendents to take action as soon as possible regarding memberships so that we may be able to make a good showing at the December meeting.

It was also voted to ask the Eastern Virginia Ministerial Association to sponsor a C. M. A. Sunday in all of our churches sometime in November.

Committees for our next meeting will be announced at a not too distant date.

STANLEY C. CARNE,
President.

JOHNSON L. GRIFFIN,
Acting Secretary.

MUNGER WILL TEACH IN TENNESSEE.

Rev. Bernard V. Munger, the pastor of the Congregational Christian Church of Chapel Hill, North Carolina, has resigned to become an assistant professor of Bible in Southwestern University, Memphis, Tenn. He will take over his new duties there on September 18. Mr. and Mrs. Munger and their three children will leave Chapel Hill the first week in September.

During his pastorate there Mr. Munger has served as chairman of the Chapel Hill Council of Churches, director of two overseas relief fund campaigns for the council, chairman of the advancement committee of the Orange County District of the Boy Scouts, president of the Chapel Hill Ministers' Association, and as a member of the Y-Teen Advisory Committee.

Mr. Lindsay Neville is chairman of the Pulpit Committee which is seeking a successor to Mr. Munger.

GOD'S ACRE AT PLEASANT RIDGE (R).

In one of the meetings relative to raising funds for the parsonage building program last winter, someone mentioned the God's Acre plan used by some for raising money for the church.

Mr. J. H. Pell, one of the faithful deacons in our church, did not say much then, but we found out later that he had sowed an acre of oats to be sold and applied to our building fund. When Mr. Pell went to sell the oats, he was told that good oats brought 70 cents a bushel, extra clean oats brought 75 cents a bushel. The miller asked Mr. Pell what kind of oats he had. "I have an acre of God's oats that is to be used to pay for our parsonage," replied Mr. Pell. The miller said, "Then that will be a different matter, in that case the oats will be 85 cents a bushel." The check for $29.00 was turned over to Mr. Theodore Cox, treasurer of the building fund.

There may be others of our church doing the same thing that Mr. Pell has done. Mr. Howard Brown turned over $18.00 to Mr. Cox the other day and reported that his oats brought 80 cents for the church. It seems that business men respect a man who does something for his church.

CLYDE L. FIELDS,
Pastor.

DR. RAYMOND RESIGNS CHARLESTON PASTORATE.

Dr. C. Rexford Raymond offered his resignation at Circular Church, Charleston, S. C., on July 10 as follows:

"When I resigned in 1945 as your minister, in order to have leisure for writing, you honored and surprised me by voting a request that I remain as your minister 'indefinitely'. My stay here at that time now seems providential in view of the increasing illness of my beloved wife, Rose, and her passage in 1948 beyond the shores of time.

But now I renew my request to retire, hoping to be able to summarize for publication some of my religious convictions. I was ordained as a Congregational minister in May, 1900; and have been your minister since April 23, 1941. I cannot adequately describe my gratitude for your good will. Your sympathy and fellowship in sunshine and shadow have been beyond words. You have been a solace in my sorrow and when the church has seen cherished persons pass beyond our sight, we have sorrowed together. During the last nine years we have mourned the loss of 15 members and three others, not technically members but who were our warm friends and were in our church families.

When children and adults have been dedicated in baptism (58 in all), when 89 new members have enriched our lives, and when lovers have been married before the Cross in our chancel, we have rejoiced together. In the untrodden paths of the future we shall have a deepening sense of the ways in which our work and worship here have enriched our lives.

Since our Church Constitution states that two months shall intervene in pastoral charges, with fervent prayers for guidance in the days and years ahead, I offer my resignation to take effect early in September."

Dr. Raymond has served previously in Chattanooga, Southern Pines and Sunbury. Congratulations, Dr. Raymond, on a long and fruitful ministry.

Excerpts from Council Lecturers II and III

II—"AND THE SON."

In speaking on the topic, the Second Person of the Trinity, Mr. Beale brought his thoughts to focus in the words from the opening passage of the Gospel of St. John: "The Word became flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth."

The speaker took the position that the ancient trinitarian formula was the device whereby the Church endeavored to express its most complete awareness of God: God the Father, the creator and source of all things; God as manifested in history, the Son; and God as experienced personally, the Holy Spirit. This, he submitted, does not conflict with the belief in one God, although the issue has been confused for many by the use of such expressions as "God in Three Persons," and further befogged by creedal statements regarding Jesus Christ, such as, "very God of very God."

The incarnation, that is the embodiment of God in human life which we see in Jesus, was not a metaphysical event, nor the event of one mystery-laden night in the hills of Judea, but a progressive event which we see as we follow the life of Jesus. It is seen in the content of his message, the quality of his life, and in his inner victory as he resisted the standards of his time and overcame the pull of its spirit, and opened his soul to the complete incoming of the Spirit of Creative Love, through fellowship with the Father and complete dedication to his purposes.

The nature of this conflict is seen to some extent in the story of the temptation. It reached its height in Holy Week, when Jesus resisted the temptation to be a mere later edition of the prophet Amos, who was passionate for justice, but lacked the creative qualities of love and patient understanding.

In ultimate triumph over all the forces that tried to coerce him into that lesser type of program, Jesus opened his soul to the complete incoming of the Spirit of Creative Love—and died in doing so, abandoned by the people who wanted a military Messiah.

The incarnation was not complete at Bethlehem but at Calvary. And yet complete there only in as far as it was possible in one life bound by human conditions. The incarnation goes on in the Church, the "Body of Christ." Herein is the larger and increasing expression of God in history, the incarnation which alone can save the world. The sacrifices Jesus made must be continued, the struggle that he won must be re-won in a larger field. In the daring words of the Apostle Paul, we must "fill up that which is lacking in the afflictions of Christ . . . for his body's sake, which is the Church."

In the final analysis, the incarnation is best known only by those who share it, those who in turn, as members of the Body of Christ, open their lives to the full incoming of the Father's love and power as they seek to serve his purpose.

III—" . . . AND IN THE HOLY SPIRIT."

Not frequently do we hear sermons on repentance, conversion, justification and sanctification. The reason alleged, by apologists for the omission, is that we are now an enlightened, self-directed people living not by some mechanical and legalistic arrangement. Probably the real reason is that we no longer believe in the Holy Spirit. Here is a name empty of meaning and significance for a great multitude of us. The great words of Christian doctrine not only have fallen out of use, but have taken on a theologically sinister meaning.

It is high time for us to recognize that the name of the Holy Spirit has more than historical and antiquarian values. It is in and by the Holy Spirit that the Church came into life. As Israel was chosen by God to be the body for a prophetic dispensation, as Jesus was chosen by the Lord to be the body for a Messianic dispensation, so the people who in faith submit themselves to the leadership of Christ are chosen by God to be

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.

CONFERENCE CENTERS

Increasingly, State Conferences are securing and operating their own centers for conference activities. They have grown weary of frantically trying, year after year, to find suitable dates and places for camps and conferences. Being totally at the mercy of those who own and operate conference grounds, they usually get second or third choice. Shifting dates from year to year, there is difficulty in establishing the desired enthusiasm and loyalty.

Massanetta, Montreat, Ridgecrest, Junaluska, are denominational conference centers of long standing. The Evangelical and Reformed Church has established an adequate center at Blowing Rock. Our Florida State Conference secured Lake Byrd Lodge some years ago, and since that time conference activities have been very greatly accelerated. Any conference without an available and accessible meeting place of this kind is handicapped.

The Massachusetts Congregational Conference and Missionary Society has just purchased a beautiful 200-acre estate at Framingham Center, Massachusetts, for use as a conference center. The property was owned by Mrs. Charles Francis Adams, widow of the late President of the First National Stores. Centrally located about a half-mile from the Worcester Turnpike, the center will be used the year round for the benefit of the 600 Congregational Churches of Massachusetts. The property includes the main house (a beautiful colonial style residence of 20 rooms), a farmhouse of 12 rooms and several other buildings. The formal dedication of the conference center will come in the early fall.

There may be someone within the bounds of the Southern Convention who would like to make available to the denomination an estate which could be used as a conference or convention center. That would be a magnificent example of stewardship, a blessing in perpetuity. What better disposition could be made by a family who have enjoyed the blessings of God for a lifetime?

STRATEGIC OPPORTUNITIES IN CHRISTIAN COLLEGES

Because of the multiplicity of religions in India, universities have eliminated religion and are concentrating on techniques, according to Bishop Lesslie Newbigin of the United Church of South India.

In an analysis of the intellectual crisis in Indian universities presented to a national SCM conference on the subject held at Bangalore, India, June 8 to 12, the South Indian Bishop said that the "religious vacuum" in the universities was being filled by Marxist ideas, which are being met "only by police force." Hence, in order to remain out of prison, "students are developing a double intellectual life."

Bishop Newbigin scored Christian colleges which "have found it easy to adjust themselves to the elimination of the Bible from the curriculum," contending that too many Christians in India "do not regard the Bible as the center of Christian education." Noting that Christians had largely failed to penetrate Hinduism, Islam, and Buddhism, Bishop Newbigin said that Christians tended to be unaware of the "denials of Christianity in the present Indian educational system."

Christian colleges in America have a unique opportunity to teach the Bible and make Christian education central in their curricula. This realization should take away all sting or resentment when we are called upon to give more generous support for our Church College, Elon.

"Only as the church saves families within homes can the church hope to save the world." This was the conviction of the National Conference on the Education of Christian Parents, which was held at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, July 16 to 22.

The purpose of the conference was to develop a national strategy for the Christian education of some fifteen million Protestant families and the evangelization of millions more of unchurched families.

"The church exists to spread the gospel," the report continued. "The first and most important place where persons live together is the home. It is the training ground for their relations with other human beings in their community, their nation and their world. Therefore, to accomplish its purpose of spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ, the church must put the home at the center of its program. Its primary task must be the guiding and enriching of family living, based on faith in God."

This evangelistic emphasis of the church family life program was stressed through the conference. "A church should strive to meet the needs of families within its membership, but it must also reach out beyond its membership to serve the unchurched families in the community."

Among the requirements listed for reaching these families were a revamping of hours and orders of church services, new types of meetings, and the use of newer media of communication.

One group wraned that to make the church truly family-centered will require more than a few changes in the present program. It will mean "a distinct departure from many of the traditional and ecclesiastical procedures and habits of the past."

True religion is the life we live, not the creed we profess, and someday will be recognized by quality and quantity, and not by brand. —J. F. Wright.

As He That Serveth

A Charge to the Graduates of Elon College, Commencement, 1950

By PRESIDENT RUSSELL HENRY STAFFORD OF THE HARTFORD SEMINARY FOUNDATION

"... I am in the midst of you as he that serveth."—St. Luke 22: 27c.

It would, indeed, be hard to find a more hackneyed theme for a charge to graduates than what these words suggest. But, if service has become a trite topic, it is so because it is like a coin which has passed through so many hands that the inscription is blurred. That it has been used so much is proof of its value. It may repay is to look more closely at it, until we decipher its meaning.

The Biblical Setting.

The episode of strife among Jesus' disciples as to preferment in his coming Kingdom is placed by St. Mark and St. Matthew on the road of our Lord's last pilgrimage to Jerusalem. Whether following other evidence or for the sake of emphasis, St. Luke has transposed it to the Lord's last supper before the Cross, immediately after he had inaugurated that liturgical supper which has now for some sixty generations been bringing the bread and wine of heaven to the faithful. Not only does this transposition intensify the tense subjective drama of the upper chamber, as this evangelist unfolds it; but it gives a most impressive setting to the lesson which the episode enforces. Calvary's agony is the only moment more moving in the Saviour's story than his last supper and our first holy communion.

You will recall that St. John omits the sacramental formula on the eve of Calvary. He has sufficiently foreshadowed it in the earlier discourse on the bread of life, which he alone reports. Nor does he include on that occasion the clamour for precedence. But in its place he shows us Jesus enacting in pantomime, as it were, the words St. Luke gives us from his lips: "I am in the midst of you as he that serveth." The account is so brief that we can quote it in full, with our Lord's comment on it afterward:

"Jesus, knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he came forth from God, and goeth unto God, riseth from supper, and layeth aside his garments; and he took a towel, and girded himself. Then he poureth water into the basin, and began to wash the disciples' feet and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded."

"So, when he had washed their feet, and taken his garments, and sat down again, he said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you? Ye call me Teacher, and, Lord: and ye say well; for so I am. If I then, the Lord and the Teacher, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye also should do as I have done to you."

How ought that example to be followed? It has been followed to the letter by some Christians at the top of the social scale and by others near the bottom.

Historic Observance.

From about the fourth century it became the chief ceremony of Maundy Thursday for princes and bishops to wash the feet of twelve or more poor men or beggars. Until Charles I, all the kings of England observed it. Each king washed every year the feet of as many poor men as he was years old, and then distributed food, clothing and money to them. Even Queen Elizabeth conformed to this convention; the paupers' feet, however, we are told, having first been washed by the yoemen of the laundry with warm water and sweet herbs.

Only day before yesterday, in my boyhood, the rite still survived with pomp and circumstance at the Austrian court. It must have been a sight for men and angels to see the wooden monument of stupid arrogance, of whom his restless wife said that he had the soul of a sergeant, bending to this menial task in ostentation of humility.

At the opposite extreme of station and privilege, many marginal groups in the Christian Church Universal have given footwashing virtually sacramental status. In true humility their members have heeded this difficult Fourth Gospel mandate exactly as we all honour the eucharistic institution in the Synoptics.

There could hardly be a better instance than this, I venture to suggest, of the peril of turning poetry into prose. As from the sublime to the ridiculous, so from the delicately dynamic there may be only one awkward step to the gross and absurd. It is only in aspects of conduct everywhere relevant that Jesus' followers can be sure that it is wise to follow him exactly. It would seem to most of us that to imitate him in items which out of his setting of time and place are incongruous, is not to follow his example of sensitive propriety in every situation, but in painful bondage of material detail to miss its spirit. That sort of blunder can be at once as grave and as hilarious as an honest howler in translation.

In Jesus' time and place, however, his action had no flavor of the grotesque. For tired men at the close of day, dressed as they were to suit their climate, nothing could be more refreshing than to have their sandals removed and their bare feet cleansed and cooled. It was a thing some slave would do at a dinner of the rich. It was the sort of thing a father or a big brother might do for children fretful and restless. It was a simple thing that anyone might do on friendly impulse in simple company, except a man who thought himself better than his friends, so that he would rather wait for someone else to do it for him than unbend and do it in kindness for the others. It was a simple thing done in simple friendship for the comfort and ease of one's friends.

That is why this pantomime in St. John's Gospel perfectly illustrates the words in St. Luke's. It is a definition of service. It is interesting both for what it excludes and for what it implies. As we devote ourselves to vocations of Christian ministry, we shall find here the key in which our lives must be written if they are to be in tune with Christ.

Safeguarding Service.

Christian ministry is itself an arresting expression. For ministry means service. A minister is a servant. The word has taken on an unduly glorious colouring from historic accidentals of association with power. For a minister of the crown, the head of a department of government, is called Excellency; and a minister of Christ, the leader of a company of his disciples, is called Reverend. Yet it is an axiom of good government and of sound religion alike, that the lord will be poorly served unless his servants serve his people too. For no good prince on earth or in heaven has any other concern so urgent as the welfare of his subjects. The prosperity of his domain depends upon their happiness. So we must serve our fellowmen in his behalf, if we would truly serve our Lord. And we can learn what such service means from his example. That example is his whole life; but it is pithily epitomized in this one deed at his final sundown.

First, then, service does not mean subserviency. That is, it is not an act or attitude which involves loss of self-respect, or which even comports with it. When Jesus washed his disciples' feet, he was not trying to ingratiate himself with them; nor was he demeaning himself as if he were unworthy to sit at table with them. St. John points that up in terms almost spectacular. In the very act of pouring the water into the basin, Jesus was mindful, we are told, that he came forth from God and was going unto God. When he commented on what he had done, moreover, he bade them not forget that he was still their Teacher and Lord.

He washed their feet, but he did not invite them to step on him. While in his person he showed himself gently and wholly one of them, he yet respected his unique office. The dignity of a minister of religion does not consist in any artificial solemnity of deportment, but in living naturally as a man among men. He will flexibly vary his tone and manner with circumstances. But he will never forget whose representative he is.

There are no odd jobs which we shall be unwilling to do in an emergency. Yet ministers of Christ are not odd job men for their people, to be contemptuously imposed upon by the proud, the lazy or the negligent, as if the office they hold had no higher functions than to do everybody else's work.

Secondly, however, Christian service does not mean condescension. It is not a bending down from above, as if we representatives of Christ were of finer clay or of clearer mind or of holier nature than the people with whom and for whom we work. For one of us who is tempted to forget the august prerogatives of his office and let himself be little more than an errand boy, there are probably nine of us who entertain at least a strong suspicion of our own superiority, and feel as if we were conferring bounties for which they ought to be grateful when we get right down among our people and do for them what they need to have done. A strutting parson, no matter how energetic and affable; a faintly supercilious Director of Religious Education, exuding an aroma of books and improved methods instead of Christian modesty; a benevolently high and mighty missionary, who never forgets that the sheep in his pasture are natives—these can do little if any good, no matter how many things they do. For in their own minds they are "do-gooders"; and no one likes to be done good to. They are do-gooders in their minds, because their hearts are not engaged. Whatever opportunity confronts you, leave it alone, for it will be better undone, unless you can put your heart into it as well as your head.

I have often speculated as to the sources of the superiority complex which is so often encountered among professionals of the Church. At the lower levels of conceited provincial religiosity such an attitude often arises, I think, from a prejudice of moral prestige, based upon the bad or questionable or unconventional things one does not do and is proud of not doing. "I don't drink, I don't smoke, I don't dance, I don't play cards, I don't go to the theatre"—that is sometimes mistaken for a confession of faith, a sound working substitute for the Apostles' Creed.

Of course on impulse the proper rejoinder to so negative a boast would be, "So what? What then do you do? How about the actual crimes and misdemeanors you left out from this catalogue of frivolities? And, by the way, how about your disposition, brother?"

Reflection after impulse will point further to the need we all have of that sense of sin which is born in us with the vision of holiness. While we keep our eyes on our Lord instead of on ourselves, we shall know what goodness is; how foul we are, no matter what we don't do; and at the same time, with humble joy, how great is the grace which raises us up to walk with him. As long as we are thus mindful of him and of ourselves, we can never boast as if special virtue attached to our professional decorum.

It is probably fair to say that we, to whom years of study have opened wider vistas and a deeper insight than most Christians find accessible, are not prone to self-righteousness. We shall not readily stumble into a holier-than-thou bearing toward the people we are sent to serve. On the other hand, however, the very wealth of the resources for our task which these years have made available to us may provoke the illusion that we are wiser than ordinary run-of-the-mill Christians.

Of course we don't know it all. From our high plateau we have surveyed afar many steep peaks of sacred scholarship which we shall never climb. Yet, with all these books behind us, though perhaps their contents do not linger long within us; with our graduate degrees, at any rate, how far we are above John Doe and Jane Roe in our constituency, with only a common school education! Surely it is forgivable, is it not, for us to talk down to them a bit, as we minister to their religious needs?

No, it is not forgivable; for it is not sensible. We are confusing learning with wisdom, which is just about the biggest mistake that can be made. It is true that they may not all be as wise as we; but it is probably also true that we are not nearly as wise as some of them. There are many facts we could teach them; but there may be many principles which they have digested better than we have.

I speak here from experience; for when I left seminary I was a ludicrously conceited young pseudo-intellectual. I knew a little about many things. I could use long words fairly correctly, to tell about them. But I doubt now whether I then knew anything. Not that I know much now; like Socrates, however, I can at least guess how little I know. And that is a first step, though a short one, toward wisdom.

Fortunately I came down to earth fast when I was plunged into my first parish. There was hardly another college graduate in the congregation. But there were a lot of people who had been living reflectively a long time. And there were some who lived close to God. I was not long in discovering that, though I had theology, or so I supposed, nevertheless it was they who had religion. They could teach me more than I could teach them.

COLLEGE STUDENTS AND THE DRAFT.

The brunt of war falls on the manhood of the country, and chiefly upon those between the ages of 18 and 36. For this group, everything dear to the ones included must be subservient to the demands of war—home, family, business, education, and life itself.

World War I lasted five years. World War II lasted four years. We are now fighting an undeclared war. How long it will last, no one human knows, but we do know this—that it plows into a man's plans; that it tears a terrible hole in his career; and that it tugs at his heart with an ugly nagging.

The other day a friend of mine who is now in college, said to me: "I do not know what this war will mean, but I do know that the last war took four years out of my life when I should have been laying the foundation for a useful career. I made one great mistake. I was in college, as you know, when war was declared. I volunteered. I see now that it would have been better for me and perhaps for my country, if I had remained in college and completed my education then. This, however, is water over the dam. I must take things as they are and make the best of them."

There are hundreds and thousands of young men enrolled in college today. There are hundreds and thousands of high-school graduates who are looking forward to entering college in September. The statement has been made publicly that those enrolled in college, when drafted, would be deferred until they had completed at least the year of their present enrollment.

If a young man is engaged in preparing for some vital form of mechanical warfare, in all probability he would be permitted to complete his course and would be given additional instruction. A communication from the United States Office of Education urges the young men of the nation who are ready for college to pursue their studies that they may be better prepared for the emergency when it overtakes them. If I were in college, I would make every possible effort to remain there until graduation. If I were a prospective college student, I would select my college, outline my course, and make every possible effort to enroll. This would not be unpatriotic, but would be most patriotic. In this atomic age, combatants should know two things—how to operate efficiently and effectively the weapons of warfare placed in their hands, and second, how to take care of themselves so that they might live to serve their country, mankind and world civilization. It is conceded that authorities and our representatives in Washington, have many serious and perplexing problems to solve, but it is also easily understood that the young men and young women of today share those problems and personal considerations that must enter into the entire picture.

It seems so short a time since we fought such a terrible war, that another one to come at this early date is almost unbearable, if not unthinkable. Every Christian man and woman in this country should pray earnestly for the wisdom and guidance of God, and that this wisdom and guidance should be given not only to the authorities of the United States, but also to the ones in authority in all countries on this earth.

I do trust that this war will be confined to Korea and that it will be of short duration. May God grant it.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Not within the last fifteen years has Elon College faced such uncertainty. Were it not for the war threat that hangs over the nation and the draft that has already begun to reach out its prongs, the college at this time would be facing the new year with optimism and a great deal of assurance. If the draft should be increased so as to take from the campus many of our students and prevent others from entering, it would of course complicate the whole program of the college.

The college receives its major support from student tuitions and fees. The church makes a sizeable contribution to its current budget. Should the war occasion a decrease in students, the college, must, of necessity, look to the church for increased support. This is not a new idea, but one ever-present in the minds of us all.

The churches of the Southern Convention and the Sunday schools, after two weeks of hesitancy, have made encouraging contributions on their apportionments. For this the college expresses its gratitude.

the body for the dispensation of the Holy Spirit.

That dispensation is now. The Holy Spirit is the action of God in man. The residence of the Holy Spirit is in the Church. Though he may and does work out far beyond the Church, the Church is his residence.

The Holy Spirit, in the broadest sense, works throughout the world, teaching humanity about good and evil. He works, in the deepest sense, in the Church by revealing Christ and drawing man into ever fuller Christian truth. In the most fundamental sense the Holy Spirit works in individuals creating divine life within them.

This is the age of the Holy Spirit. He is in the Church now, eager, yearning, striving to continue the earthly ministry of Christ. He is as real, as near and as mighty as on the day of Pentecost. Let the church face its present Pentecostal task of confronting sinful men with a loving, redeeming God as it did at the first, and now as then it will live and move and have its being in the certainty of the Holy Spirit as a present, saving, directing force.

The massive gates of Circumstance
Are turned upon the smallest hinge,
And thus some seeming pettiest chance
Oft gives our life its aftertinge.
The trifles of our daily lives,
The common things scarce worth recall,
Whereof no visible trace survives—
These are the mainsprings, after all.

At Home and Abroad

FROM CONFUCIANISM TO CHRISTIANITY

The Autobiography of Yu Jui-lin

In the year 1900, in the city of Foochow, a little boy was born to a heathen family whose name is Yu Jui-lin. "Yu," the family name, means "play," "Jui" is "good luck," and "lin" means "rain in the dry season."

My father died while I was very young. His occupation was that of a cloth merchant. My mother is seventy-seven years old now. She studied Chinese classics and learned handwork. After my father died she used the work of her two hands to support the family, and at the same time taught me lessons every night. When I was twelve years old my teacher, a Christian, recommended me to Foochow College. I studied in the primary school one year and then went on to finish the eight years course at Foochow College. Being poor I got through school by working in my spare time—watering flowers, washing floors, and teaching music to a lower class. Then I became an office assistant and finally started a literacy class and preaching in a village near what was to be the site of Fukien Christian University.

How did I make the change from Confucianism to Christianity? I was influenced by faithful Christians and by the Bible. The Easter of 1916 I changed my life and was baptized by Dr. W. L. Beard. Three years later Mr. T'ing Li-mei, the secretary of the Student Department of the National YMCA, came to Foochow to lead the Student Volunteer Movement. God called me to the ministry but I went to take the postal service examination. After debating for a week I confessed my sin and answered His call.

In 1926 I married Miss Lin Hsueh-ju, the daughter of the Foochow College Monitor. She was a graduate of Wenshan Girls School. Now we have four sons and a daughter. The oldest son is 22 years old. There are eight mouths to feed and my salary is not large, but God takes care of us and gives us the valuable gift of new life.

Briefly, my experience during these years has been as follows:

1922 I graduated from Fukien

Union Seminary and Dr. W. L. Beard called me to be Religious Director at Foochow College.

1924 Rev. Otto G. Reumman, Mission Religious Education Secretary, invited me to be the Sunday School Secretary and work with him to promote religious education activities in our Chinese churches. At that time it was quite a new project.

1926 I studied at Cheeloo University, Shantung, majoring in religious education and psychology, from the fall of 1926 to the summer of 1927.

1927 My elder brother invited me to the Philippine Islands and I taught there in a Chinese school.

1928 I returned to Foochow to be preacher at Lau Memorial Church.

1933 I was ordained to the ministry, continuing to serve at Lau Memorial. The following are the significant points concerning my seventeen years there:

a. When I came to Lau Memorial there were 165 members and the church was in debt. I thank God that I never had any financial shortage and there was money in the bank when I left. The number of church members increased to 365.

b. A special effort was made to work with government school students, who responded eagerly. I also started jail preaching and continued it for seven years and a half. I taught the inmates the gospel of Jesus and used sympathy to influence them. I will never forget the fruits of that work, glory be to God.

c. During World War II many of the church members moved inland, leaving only the poor members in the city. A handwork center was opened to aid poor members where they worked at weaving, towel-making, sewing, and furniture-making. During the three years that this was carried on poor members and their families were helped and some of the income was used to help their neighbors. Forty-three church members came to work.

d. In lay training I always used their homes as the center of work.

1945 World War II ended in August of this year. It was the victory year.

1947 I came to Dionghoh District in November. I enjoyed this new work which meant leaving a big church in the city to work in a rural area. I feel that this work is more important than any other I have done. Now I am the district secretary and must travel to the country from them and have begun to see their needs.

In conclusion let me say again, "Thank God." He called me out of the heathen way of life. His love made me a minister not only in the city, but also in the country. I hope for a chance to have further training in rural church work. Being 50 years old this year, I have another fifteen years to give to work for the Kingdom of God before retirement.

AMERICAN BOARD TO EVACUATE CHINA MISSIONARIES.

By HAROLD S. MATTHEWS, China Secretary.

I shall begin with part of the cable which came from Foochow on July 3, six days after the Korean crisis arrived:

"Foochow church leaders advise early gradual departure missionaries for the churches' good."

With the arrival of this message, all previous time tables were upset and we had to begin discussions about a much accelerated withdrawal of our missionary staff. You will remember that Newsletter No. 43 closed with quotations referring to the attitude of the People's Government toward Christian missionaries, funds and institutions, which appeared to be growing more favorable—and is still governing the thinking of most of our North China missionaries. A month previous to the blow-up in Korea, a strong group of Chinese Christian church leaders issued a manifesto which I cannot quote at this point since it came to me as a confidential document.

The gist of it is that in principle the general trend is in the direction of gradual withdrawal of most missionaries and the inauguration of plans for full self-support of the Christian Church by Chinese as early as is advisable in the best interests of the Church. This manifesto was given wide publicity. Radical interpretations were put upon it which, without the Korean trouble, would have been smoothed out and clarified. But when the document reached Foochow it was only a few days until "Korea," and worse yet for Fukien, the placing of the U. S. Fleet in the straits separating Formosa from Fukien, where invasion preparations

VALLEY WOMEN ELECT NEW PRESIDENT.

The Virginia Valley Woman's Conference met on July 27 at Winchester, Virginia.

At this meeting, Mrs. J. E. Bryant, Rt. 1, Harrisonburg, Virginia, was elected the new president. Mrs. Bryant succeeds Miss Verdie Showalter, who has been the very active president of the Valley women for several years past. Mrs. Bryant has also been active in woman's work, and just this past year was Spiritual Life superintendent. She has also been a District superintendent, and that job alone should make her well acquainted with the work of the women.

Congratulations and best wishes to Mrs. Bryant.

SANFORD WOMEN HAVE MAY FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM.

The May Fellowship Day, which has become an annual program in our missionary society, was held this year in the new assembly room of our church.

Miss Stella Stout, president, presided over the program and presented to us first, Mrs. W. B. O'Neill, who led an inspiring devotional in which several of the young people of the church participated. Then Miss Stout introduced to the group Mrs. William T. Scott of Elon College, the speaker for the evening. Mrs. Scott built her discussion around the work that the women of the churches are doing to raise the standards of living throughout the country, and she especially emphasized the fact that there are so many cases that we are overlooking in our own communities. "When we begin to criticize or look down upon people for their actions," she discussed further, "we should stop and think about their reasons for acting thus. When we do this, we begin to reach the foundation for such actions. It is at the foundation or base of the trouble that we must begin our work."

After Mrs. Scott had presented to the women ways by which we could begin our improvement program, we had a social hour.

A committee of women served delicious refreshments, and we spent this period of time conversing with the members of the Turner's Chapel missionary group and the Shallow Well group, who had joined us for our evening's program.

HOPEDALE.

The Women's Missionary Society of the Hopedale Christian Church held its monthly meeting last Thursday at the home of Mrs. Otis Carey on the Hopedale road.

Mrs. B. F. Blanchard presided over the business session, at which time new members and visitors were welcomed into the club.

Mrs. Linda Kappel was the guest speaker and she talked on Estonia, her native country, as well as Russia and Germany. At the end of her talk she displayed handmade dolls, jewelry and some books.

USE YOUR VACATION TIME.

It is a good idea to use some of our vacation time for some worthwhile reading to improve your mind. Why not try one of the Mission Study books this summer while you are sitting out in the sun at the beach or just trying to cool off? When fall rolls around, there are always so many things to do it is hard to find time to read a book. Let us all try to improve our minds a little this summer while we don't meet so often and while we may feel a little bit more rested and able to absorb serious thoughts.

The Massanetta Bible Conference, August 21-September 3, offers a wonderful opportunity for mind improvement. Each day a wide variety of Bible study, worship, music and addresses is offered by the country's top speakers. It is well worth the time of anyone. Massanetta Springs is about six miles east of Harrisonburg, Virginia, on Highway 33.

OUR NEW THEME: "THY WILL TO DO."

Our themes for the past few years follow one another as though planned to show progress in Christian living:

"And Thy Neighbor";

"Opening Doors";

"Horizons Unlimited";

"We Dedicate Ourselves."

And now, in 1950-51, our theme is:

"Thy Will to Do."

OUR THEME HYMN: "BEFORE THE CROSS OF JESUS."

Tune: "Beneath the Cross of Jesus."

The words to this hymn were written by Dr. Ferdinand Q. Blanchard when he was the minister of our Euclid Avenue Congregational Christian Church, Cleveland, Ohio. Dr. Blanchard is a former Moderator of our General Council and one of our outstanding ministers. He wrote the words to this hymn for a special occasion—a service of dedication—and it is very fitting that this hymn was chosen for our theme this year to be used whenever possible in our services:

Before the cross of Jesus
Our lives are judged today;
The meaning of our eager strife
Is tested by His way.
Across our restless living
The light streams from his cross,
And by its clear, revealing beams
We measure gain and loss.

The hopes that lead us onward,
The fears that hold us back,
Our will to dare great things for God,
The courage that we lack.
The faith we keep in goodness,
Our love, as low or pure—
On all, the judgement of the cross
Falls steady, clear, and sure.

Yet humbly, in our striving,
O God, we face its test,
We crave the pow'r to do thy will
With him who did it best.
On us let now the healing
Of his great Spirit fall,
And make us brave and full of joy
To answer to his call.

Since the words of this hymn appear in our new Year Book, it will be easy for all to carry our Year Books in our pocket books, and so be ready to sing this theme hymn at any of our meetings. For those who do not have the printed Year Book, the

W. N. C. YOUTH HOLDS RALLY.

The young people of the Western North Carolina Conference held their annual summer Rally at the Ether Church on Sunday, July 30. Over 200 enthusiastic young people from 17 churches filled the church to capacity long before the service began.

The program was very good and will long be remembered by those who attended. It was well executed by the president, Bill Simmons. The afternoon was very hot, but the program moved along so well that almost everyone forgot all about the weather.

The young people from the Shady Grove church surprised everyone as they walked off with the attendance trophy. Shady Grove is one of the smaller churches of the conference, but they had 100 per cent attendance at the rally. This was a challenge to the larger churches. Our hats are off to Shady Grove, and good luck next time.

The next rally will be held at the Pleasant Union Church on October 29. This will be the most important meeting of the year because it will be the time to elect officers. Plan now to attend this meeting.

YOUNG TERM WORKERS EMBARK.

Eight young Congregational Christian workers going out for their first term of service overseas, sailed on Friday, August 4, from New York on the S. S. Khedive Ismail, bound for Istanbul, Turkey.

These young people are term workers, six of whom will teach for three years and two for two years in schools founded and conducted by the American Board. Three of them are World War II, U. S. Army and Navy veterans. The group includes:

Mr. and Mrs. James Edward Dittes of Hamden, Conn., going to the American School for Boys in Talas, Turkey. Mr. Dittes is a World War II U. S. Navy veteran. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Mercein E. Dittes of Rocky River, Ohio. Mrs. Dittes is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bertram E. Skinner of Racine, Wisconsin.

Miss Elizabeth Boynton Richmond, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold E.

Richmond of South Hanover, Mass., recently a teacher in the Oak Grove School, Vassalboro, Maine, going to teach in the American Academy for Girls in Seutarri, Turkey.

Mr. Melvin Eugene Blumenfeld, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard J. Blumenfeld of Gary, Indiana, an ex-serviceman of World War II in the U. S. Army Air Corps, going to the American School for Boys in Talas, Turkey.

Mr. Norman Lee Stewart, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Wesley Stewart of Evansville, Indiana, World War II Navy veteran, going to teach in the American College for Boys in Tarsus, Turkey.

Mr. Robert Arthur Schinske, son of Emily B. Schinske of Long Prairie, Minnesota, going to teach in the American College for Boys in Tarsus, Turkey.

Mr. Kenneth M. Olsen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Marvin R. Olsen of Glen Ellyn, Illinois, going to teach in the American College for Boys in Tarsus, Turkey.

Miss Kathryn Elizabeth Faust, the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Irving C. Faust of Racine, Wisconsin, going to teach in the American Collegiate Institute of Izmir, Turkey.

NORTH CAROLINIAN GETS NATIONAL POST.

Rev. A. Wilson Cheek of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, has been appointed director of young people's work for the International Council of Religious Education, effective September 1, according to Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary.

Mr. Cheek has been the director of youth work for the Board of Christian Education and Publication of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, with headquarters in Philadelphia, since December, 1947.

Mr. Cheek will also serve as executive secretary of the United Christian Youth Movement, which is administered through the International Council of Religious Education. The U. C. Y. M. is the cooperative youth agency of 40 denominations, more than 800 state and local councils of churches, and seventeen national youth-serving organizations.

Prior to his national work, Mr. Cheek held pastorates in Conover, Brookford and Hickory, North Carolina. During this time he was active in church and community youth work, social education and church extension.

Born, reared and educated in North Carolina, Mr. Cheek attended Catawba College, in Salisbury, and the Evangelical and Reformed Seminary at Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

THE MOVIE, "SECOND CHANCE."

"Second Chance" is our feature movie for the year. It was professionally made and is based on an original story by Faith Baldwin. It is a 16 mm. film, and the showing time is 80 minutes.

We have three sets of the film in the Convention office. One of these is now being shown in the Valley of Virginia and will be used there until sometime in October. The second one is being used in North Carolina. We have two dates for the use of the third one in Eastern Virginia in September, as follows: September 3, Franklin, and September 10, Suffolk. Liberty Spring has requested it for November 5. Mr. Vore has said that they would be very glad to keep the film in our Suffolk Church during the fall months for those who would like to use it. If you would like to use it in September, October or November, please clear with our church office in Suffolk.

Small announcement folders about the picture which may be slipped into an envelope or used for posters for publicity purposes may be obtained from the Convention office by writing to the undersigned at Elon College, N. C.

words may be mimeographed and slipped into your local Year Book, or they may be included in your local Year Book. So many times we do not use our theme hymn—sometimes because it is unfamiliar—sometimes because it is hard to sing—sometimes because we forget about it. Let us use our theme hymn this year in as many meetings as possible, and then it will mean something to us. Let us mean these words when we sing them and keep them in our minds all during the year.

"Thy Will to Do" is our will to do.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

The other day I was reading of the excellent way in which a departmental superintendent made use of the talent in her group. She was a primary superintendent and she knew that a dozen or more of her children were taking music lessons: violin, piano, and horn.

This is what she did—asked the names of her pupils' teachers and then telephoned the music teachers to see if they would help prepare each child for solo work. She made a schedule giving plenty of notice in advance to the participants. Some played preludes, others gave the offertory. In the case of violin, clarinet or french horn, one played while another accompanied.

She reported that the children enjoyed hearing their companions play, the performer gained confidence, and in each case the music teacher was pleased and cooperative.

The writer related how one child came to rehearsal, which was held on Saturday before the actual playing, and said she was going to play "Blue Danube Waltz." It was not the piece chosen by her teacher, but her mother suggested it as being "pretty." Pretty though it be, it is hardly the appropriate tune for an offertory. The superintendent was puzzled, but she delayed her criticism. She was arranging the room for the next day's service and had placed a lovely colored picture of some birds on the table. The little girl said she knew a bird call that she played in her exercises. Seizing upon this, the leader instructed the little girl to play that to "go with our service." She did and was pleased that she had added to the bird study.

Such a project could be carried out by any group from primary up. Too few children have a chance for public playing. It adds to their confidence and gives them a sense of fulfillment.

The article was in an old copy of Church Business, the little publication of the Duplex Envelope Co., in Richmond, Virginia.

If you have found interesting ways to share music or art with children wont you please let us hear about them?

Influence is what you think you have until you try to use it.—Selected.

THEY ARE "FROM MISSOURI."

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Show me! "Montrez moi!" the French say. A child really is like that; you must show him. For instance, he must be shown that his home needs to be made and kept clean, attractive and inviting, and that each person in it needs to contribute his share toward keeping it this way. While your boy and girl are young and impressionable is the time to have them adopt small household responsibilities which would make them feel themselves to be an integral part of the home.

Naturally, it is easier for a mother quickly to pick up the toys and get them out of sight than it is for her to stand by while untrained little fingers do this. But when the owner of the toys accomplishes his small job, he has the pleasure of seeing the living room ready for Daddy's homecoming and, too, he has acquired a sense of responsibility—he has been shown his part in this pleasing preparation. Even a young child should be taught to feel joy in contributing to the welfare of his family, his friends and his community.

I remember a conversation, in a novel I once read, between a girl and her fiance after the passing of the girl's mother. It ran in this vein:

"The part that makes me feel so sad"—the girl spoke wistfully—"is that my mother never saw anything of life. Practically all of her days were spent on this quiet street!"

"Ah, but that was living!" the young doctor replied gently. "She saw all of life here and, I'm sure, she lived more fully than many folks who traveled the world over!"

All the great lessons can be taught to children at home and on their own street. You, parent reader, have, no doubt, been respecting your child's rights as an individual; you have made him conscious of the fact that you realize the importance of his work and play. Now, let him in on the place he should take—if you have not already done so. You can say, "It's time for you, dear, to think about the importance of Mother's and Daddy's play, work and possessions."

There must be give and take in this world; neither parent nor child should be too much on the receiving end. If an unevenly-balanced condition exists it will give the child a false idea of his position in the world. He should be shown by daily experiences. Reminders should be given:

"We shall leave the radio to you while you listen to Billy Goat Gruff, Peter. At this time, you will want to be quiet so that Mommy may listen to the symphony." "Daddy has worked all day for us and I have cooked the dinner for you and Daddy; it is your part to take the dishes to the kitchen." "Bettina, the ash trays need to be emptied and put in their places. No, you didn't use them, but everyone in a family has to help to keep the house livable."

Through cooperation, the young learn that the welfare and happiness of all depend upon the welfare and happiness of each. Let them understand that when Mother is resting, they should play quietly—to help everyone. For if Mother is rested, well and happy, that helps Daddy to be cheerful when he comes home tired. If Daddy is always made cheerful at home he begins each day aright, and in that manner helps everyone else in his office. If the members of Daddy's office are at their best, that helps those who work with them, and they, in turn, help others. Putting the matter this way, your child will see his job is not only to live and let live, but to live and help live. As the years pass, he can be shown that the good life is the rewarding life, and he can be made to feel a deep appreciation for our great democracy.

His country, he will need to be shown, is part of the great wide world and each man, woman and child in it owes a responsibility to this world. He must be shown by example and by helpful experiences throughout childhood—the parent remembering that all boys and girls are "from Missouri" until they are shown—that only by being a good citizen of his own country will he become a worthwhile world citizen and thus lead a full, happy, satisfying life.

Ministers had to be careful in the long ago, for it was enacted that they must not "give themselves to excess in drinking or riot, playing at dice, cards, or any unlawful game, but at all times convenient hear or read somewhat of the Holy Scriptures, always doing the things that shall appertain to honesty"—advice that may have been needed at that time.—Will T. Hale in True Stories of Jamestown.

JOHN, PREACHER OF REPENTANCE.

LESSON VIII—AUGUST 6, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Bear fruits that befit repentance.—Luke 3:3.

LESSON: Luke 3:7-20

DEVOTIONAL READING: Luke 15:1-10.

John's Background.

John the Baptist was an answer to prayer. His father Zacharias and his mother Elizabeth had long prayed for him, and God answered their prayers by giving them a son. And it was made known unto them that this child was to be no ordinary child. He "was to be great in the sight of the Lord"; he was "to turn many of the children of Israel to the Lord their God"; he was "to make ready a people prepared for the Lord"; he was to "go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways"; and he was to be called "the prophet of the Highest." Not only were they to rejoice and be glad over his birth, but many others were to rejoice as well, for through his preaching, they were to find a new way of life, and also to be prepared for the coming of Jesus Christ himself.

We know little about John's early life, or training for his great task. Coming as he did from a father who was a priest and a mother who was of the family of Aaron, we may be sure that he was trained in the traditions of Israel, and that he became familiar with the prophecies concerning the coming of the Messiah. He was abstemious in life. A flaming spirit chartered even his early life. At an early date he apparently left the community in which he lived and went to dwell in the desert, in the quiet places far removed from the tides of commerce and social life, where he remained "until the day of his showing unto Israel." He dressed simply, ate sparingly, though much, became sensitive to the divine summons to his appointed mission. From obscurity he suddenly appears on the stage of history like a blazing comet sweeping across the sky. Jesus himself said that John was "a burning and shining light." Like his illustrious predecessor, with whose name his own name was coupled—Elijah, he was a man of fire.

He was all man, a yard wide, and a man of God at that.

John's Mission.

John had a specific mission. He was the forerunner of Jesus. It was his mission to prepare the hearts of the Jewish people for the coming of the Son of God. God was about to inaugurate a new era, to usher in a new dispensation, to set up a new order. It was John's job to prepare people for this new era. The Kingdom could not come until men's hearts had been changed. John was to prepare the way for the coming of the Kingdom.

John's Message.

The central and recurring emphasis in the message of John was repentance. Luke says that "he came preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." He insisted that men should do an about face, that they change not only their minds but change their ways. They were to bring forth fruits worthy of repentance. The Kingdom was at hand but they were not prepared to enter into it. It was urgent business too, serious business. It was as if a man had already laid the axe at the root of the tree, ready to cut it down. It was as if a man were threshing grain, separating the good grain from the chaff. It was a time of searching and of separation. Great issues were at stake. Great consequences were involved. He preached with fervor and with fire and many a man became troubled in conscience and in spirit as he heard this rugged prophet pronounce doom upon him unless he changed his ways. And that was true of high and low. John had only one message for all—repentance.

He used unorthodox and perhaps unpopular language. He addressed the multitudes as the "offspring of vipers." He pulled no punches. To those who had material things, he said that they ought to divide with others, both as concerning food and clothing; to publicans he said that they were to be honest; to soldiers he said that they were not to use violence, not to accuse others wrongfully, and to be content with their wages. So searching were his words, so high his moral commands, that the people began to wonder if he were not the Christ himself. But John soon set them right on this point. His baptism, which he administered as an outward sign of an inward change, was only water. The one who should come after him would baptize with the Holy Spirit and with fire. The man also "preached good things (or tidings) unto the people." For the most part, however, John's message was stern and searching, probing the minds and hearts of men and awakening within them a great discontent and even fear.

John's Manhood.

Before he was born it was said of John that he would "be great in the sight of the Lord." He was just that. He did not have any money. He did not have any social prestige or political power. He was not great in the sight of Rome. But he was great in the sight of the Lord, he was great in character. He had moral and spiritual as well as physical courage. He was not afraid of anybody—he stood before the ruler of the land and told him that he had no right to the woman who was his wife and whom he had stolen from his brother. He did not trim his message lest he should offend the taste of any man. He preached the truth fearlessly and faithfully, he hewed close to the line and let the chips fall where they would.

He was truly humble. He was willing to take second place gracefully. He was willing to decrease if the baby Christ could increase. This is all the more noteworthy when we consider how this quality was blended with his courage. It takes a strong man to be humble in the best sense of the word.

It should be noted in closing that one of the best things that John did was to train a small group of disciples, the inner circle of which became the first disciples of Jesus himself. This was perhaps after all John's greatest contribution to the Kingdom of God.

There are too many people today who are living easy, comfortable, shallow lives. They can have no part in the Kingdom unless they repent and make an about face. The message of John the Baptist and of Jesus is needed today as then. It is only as men repent and are baptized by a new spirit that the Kingdom of God can come.

"If the blueprint is right, the bridge will take the traffic."

AS HE THAT SERVETH.

I can wish nothing better than such an experience soon for any young highbrows here who may be concealing overconfidence in their sagacity among the folds of these academic gowns. You will begin to live when you realize that life is not cut to the measure of any parchment.

Thirdly, service is falsified at its inception if there is pity in it. For pity is a sentiment saturated with condescension. Pity means being sorry for people, while we remember how much better off we are. Even though we be humbly grateful for being better off than we deserve, yet while we are pitying people we can never get close enough to them to be of any real help to them on the inside. For we are still standing outside and above their condition. We shall encounter many people in sorry plights, whom we can help if we will. But we shall not really get at them, we shall not succeed in serving them as the persons they are, we shall be limiting our usefulness to them by regarding them as mere objects, as dilapidated furniture for us to repair, unless we begin to feel sorry with them: not pity, but sympathy or compassion. To be sorry for them is an affront to their dignity. And their dignity is as high and intrinsic as our own. To be sorry with them, on the other hand, is to be their friends.

So at last we come to the one word which is the synonym of service as Jesus expressed it in the words St. Luke brings us, and in the symbolic act which St. John reports on the same occasion. That one word is friendship. It was because Jesus was their friend that he could serve his disciples, even at so low a chore as washing their feet, without loss of self-respect on his part, or shadow of resentment on theirs. In the Fourth Gospel this episode appears indeed as an act of promotion for them; for it is followed, at no great interval, by that wonderful word, "no longer do I call you servants . . . but I have called you friends." Before he washed their feet, they had felt that they were under his orders; ever after, they would remember that he was standing beside them instead of over them. When we stand beside people, and honestly like them, then that makes them begin to like us, with equal respect and kindling interest on both sides. In consequence of that mutuality, they can do things for us and we can do things for them, even the littlest things, even the biggest things, without embarrassment or annoyance on either side.

So, as friends of Jesus, we go forth to be friends and make friends in his Name; that is, in his power; that is, in his spirit of genuine simple kindness, which is the only power he has ever chosen or consented to have among mankind. We are not to be odd-job men, and no more. We are not to be do-gooders. We will learn as much from all sorts of friends as we can teach them, and from some of them a great deal more, when it comes down to real wisdom, below the surface of our more extensive information. Through all ups and downs, we will remember to be everybody's friend.

Friendliness is something no one can take from us unless we give it up ourselves. And in the long run, nothing can withstand it. No man fails in his Christian vocation if through all its duties he never forgets to be a friend first of all, and all the time. It is only the surface ways and means for efficiency in the church-centered professions that can be acquired in classes and by supervised practice. They have their place. But the basic techniques are not techniques at all. They are corollaries of this first proposition in Christian experience, that "we love . . . because he first loved us." Whom we love we will serve; and whom we love, and they alone, we can serve, to their good and our own.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." One way to lay down our lives in service is to die, as Jesus died, when there is no other way open for loyal love. But another way, and in his sight I believe it is as great, is to dedicate our lives in the very living to him who first loved us, and for his sake to all for whom he died, men and women and children as dear to him as we are, and hence as dear to us as he is.

The degrees granted here today are of little moment in themselves, dearly though they have been bought in years and toil. What value they may have must be as early milestones on the long road of Christian kindness, doing simple things in simple ways for others' comfort and happiness, as Jesus washed the feet of his disciples. At the end of that road will come the true and final degree, when the Master himself will say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

EVACUATES MISSIONARIES.

have preceded for many months. Adding fuel to the anti-American propaganda in Fukien was the incendiary statement by the Premier and Foreign Minister, Chou En-Lai.

On July 5 the following cable went from Boston:

"Cabinet approves Mission-Synod arrange departure schedule including Fairfields to Hong-kong. Disapprove separation of families. Cable your general plan also when applying specific exit permits."

In answer to our message we received these two:

"Travel uncertainty prevents general plan yet. Leona Burr, the Thelins, Jacksons, Fairfields applying exit first available means."

"Anticipate complete withdrawal by October. Hopeful via Amoy. Faurot, Jacobs, Riggs. Thompsons desire and Houston, Ward willing reallocation."

To interpolate these messages, let me say that Leona Burr is scheduled to go to Kobe College to teach. Guy and Betty Thelin, Dick and Dorothy Jackson (and one son) will be coming home on furlough. Albert Faurot, Jennie Jacobs, Dr. Ed and Frances Riggs (one baby son), Allen and Helen Thompson (and two sons) and Lyda Houston, will probably be transferred to Japan, the Philippines, India or elsewhere.

Since these messages arrived, we have learned that Malcolm and Phyllis White (and four children) have asked for exit permits as have also Helen Smith and her father, Riwad H. Smith. That Leaves Laura Ward, Will and Bessie Topping, Lyda Houston, Lucy Lanktree, Jennie Jacobs, Alden and Derrith Matthews (and two children) who had not yet applied for exits. The first request had not been granted when we last heard. There is a rumor that a boat might be able to take out fifty missionaries in August, and should this rumor become true, I presume all of our missionaries will be aboard, though I can make no such promise. The Anglican missionaries and the Methodists are also planning early withdrawal from Fukien.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Shy little four year old Clara Lee saw me waiting for a moment on the porch and without saying a word came and slipped up in my lap. She hadn't said a word, and I didn't. I just pressed my arm snugly about her, and that was that. Presently she looked up at me and smiled as much as to say, how long is this pantomime going to keep up.

Three and a-half year old Mecimore meets me with a run and a jump into my arms, and a load of talk. Bobby, the cripple with a crinkly smile, hangs on those crutches with a cherry "hi" in response to my "Top of the morning to you, Bobby. How's everything?" Five mornings now in succession, little Tommy and I have ridden to the doctor for poison oak shots. Tommy yelled up a storm at the first shot, but since then he just shuts his eyes and turns his head, and calls it a day. Roy went with us yesterday to get a shot for having stuck a rusty nail in his foot. Billy looks a little thin after two weeks of shingles, which upset his vacation, for he was away at the time. By and large they are a big and healthy lot. By the way, I have received sixteen within the year.

And that reminds me, I came here a year ago. Ann has graduated at college and will teach this fall in the Burlington schools. John has done his freshman year and is working this summer on the State highways. I have preached practically every Sunday, and I broadcast over WFNS, Burlington, every Sunday afternoon at 12:45. If I am not in the city, I transcribe it or Ann substitutes for me. My work at the orphanage thrills me and I am trying every day to learn to do it better. My "better half" is better than half by a good bit. We are trying to do our part, and, I believe every child and worker here knows that and appreciates it. That makes every day a happy one.

While I am writing, I want to invite you to attend our Home-Coming Day and 43d Anniversary on September 3. It will be open house for everybody who can come. I am sending special invitations to all alumni of the institution and asking them to bring their families and friends, letting us know if possible who and how many will come. To them and their friends there is to be served a free picnic lunch, as in former years.

I am further suggesting that our churches, Sunday schools, or organized classes, get together and bring their own picnic lunches. Tables will be placed in the shade on the campus, ice water will be furnished, and soft cold drinks may be purchased. Come and bring an offering if you are so disposed. But come and visit us, for everything will be in readiness for you. We shall see that you have a good time and enjoy your visit. Let us know if you are planning to come. We are hoping and praying that a very large number of our churches will be represented here any time between 10:00 a. m. and 6:00 p. m.

If there is any chance of some of the churches paying their Orphanage apportionment during these lean summer months, it would certainly help. Several churches sent us generous offerings recently, which we greatly appreciate. And how about that check from A. C. Shearrer for $100.00? He wrote that he saw my appeal in THE SUN and wanted to help.

Thanks, and thank you, too.

DAMASCUS CEMETERY.

In 1949 the Damascus Church, near Chapel Hill, North Carolina, presented the original wall and what monies they had on hand to the Cemetery Friends, and they guaranteed the church to build them a wall two and one-half feet high and one and one-half feet thick around the old and new cemetery. By receiving contributions from those who had loved ones and friends buried there, and by work given by the church members and friends, we have completed the wall.

The Cemetery Friends are this day (July 30, 1950) presenting it to the church, with the following requests:

1. We request that no wisteria, creeping ivy, periwinkle, or creeping vines of any kind be planted on this wall. Climbing roses must be on a frame three feet from the wall and must be kept pruned and not allowed to hang on the wall. These rocks have been in the original wall since 1878 and they look new and clean as they did the day they were hauled here, so we request that they be kept so.

2. We request that those who have loved ones and friends buried here give your name and post office address and the amount that you will give annually to help the church keep up the cemetery.

3. We request that R. F. Poythress, J. A. Canada, W. W. Crabtree, R. P. Neville, Aubrey McLennan and Mrs. Paul Long be a committee of six to keep the cemetery in good condition.

We ask the church to grant these requests and that they be recorded in the minutes of the church.

So far as we can find out, this is the only country church in the United States that has a wall around its cemetery as large as this one, and also has as many contributions from as many different states and foreign countries as this one has. Damascus should be honored in having a cemetery like this one.

The Lord bless Old Damascus.

THE INFIDEL'S CHALLENGE.

"If I firmly believed, as millions say they do, that the knowledge and practice of Christianity in this life would influence destiny in another world, Christianity would be to me everything.

"I would cast aside earthly cares as follies and earthly thoughts and feelings as vanity. Christianity would be my first waking thought and my last image before sleep sank me into unconsciousness.

"I would labor in its cause alone.

"I would take thought for the morrow and eternity alone.

"Earthly consequences could never stay my hands or seal my lips.

"I would esteem one soul gained for heaven worth a lifetime effort.

"I would go forth to the world and preach Christ in season and out of season, and my next text would be: 'What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?'"

Let us accept this challenge.

YOU ARE IN POLITICS.

The bald and shocking truth is that there are enough patriotic Christian voters in this country to stop licensed wrong-doing, stop waste, corruption and inefficiency whenever they chose to do so. Whether you like it or not, you are "in politics." You may say that politics is not your game, but you are wrong. It is very much your game and if you are a stayaway you are letting someone else take your turn at bat.

Politics is the process by which citizens act together to get something done about a common problem.

Some of the strongest political forces in America have nothing to do with political organizations—they are groups of working people, of women, of manufacturers, of farmers of real estate men. One thing characterizes every influential group—it is active.

The duty of church people is greatest of all, because church people have no "axe to grind"—no selfish interest.

WHAT ONE MAJOR THINKS.

"When I entered the military service, I believed that social drinking was an inherent part of army social life. Further, I felt that refusing liquor often placed one's host in an embarrassing position, and that graciousness demanded indulgence in social drinking. For several years I was an army drinker. About two years ago, I gave up drinking and serving liquor. Based on my own experience as both a drinker and a nondrinker in the Army, I say with conviction you do not have to drink. Refusing to have a drink has not affected my relationships with others, either personally or officially. Not serving liquor has caused no more stir than not drinking it. Our home is no less hospitable and gracious now than it was when drinks were served regularly."

—Major Samuel N. Karrick, Jr.

The higher men climb, the longer their working day. And any young man with a streak of idleness in him may better make up his mind at the beginning that mediocrity will be his lot. Without immense, sustained effort he will not climb high. And even though fortune or chance were to lift him high, he would not stay there. For to keep at the top is harder almost than to get there. There are no office hours for leaders.

—Cardinal Gibbons.

TIGHT SPOT

By Charles A. Wells

It is time we faced the fact that all historians, philosophers, scientists, and even top military men agree that the techniques of mass slaughter and destruction have reached such a state that modern war must at last be condemned as totally immoral—as it is totally destructive. Man must find a way to end war, or war will end man. Yet, tyranny being what it is, men will accept war rather than give up their freedom, even knowing that war's cost and destruction will rob them of the very things they seek to defend. This dilemma is pressing upon Christianity its greatest decision in centuries, for only the Church can lead man out of this tragic plight. The only possible solution is to heighten and increase the world spiritual forces so that such powers may supercede violence. It will take a world-wide spiritual awakening to do it. This will be hard, for it will provide no profitable war contracts, no medals or rapid promotions, but the alternative is a fate that makes all gains useless.

Central Committee of World Council Holds Meeting in Toronto, Ontario

Delegates to Central Committee Meeting in Recessional from Ecumenical Service at Timothy Eaton Memorial Church, Toronto, Ontario

Acting through its administrative Central Committee, in session at Emmanuel College, July 8-15, the World Council of Churches reviewed its achievements during the past year, surveyed some of the problems faced by member churches, and made plans for the next world-gathering Assembly. Host to the delegates and other representatives who came from 21 countries, was the Canadian Council of Churches, and the location was Emmanuel College, a United Church of Canada Theological school connected with Victoria University and the University of Toronto.

The World Council . . . What Is It?

Because the World Council represents "a new and unprecedented approach to the problem of inter-church relationships," and because of the misunderstanding as to its nature and purpose, the Central Committee spent considerable time at its third annual session trying to state "more clearly and definitely" what the World Council is and what membership in the council does and does not imply.

UNION (SOUTHAMPTON).

On Sunday night, July 30, Union Church, Southampton County, Virginia, concluded a most successful Vacation Bible School. The total enrollment was 108 pupils, with 17 officers and teachers. There was an average attendance of 98, and certificates were awarded to ninety-two for good attendance and excellent work.

On Sunday morning 13 members were received into the church, six being intermediate young people from the Vacation Bible School, and the other seven being adults. This makes a total of 39 members received since our new pastor, Rev. Melvin Dollar, came on the field three months ago.

Both Sunday school and church attendance have doubled in this time. The church has accepted the blueprints presented by the trustees for a new church plant. This work is to begin sometime in August, with the hopes of it being completed by the end of the year.

PICTURE OF THE MONTH: "TREASURE ISLAND."

It is most appropriate that Robert Louis Stevenson's famous novel which has fired the imagination of several generations of adventure-loving readers should be produced on the screen for the centennial anniversary of his birth.

Even though we are often advised that a film should be judged on its own merit, regardless of its literary source, it would be difficult to do this for a presentation such as "Treasure Island" (RKO). Here is one case when the story and the film are inseparable. General faithfulness to the original plot is preserved by lifting out its highlights and weaving them together to give swift action and plausible continuity.

From the moment when "Black Dog" visits Captain Billy Bones at the Admiral Benbow Inn, the audience is taken into the intrigue and, soon after, on a flight to adventure. Bobby Driscoll seems to be a young Jim Hawkins, but he acquits himself manfully of his many tasks, dangerous encounters and successful escapes. The rest of the cast is composed of a large group of British actors so fittingly chosen that recognition of the familiar story's characters is immediate. For instance, who but Robert Newton could so ably represent Long John Silver of the ingratiating tongue and the pirate heart? The "Squire" (Walter Fitzgerald) is blustery and talkative, as he should be, and Basil Sidney is perfect as Captain Smollett. We would not forget Dennis O'Dea as Dr. Livesey, or the long list of pirates; even the parrot deserves being mentioned: "Pieces of Eight!" punctuating his appearances.

The color photography is incredibly beautiful, as are the story-book settings, the ship, the sea- and landscapes. The musical score is so descriptive that it deserves to be used on its own merit as a programmatic composition. The action is full of excitement; there are fights and blood flows. But there is also courage and demonstration of loyalty to one's given word.

Because it is identified with the past and has the character of an oft-told tale, there is not for young audiences the danger of association with contemporary life as in some current gangster films where modern crime is depicted in detail. All of this renders this new Walt Disney achievement particularly suitable for audiences.—Prot. Motion Picture Council.

CONCEPTS OF GOD.

There were two distinct varieties of civilization which reached culmination in Paul's day. One was the result of human philosophy centering in Athens; the other was the result of divine revelation centering in Jerusalem. Through the guidance of the Holy Spirit, Paul sought to supplant human philosophy with the wisdom of God. Champion and challenger that he was, Paul went to the very heart of enemy territory—Athens.

The city of Athens was founded in 1550 B. C., when Moses was about twenty-one years old. It was named for Athena, the Greek goddess of wisdom. It was celebrated for its warriors, statesmen, philosophers, sculptors, painters, poets, orators, its luxury and politeness.

Architecturally speaking, Athens was a beautiful and magnificent city. Here was the famous Acropolis. Here also was the celebrated Parthenon, two hundred seventeen feet high, ninety-eight feet wide. Within was a thirty-nine-foot statue of Minerva, made of ivory and covered with gold. In Athens was the Lyceum, where Aristotle taught; also the Academy, where Plato taught. In the center of the city was the Areopagus, crowned with the colossal image of Mars.

Luke, the historian, tells us that at the time Paul was in Athens the city was "wholly given to idolatry." In Athens there were more gods than men. Gods were everywhere—gods on pedestals, in niches, at street corners; gods and demigods, a wilderness of gods—even an altar to an "unknown god."

When Paul saw this demonstration of heathenism, his "spirit was stirred within him." Hence, he taught concerning the true and living God.

There are six recognized concepts of God in the world. We should like to briefly study them.

There is, first, atheism, which blatantly says there is no God. In our country there is an organization that is known as the Association for the Advancement of Atheism in America. It is regrettable to know that many college students have joined the A.A.A.A. Only the foolish and unlearned say there is no God. "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." For one to say there is no God, he must be God himself. He must be omniscient—that is he must know all things; for if there is but one thing he does not know, that might be knowledge concerning the existence of God. It is difficult to believe that anybody who is capable of thinking could be an atheist. Sir Walter Scott said: "I doubt if at all times and in all moods anybody ever adopted that hideous creed." Truly, "There are no atheists in the foxholes of Bataan."

Then there is agnosticism, which says that we do not know there is a God, and that it cannot be definitely ascertained whether or not there is a God. "Agnostic" is a Greek word equivalent to the Latin "ignorante," from which we get our English word "Ignorant." Hence, a Greek agnostic would be in plain language an ignoramus. Herbert Spencer was an agnostic. He wrote ten volumes on the subject. But he professed to know too much for one who claimed to have proved that we know nothing. He, therefore, discredits his own theory.

Next, we have polytheism, which is a religion declaring there are many gods. Egypt, Babylon, Rome and Greece were all polytheistic in their religions. Aristotle believed and taught that there was but one God, and as he passed down the streets of polytheistic Athens, the people would exclaim: "There goes that atheist!" The greatest contribution that the Hebrews have made to the world is the idea of one God: "Hear, O Israel: Jehovah our God is one Jehovah."

Another concept that people have of God is pantheism, which says that the world itself is God. Most of the religious systems of India are pantheistic, which accounts for the fact that they worship elephants and cows, and all the rest of the animal creation. In Egypt, the Jews came into direct contact with the Egyptians, who worshiped the creature rather than the creator. They worshiped oxen, heifers, sheep, goats, lions, dogs, monkeys, cats; the ibis, crane and the hawk; the crocodile, serpents, frogs, flies and beetles; the Nile and its fish; the sun, moon, planets and stars; fire, light, air, darkness—all were subjects of Egyptian idolatry. Hence,

THE SOUTH'S OUTSTANDING RURAL CHURCH

To North Carolina comes the honor of having the outstanding rural church in the Southeast. Olive Chapel Baptist Church, which is located on the old Durham-Fayetteville road six miles west of Apex, was named in a nationwide poll of Protestant ministers conducted by The Christian Century.

It is interesting to note that it is not necessary to go to a far country to find a conspicuous example of rural church program. It is encouraging to realize that we have all the ingredients for great rural churches right here in North Carolina.

What does it take to make a great country church? How does it differ from the rank and file of country churches? What are some distinguishing marks which might be kept in mind by other aspiring rural churches?

First, Olive Chapel has the undivided services of a seminary-trained minister. In order to secure the services of such a minister, it has provided an eight-room parsonage with modern facilities and pays a salary on a scale equal to city churches. The church sent its pastor to Europe in 1947, and he used the opportunity to good advantage in visiting nine countries of western Europe and studying rural life in the Scandinavian lands. Earlier, the church gave its minister an automobile. The Rev. Garland A. Hendricks, the pastor, is chaplain of the state organization of the Grange, an enlightened farmers' organization, whose local chapter meets in the community house. Some 200 recent books on agriculture and rural life may be found in his library. Olive Chapel believes that country people are entitled to preaching, good preaching, every Sunday in their own church. This church proves that country people, none of whom are wealthy, are willing and capable of supporting such a minister.

Second, the large brick church with three stories of class rooms, provides an adequate physical basis for an educational program comparable to that which could be found in the city church. Each department has its own auditorium for worship as well as neat rooms for each class. The nine-acre church plot is attractively landscaped. In addition to the impressive church of Georgian design, there is a large community house, a church athletic field, and a separate home for the sexton. This is not simply a preaching station. It ministers to a host of people in a variety of ways.

Third, Harold E. Fey, in writing the account, emphasizes the fact that "the church helps by creating an atmosphere favorable to improvement in production and living standards. The pastor has a good deal to say about the duty of faithful stewards to conserve the land. He lists among the sins of which frontier evangelists never heard, mining the soil and wasting the timber. He exalts the virtues of cooperation, contour plowing, terracing the hillsides, building check dams, soil testing, scientific fertilizing and diversification of crops."

Here, then, is a church and a community which do not resist new ideas. Here is a group of people who desire for their church as well as their community the blessings of our modern civilization. The minister does not have to force progress upon a reluctant and retarded membership. His words of wisdom and guidance fall into the fertile soil of open minds and devoted spirits.

Fourth. The church and the community provide educational, economic and recreational opportunities for their young people. It is said that a quarter of a century ago, in a few years, more than 80 young people from Olive Chapel were sent to college through great sacrifice. Young people do not have to go to the city to make a living. Through improved methods of agriculture which prevail throughout the community, people can make a better living on one-fourth as much land as they formerly required, even though earlier agricultural methods had nearly ruined many farms. Rather than condemn the commercial amusements of the city, this church provides wholesome social life and recreation in the community.

There should be more outstanding rural churches in the South. The Southern Convention should have its quota of outstanding rural churches. Assuredly, we do have some very fine ones; yet many cling to outmoded buildings and equipment. They are satisfied with part-time services and fail to keep the church in the main current of progress. Here in North Carolina and Virginia are rich community resources, the necessary ingredients for outstanding churches.

Olive Chapel grew by having a "six-year plan." Any church must have a plan in order to grow. The church must call able leadership, then be willing to follow that leadership, not resist it. Progress should be studied, charted and registered from year to year. Every church can grow in efficiency, if not in numbers. The kind of things that have been done at Olive Chapel can be done in many of our rural churches. Who will give them a fair trial?

No leader can make a happy, humane, workable society out of a stubborn lot of individualists who are more conscious of their rights than of their responsibilities, who accept a low moral standard in business and family life, who want more than they need, and are motivated by fear and greed, some of them forcing their wills through blocs of special interests which are prejudicial to the welfare of the whole society.

—Samuel D. Shoemaker.

Youth and The Church

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

[This sermon was prepared by Dr. Helfenstein, and was given at a Sunday morning service this summer by Bowden Ward in the absence of the pastor. Other boys participating in this Youth Sunday program were Lonny Bond, Bill Gatten, George Parsons, Jr., and Russell Selden. Says Dr. Helfenstein: "This plan of developing young churchmen can prove of great benefit to any church."]

*We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time,
In an age on ages telling
To be living is sublime.*

There is no other group in the human family for whom those words of the hymnist have such meaning as they have for youth. Nothing could be more sublime than to be young in an age like this, living at a time when a new world is in the making, and to have an opportunity to take a part in determining what that new world is to be.

Never has youth had such opportunity for self-realization and for self-expression as today; never has youth received such kindly recognition; never has greater responsibility been laid across the pathway of youth than is offered the youth of today. This day in which we live is peculiarly youth's day. Life has become youth's game, and youth is at the bat.

Every constructive effort of society is now directed in the interest of young people. Every provision is made for their education, direction and protection. Society virtually lives in its dreams of the possibilities of its youth. Likewise, the churches today make youth their chief concern.

Youth Ignored, Criticised.

It has not been so many generations ago when young people were practically ignored by their seniors. In many instances they were tolerated, but not appreciated. A distinct social cleavage was often found between youth and adults in the churches. Then came the time when young people were looked upon and considered as a problem. What to do with, and how to do anything for, these non-understandable youth was the all-absorbing question.

Later, youth became a target for wholesale criticism and censure—the idiosyncrasies of the few misguided young people gave prejudiced adults the excuse for condemning youth en masse. And because there were some mis-directed, ill-behaved and scandalous young people—such as there always have been in every generation—many people foolishly concluded that this regrettable minority characterized youth in general. Hence, mis-informed adults criticised and blamed young people as a class for the faults and short-comings of a few, judging young people as a group instead of as individuals, and failing to realize the absolute inconsistency of generalization when appraising either the merits or the demerits of the members in any group in society.

From Toleration to Appreciation.

Those days of contempt for, or mere toleration of young people, and the days of wholesale criticism and censure of young people have passed, and the day of appreciation of young people has dawned with new promise, not only for the youth of the world, but also for the world itself.

Youth has come to be looked upon as adult's second chance. And whatever the older generation has failed to realize for itself, it now hopes and prays may be realized in the lives of the younger generation.

The last stage in the evolution of the adult attitude toward youth is that of acknowledged dependence—the adult members of the society recognizing that the present status of the Church, as well as of society in general, is due to the failure of adults to meet their responsibility; and adults now concede that upon youth depends the revamping of the Church and the world-order into something better than adults have been able to produce.

During World War II, the government itself recognized that boys of eighteen and nineteen years of age held in their power the final destiny of the nation.

Youth are not responsible for the world as they find it. That responsibility rests upon adults. And adults, recognizing their failure to bequeath to youth a Church and a social order of the right type, have come to recognize humanity's dependence upon youth to do with and for the Church and for the world what adults have failed to do.

Adults have come to recognize that, notwithstanding the fact that Jesus said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me," that nevertheless Christianity was introduced to the first disciples as an adult religion. From the beginning, Christianity has dealt with the problems and the needs of mature life, and down through the centuries, its message in creeds, in hymns, and in sermons, has been directed mainly to the adult mind. The entire program of the Church, up until the present generation, has been largely shaped around the adult life. Only within recent years have adults appreciated the fact that the strength and perpetuity of the Church rest in the hands of its young people.

The question on which the future of the Church of Jesus Christ hangs, the question on which the future of the world hangs, is "will youth accept the challenge of this high recognition?" The response made by the young people to this acknowledged dependence of the Church, and "the future world at large," upon the youth of today will determine the future of the Church and of the world. Will the youth of today accept the challenge? Are they able to meet the challenge? The destiny of human welfare is held in youth's answer. I believe that youth is ready to accept the challenge, and that they are able to meet the challenge; and that in the words of the hymn they answer with a note of assurance:

"Are ye able," asks the Master,
"To be crucified with me?"
"Yea," the sturdy dreamers answered,
"To the death we follow Thee."

"Are ye able," comes the challenge,
"Now to live your life for Christ?"
To make sincere surrender
To the challenge of his life?"

"Are ye able?" still the Master
Whispers down eternity,
And heroic spirits answer
Now, as then, in Galilee:

"Lord, we are able
Our spirits are Thine.
Remold and make us,
Like Thee, divine.
Thy guiding radiance
Above us shall be
A beacon to God,
To love and loyalty."

The finer type of youth, as found in the schools and churches of today, represent the finest in character and promise of any generation of youth in the world's history. The careless, reckless and godless youth of today, may be more careless, more reckless and more godless than has been that type of youth in any generation of the past. But of this fact I am thoroughly convinced: that the other section of youth who stand for the higher ideals in thought and conduct, and who, I believe, represent the large majority of youth and young people—the section of noble-minded young people of today have never been surpassed in genuine worth by the young

Central Committee of World Council Meets

Prominent in drafting the document, cited by some council leaders as the most important single accomplishment of the Toronto meeting, were Bishop Angus Dun, Protestant Episcopal, Diocese of Washington, D. C., Dr. Douglas Horton, general secretary of the Congregational Christian Council in the U. S. A., and Father George Florovsky of St. Vladimir's Orthodox Academy, New York City.

The document pointed out that while some churches in the council cannot for doctrinal reasons regard other churches "as true and pure churches," they should "explore their differences in mutual respect, trust-tween the Churches. But in no case can or will any Church be pressed to take a decision against its own conviction or desire. The Churches remain wholly free in the action which, on the basis of their convictions and in the light of their ecumenical contacts, they will or will not take.

A very real unity has been discovered in ecumenical meetings which is, to all who collaborate in the World Council, the most precious element of its life. It exists and we receive it again and again as an unmerited gift from the Lord. We praise God for this foretaste of the unity of his people and continue hopefully ing . . . the Holy Spirit" to lead them into further "unity in Christ." respect, trusting . . . the Holy Spirit" to lead them into further "unity in Christ."

In a final summation, the following assurance was given both to the member churches and those not at present in the Council:

None of the assumptions implied in the existence of the World Council is in conflict with the teachings of the member Churches. We believe, therefore, that no Church need fear that by entering into the World Council it is in danger of denying its heritage.

As the conversation between the Churches develops and as the Churches enter into closer contact with each other, they will no doubt have to face new decisions and problems. For the Council exists to break the deadlock be-with the work to which he has called us together. For the Council exists to serve the Churches as they prepare to meet their Lord who knows only one flock.

Second Assembly to Meet in Evanston in 1953.

Approval of plans to hold the Second Assembly of the Council at Evanston, Illinois, in 1954, was voted by the Central Committee following a presentation of the projected arrangements by Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Church, New York Area, and one of the six presidents of the Council.

Bishop Oxnam emphasized the advantages of holding the world gathering in mid-western U. S. A. and pointed out the religious auspices of Northwestern University at Evanston, which will be host to the Assembly.

According to tentative plans, approved by the committee, the Second Assembly will be composed of 600 delegates, 150 consultants, and 100 youth delegates. No plans have been made for alternates.

The committee stressed the importance of securing "full participation from the member churches in the planning, preparation, and follow-up of the Assembly." Pointing out the danger of regarding the Assembly as "an isolated event," the committee hoped that the churches would consider the Evanston Assembly as "a mid-point in a continuing process" of cooperation.

In a provisional discussion of the theme of the Second Assembly, a sub-committee declared:

We would like the Assembly to say to a frightened and uncertain world, "there is a salvation for man." The statement of this theme should convey the idea that we are really searching for a new, break-through type of evangelism which will penetrate an alien world. . . . It is not proposed that the Assembly concern itself with a frontal attack upon Communism as such, but rather that it seek to deal in a Christian way with the human problems which Communism professes to meet.

Hence, the Central Committee proposed to the member churches that the theme of the Assembly "should be along the lines of the affirmation that Jesus Christ as Lord is the only hope of both the Church and the world." It was asked that subsidiary themes be considered in the light of that central idea.

Refuges. . . "A Judgement on Society."

Declaring its "vehement protest" against "those national policies which are steadily increasing the number of refugees throughout the world, the Central Committee denied that the refugee problem was an "isolated misfortune." It is "a judgement upon our whole Society."

The Council called for "maximum support" to the churches in France, Germany and Austria which are doing their best to give "Christian fellowship and practical aid" to an estimated half million Displaced Persons and 14 million refugees from eastern Europe.

Noting that the "hardest task of resettlement" of refugees will come during this winter before the IRO ends in March, 1951, the Council asked its member churches to bear "special responsibility" for the ade-

METHODIST BISHOPS REPUDIATE "SOCIAL ACTION" GROUP.

Should a Denomination allow its name to be used by so-called "Social Action" groups, and when is it time to call a halt to the use of that name? Evidently there are those among the bishops of the Methodist Church who think that there is at least a limit beyond which such groups should not go. The "Methodist Federation for Social Action" in a recent meeting at Xania, Ohio, issued the following statement:

"We believe the right of any individual to speak his mind as to what is right or wrong is democracy's best safeguard. We therefore call for repeal of the Smith Act as being unconstitutional and designed to suppress any unpopular (at the time) political philosophy. We appeal for presidential amnesty for all who have been convicted under the Smith Act."

It should be noted that it was under this act that eleven top-ranking Communists were tried and convicted in New York. It is evidently these whom they would have pardoned.

Thus this statement, while only a light "pink" on cursory examination, turns a deeper hue when closely examined.

At any rate it has aroused no less than eight of the bishops of this great denomination. These bishops accuse the Methodist Federation for Social Action of misusing "the name of a great church."

The bishops asserted:

"We regard such statements from any source as aid to the Communist propaganda and program. We stand unalterably opposed to such statements and positions, and we are assured that the public will not hold the church responsible for the action of any official or some 60 persons who met on their own initiative and expressed their personal views in open defiance of the will and convictions of the great body of the church."

Bishop Arthur J. Moore of Atlanta, released the statement for himself and others of the church's Southeast jurisdiction, reaching from West Virginia to Florida. Signing with Bishop Moore, were Bishop Walter W. Peele of Virginia, Bishop Costen J. Harrell of North Carolina, Bishop Paul B. Kern of Tennessee, also Bishops Purcell, Watkins, Franklin and Short of the jurisdiction. Bishop Paul N. Garber was in Europe and could not be reached in time to sign.

The statement goes on to say that the church's council of bishops had in April of this year disowned the federation as an official organization authorized to speak for the church. The council had also expressed its conviction that the word "Methodist" should be dropped from the federation's name.

"We maintain," they said, "that the federation has no ethical right to use the name of a great church to support positions and pronouncements that the church has not approved and that are contrary to our traditions and deep convictions."

CONCEPTS OF GOD.

we are not surprised at the second commandment as found in Exodus 20:4.

In the fifth place, there is the scheme of deism, so prevalent during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, but now distinctly on the decline. Deism asserts that though God originally made the universe, he is now aloof from it, takes no part in its affairs, and in no way participates in the lives of men and the rise and fall of nations. Paul refutes this erroneous idea in Acts 17:28. Here it is declared that "in him we live, and move, and have our being."

Finally, we have theism, which affirms that there is one sovereign God, who rules the universe, who guides and redeems and loves men. The entire Bible is theistic in its attitude. The Christian religion is the great theistic faith of the world. This is the idea that Paul sets forth in Acts 17:24-30: "The God that made the world and all things therein, he, being Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is he served by men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he himself giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; and he made of one every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, having determined their appointed seasons, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek God, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he is not far from each one of us: for in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain even of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring. Being then the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and device of man. The times of ignorance therefore God overlooked; but now he commandeth men that they should everywhere repent."—J. M. Powell, in Gospel Advocate.

At Home and Abroad

GO YE INTO ALL THE WORLD.

I—THE NEAR EAST.

Miss Kathryn Elizabeth Faust, the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Irving C. Faust of Racine, Wisconsin, has just been appointed for a three-year term as a chemistry teacher in the Near East by the American Board.

Miss Faust was born in Allentown, Pennsylvania and was educated at Grinnell College and the University of Kansas. Since 1948, she has been doing part-time teaching at the University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kansas. Last summer she worked under the Friends Service Committee in a project among the Hopi Indians of north-eastern Arizona.

Miss Faust, in accepting her appointment, said: "I feel that the Church offers the only hope of a solution to the predicament that our world is in today. It is only as we become acquainted with other peoples and realize that we are all God's children, and that we are are pretty much alike, that we can begin to have peace in the world. I hope that by serving abroad I may have a small part in accomplishing this."

II—WEST AFRICA.

Rev and Mrs. Duane V. Waln of Portland, Oregon, Congregational Christian missionaries under the American Board, sailed on Friday, July 28, on the Temeraire from New York to Lobito, Angola, West Africa, on their way back to Chilesso to work among the hospitable and cheerful Ovimbundu, whose Christians are called "the church that sings in the rain."

The Ovimbundu among whom the Walns work are in an area of some 5,000 square miles and the Walns live about 12 degrees south of the Equator. The name "Chilesso" means "great salt lick" because hot mineral springs there bring the wild animals to lick the salt deposits.

Much of Mr. Waln's work requires thousands of miles of field travel annually by auto, bleycle and on foot, often through lion country. He lives while on tour in tents or in grass huts. Mrs. Waln comes close to the Umbunbu women by carryingg on simple "institutes" in the distant villages during which they are taught the Christian faith, cooking, childcare, elementary hygiene, knitting and other useful things.

The Walns, who are the special representatives of the Mt. Vernon Congregational Church of Boston, speak two foreign languages fluently, namely, Portuguese, the official language, and Umbundu, the native tongue.

Detained in the U. S. A. by war, 1940-46, the Walns spent from 1942 to 1945 in Freewater, Oregon, where Mr. Waln was pastor of the Congregational Church.

III—THE MARSHALL ISLANDS.

Mr. Loren L. Miller, son of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Thornton C. Miller, U. S. Navy, of Washington, D. C., and Vienna, Virginia, and his young wife, Mrs. Martha Bennett Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. I. L. Bennett of Franklin, West Virginia, have been appointed for a two-year term of teaching at Ron Ron, an island near Kwajalein, in the Majuro atoll, Marshall Islands, by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

In the fall of 1947, young Loren Miller was one of the crew who sailed the little ship, Morning Star VI, from Honolulu to the Micronesian Islands, where it now carries American missionaries and native island Christians about their work. This small vessel sailed from Boston with a crew of college men in July, 1947.

After having completed two years of teaching among the "Christians from Boston," in Micronesia, Mr. Miller will return to complete his college course.

Born 23 years ago in Vallejo, California, and educated at Franklin High School, Franklin, West Virginia; Millsaps College, Jackson, Mississippi; and the American University, Washington, D. C., Mr. Miller's early home life was that of a typical Navy junior. He says he learned to walk on a Navy transport on the way to Guam. Before he had completed high school he had spent two and one-half years in the Navy as a radio man.

Mrs. Miller was born 21 years ago at Sugar Grove, West Virginia, and was educated at the Franklin High School Franklin, West Virginia; and Bridgewater College, Bridgewater, Virginia. She has been interested in teaching abroad for a long time and is as eager as her young husband to serve for the two years ahead among the Micronesian people.

IV—INTO JAPAN.

Rev. and Mrs. Gordon Earl Dalbeck of North Hollywood, California Sailed on Thursday, July 13, on the S. S. President Wilson from San Francisco to Japan, where they have been appointed as career Congregational Christian missionaries by the American Board.

Mr. and Mrs. Dalbeck recently have finished their theological training at Chicago Theological Seminary, and were ordained in Mount Hollywood Congregational Christian Church in July. Mr. Dalbeck will do church work in Japan.

At a very beautiful and significant service in the First Congregational Church of Cambridge, Mass., Mr. and Mrs. Dalbeck were commissioned by the American Board. Dr. Hachiro Yuasa of Kyoto, Japan, president-elect of the great new International University of Japan, gave the welcome to the field.

KOREA.

Probably no one is so naive as to fail to understand the development in Korea. Communism, which is hell-born, is challenging the forces of Christianity and civilization by assaulting a weak member of the Family of Nations.

The reaction of the average American citizen is a bitter one: "Every time peace-loving peoples try to get settled down to the business of making the world a better place to live in, some gangster government starts a fight!" That is a simple way to look at it, and yet not so simple after all, because that's just exactly the fact of the matter.

Wouldn't it be a good thing to begin right now to strengthen the United States? We might quit throwing money around like a drunken sailor in uneconomic private and public expenditures. We might get back to a sound basis of moral idealism. We fought the last war with one shoe off; maybe if we begin right now to use elementary common sense, the same kind of common sense that a football player or even a prize-fighter uses in training, we might get by without fighting another war at all.

In the meantime, just give a little thought to the fact that this whole weak international situation was created at a conference where the vodka was flowing freely.

EDITOR OF WOMAN'S PAGE ON VACATION.

The editor of this page, Mrs. W. J. Andes, is on vacation. She and her husband, and their son, David, are spending a week or so up in the New England States. In order that Mrs. Andes might have a real vacation—not only from her duties as a busy minister's wife (a minister's busy wife!) in Winston-Salem, but also as editor of the Woman's Page in THE SUN—the Children's Superintendent of the Woman's Convention in a weak moment, agreed to edit the page this week. (Note.—Convention women know, but some other readers may not, that the Children's Superintendent is Mrs. W. E. [Graham to many of us] Wisseman.—Mg. Ed.) It is with a real sigh of relief that she mails the copy to THE SUN's office in Richmond, and with new respect and admiration for Mrs. Andes' competency and faithfulness that she turns the job back over to her!

WOMEN AT THE GENERAL COUNCIL.

The 1950 session of the General Council is history now, but perhaps it is not too late to mention some of the high spots in which the women of the Southern Convention will be particularly interested. All who attended the General Council in Cleveland will agree that the most impressive session of the entire week was the Sunday evening session when the women and the laymen took over. The men provided the speaker, the Hon. Charles P. Taft, and the women concluded the service with a dramatic service which visualized the needs of the world and our response to those needs. The dramatization was written by Mrs. Ralph Shrader and directed by her and Miss Elizabeth Woodbridge. The Woman's Gift—$192,654 for this biennium—was dedicated in the closing moments of the dramatization. It was presented by the national woman chairman, Mrs. Harlan E. Walley of Indiana. The music, the lighting, the exact timing, the message—all made for an experience which will not soon be forgotten by those present.

Then there was the session for women in Old Stone Church on Thursday morning before the Council actually began. The theme for this meeting was a "style show." Women members of the Boards presented reports and several women state presidents gave previews of the new study books and program materials. Our own Mrs. Paris did a wonderful job in presenting the study books on the Near East.

About 50 women state presidents, past and present, held a reunion luncheon on the last day of the General Council, with Mrs. Vere V. Loper, wife of the newly elected Moderator, Mrs. Douglas Horton, and Mrs. Judson E. Fiebigler, president of the Missions Council, as the special guests.

DR. TRUITT ON THE AIR.

One of the things which modern parents have to endure is the continual playing of the radio—through home work, through meals, through sleep! Sometimes, however, the parents get a break, in the midst of the rag and the swing and the what not! Such a break our family had last Sunday while eating Sunday dinner. Suddenly there came over over the air the familiar voice of Dr. John G. Truitt, superintendent of the Elon Orphanage, reading some of his own poems. The station is WFNS, and the time is 1 o'clock, and it's worth your while to tune in.

THE DARLEY DOWNS CIRCLE.

While I'm writing this page I'd like to put in a plug for the newest circle of our Greensboro Woman's Auxiliary. Perhaps it may give some other society the incentive to "go and do likewise." The Darley Downs Circle, made up of a dozen or so young married women, was organized last fall. Since all of the women either have small children or work outside the home, the circle meets at night. They have taken on all the responsibilities which the other circles accept, and have done so with a newness and freshness which have added vitality to the whole auxiliary. The Darley Downs members like their circle because all of the members are young, with the same interests; but at the same time they have an opportunity, through the monthly inspirational meetings of the auxiliary, to meet with the other women of the church.

The Palm Street Society and the Pleasant Ridge, (Guilford) Society have both organized similar circles within the past two years. And both report that these new circles have given new life to their societies.

MR. BHONSLE TO VISIT N. C. IN SEPTEMBER.

The Rev. Prakah Bhonsle has come to this country from his native India for a year's study at the Chicago Theological Seminary. This year's study is made possible by the Cora L. Anthony Trust Fund. Mrs. Anthony was a charter member of the Greensboro First Church. She left her estate for missions. Before Mr. Bhonsle begins his studies at Chicago, he plans to visit the Greensboro Church. His visit will be over the week-end of September 17.

Mr. Takanaka of Japan, who will have a year's study at Yale Divinity School, will visit the Greensboro Church later during the year.

YEAR BOOKS.

The Women's Year Books this year were printed with the local societies in mind. With a few changes, they can be used as year books for the local societies. There were printed 1,500 copies and the demand for them has been excellent. There are, however, enough in the Convention office for four or five churches. They cost 20 cents each and should be ordered right away from Pattie Lee Coghill, Literature Chairman.

Only six packets are left, but more will be made up if the societies wish them and the order is not too late.

WHAT'S AHEAD!

The experience and ideas of seven well-known church writers have produced "What's Ahead!"—a booklet containing ten varied programs for worship, study and action. The topics range from personal faith to migrants, Indians and working women in other countries. The cost of this booklet is 50 cents. The Convention Office has a few copies for sale.

1951 YOUTH WEEK THEME AND DATES ANNOUNCED.

"Christ Calls—Serve in Faith" is the theme chosen for the Eighth Annual Observance of Youth Week-Christian Endeavor Week, to be held January 28-February 4, 1951, according to Rev. Dennis Savage, associate executive secretary of the United Christian Youth Movement, which sponsors the observance.

The United Christian Youth Movement is administered through the International Council of Religious Education.

Major features suggested for local church and community observances include Denominational Day on Sunday, January 28, with local parish youth-led services; Interdenominational Day on Sunday, February 4, with services of ecumenical worship; participation in the Parshad College Scholarship Awards competition, a leadership education school; evangelism activities; family night at home or at church; vocational clinics; and a very dramatic educational program called "The World Bids for Youth."

"Youth Week is a period of purposeful and objective planning and action carried out through a forceful demonstration of Christianity, a re-emphasizing of Christian unity, an evangelistic outreach, and presentation of the spirit of Christian young people," said Mr. Savage.

In 1944, the first united observance of Youth Week-Christian Endeavor Week was held. Since then it has become one of the largest church events in North America. An estimated 5,000,000 youth of 40 Protestant denominations, 35 state councils of churches and youth councils, the International Society of Christian Endeavor, and such youth-serving groups as the Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, participate in Youth Week.

Write the U.C.Y.M. at 206 South Michigan Ave., Chicago 4, Illinois, for further information.

RUST BECOMES NEW YOUTH SECRETARY.

Rev. Henry R. Rust is the new national secretary of Young People's Work of the Congregational Christian Churches in America. Mr. Rust, whose headquarters is at 14 Beacon Street, Boston, has been serving as the national secretary of work for the Junior High School young people of the denomination. In his new post he succeeds Rev. Oliver Powell.

Mr. Rust's new responsibilities will include the development of plans and programs for local young people's groups, development of the church school curriculum for young people, cooperation with state directors of Religious Education in all types of young people's activities; guidance to the scores of Summer Conferences administered by state Conferences; executive leadership of the National Pilgrim Fellowship, and cooperation with other leaders of the denomination in the work of the United Christian Youth Movement.

Mr. Rust's experience in youth work has included two years of service in Great Britain as assistant minister in the Warwick Road Congregational Church of Coventry, and as youth organizer in a group of adjacent Congregational Churches. He studied in Edinburgh and also did work with some of the Scottish Congregational Churches during this same period of 1945-47.

Born in Joliet, Illinois, and educated at Grinnell College, Andover-Newton Theological Seminary, and New College, Edingburgh University, Mr. Rust became national secretary for Junior High young people in 1947.

Mr. Rust served for a time as pastor of the West Boylston Congregational Church. He is the son of Rev. Henry L. Rust of Sherburn, Minnesota.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL, W. N. C. CONFERENCE.

The Pleasant Ridge, Spoon's Chapel, and Union Grove Christian Churches held their Bible school recently with Holly Springs Friends and some seven other churches represented by some children.

The school had an enrollment of 123 pupils, and a staff of 17 teachers and workers. Mr. Theodore Cox of the Pleasant Ridge Church served as superintendent, and the pastor, Rev. Clyde Fields, served as director of the school. Several people used their cars for transportation to and from the church, and several of the business firms of Ramseur served pop-cycles for the entire school.

One of the features of the school was the union picnic, of all churches co-operating in the school, held on Saturday following the close of the school. Games and fellowship and a good meal were enjoyed by all.

Graduation Services were held on Sunday night at the Pleasant Ridge Church. A good program was presented by the children, and a crowded church testified to the enthusiasm for the school.

The Superintendents of the co-operating Sunday schools and the entire staff are to be commended for very good work.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

There are not many more days before school begins. Now is the time to finish up the things that we have begun this summer. I have heard many people say that one of the hardest jobs of their lives has been to "finish up." It is so much fun to start painting and then go off and leave the paints, papers and water for mother to clean and put away.

It is easy to begin making dolls' clothes and then leave lots of scraps and strings lying on the floor. A model airplane makes a lot of chips to be left or an old sailing ship or anything from wood. Imagine what would happen if one left old plaster of paris—it would be a hard lump!

Nearly everyone has this trouble, and if it is any comfort to boys and girls who are learning to clean up, then do remember that your mothers and fathers probably had the same trouble. Ask them about it, and see what they say!

Help may come in the form of making a game. Say I'll put on the left side all the clean things and all the dirty ones on the right. Or if you have a helper, you may see which of you can finish first. Suppose you are really untidy and just hate more than anything to do clean up—well, for a special case like yours—here is an idea. Get several large suit boxes and sweep all your work in them. Then put it away.

Of course, if you leave untidy work in a box or any where for that matter, it is never as much fun the next time. Dirty water-cloths soon crack and spoil, fallen crayons are stepped on and broken. Whittling tools left around get dull and useless.

One boy said he gritted his teeth and made himself clean up. Another boy told me that he played his radio and listened with his mind while his hands picked up and put tway, and it made housekeeping go more quickly for him.

If you want to know why I wrote about such an unpleasant subject—I'll let you in on a secret—a mother asked me to. She said that if her son saw this in black and white in THE SUN, it might possibly help him.

Cleaning up is not just hated by boys—girls often dislike it too. But they should really try to overcome their dislike, because in no time at all they will be responsible for seeing that other boys and girls clean up.

No end to this business, is there?

LET HIM GROW UP NATURALLY.

By JESSICA DAVIDSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

There are a few unfortunates whose parents forgot to invite to the christening that thirteenth fairy whose gift is always imagination. But, happily, these people form a remarkably small minority of society. Although you, perhaps, may have made the acquaintance of a number of these wronged individuals as adults, I very much doubt that you have met many as young children.

In almost everyone's life there was a time when there was perfect faith in fairies and the never-never-land; when one could easily believe that Pegasus was no legend, but one's own private charger; when Bible narratives told of natural occurrences rather than of miracles. Imagination is the child's substitute for the more material interests of the mature life, and a very adequate substitute it is. There is freedom when a leaf is not obliged to be a leaf—when it may be a plume, a wing, or a hundred-and-one other things.

During his early years almost every child is pleasingly original. He lives in a world which is largely of his own making, where customs and conventions are vastly different from those to which adults adhere. There is nothing in his code of existence which states that he must give thanks for that for which he is not grateful; that he may eat two bowls of cereal, but not two chocolates; that he is to be considered "cute" when he announces that we must all be quiet, lest we frighten the green and silver fairy who is perched on the piano top, but must be reprimanded and called untruthful when he refuses to drink his milk because a bad fairy has frowned into it and caused it to become sour.

Must we then condone such an evident untruth for fear that we may destroy the child's imagination? No, not at all. A possible step in the right direction in this case would have been for the mother to have tasted the milk and then to have said, "It's all right now. Don't listen to the bad fairies; they will try to deceive you. They will even try to make you deceive people. But you are stronger than all the strongest bad fairies put together, so no bad fairy can make you do any of the naughty things that they want to do." Most likely the child would then have drunk the milk with zest; his mother would have soared upward in his estimation; and deception would have become more clearly outlined in his thought—and less desirable. Lacking a complete understanding of these irrefutable laws of ours, the child is of necessity very often at a loss to comprehend why he is being punished for having done what seems to him the perfectly logical thing to do. He is bewildered in this grownup world of ours.

All this does not mean that the little child ought to be fed continually on fairy tales. In fact such a diet would be apt to increase the distance between his world and that of his parents. He needs the enjoyment of simple, natural dramatization.

A child is completely independent in thought, motive and action only so long as he feels free to imagine. When the boy, not yet in kindergarten, wants a watch like his dad's, or the girl a broom just like her mother's, it looks as though much that had hitherto been novel and fresh has been blown to the winds. And this has come about not because the boy sincerely thinks that a real watch is better than an imaginary one, or because the girl believes a material broom would sweep better than her fancied one, but because the social environment has taught the child the necessity of being able to exhibit what is claimed; and with that knowledge comes a realistic view of life that, when forced upon the young too early, can be detrimental.

The child who accepts the thoughts of others too readily will not think for himself; the child who is supplied with the answer before he ventures the question will never look far into the causes of things. It would sometimes seem to be far better for the child to enter the kindergarten with a little less knowledge and a little more healthy curiosity.

With curiosity at the beginning, and with good teaching to preserve it, curiosity would keep step with learning all through life, and we, unquestionably, should have more and better educated men and women throughout our land.

MARY, THE MOTHER OF JESUS.

LESSON IX—AUGUST 27, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: My soul magnifies the Lord, and my spirit rejoices in God, my Saviour.—Luke 1:46, 47.

LESSON: Luke 1:46-48; 2:48-51; John 19:25-27; Acts 1:14.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Luke 2:28-35.

Honor, But Not Worship.

Mary, the mother of Jesus, should be highly honored; she should not be worshipped. In some religious communions veneration for her has been carried to extremes, almost to the point that some folks adore her about as much as they adore Christ himself.

There is a doctrine of The Immaculate Conception, proclaimed by the Pope in 1854, which reads as follows: "It is proclaimed by the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ and the blessed apostles Peter and Paul, and in our own authority that the doctrine which holds the blessed Virgin Mary to have been from the first instant of her conception, by a singular grace and privilege of Almighty God, in view of the merits of Christ Jesus the Saviour of mankind, preserved free from all stain of original sin, was revealed by God, and is therefore, to be firmly and constantly believed by all the faithful." Whatever else this means, it means that Mary was equal to Jesus in the fact that she never sinned throughout her whole life. The doctrine is scripturally baseless, historically unjustified, and doctrinally unsound. There is no place in the Christian religion for Mariolatry, the worship of Mary. But there is a place for honor for this woman, the mother of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Meet Mary, the Mother of Jesus."

Our introduction to Mary comes in connection with the coming of Christ. Readers of these Notes are familiar with that story—how a messenger of the Most High God made known to this chaste, sturdy, devout Galilean peasant that she should become the mother of the Saviour of the world.

Then of course every Christian with even a smattering of biblical knowledge knows the story of how Mary gave birth to the Babe of Bethlehem, how she herself wrapped him in swaddling clothes and laid him in a manger, and of how both shepherds from near at hand, and Wise Men from far away, came to see and to worship. The writer of the gospel narratives pictures Mary as a quiet, thoughtful woman—she kept all these things and pondered them in her heart.

The Hidden Years in Nazareth.

From the time of the Birth and Early Infancy stories until Jesus begins His ministry at about the age of thirty, we have the record of only one incident in the life of Jesus—his visit with his parents to the Feast at Jerusalem. Already, at twelve years of age, there was developing within him a sense of divine mission. Like so many mothers, Mary did not seem to realize that her lad was emerging into manhood—children mature much earlier in the East than in the West—and she was perplexed that the boy had "dealt thus with the parents."

When at thirty years of age, Jesus begins his public ministry, we see him as a well-rounded man. He had grown in stature, in wisdom, in favor with man and in favor with God. Although there is no record of these years in the home at Nazareth, we may be sure that one of the most vital factors in the boy's and the young man's life was the training and the example of his mother. One can say it reverently—Jesus would never have been what he was without the motherly ministry of Mary. It was a part of the divine plan that he had a devout and devoted mother to nurture him and to bring him up in the admonition of the Lord.

Faith in Her Son.

The incident which John relates in connection with the wedding in Cana of Galilee reveals the profound faith which Mary had in her Son. "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it," she said to the servants. It was an expression of that instinctive and almost ineradicable faith which mothers have in their children. As the street urchin said, "Gee, if a feller was the feller that his mother thinks he is."

A Mother's Concern.

Behold how these mothers do love their children. It appeared that Jesus was doing too much. He was going day and night in his compassion for people and in his eagerness to teach and to heal them. Whereupon his mother came, hoping to get him away from the crowds and the cruel pressure of life. It was a well-meant, but an ill-advised effort. One wonders if mothers are not sometimes too solicitous about their children, especially when they are giving themselves with zeal to the service of God.

A Mother at the Cross.

"Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother." And that is just where we would expect to find his mother—at the place where he needed her most and when he needed her most. There is a striking parallel between that heart-broken woman and the Cross itself. Both were expressions of the extent to which love will go to save those who are the beloved. Both are symbols of sacrifice at its best. Both are expressions of the love of God made known in human form in its highest expression.

The Mother of Jesus at a Prayer Meeting.

Luke, the beloved physician, who gives us most intimately the story of the birth and infancy of Jesus, and who probably got the story from Mary herself, also gives us an intimate and personal word about Mary in his second volume, The Acts of the Apostles. For among the one hundred and twenty people gathered in the "Upper Room" for prayer, he mentions personally Mary, the mother of Jesus.

It is good for the mothers of men to gather at the place of prayer to await the incoming of the Spirit so that they may have wisdom and grace for their high and holy mission, and that they may be better stewards of the precious trust committed to their care. And incidentally here is another illustration of the faith of a mother. Her Son told his followers to wait for the coming of the Spirit which he had promised to send. She took him at his word.

YOUTH AND THE CHURCH.

people of any other generation. The irresponsible youth of today, we will concede, are worse than their type of young people in any generation of the past—but the good young people, the responsible young people of today are far better than were their type of young people in any past generation. And upon these rest the only hope of a greater Church and a better world.

These are no words of fullsome praise or of empty flattery. They are words of sincerity, expressing a conviction born out of close contact with young people in our public schools and colleges, and in Young People's Summer Conferences, as one of their instructors and directors, as well as with young people engaged in the various business and industrial pursuits of present day life.

A few years ago it was my very special privilege to attend an international Young People's Conference at Gland, Switzerland, where young people from fourteen different nations gathered for a week to discuss the question of "The Christian's Responsibility in an Economic and Political Society." What a revelation and what an inspiration it was to hear those young college and university students from fourteen of the principal nations of the world discuss this important question with a frankness and a fearlessness, as well as with intelligence, that was a most promising prophecy of the response that youth is to make of the challenge which the Church and society at large now fling before them with the confession that adults have failed to give youth the kind of Church and the kind of world to which youth is entitled.

Youth Pronouncements.

For several years young people have been criticizing the status quo of the Church and of government. They have fearlessly and wisely torn many of the worn-out dogmas from the creeds of the Church, at least so far as their own thinking is concerned. They have exposed the treacheries of demagogry and the sinfulness of inefficiency in both Church and State. They have scathingly denounced the hypocrisy, the greed and the injustice found in international relationships. They have deplored the fact that adults have had the sole power to declare wars—and to demand that youth offer its life upon the war altars erected by adults. For years youth has been urging the nations of the world to give at least as much thought to, and appropriate at least as much money in building friendships as in building battleships. The youth have furthermore pointed out the injustice and the inequalities in our entire economic system, and ask for an economic system that encourages honest competition and individual initiative, but which is based upon the service motive rather than merely upon a selfish profit motive. They have diagnosed the many ills of society and of the Church. Without fear or favor, they have made their protests against social injustice and racial antagonisms, and have denounced the inconsistencies and the inhumanities wherever found. They have cleared the way now for a constructive program of advancement all along the line.

Youth has been abundantly justified in making its protests against the short-comings of both Church and State. However, protest alone is not only useless, but disastrous, both to protestor and to all concerned, unless it is followed through by constructive contribution. The entire social order is sick and weary from the many "isms" that have been strong in protest but weak in program. Constructive program should always follow sincere protest. In fact neither individuals nor groups have a right to make protest unless they have a program of remedy for what they protest against. Constructive service should always follow sincere criticism. Both a sense of honor and a passion for social welfare demand appreciation of all that is good and a commitment to the best that can be.

From Criticism to Dedication.

The hour has now struck for the young people in the Church to demonstrate the sincerity of their criticism against the Church by placing their lives upon the altar of the Church to make the Church strong. Youth should not only be eyes to see the needs of the Church, but also mind and hands to meet those needs.

Youth has given its thoughtful and valued criticism of the Church and of the social order. The Church and society now stand ready for youth to lead the way to "The Better Day." Both God and the world are counting upon the young people of the churches to measure up to their opportunities and responsibilities. And only by God's help can this be done.

Let youth be the vitality of the Church in the tomorrow's of life, for upon them the Church will depend for its leadership in the days ahead.

Let youth accept Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior and as the inspiration of their life-purpose and conduct, for only by his divine assistance and guidance can any life come to its largest self-realization. Let the youth of today, without any affectation, sanctimoniousness or "piosity" embrace the principles of life which characterized the life of Jesus Christ, and they will find their greatest happiness by rendering their largest service to the Church and to the world in which they live.

Youth craves the sympathetic understanding of their older colleagues. They need the confidence, the appreciation and the prayers of their seniors. The Christian youth says to the Church, "We are at your service—believe in us, and together let us work in building the Kingdom of God upon earth."

RETURN FROM LAS CABEZAS
CAMP IN PUERTO RICO.

with their sails flapping gracefully in the wind dot the scene. Not so far away is the city of Fajardo, which has a population of about 15,000. About seven miles away is a very high mountain range called El Yunque (the Anvil). This spot has the most beautiful tropical foliage that one can see anywhere. And, of course, the blue Atlantic Ocean, with its marvelous white sandy beach is a part of the landscape at Las Cabezas.

"The houses of the people are dismal huts made out of wood. Many of them are made of a straw-like substance. These houses have but two rooms for the most part. A family of six is the average. Many of them have no sanitary facilities. The people have to carry water from a distant water source.

"The work campers will live in two places both adjacent, a room behind the church and the parsonage. These places possess sanitation and water facilities.

"Their diet will consist largely of sea food, rice and beans, eggs, cheese, bananas, cocoanuts, pineapples, bread fruit, and many other local vegetables and fruits."

I have brought myself by long meditation to the conviction that a human being with a settled purpose must accomplish it, and that nothing can resist a will which will stake even existence upon its fulfillment.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Bales and bales of hay have been going into the big barn. Tomatoes are being canned. Corn has been canned. The big silo has been painted inside getting ready for the new supply of silage. Two thousand collard plants have been planted. Land is prepared for the sowing of a big turnip patch. Things are moving here. Almost all of the children are home from their two weeks of vacations. What good times they have had! And how grateful they are for all their helpers and friends.

Sunday schools, organized classes and other organizations, as well, in many of our churches are writing in to learn what they can do for the child they are sponsoring. These children have to walk four or five blocks through bad, muddy streets, often in the rain, to school. They have to have good, strong shoes and storm-breakers, or coats, besides their regular clothing. For eighty children, this is considerable. They should have boots, too. They are uncomplaining, but often wet. When I see how they take it, I cannot help but wish it were better.

I have asked other orphanage superintendents what they figured for a child's clothes per year, and they answered $100.00 up to ten years of age, and $150.00 above ten.

One liberal supporter of the Orphanage believes that I could raise enough money to re-roof Johnson Hall if I asked for it in THE CHRIS-TIAN SUN. So here is her request. Please send us a contribution. It will take around $1,000.00.

September 3—Sunday—is our 43d Anniversary and Home-Coming Day. That is our big, red-letter day on the campus. Send, or bring us a congratulatory gift from yourself, or your Sunday school, or class. How about $43.00, or a check for 43 half-dollars, or quarters, or even dimes? At any rate, it is going to be a big, good day. I am praying and hoping many hundreds of people will come here that day. Come any time during the day, and look us over, or pay us a visit if you are already well-acquainted with our plant.

If you only knew how much we appreciate your gifts, you would rejoice with us in the lovely checks from churches and friends received and reported this week. And if you could have only seen the faces of those eighty children and all of our staff members at Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Sellars' lake and swimming pool when all of us had a big picnic, ice-cold watermelon, and boating and swimming, as their guests, you would have thrilled with us. Several of our Burlington friends helped serve at the invitation of Mrs. Sellars. A chorus of resounding "thank-yous" and and "goodbyes" went up from the trucks and cars as the children pulled away from a wonderful day.

He who gives a child a treat
Rings the bells in heaven's street.

Come and make us happy on September 3.

BIG SHOT OF THE OLYMPICS.

Out at Maryland University, they call him "Cookie," which is a natural, since his name is Arthur Cook. He is world small bore rifle champion, winner of 29 national records and "Olympic big shot," although he is only an undergraduate at the University of Maryland.

"I never tried alcohol," he says "and I don't want to. A good athlete has to have a clear head, a strong body, good wind, and steady nerves. Drinking would take from me the very things that make a good rifleman."

As for refusing to drink, it may take more backbone to refuse than to accept, but after all, people respect you if you stand by your convictions. "Cookie" likes ice cream sodas and one admirer once paid him off with an ice cream soda every day, for a year, after he had shot 100, standing.

quate care of the aged, the handicapped, and the permanently sick among the Protestant and Orthodox membership.

The Council also pledged to do what it could for refugees in the Middle East, Greece, Yugoslavia, China, India, Pakistan, and Korea, although it stressed the necessity of national and intergovernmental action to meet the problem of refugees in a comprehensive way.

Dr. Robert C. Mackie of Scotland, Associate General Secretary of the World Council of Churches in charge of the Department of Inter-Church Aid and Service to Refugees, reported to the committee that during the past year the churches had spent $14,500,000 in funds and goods to aid the churches of Europe.

In addition to coordinating the interchurch aid programs of the churches and selecting projects for assistance, the Interchurch Aid Department directly sponsors a health program for pastors and church workers, according to Dr. Mackie, and has set up a scholarship fund for theological students, with the hope that 100 future ministers in Europe may have a year of study in a country other than their own.

Stewardship. . . The Year's Work.

In a report on the work of the Council since last summer, Dr. W. A. Visser 't Hooft, General Secretary, cited some of the general areas in which ecumenical progress continued.

He noted that basic Christian confidence had grown up among the member churches such as did not exist forty or even twenty-five years ago.

Isolated and struggling churches, particularly those surrounded by large hostile majorities, have found "real and deep spiritual encouragement in the fact that they are part of a world-wide movement which cares for them and shares their burdens."

Interchurch cooperation has proved not only possible, but vastly more effective than separate action by the churches.

The isolationism of individual theologians or schools of theology has been broken through to a considerable extent.

The churches are now able to speak out together "on vital issues of public life on which there is fundamental agreement between participating churches."

Dr. Visser 't Hooft declared that the Council must use "all possible opportunities" to remain in contact with Christians behind the Iron Curtain. He warned that Christians in Communist countries are in danger of being forgotten "precisely at the moment when they are in the midst of their great spiritual battles."

The year's work of the World Council was reviewed as department heads reported to the Central Committee.

Church Will Use or Lose Women.

Referring to what she called the "medieval and unrealistic" view of the church, Miss Sarah Chakko told the Central Committee in her report on the Commission on the Life and Work of Women in the Church, that many capable women are looking for fulfillment outside the church because they feel their scope is limited by the church.

The Commission, which was authorized at Amsterdam in 1948 and organized last year, has launched a study of the man-woman relationship "in the light of biblical teaching and the tradition of the church, which special reference to the place and work of women in the church." Miss Chakko, on leave of absence from her position as president of Isabella Thoburn College in Lunknow, India, has headed the Commission since March. She indicated that the study will involve the efforts of specialists in sociology, theology, biology, psychology and other fields.

Youth Programs.

Some of the ecumenical movement's strongest support comes from the youth of the churches, according to the report of Miss Jean Fraser, secretary of the WCC's Youth Department. She reported that some 700 young people will participate in work camps this summer in Europe and the Far East, and that the interest in three meetings of youth leaders held during the past year has centered on the extension of youth work to refugees, homeless youth and youth in industry.

Budget.

Turning its attention to financial matters, the Central Committee adopted a budget of $363,000 for 1951 which was recommended by the Executive Committee. This figure does not include the $600,000 the World Council anticipates for its Department of Inter-Church Aid and Service to Refugees.

Of the total budget for next year, $240,000 is expected from churches in the U. S. A., $75,000 from the churches of other countries, and $50,000 from a grant by the Rockefeller Foundation which is to be used for the Ecumenical Institute.

The World Council's membership was potentially increased by four churches with a combined membership of nearly 500,000 when the Central Committee voted to accept applications for membership from the Synod of the Evangelical Church of North Iran, the Methodist Church of Ceylon, the Church of Central Java (Presbyterian) and the Federation of Synods of Lutheran Churches in Brazil. This last church is the result of a union of four independent Lutheran synods. It considers itself a church rather than a group of churches and expects in due course to reword its title to express this character. The four churches will become members of the WCC unless within six months more than one third of the present member churches register disapproval.

A two-volume history of the ecumenical movement, to be published probably in 1952, is now in preparation, it was reported to the Central Committee. Sixteen authors working on the history will submit their first drafts to 81 consultants for criticism and guidance for the final drafts. Among the 16 are five Americans: Prof. George Florovsky of St. Vladimir's Orthodox Academy in New York; Dr. Donald Yoder of Franklin & Marshall College; Prof. Kenneth Scott Latourette of Yale Divinity School; Prof. John McNeill of Union Theological Seminary in New York; and Dr. H. Paul Douglass of New York. The work will be edited by Miss Ruth Rouse of the Geneva staff.

The Ecumenical Review, quarterly publication of the W. C. C., will have for its American associate editor Dr. Clarence Craig, president of Drew Theological Seminary (Madison, N. J.), as a result of elections which took place in sub-committees during the Central Committee's eight-day meeting. Dr. Craig is chairman of the American theological committee. The Review at present has a circulation of a little over 3,000, mostly in English speaking countries. The hope was expressed by Dr. Visser 't Hooft that French and German editions may be published when the present edition attains better support.

Church Provides Bus Service to Get Large Bible School Attendance

Workers and Pupils at Amelia Bible School

Members of Amelia Christian Church were pleased with the results of their Vacation Bible School which was held recently. The use of the Sunday school bus enabled the children in the community who were without transportation to attend the school. There was an enrollment of 70, with 15 teachers and assistants. Creditable work was done in each department and the joint worship services were conducted by Rev. Fred P. Register, pastor and director. As a result of the Bible school there has been a quickened interest in Sunday school and church services. Amelia is planning for a bigger and better Bible school next year.

Our Home-Coming Day

By JOHN G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Every room and every wall,
And every kitchen and every hall,
And all the lawns and yards about,
Are tidied up inside and out;
Making ready in every way
For the big Home-Coming Day.

Yesterday's "girls" and yesterday's "boys,"
Will tell of olden days and joys
And their families with them, too,
All dressed up in something new,
Will hear the stories of the day
They learned to cook or pitch the hay.

A bounteous picnic will be spread,
A simple grace will then be said,
And several hundred, great and small,
Will find a plenty for them all;
And everyone will joke and play
On the annual Home-Coming Day.

And then we'll meet in chapel dear,
Yes, everyone from far and near,
To praise this place and thank the kind
Who had us in their heart and mind,
And gave us home when we had none
And loved and cared for everyone.

We'll thank our God, where'er we roam
For childhood days and childhood home,
And every night we'll say a prayer
Of gratitude for tender care,
And often we shall pause to pray
For the next Home-Coming Day.

September 3 is the Forty-Third Anniversary of the Christian Orphanage at Elon College. It will also be the annual Home-Coming Day.

News Flashes

Needed—news notes from churches!

Rev. J. Howard Smith is studying this summer at Harvard University.

Rev. Howard P. Bozarth began his ministry at the Elon Community Church on Sunday, August 13.

THE SUN belatedly learns of the marriage on August 6, of Miss Frankie Marshall of our Salem Chapel Church to Mr. James Rayburn of Shelby, North Carolina. The marriage ceremony took place immediately after the close of the Home-Coming service of the church. Mr. and Mrs. Rayburn will make their home at Elkin, North Carolina, where both are teachers in the Traphill High School. Our good wishes to them.

BETHLEHEM BIBLE SCHOOL.

A letter from Rev. John Gallo about the Vacation Bible School conducted at Bethlehem Church, Disputanta, Virginia, gives a fine report:

"I am delighted to report to you that our Daily Vacation Bible School, conducted under the direction of Mr. Paul Varga, July 31 - August 4, was a great success. Teachers of our Sunday school cooperated with Paul very nicely, and they are to be greatly commended.

"The commencement was held on Sunday, August 6, and the program was very interesting and entertaining. Certificates were given to every child attending the Bible school. Our church people are exceedingly grateful for such an able ministerial student from Elon College, who at the same time is a member of our local church."

PATTIE LEE COGHILL, Educational Secretary.

SOPHIA AND FLINT HILL COMPLETE PARSONAGE PROJECT.

The work at Sophia and Flint Hill is progressing regularly. Last year these two churches built a parsonage at Sophia, North Carolina, and the pastor moved in January 1, 1950. The two churches borrowed $1,000.00 to pay for the work, and $500.00 of that has been repaid. They now have on hand $375.00 of the remaining debt, which should be liquidated soon.

These churches had successful vacation Bible schools this year, each church conducting its own school. A good interest has been manifested by each church toward all phases of church work.

Last February a Ladies' Missionary Society was organized at the Sophia church; and there are now 22 members on roll. This society has paid $200.00 on the church debt. Mrs. W. T. Madren is president of the society and Mrs. Mable Staley is secretary.

Flint Hill has a very active Missionary Society. This group raised $200.00 of the church debt. Recently the two groups joined in an ice-cream supper and a beauty contest. A good fellowship prevailed; with a resulting $375.00 toward the completion of the church debt.

A fine spirit prevails among these people. The two groups work nicely together. Any pastor could be very proud of the work and interest that prevails in these churches.

HANK'S CHAPEL, PLEASANT GROVE AND NEEDHAM'S GROVE.

We held our revival services at Hank's Chapel, near Pittsboro, the week beginning July 30. Through the work of the people and the blessings of God upon us, we feel that the revival was a success. We had sixteen conversions and added nine to the membership of the church.

We held our Daily Vacation Bible School the same week. We feel that the school, with its director, Martha Smith, was a great asset to the success of the revival.

The men of the church spent their vacations working on the parsonage, which is well on the way toward completion.

Our meeting at Pleasant Grove began on August 6, and ran through August 12. Rev. Thomas D. Sutton of the Seagrove group of churches did the preaching both afternoon and night. This meeting was also a success.

New Adventure in Protestant Cooperation

When the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. is created this November, something really new will be added to church life in this country, religious leaders predict.

For one thing, they point to the fact that about 90 percent of the nation's Protestant and Orthodox church members will be related to the National Council through their respective communions.

Twenty-six church bodies (22 Protestant and four Eastern Orthodox) with a combined membership of 26,000,000, are now slated to set up the National Council. Three other communions, with close to 4,000,000 additional members, may decide this fall to join them. And 13 other denominations, with about 13,000,000 members, will be related to the National Council through one or more phases of its work.

"This Nation Under God" is the theme of the constituting convention of the National Council of Churches which will be held in Cleveland Nov 28 - Dec. 1, 1950. This theme is simply and dramatically presented in the symbol above.

For another thing, the Council itself will coordinate and synthesize the program and operations of ten or more existing inter-denominational agencies.

Agencies Work in Many Fields

Eight of these agencies are national in scope and have a long history of promoting cooperation among more than 50 communions. They have brought both churches and their agencies into cooperative service in such fields as home and foreign missions, Christian education, evangelism, race relations and international affairs.

In the order in which cooperation began in their various fields, these eight include: the International Council of Religious Education (1872); the Foreign Missions Conference of North America (1893); the Missionary Education Movement of the United States and Canada (1902); the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America (1908); the Home Missions Council of North America (1908); the Protestant Council on Higher Education (1911); the United Stewardship Council (1920); and the United Council of Church Women (1941).

Other agencies, dealing in specialized fields, are slated to become departments in the National Council. Two of the best known are, Church World Service and the Protestant Radio Commission.

While not actually members of the Council, 875 state, county and city councils of churches and 1,668 state and local councils of church women will have their programs coordinated with the work of the National Council and will be represented in its general assembly. Church leaders expect that some relationship will also be established with the 1,700 ministerial associations across the country.

In the inter-faith level, communions related to the Council will continue to take part in such campaigns as "Religion in American Life" and "The United Church Canvass."

In terms of money, the National Council will bring together enterprises of Christian cooperation with present annual budgets of two and a half million dollars. But what is far more important is the fact that through the National Council, Christian forces will have a new and powerful channel through which to register their convictions on the moral and spiritual issues of the day.

Convention at Cleveland

The National Council will actually come into being at a constituting convention to be held in Cleveland, Ohio, November 28 to December 1. The communions responsible for the establishment of the Council will send about 1,200 official representatives and alternates to this gathering.

In addition, 5,000 visiting delegates, the majority of them laymen and women, are expected. Appointed by their denominations and councils of churches and church women, they are expected from every state in the union.

Altogether this will mean a total attendance of more than 6,000, probably the most widely representative church gathering ever held on the North American continent.

On December 3, the Sunday following the Cleveland convention, nation-wide services of rededication, to express thanksgiving and support for the National Council, will be held in conjunction with regular services. Already 130,000 "calls" have been sent out to pastors across the country, seeking their cooperation in these observances.

In trying to assess the significance of the National Council, religious leaders firmly believe it will give positive influence to the following trends, some already apparent:

1. An acceleration in the growth of cooperation among communions. While the National Council is not a merger of denominations, it does represent a "deliberate policy" of cooperation, which will have the effect of bringing churches closer together. Added to this will be the fact that Protestantism will have an inclusive forum to consider the moral and ethical issues of the day.

2. More official positions for women and wider recognition of their work in the church. It is signifi-

COOPERATIVE CHRISTIANITY IN U. S.

Cooperative Christianity, pictured in the map, embraces most of the great Protestant and Eastern Orthodox communions, state and local councils of churches, religious education and churchwomen. They will achieve greater unity under the leadership of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A., which will be formed at Cleveland, November 28-December 1. It will consolidate the co-operative program of the churches in all areas of Christian life, at home and abroad.

cant that the United Council of Church Women, functioning only since 1941, will become a general department of the Council. A woman will always be a president or a vice-president-at-large of the Council, and a woman is to be appointed as one of its two associate secretaries. Although these women have not been named nor their duties clearly defined, the fact that such influential positions will be given to women indicates a new trend, since leadership in most denominations has been traditionally male.

3. A stronger voice for laymen in church affairs. Provision has been made for a general department for church men, where the laymen of the churches will be given a unique opportunity for understanding and initiative in the Council's strategic planning. The department is to include all laymen who are members of the Council's General Assembly and others appointed by the rapidly growing denominational laymen's organizations. Still others will be appointed "at large" on the basis of their counsel and assistance in the Council's work. This fall a series of regional conferences is being sponsored to interest business and professional groups in the work of the Council.

4. A clearing house for information and exchange of views to forward the development of a sound Protestant strategy on key issues. In this respect, religious leaders point out, the National Council will be carrying on the roles of the eight agencies, which have served separately as "round tables" for leaders with similar interests and responsibilities in the various denominations.

As an example of how this process works, leaders sitting in conference have from time to time decided that one denomination is better equipped to handle a particular situation than several in competition. This has been true in this country in the case of new housing developments and communities associated with large government projects; in the foreign mission field sometimes one denomination is recognized in a certain area as the responsible representative for the Protestant churches.

In home missions, the result has been the actual sponsorship of such projects as those among the migrants, Negro sharecroppers and American Indians. In these fields, denominations belonging to the Home Missions Council decided a more effective job could be done cooperatively than by working singly.

Now, such working agreements will be worked out on the more comprehensive level of Council consideration and planning.

Local Churches to Benefit

More important than any of these influences on the national level, religious leaders feel, will be the effect of the National Council on the local church. To those denominations both directly and indirectly related to the Council, here are some of the benefits predicted for the local church:

1. An increased influence and outreach in the community through relationship to a national body united for Christian service and action.

2. Access to the best ideas, methods and materials for use in local church programs. Since the leaders and specialists of the cooperating communions will be in touch with one another in the National Council, the local church will be able to draw on the finest in both the Protestant and Orthodox traditions.

3. The total work of the denominations to which the local church is affiliated will be given added significance. By membership in the Council, the denomination registers the conviction that it seeks the growth of its churches as a part of a total Christian enterprise. This means that "victory for one is victory for all."

4. Christian influence will be exerted through co-operative action at points of common interest and concern. Without waiting for organic union, the churches will find themselves working together in thousands of places and exerting their combined influence in fields where no denomination could be effective alone.

Offers Broader Scope for Service

"The Necessity for Faith"

By REV. RUSSELL J. CLINCHY, D. D.*

There was once a woman who believed that something could be done for an infirmity under which she had suffered for years. She also believed that Jesus of Nazareth could help her, and he did. Then he turned to her and said, "Thy faith hath made thee whole."

That was a characteristic remark of Jesus for he was always emphasizing the necessity of faith. The great words of Jesus are God, and life, and faith, and it is probably true to say that he placed faith as the necessary prelude to God and life.

There is a tendency among us, especially in this modern age, to do the opposite—that is to place faith last or to minimize its importance. We have a saying which depicts this so clearly—"What you do speaks so loudly, I cannot hear what you say." We mean by that that our actions speak so loudly that it does not make any difference what we say we believe. At first glance that seems perfectly true. If a man robs a bank, it makes no difference whether he says he believes in honesty or not. And on the positive side—if a man does not rob a bank, that is more important than just a declaration that he believes, or has faith, in honesty. Sometimes we are led to this position by the sight of so many hypocrites who say one thing and do another, but mostly it arises from our feelings that belief and faith are theoretical, while action is positive. Or else it arises from the sense that one does not believe in something until he has proven its worth—that is, a man believes in honesty only after he has discovered that honesty is the best policy.

Somehow, Jesus had the concept that it was just the other way around. He said that it is our belief and our faith that makes us whole. Let us see how it works out.

In the life of Rudyard Kipling, we are told that a man who lived in Australia once wrote a letter to him in which he chided Mr. Kipling for not writing poetry about Australia as he did about India. Then the man gave a description of the resources of Australia—its size, position, climate, the growing cities, the sheep and cattle. At the close of this very impressive recital he asked this—"Mr. Kipling, what do you think of the future of Australia?"

Mr. Kipling's answer was this—"I am very much interested in your list of the resources of Australia; but I cannot answer your question until you answer a question of mine. It is this—What do you believe in?"

If the man were an average person he must have been astounded by Mr. Kipling's reply. What difference would it make as to what Australians believed if they had a shipping center, great cities, and cattle ranches? On the surface, it would seem to make no difference at all, and the popular mind would say that the people of Australia could believe what they wanted to as long as they produced their products and sold them.

Strangely enough, Mr. Kipling was right, for just the opposite is true—the future of a people depends first upon what they believe, and then upon their resources. We can sense it so clearly if we see it in the picture of another people.

Suppose a couple of years ago a man should have come to one of us and said, "Tell me what you think of the future of my country. It is set in the center of Europe and has almost every natural advantage. It has good climate, fine ports, natural resources of coal and iron, and rich farming areas. Our history has been rich in literature, and art and music. Our commerce is great and we have sailed the seven seas. For a generation the scholars of the world came to our universities to study philosophy and engineering. Tell me, now, what do you think of the future of Germany?"

You and I know that we would have to answer that question by asking another, "What do the people of Germany believe, and in what have they put their faith?" The answer rests, as it rested, upon whether the German people had the faith of Goethe or Hitler. The resources were the same, they are even still the same. The end and doom of Germany came, not because the resources vanished, but because the people changed their beliefs and their faith. In this case we can paraphrase the old saying, and declare of the stricken German people, "What you believed spoke so loudly it did not matter what you possessed." A certain faith destroyed them: another kind of faith could have made them whole. And the whole story of man, from the earliest beginnings, has been that the future of a people depends upon the answer to the question, "What do you believe?"

It is this message of the necessity for faith as Christ proclaimed, that must come home to us with new meaning and urgency today. It is true that we must live a great part of our lives by sight—that is, we must be aware of the facts that create health if we are to be healthy—but we shall always tread the great avenues of life by faith. We must be educated to do certain types of work, but we enter a chosen field of work by faith; we must choose a life partner by a study of personality and heredity and interests, but we enter marriage by faith.

And so it is with the supreme meanings we give life, and that is what differentiates religion from science. They are not competing spheres of life, but rather they are complementary, one with the other. Religion is not a maidservant of science, it is a comrade and a partner. We need, therefore, to come into a new vision of the greatness and majesty of the realm of religion in our lives and to enter into its glorious vistas.

That was the creative power of the Christian gospel as it was let loose upon the world of Christ and the apostles. They understood that the philosophers and the scientists would open the doors of knowledge; they opened the gates of faith by which men could use this knowledge.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

WHO SHOULD GO TO COLLEGE?

Some days ago, an official of the United States Government made the statement through the public press that there were many young men enrolled in college who should never have entered college. An editorial in a great daily newspaper took the position that it was unfair to the other young men of the country for the government to allow concessions in the event of a draft for war services to young men who were enrolled in college. This newspaper took the position editorially that a young man should be drafted out of college just as quickly as one should be drafted out of business, from the farm, or otherwise. These statements are interesting in an age such as ours is.

The last war, World War II, was a war of brains as well as a war of brawn. The threatened war now pending will demand a higher degree of intelligence and training than any conflict in which man has ever engaged. Should there be a World War III, the war will be won, not by numbers, but by skill and efficiency. With the present instruments of destruction, numbers engaged in battle will not be the determining factor, but the individual with the most destructive and the most accurate mechanism in hand will be able to win.

Aside from the war or the possibility of war, we are living in an intelligence age—an age in which the emphasis is placed on education, mental efficiency, and intelligent accuracy. These qualifications are acquired in the classroom under competent instructors with modern equipment.

Educators, colleges and great universities have, in these latter years, put the emphasis on intellectual ability in determining the eligibility of a young man or a young woman for college and for a college education. I was present when the president of a great college made the statement publicly that his institution had not for the past years, and would not in the coming years, admit a student who was not in the highest ten of his high school graduating class. I know many other schools which will not admit high school graduates who have low grades. Is a college education to be denied high-school graduates who, for any reason whatsoever, have failed to make high grades? If we will turn the pages of the history of this country of ours, we will find that the work of the nation has been done not by bookworms or students with brilliant minds, but by men and women of average mental abilities, of good characters, and of Christian beliefs. In my judgment, a young man or a young woman who is fortunate enough, who has had the ability and determination to graduate from high school, should, if he desires, have an opportunity to make a try at college.

The college campus has contributions to make other than those made in the classroom, in tests and in examinations. Association with ambitious young people, imbibing college atmosphere, and being inspired by a college spirit, have a great deal to do with the making of a man or a woman for life and living in present-day civilization.

I recall that in 1935 two young men entered Elon College from Gates County, North Carolina. They were Carl Umphlette and William Raleigh King. I recruited these young men for college myself, personally. I imagine that they had not had the best advantages in grade or high school, yet they were ambitious. At the end of the first semester they failed by one subject to pass enough work to stay in college. I learned that they had been notified by the dean of the college that they had failed and that they should leave the campus. I sent for these two young men—they had already packed their trunks and were ready to go. As they entered my office, I asked, "How are you?" Carl replied, "Doctor, we are on a sinking ship." I said, "What is the matter?" Their reply was, "We have to go home." I said, "Do you want to stay in college?" "Yes, more than anything else." I asked, "Do you think that you can pass your work in the spring?" They said, "Yes, we can." I said, "Unpack your trunks, get your books, and go to work."

The dean contended that this would injure the standards of the college. I contended that the interest of the boys was above every other interest, and that to send them home would do them more harm than it would do the college to permit them to stay. They remained. They passed their work. They returned the second year and passed all of their work. At the end of the second year, Carl left college to assist his father who was depot agent at Roduka. Raleigh remained in school till he graduated, and since graduation to this date, he has been an efficient and effective instructor in the public schools of North Carolina and Virginia.

A good instructor is not the man who can pilot a brilliant student through college requirements to graduation, but the good instructor is the instructor who can take a poor student and make a good one out of him. The successful college is not the college which can take the upper ten and see that they go through college to graduation, but the college which can take the lower ten and make good students out of them. I contend that any ambitious young man or young woman should be given the privilege to see what he can do with college requirements.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

After two weeks' absence from the college, I return to find two reports from the Southern Convention office that have not been published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I am very grateful that during these two weeks, some of our Sunday schools and churches have not forgotten the college, but have been sending in their contributions. When I receive reports such as I now hold in my hands, I find myself wondering what an inspiration it would be to record these contributions and give the records to the public.

We are doing very well with conference apportionments, but we still have a long way to go before the end of the year for our churches. I am sure, however, that they will come along in good time and will meet their apportionments in full.

AMERICAN BOARD MAKES SHORT TERM APPOINTMENTS.

I.

Norman Lee Stewart, World War II Navy veteran and son of Mr. and Mrs. John Wesley Stewart of Evansville, Indiana, has just been appointed by the American Board for a three-year term as an English teacher at its American College for Boys in Tarsus, Turkey.

Mr. Stewart, who was born in Princeton, Indiana, and was educated at the Boss High School of Evansville, is a graduate of Evansville College, class of 1950. Following high school graduation in 1944, Mr. Stewart enlisted in the U. S. Naval Reserve and spent two years in service.

Mr. Stewart is a great-grandson of the first Methodist woman-preacher in Indiana, and his father was named for John Wesley. His mother is a decendent of the Revolutionary War patriot, Major Joseph Neely, and of John Adams, second President of the United States.

Mr. Stewart is the brother of Rev. Jack O. Stewart of Livermore, Kentucky.

Mr. Stewart sailed on the Khedive Ismail, on Friday, August 4, from New York, bound for Istanbul, Turkey.

II.

Miss Jessie E. Martin of 367 Carroll Park, E., Long Beach, California, flew on Tuesday, August 1, by Pan American Air Ways from New York to Istanbul, Turkey, where she will resume her post as a Congregational Christian educator in the American Academy for Girls, Scutari, Istanbul, Turkey, founded and conducted by the American Board.

The American Academy for Girls has more applicants than it can accommodate and is appreciated by the Turkish people because of its emphasis on character training and the fact that it prepares its students to become useful, intelligent, Turkish citizens.

Miss Martin was born in Turkey, the daughter of American Board missionaries, and began her own educational work there in 1920.

Miss Martin is the sister of Mrs. George R. Tracy of Long Beach, California. She has three brothers, Mr. J. Fred Martin of Middletown, Connecticut; Dr. Alex. C. Martin of Laurel, Maryland, and Mr. Norman C. Martin of Oregon City, Oregon.

III.

Miss Susan E. Armstrong of Colchester, Connecticut, who has been serving as a Congregational Christian educator under the American Board in China since 1921, sailed on Friday, August 4, on the Khedive Ismail from New York to Beirut, Syria, en route to a teaching position in Aleppo College, Aleppo, Syria.

Miss Armstrong taught in Foochow Christian College, Foochow, China, and lived in that land under bombings, evacuations and invasion. When she returned to China from furlough in 1943 she flew via the dangerous route "over the hump" from India and traveled across China in military trucks, dilapidated buses and trains.

War troubles began for Miss Armstrong in 1938 when bombs first fell on Foochow and her college evacuated up the River Min to interior Shaowu three times. Miss Armstrong went with it.

Aleppo College, where Miss Armstrong will teach English, is a city of contrasts on the edge of the desert and reflects the mixed history of the city and the country it serves. Dozens of different nationalities as well as three of the major religions (Moslem, Christian and Jewish) work harmoniously in the student body.

Miss Armstrong has three brothers in America: Charles Armstrong of Colchester, Connecticut; John Armstrong of West Warwick, Rhode Island, and Benjamin Armstrong of San Francisco, California.

Miss Armstrong is the special representative overseas of the Edgewood Congregational Church School of New Haven, Connecticut.

Robert Arthur Schinske, son of Emily B. Schinske of Long Prairie, Minnesota, has recently been appointed by the American Board for a three year term as a teacher of biology in its American College (a school for boys) in Tarsus, Turkey.

Born in Long Prairie twenty-four years ago, Mr. Schinske attended the high schools there and at San Francisco, California. He is a graduate of Hamline University, St. Paul, Minnesota, and for most of the last two years has studied music at the University of Minnesota.

During World War II, a perforated ear drum kept Mr. Schinske from armed duty, but he worked as a welder in a San Francisco war plant. He has supported himself during the past seven years, both studying and working.

Mr. Schinske sailed on the Khedive Ismail from New York City, bound for Istanbul, Turkey.

GRADUATION AT TRUK.

It was a bright, perfect tropical Sunday morning in 1950. The first class to complete three years of training in our Christian Training School was being graduated. The night before, the student body had taken part in and impressive communion service. Many visitors came from distant islands. A truckload and three jeeps full of Americans came. Both the boys and girls were in white, and they presented a cheering picture. The speeches, the singing and the handiwork all amazed the American visitors. The lad winning the highest award in English expressed "thanks to God" that Hawaii and the U. S. A. had made the school possible.

terests can be shown in many areas. For example, they report that 10,000 Americans work with 40,000 national staff members in overseas areas in conducting services in over 38,000 places of worship and operating 20,000 mission projects, such as schools, colleges, hospitals, publishing houses, agricultural experiment stations and other worthwhile Christian programs.

In the field of home missions, the growth of cooperation has also been great. Through the Home Missions Council, a staff of 15 augmented by 200 summer service workers carries on a ministry among the nation's 2,000,000 migrants in 26 states. In addition, the agency has a rural life improvement program in the South devoted largely to raising educational standards among the ministry.

The work of Christian education, which will be centralized in one division of the National Council, will enlist the teamwork of forty denominations, according to church leaders. This program, embracing 729 affiliated agencies, reaches 220,000 Sunday schools, 105 vacation Bible schools and week day schools in 2,700 communities in 46 states.

OFF THE ROCK-BOUND COAST OF MAINE.

This week's news is being written on an island off the rock-bound coast of Maine, where the Woman's Page editor is spending a few days of vacation with the Andes clan. The beauty of this part of the country is not overdrawn by those who talk about it, and the hospitality and friendliness of the people have never been talked about enough. Instead of beaches, Maine has rocky coasts, and because of the extremely cold water, we do not go swimming, but it is a wonderful place to be and rest a while.

The following article appears by virtue of the fact that one member of the family sent the newspaper article in on my request.

VALLEY WOMEN MEET AT WINCHESTER CHURCH.

The Woman's Missionary Conference of the Virginia Valley met on July 27 with the church at Winchester.

The sessions were presided over by Miss Verdie Showalter, outgoing president. The morning and afternoon worship services were conducted by Mrs. A. G. Mason of Winchester and Mrs. Dewey Dofflemyer of Harrisonburg. Mrs. Edgar Nelson welcomed the delegates to Winchester, and Mrs. J. E. Bryant of Harrisonburg gave the response.

Among the new officials installed were: Mrs. J. E. Bryant of Harrisonburg, president; Mrs. R. A. Whitten of Winchester, vice-president; Mrs. Howard Hensley of Elkton, secretary, and Mrs. H. F. Nelson of Winchester, treasurer.

Those on Program.

The program was greatly enriched by the following visiting speakers: Miss Helen Frances Smith, Friendly Service Secretary of Missions, New York City; Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Educational Secretary of the Southern Convention, Elon College; Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, and Dr. William Moseley Brown and Dr. Wm. T. Scott of Elon College; Revs. R. A. Whitten of Winchester, S. E. Madren of Elkton, Rev. E. J. Rohart of Harrisonburg and Rev. R. E. Newton of Luray; and Mrs. Clyde Koon of New Market.

The five District Superintendents reported on the work of their areas. Miss Smith gave an inspiring address on "Miracles of Multiplication." She spoke of the few who followed Jesus at the first and then they were multiplied by the thousands as his ministry advanced.

She also told of the few early settlers of America who came here to seek the freedom of worship, and the resultant thousands of church people in the land today; the thousands who have accepted Christ as a result of the work of a few missionaries in foreign lands.

Miss Smith asserted that "any church group which sees not beyond its own walls will die." She stressed individual gifts to missions from each woman; and said this should not be just an order on the treasury, adding: "Our giving was greater on the home fields as well as in foreign countries."

The women of the Winchester church served dinner in the basement of the new parsonage.

Miss Coghill presented the mission study books for the coming year, also the literature packets which have been prepared to help build programs throughout the coming year. For the Bible Study, which will be in Hebrews, the groups will use the book, "Great Prayers of the Bible."

The treasurer, Mrs. Noah Painter, gave her report. The departmental superintendents gave their reports, which showed advancement along many lines.

Special musical selections included a violin and piano duet by Martha and Paul Rohart.

IDEAS FROM NEW ENGLAND.

One Woman's group in Vermont has asked their minister to come to one of their meetings and tell them what he expects of them as a woman's group in his church.

Church suppers are also a way of raising money in New England, although the menu is somewhat different, usually including baked beans, hash and other hot dishes.

Friendly Service is apportioned to each church group, and in this way a certain quota is met each year.

The Woman's Gift is a voluntary, over and above fund, to which the women contribute each year. In some places it is placed in special boxes kept at home and then brought to the church later for a service of dedication.

SOUND FILM STRIPS TO BE AVAILABLE.

Beginning with the first of September, there will be several sets each of "Success Story" and "The Church is There," sound film strips, to help in putting on every-member canvasses and increasing our missionary giving. They are both fine and are new. They may be had rental-free by writing to Pattie Lee Coghill, Educational Secretary, Convention Office, Elon College, N. C.

The Southern Convention Woman's Board will meet in semi-annual session in September. The time and place will be announced later.

A NEW ADVENTURE IN PROTESTANT COOPERATION.

In addition, the program sponsors 702 leadership training schools in 43 states every year.

Other cooperative tasks the National Council will undertake include a training and enlistment program for the ministry, inter-racial conferences, materials and plans to strengthen the Christian family and facilitate cooperation between church and home and the promotion of racial understanding, economic justice and social welfare.

Twenty-six Communion Will Join Council.

Formation of the National Council at the turn of the century not only marks a historic landmark, but symbolizes the determination to bring the force of the Gospel into meaningful contact with every area of life.

The Council first was conceived as an idea nearly ten years ago at a meeting of interdenominational agency leaders at Atlantic City, New Jersey. Since then, this plan has slowly and inevitably grown and has been studied carefully by the agencies and the denominations. Under the direction of the planning committee, headed by Dr. Luther A. Weigle, Congregational minister and dean emeritus of Yale University's divinity school, the Council will be launched at the constituting convention this November in Cleveland.

MAX VESTAL, Elon College, N. C.
MISS ANN TRUITT, Associate

A MUCH DELAYED LETTER FROM MAX VESTAL.

Agape, Italy,
July 25, 1950.

Dear Friends:

I received the unexpected honor of conducting our last Sunday evening service in camp. I used for my subject, "Agape Forever." I am asking THE SUN to print my sermon for you in a later issue. It was not translated into Italian, but most of the Italians stayed, anyway. It was a grand experience to have these friends come and congratulate me after the service. I know it was not because of what I said. They couldn't understand a word. It is hard to explain, but this illustrates the spirit of the international work camp. Minority, one of the older workers, came by and patted me on the back. About the only English words he could say were "God bless you." Minority lost seven brothers and sisters during the war. Yet his faith in God is strong. Many of us need this kind of faith.

After two more days of work, I will become a tourist. I expect to travel with Carl Bade, a schoolteacher from St. Louis. Our first destination will be Nice. We expect to spend a couple of days there at the beach. From there we will visit the work camp at Le Chambon. There is a Congregational Christian minister and family there. Our stay there will be short, as will our stays everywhere. We will see as much of Switzerland as possible on our way to Oberammergau. I hope to attend the passion play there. Tickets have been ordered, but they have not come as yet. All of us are very anxious about this.

We hope to visit a work camp or two in Germany also. If possible, I hope to pay Paris a visit of three or four days. I hope to cross the channel at Dunkirk and spend the last week in Britain. There is a large music festival at Edinborough that I don't want to miss.

From there, it is back to Quebec, home, and Elon. I just remember—I forgot to pay my room deposit. I wonder if they'll save the same room I had last year for me?

Maybe you wonder what I have been doing for the last couple of weeks. It seems I haven't gotten around to writing. There are several good reasons. One is that we work eight hours a day for six days each week. This is the excuse I like to use. Another is that if I write everything I know, I won't have anything to talk about when I get home.

The last two Sundays have been spent mountain climbing. We have been up to about 10,000 feet both days. The flowers are very beautiful. The view is breath-taking. Last Sunday morning, three of us started at five o'clock and we were gone for nine hours. We read verses of scripture when we reached the top. It was hot in the valley, but my hands were numb with cold as we ate on the peak.

At first glance it is difficult to imagine war in this peaceful valley. As you walk, however, you see its reminders. Over there are two crosses and some rusted helmets, and here is an empty pillbox. All the bridges were blown out also. Many of the houses were burned. The people in the valley, it seems, hid many partisans from the Germans, and their homes were burned in revenge. Many of the campers were guerilla fighters.

We were very pleased on Sunday when two new campers arrived from Spain—a boy and a girl. It had been hoped they could come, but the prospects were doubtful. They were unable to bring any money at all out of Spain. We all feel, however, that their presence here is a real step forward. Two boys came from Switzerland this week, also.

We have newspapers coming to camp now. We know about the war in Korea. It seems very far away. We are living and working with many of our "enemies" of the last war. After knowing them it seems impossible that we might shoot at each other. If only all of us could come together in a spirit of friendship.

I am very grateful to you for sending me to camp. It has meant a great deal to me. I hope I may share this spirit with you. This will be my last letter from camp. I'll have pictures to show you and more stories for you when I get home. May God bless you always.

Yours,
MAX VESTAL.

NO DIFFERENCE OF OPINION.

There is no difference of opinion between "temperance" people and scientific students of the alcohol problem in regard to the origin and nature of alcoholism. A determined effort has been made by those having an economic motive to make it appear that scientists, in contrast to the "impractical Drys," hold that alcoholism is confined to those having certain personality defects and that others stand in no danger of this terrible affliction. On the contrary, both groups, and they are to a certain extent overlapping groups, are aware of the obvious fact that some personality types are more liable to alcoholism than others, but they are equally aware that a very large number of alcoholics have no abnormal predisposition, and come to their alcoholism only in the course of drinking, to which they are impelled by environmental customs and traditions.

Doctor E. M. Jellinek of Yale University, estimates this group at 60 per cent of all alcoholics, and in a supplement published by the Journal of Studies on Alcohol, published by the Laboratory of Applied Psychology at Yale, it is said that possibly 40 per cent of inebriates are neurotics, an additional 10 per cent psychotic, still another 10 per cent feeble-minded, and this leaves 40 per cent whose excess cannot be attributed to disease.

The 40 inebriates in 100 are quite normal in their relation to alcohol, but have established a dependency upon it. They have gotten into the habit of having recourse to alcohol for "relaxation" or in the effort to fit themselves into a convivial situation, and unfortunately find themselves thoroughly habituated to its use, with all of the symptoms of alcoholism.

There are persons who are peculiarly susceptible to tuberculosis, but they are not tubercular until they have contracted the disease. Similarly, there are people who are peculiarly responsive to alcohol, but there is no justification whatever in calling them alcoholics until they have fallen victims to this "sickness" through drinking alcohol. Many of them would have gotten through life and never known of their so-called "weakness," had they never tasted alcoholic beverages.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

It is not the policy of this page to review or recommend movies, but here comes one that is straight from Hollywood.

The writer of this page thinks that more grown-ups read this page than growing-ups, but either way she hopes that one and all, big and little, will see this movie.

"Stars in My Crown," which stars Joel McCrea, is the story of a hard-fighting but soft spoken minister—Protestant if you please—in a small town during the days that our country was becoming the great nation that it is.

This picture has a little of everything: romance, adventure, fighting, sickness and death. There is a loveable little boy and a wonderful old Negro man who is like many that we of the South know.

Too long, Hollywood has represented the Church by a Roman Catholic priest. That is understandable in that the clerical collar marks the character at once. But some of the best movies of a religious nature have been about the Roman Church. This one comes as a pleasant surprise.

There are faults in it. You will recognize them. The congregational singing is too loud and too well accented. It would never really happen. The minister is almost too good to be true, and yet undoubtedly there have lived and are now living men of God with his strength and grace.

If you do see this motion picture, wont you do one more thing—please tell your local theatre that you are glad they showed such a fine film, and then write to the producer, a card will do, and say: It was wonderful, let's have more.

The Roman Catholic Church maintains a strict censorship of films and expects their parishoners to adhere to their decisions. We have nothing of the sort, and allow our children and young people to see the sorriest trash without any worry or interest on our part. The powers that be in the motion picture capital blame the Protestants for the poor deal they get.

Now's our chance. Let's use it. If we make it a big box office, perhaps there will be more. It is a clean, wholesome, full-of-fun and down-to-earth family movie.

TEACH THEM TO THINK OF OTHERS.

By MABEL-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Tomorrow is Grandma's birthday, Rosemary," Mrs. Waterman said to her little daughter. "You'll want to think of something to give her, won't you?"

"Oh, yes, Mommy; I love Grandma! Will you give me some money so I can go to teh store and buy her a present?"

"First, let's think what she would like to have. Maybe you won't need to go to the store."

"Well—" began the small girl doubtfully, "she likes lemon pie."

Mrs. Waterman's lips twitched, but she answered seriously, "Yes, she does like lemon pie, but you don't know how to make pies yet. Do you think Grandma likes flowers?"

The little face lighted up. "Grandma just loves flowers, Mommy! Only she has lots of flowers in her garden."

"She hasn't every kind, though. See if you can't think of some flowers that aren't in her garden."

Rosemary twisted a curl around her finger, obviously trying hard to think. "I'll go out an see what she has, Mommy," she finally said. "And then I'll get her some different ones."

"Wouldn't it be better to wait till tomorrow morning, dear? Then they will be fresh," suggested her mother.

The next morning, Mrs. Waterman reminded Rosemary of the plan, for she knew that a child's memory is very short. Rosemary had brought home some wild violets a few days before, and that was what her mother expected her to pick now. She was somewhat disconcerted when the child returned with a bunch of dandelions. However, she smiled pleasantly; she knew in her heart that to Rosemary's grandmother these dandelions from Rosemary would seem as lovely as violets—or orchids.

"You know that box of pretty writing paper you received at Christmas time, dear," began Mrs. Waterman, "don't you think it would be nice if you printed From Rosemary on one sheet of it? You know how to print your name, and I will show you how to print From. You can put it with the flowers for a birthday greeting."

That was making use of her stationery, and Rosemary grew quite excited as she printed From Rosemary in straggling letters. On her own initiative, underneath, she drew the outlines of a wild-eyed man.

Grandma was delighted with the gift and its slightly soiled missive and praised them both, making Rosemary feel very happy. It was a good lesson for the child in the pleasure to be derived from doing something for another person.

In many small ways like this Mrs. Waterman is teaching her little daughter to be thoughtful and considerate. Consideration is not born with a child; it needs to be patiently cultivated. It takes time, but the reward is well worth the trouble.

Of necessity everything is done for a tiny baby, and as the child develops much is continued. All that the baby has is given him. If he is not to grow up selfish, he, in turn, must be taught to give. He must learn the happiness of doing for others; and if he learns this in his early childhood, it will become an integral part of his character.

He needs, constantly, to have opportunities suggested to him, because he is too young to recognize many of them himself.

He needs to be taught, too, to feel and show appreciation for other people's considerate acts and gifts. That is part of the lesson. Children really enjoy practicing these little amenities if we show them the way pleasantly and wisely.

PETER, WHO BECAME A MAN OF POWER.

LESSON X—SEPTEMBER 3, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Peter and the apostles answered, We must obey God rather than man.—Acts 5:29.

LESSON: 4:8-20.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Acts 1:6-14.

The Man That Was.

When Andrew introduced his brother to Jesus, the Master said, "Thou art Simon." He saw Peter as he was. Jesus needed not that any man should tell him what was in a man—Jesus knew that. He knew all about that fellow Simon. He was rugged, rough, out-of-door man, self-confident, energetic, bold, forceful. He was impulsive, unpredictable, undependable. Indeed, it would have been difficult to have found a more impulsive, unstable, unpredictable man than Simon. He was always saying the wrong thing, or doing the wrong thing. As the old saying goes, he was "always putting his foot into it." Instances are legion. One moment he is sure he can walk on the water to Jesus, the next moment he is crying out for help like a small child. One moment he confesses with spiritual insight that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God, and the next moment he is scolding Jesus as if he were a little child. Entranced by what had taken place on the Mount of Transfiguration, he blurts out that it would be a good thing to build three tabernacles on the Mount, one each for Moses, Elijah and Jesus, and the record says he said this because "he knew not what to say." In other words he did not know what to say, but he said it. At the Last Supper when Jesus kneels before him to wash his feet, he emphatically states that his Lord is never going to wash his feet, and then in the light of Jesus' words, he implores him to wash not only his feet, but his hands and his head.

He boasts that although all the other disciples may deny and forsake his Lord, he would never do a thing like that, and a few hours later he denies him three times. He boldly strikes out with a sword against a whole gang in the garden, men who were armed, and then cowers before a servant girl who accuses him of being one of the group with Jesus.

He and John run to the Tomb, and John, being the younger man, beats Peter there. But John stops at the door of the Tomb to look things over and to think about things. Not so, this fellow Simon—he dashes at once into the Tomb. And when, one morning after Jesus rose from the dead, he appeared on the shore of the lake and one of the disciples recognized him, Peter impulsively throws himself into the water and swims to the shore—he wasn't the kind of fellow who would wait until the boat had come to the shore. Warm-hearted, impulsive, unstable, quick-spoken—that was the kind of man Simon was. And Jesus saw that. He saw Simon just as he was.

The Man That Was To Be.

But Jesus also saw Simon as he might become. "Thou art Simon," said he. "Thou shalt be called Peter, which being interpreted means A Rock." This unstable, impulsive fellow had within him the possibilities of a character that was as rugged as granite itself. He was to become a leader of the Apostolic Band. This man who was so cowardly in the face of a taunt from a little servant girl, was to be courageous in the face of the religious and political powers of the nation. He was to be a source of strength in the Early Church.

But more. This fellow was to become a man who wrote two books of the New Testament, books that are immortal, and books that breathe hope and strength and courage into the hearts of people that are passing through hard times. For scholars are pretty well agreed that this Big Fisherman who was the leader of the Early Church, was also the author of I and II Peter in the New Testament. One need not quibble about details. It does not have to be said that Jesus saw this detail. It needs only to be said that Jesus saw the finer possibilities in this man Simon. He saw him, not only as he was, but as he might become. It was his way with men—Jesus always saw them both in actuality and in potentiality.

The Secret of It All.

How did it all come about? There were, of course, many factors in the growth and development of Simon into Simon Peter. But one suspects that perhaps the biggest factor was the Master's faith in him, which awakened and quickened and sustained Simon's faith in himself.

There must have been many times during the days of Simon's discipleship when he felt that there was not much use of trying any longer. He just kept making a mess of things, try as hard as he could. And again and again, he must have become discouraged and been tempted to give up. And then he would be haunted and helped by the Master's words when they first met, "Thou art . . . thou shalt be." Thou shalt be! Thou shalt be!!

This was especially true after Simon had denied his Lord. Everything seemed lost then. And as that defeated man sobbed his heart out in the darkness of the night, he must have felt that he was a ghastly failure. And then there probably flashed into his mind the words of Jesus, "Thou art . . . thou shalt be." And perhaps he remembered the words of Jesus when Jesus told him that he had prayed for him, that his faith might not fail, and that "after he had turned again," he was to help his fellow disciples. So the Master still had faith in him! Well he just would not let the Master down! If ever he got the chance he would make it right with the Master and start all over again. And he did just that at the Lake that early morning.

And when the Holy Spirit filled his heart he became a fearless, dynamic figure, a mighty power, a spearhead in the crusade of the Early Church against the evils of the day and in behalf of the Kingdom of God. He had been a fisher; he became a fisher of men.

It Still Works.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge once told me the story of a man who had achieved success not only in material things, but in character and service. As he sat one night with a friend by the fireplace in his lovely home, his friend asked him the secret of his success. "Well," said the man, "it all goes back to an incident so simple that I am loath to tell you about it. But when I was a youngster in Indiana, it was my task to take care of the fire in the little one-room school house which I attended. One morning as I was on my knees cleaning out the ashes from the stove, the schoolmaster, a kindly man came by and, pausing only for a moment, he put his hand on my head and said quietly, 'Bob, some day, I believe, you are going to be a good and a great man.' And as I knelt there I made up my mind that in so far as I was able, so help me God, I would not disappoint my teacher. Through the years, when the going was rough and tough, and when I would become discouraged, I would think of what my teacher had said that winter morning, and I would thank God and take courage. There were, of course, other factors in my success, but my teacher's ability to awaken my faith in myself was perhaps the most dynamic one."

You and I are not what we ought to be. But we are not what we can become. As we keep our minds and hearts open and responsive to his Spirit and as we keep our wills obedient to his will, we can increasingly become what we want to become and what he would have us to become.

Three Declarations.

The Gospel made three great declarations of faith. They are declarations which will ever remain beyond the bounds of proof, and yet they are what men live by. What we do, and what we are, will be determined by our faith in these declarations, and in them we come to understand the meaning of Paul's great words, "The just shall live by faith."

1. The first is that man is immortal. It is probably true to say that if we had to gather the Gospel of Christ up in one sentence we should say it was, "Man, you are immortal; trailing clouds of glory, you come from God, and march on to God, who is your home." Of course that is faith. Religion does not claim it to be a fact, for it never can be proved a fact. It is greater than a fact; it is the faith that makes the facts of life meaningful.

For what are the real facts of life? Most of us do not want to face that question, for the answer is not very cheerful. The facts are, we are born of a biological process; we exist as physical bodies which are maintained, just as are all animals, by food and shelter; we are no more sure of the reason for our existence than an animal is; we exist at the mercy of the physical world, and, as far as we can see, we go through a process of birth, activity and death, and others come on to take our place. According to our knowledge, we are mortal. There are some mortals who become Platos and Shakespeares, it is true, but, to the eye, their end is like the galley slaves.

Into a world of such fact, Christianity comes with its glowing faith, not to deny such facts, but to bring a faith that would change their whole meaning and change the dust to grandeur. Of course, we are mortals, of course, we are of the earth, it is declared; and Christianity, unlike many other religions, never tried to deny the world God made. Instead, it glorified this earthly life of ours to say that the earthen vessels contain a treasure, the treasure of man's eternal soul, and that you and I are not doomed to extinction, but blessed to live in all the meaning we give to God.

The beautiful war memorial in Edinburgh to the Scottish boys who died in the last war, has these words written over the names of the Highland young men, "These are they that shall never grow old." Yes, it is true of all such boys—but that is what Jesus came to tell us—about you and me and all other children of God, "These are they that shall never grow old"; for we march on, not to death, but to life, to a land where we shall need no lamp there, for the Lord God shall give us light, and man shall live for ever and ever.

2. But there is another declaration, and Paul phrased it most clearly for the world. "In Christ there is no bond or free, barbarian or Scythian." It was the declaration of the spiritual equality of man. Again, that announcement came to the ears of a despairing humanity. At that time, far more than half of the people of the known world were slaves, and a small, select group ruled the world by virtue of their caste and their claim to superior birth and station. There was not a place on the earth where there was an equality of opportunity. There were so many who were bound, and there were so many who were pointed to with scorn as barbarians.

But in the midst of the world there appeared a new kind of church, a new kind of society which offered equal rights and privileges, and exacted equal responsibilities from all of its members, refusing to acknowledge any rank or station within its life outside of the rank of character and service. Here, indeed, was the fellowship of the spirit.

Yet that is faith, and again, it is one of those things which can never be proved. There are so many differences in life that seem to be so permanent, color, race, ability, and station in life. The walls of these divisions are so great and so strong, yet no one of us ever begins to live the Christian life until he possesses the faith that in the realm of the spirit there is no distinction among us from the viewpoint of God. The Roman Catholic Church has maintained hold of so many spiritual virtues and has the ability to place them in a setting in which they can be seen very clearly. It places all spiritual authority in the person of the Pope and grants him all the outward grandeur of his position. Then it demands that the man it has raised to the position of supreme power in the church should go to confession in the same manner as a simple Catholic peasant. In that sense it has remained true to the declaration of the Gospel which declared that in the midst of the world—with all of its differences and inequalities—there is a divine society of the church in which the value of each and every person is equal.

3. With these, is the faith of the Gospel in the worth of the individual person. How Jesus emphasized and underscored his announcement of this basic declaration of God. To him, it was so definite and unequivocal—the hairs of your head are numbered: you are sought by God as a shepherd seeks the sheep he has lost. It is caught up in the sublime meaning of the explanations of Jesus as to why he came. Think of why he could have come. He could have come to take the greatest throne on earth; to have unfolded all the secrets of the universe and prove the existence of God without a doubt; to have shattered the laws of the universe in a miracle so great that the whole world would have knelt in awe. Instead of that, why did he come? "I am come," he said, "to seek and to serve them that are lost." Men and women such as we are of such worth that Jesus of Nazareth came to find us, perverse and foolish as we are, and bring us back to God.

But that is only faith, we say, it cannot be proved. Assuredly it is—only a faith—but what a faith! There is no faith like it in all the world. You and I are of such infinite worth that we make an impress upon the mind and heart of the God of atomic energy.

We need to be made whole, but we need a faith to make us whole, a faith that is greater than our power, and a faith that is beyond our knowledge. Here is our faith—we are immortal, we are equals in the spirit of life, we are of infinite meaning to God. That is our faith. That is the Christian faith. That is the faith that shall make us whole.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Tuesday Roy needed a friend to take him to the hospital to see about a suspected hernia. Wednesday David needed a thigh examined to ascertain whether or not there was a fracture. On Wednesday afternoon twenty children were carried to the dentists of Burlington and Graham. Friday Hugh was suffering with his left eye, and Jackie had kept his matron up all night with something festering in his right foot. So off he goes to the hospital on Friday morning to have his foot lanced in two places. Just a little peep into a busy schedule where eighty children romp and run and work and play.

And the dietician says, "Doctor Truitt, what do you suggest for a change in diet? It is so samelike so much of the time, and with eighty children of all ages and nine adults of several ages?" Your guess is as good as mine as to what answer I gave. Nobody pays board. Everybody eats three times a day, and how they do eat! Then there are bills, invoices, and more bills.

Have you ever held a little six-year-old boy in your arms after he has lain on the operating table and had the tough bottom of his foot twice lanced? Have you ever had him hug you tight and felt the big, deep sobs, as you carried him to the automobile? Have you had him lean over against you as you drove home—helpless little fellow as charming as ever the sun shone upon? Well, then you know why no day is too long. Before you began the day you had already asked the good Lord to help you; and during the day you sensed his help. That is your Orphanage!

When you come to your mail waiting on the desk and find an Anniversary check for $100.00, another for $25.00, and two others for $10.00 each, you sort of smile and thank God for friends of little helpless children. Those four friends didn't look around and ask some committee if it was in the budget. The budget is a "needs must." Thanks for the budget; but I get the same sort of thrill out of the "outside of and beyond the budget givers"!

That is the "second mile," and it is a mighty happy mile for an increasing number of people! The prodigal son in Jesus' story had had his full share from the budget, but the angels in heaven rejoiced when his father exceeded the budget. There was something beyond the budget—the goodness and grace of God.

The Forty-third Anniversary and Home-Coming day may put us back in the "black" again. It will be a happy day if it does. Several of our former boys are in the service of their country in far places. They cannot come back, but they will be thinking of home and you; and they will be hoping for the very best for their "old home." Some of them will know they were eating their "sweet bread" while they were here, and they will not be envious if it is even sweeter for the little fellows that are here now.

Thank you everyone for whatever you do and whenever you do it. But now would be a mighty good time!

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

MINISTRY TO AGRICULTURAL MIGRANTS.

An interdenominational ministry to agricultural migrants has been initiated this summer by the Home Missions Council of North America and the North Carolina Council of Churches.

The Congregational Christian Church is one of the twenty-three denominations making up the Home Mission Council. Austin H. Armitstead, the staff representative of the Council, is in North Carolina working with denominational leaders through the North Carolina Council of Churches to start a religious, recreational and educational work among some of the 10,000 agricultural migrants in North Carolina.

This is the twenty-fourth state where the church is working with agricultural migrants. In the southeast, work is being carried on in Virginia and Florida, as well as in North Carolina.

In its work with agricultural migrants, the Home Missions Council uses mobile units, called "Harvesters," which serve as a "community on wheels." In the mobile unit can be found a portable organ, portable altar, portable communion set, sports equipment, games, toys, clothing, Bibles, religious materials, public address system, movie and slide projectors.

The home missions work with agricultural migrants is financed through the home missions boards of the denominations, through local churches, and, through World Day of Prayer offerings.

Missions Council Adds Secretary

Rev. Quentin Leisher of Cohasset, Massachusetts, minister of the Cohasset Congregational Church, has been appointed a secretary of the Missions Council of Congregational Christian Churches, with his office at international headquarters, 14 Beacon Street, Boston. Mr Leisher, whose major duties will be along the lines of missionary promotion, will have special relationship to the American Board of Foreign Missions. He started his work the first of this month.

REV. QUENTIN LEISHER

While serving in the United States Navy prior to World War II, Mr. Leisher visited numerous Pacific Island bases, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, Panama, Haiti and the Dutch West Indies. While stationed at Pearl Harbor in 1939-40, he was active in the First Methodist Church of Honolulu.

Prior to taking over the pastorate of the Cohasset Congregational Church two years ago, Mr. Leisher was minister of the Pilgrim Congregational Church in Southboro, Massachusetts.

Mr. Leisher is the son of Mrs. (Rev.) Estle M. Leisher, director of the Christian Community Center in Boise, Idaho. His father, the late Rev. Ralph W. Leisher, was at one time pastor of Baptist Churches in Romeo and Three Rivers, Michigan. Mr. Leisher was born at Oelwien, Iowa, and educated at Whitworth College and Boston University School of Theology.

While in Cohasset, Mr. Leisher was active in civic movements, serving on the board of directors of the Cohasset Community Center and the Paul Pratt Library. He has been secretary-treasurer of the Pilgrim Association of the Congregational Christian Churches.

A musician, Mr. Leisher played in the Navy Band as a trombone soloist, and later in several church orchestras.

Mr. Leisher was ordained a Congregational Christian minister in Cohasset, Massachusetts, in January, 1948, by the Ecclesiastical Council of the Pilgrim Association of Congregational Christian Churches.

WORK

Work!

Thank God for the might of it,
 The ardor, the urge, the delight of it—
 Work that springs from the hearts desire,
 Setting the brain and the soul on fire—
 Oh, what is so good as the heat of it,
 And what is so glad as the beat of it,
 And what is so kind as the stern command,
 Challenging brain and heart and hand?

Work!

Thank God for the pride of it,
 For the beautiful, conquering tide of it,
 Sweeping the life in its furious flood,
 Thrilling the arteries, cleansing the blood,
 Mastering the stupor of dull despair,
 Moving the dreamer to do and dare.
 Oh, what is so good as the urge of it,
 And what is so glad as the surge of it,
 And what is so strong as the summons deep,
 Rousing the torpid soul from sleep?

Work!

Thank God for the swing of it,
 For the clamoring, hammering ring of it,
 Passion of labor daily hurled
 On the mighty anvils of the world.
 Oh, what is so fierce as the flame of it?
 And what is so huge as the aim of it?
 Thundering on through dearth and doubt,
 Calling the plan of the Maker out.
 Work, the Titan; Work, the friend,
 Shaping the earth to a glorious end,
 Draining the swamps and blasting the hills,
 Doing whatever the Spirit wills—
 Rending a continent apart,
 To answer the dream of the Master heart.
 Thank God for a world where none may shirk—
 Thank God for the splendor of work!

News Flashes

The Editor preached last Sunday in his former pulpit in Newport News.

Dr. Jesse H. Dollar assisted Rev. Earl Farrell in revival services last week at Cypress Chapel.

Dr. Warren H. Denison has moved from Dayton, Ohio, to 632 Broad Street, Grinnell, Iowa. Before going to Dayton, Dr. Denison was pastor of Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk.

Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson are attending the Bible Conference at Massanetta Springs. If our memory is correct they have missed only one conference in the past fifteen or more years. The managing editor and his wife were there over the weekend. Our ministers, many of whom used to be regular attendants, were conspicuous by their absence. They are missing a good conference.

In another column will be found an interesting article on "The O'Kelley Movement," by Earl West. What makes it particularly interesting is that it is reproduced from Gospel Advocate, the able publication promoted by the group usually known to us as Campbellites. We knew that they shared with us a great reverence for Barton Stone, but we are glad that they also recognize O'Kelly as the pioneer of real religious democracy at least in the South. Note that this article spells his name O'Kelley. We dare say that there are those among us who can learn something of the Christian Church by reading it.

The church is never a place, but always a people; never a fold but always a flock; never a sacred building, but always a believing assembly. The church is you who pray, not where you pray. A structure of brick or marble can no more be a church, than your clothes of serge or satin can be you. There is in this world nothing sacred but man, no sanctuary of God but the soul. It is a greater wrong to defame the humblest of God's saints, than it would be to fire a cathedral; the former is sacrilege, the latter incendiarism; the former is sin, the latter a crime; the former God will punish, the latter man will. Never lower the divine ideal, that on earth man alone is the habitation of God.—Selected.

UNION GROVE.

The Key Worker Class of Union Grove Sunday School entertained the beginners' department with an ice-cream social at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Coye Coble recently.

Some 22 children and 34 parents and visitors enjoyed the fellowship and the delicious homemade icecream and cookies. The Coble lawn is a large, spacious expanse of green grass and it made an ideal spot for the occasion.

Mrs. Arlon Coble and Mrs. Theodore Smith are the teachers for the beginners, while Mrs. Coye Coble and Mr. Van Brown are the teachers of the Key Worker Class.

Ten Work Commandments

- 1: Handle the hardest job first each day.
Easy ones are pleasures.
- 2: Do not be afraid of criticism—
Criticize yourself often.
- 3: Be glad and rejoice in the other fellow's success—
- 4: Do not be misled by dislikes.
Acid ruins the finest fabrics.
However, both may be used to advantage.
- 5: Be enthusiastic—
It is contagious:
- 6: Do not have the notion that success means simply money-making.
- 7: Be fair, and do at least one decent act every day in the year.
- 8: Honor the chief.
There must be a head to everything.
- 9: Have confidence in yourself.
Believe you can do it.
- 10: Harmonize your work.
Let sunshine radiate and penetrate.

The entire Sunday school, with Mr. Paul Wilson as superintendent, has made good progress this year. Each class has shown an increase in interest and attendance.

SPOON'S CHAPEL.

Spoon's Chapel Christian Church of the Western North Carolina Conference, has recently purchased new hymnbook racks, and communion cup holders for the pews. Pews and floor have been refinished and the church building painted on the inside.

A new cabinet for storage has also been purchased and is proving very useful in providing needed storage space. The church is also proud of its new vestibule and bell steeple, built at a cost of $750.00.

This is one of the smaller but active churches of the conference.

THE O'KELLEY MOVEMENT.

The prelude to the Restoration Movement opened chiefly in Virginia and North Carolina shortly after the Revolutionary War. The chief character in the movement was a temperamental Irishman by the name of James O'Kelley. Students of the Restoration Movement will always be interested in O'Kelley because of his role in turning men to thinking about a return to the Scriptures in religion.

The Methodist Movement.

John Wesley lived and died a member of the Established Church and was buried in his Angelican robes. Rebelling against the frigid devotion in Church of England worship services, Wesley led a group of people in advocating a "warmer" devotion in worshipping God. Wesleyan Societies grew up rapidly in the Angelican Church, but none the less were still a vital part of this church.

It is difficult to determine whether there would have been a Methodist Church had not the Revolutionary War occurred. The simple fact is that this war had much to do with bringing the Methodist Church into existence.

The New English colonies were very early settled by English immigrants who quite understandably brought with them their English policies as well as their English religion. The English Church believed that the crown was the head of the church. Support of the church was by compulsory taxation. The clergy were, therefore political appointees as well as religious. As English immigrants pushed into the colonies, they transplanted their politico-religious system to America. But along, too, there came the Wesleyan preachers, still clamoring for a warmer devotion to God.

For a century before the Revolutionary War the colonists experienced a widening breach in the Church of England. As the rising tide of rebellion against English oppression increased, the clergy was forced to take sides. Internal distrust and disagreement led to dissension in the old-line English clergy and the members of the Wesleyan Societies. When the political crisis burst into flame, the Wesleyan Societies found themselves lined up behind the colonists pleading for liberty, and the old-line clergy remaining loyal to the crown. When the war broke out, the clergy fled to England, but the preachers in the Wesleyan Societies remained true to

EVERY DECADE A NEW OPPORTUNITY.

In the Brewers Journal of May, 1950, we note that 14,000,000 old beer customers have died, and over one-third of the present families in the United States have been formed since 1940. The potential beer market has been increased by 18,000,000 people, equivalent of a Canada and a Norway. The lesson the brewers draw from this fact, is that a new beer drinker must be made for everyone who dies, and that the formation of a new family is a new opportunity to sell beer.

Perhaps it is our business to try to recruit abstainers from the new population as it comes along. Perhaps we should regard the formation of a new family as the creation of a new opportunity for the church!—The Voice.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

RELIGION AND LABOR

Americans have cause for "justifiable pride" in the "tremendous achievements" of the free economic system, even though no completely "adequate way" has been discovered to feed all people despite food surpluses.

This observation was contained in the Federal Council of Churches' annual "Labor Sunday Message," which is being distributed for use to churches and community groups on next Sunday.

Prepared by the department of the Church and Economic Life, the message urges church groups to make more vigorous application of Christian principles to economic life and to appreciate more fully labor's contribution to industrial welfare.

Terming the world crises as a "summons" to bring economic practices closer to Christian ideals, the message states that "To stress the value of Christian brotherhood and cooperation on Sunday, while we live under less exacting standards during the week, creates inner spiritual conflict . . . and moral decay."

"As Christians we must recognize Christ as Lord and Master of every department of life, whether we are employers or employees, housewives or farmers," the message says.

The message also points out that workers, as their incomes and security increase, "become more interested in personal expression and recognition. They want to feel that they as persons are expressed in what they do. They want to be more than a number on an assembly line or a unit in the cost of business."

In an appeal for sympathetic understanding of labor's problems and aspirations, the message maintains that "too few church people are familiar with the struggle of organized labor to raise standards of living for its members . . . and of labor's contribution to industrial progress and peace through collective bargaining."

Rejecting the notion that "unemployment and hunger are inevitable any more than war is inevitable," the message criticizes "those who would have us believe that insecurity and suffering are the price we must inevitably pay for freedom." "Men can live nobly in want and adversity," the message observes, "but no man can live nobly who is responsible for keeping another in that condition."

An attack on the problems of distribution is called for in the message, which states: "Millions of workers around the world have learned through suffering that we have found no adequate way to feed hungry people even when food surpluses are being destroyed. Despite all our resources, we have not been able to meet even the basic needs of many people at home and of millions throughout the world."

As a means of exerting greater Christian influence on economic life, the message urges the churches to "proclaim more convincingly the eternal truths of the Christian faith in language familiar to laymen and relevant to the common life."

Preparation of the Labor Sunday Message is undertaken each year by the forty-five members of the Federal Council's department on Church and Economic Life. The group is made up of representatives of labor and industry, agriculture, the professions and the clergy.

COURT DECISION STRENGTHENS WEEKDAY RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

The validity of released-time religious education has again been upheld. So commented Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, as he reviewed a recent New York court decision dismissing a petition brought by two Brooklyn parents to halt released-time classes.

"The clear, positive and constructive decision by Justice DiGiovanna will greatly strengthen the movement of weekday religious education," Dr. Ross continued. "It is definitely in keeping with our American tradition regarding religious freedom."

Some 2,000,000 children in 3,000 communities in the United States are dismissed from their schools to attend weekday religious education classes one or more hours a week.

In his decision, the Justice went back to the origins of the nation, saying: "When the founding fathers set about their task of adopting an organic law for this new nation, they did not deny the value of religion, but wisely determined that all creeds could live together more harmoniously if no creed was given preference. Therefore, in this country there has been developed a formal separation of church and state, which does not deny the value of any formal religion, but is per se, a guarantee of freedom of worship."

Pointing out that the preamble to the Constitution of the State of New York expresses gratitude "to Almighty God for our Freedom," Justice DiGiovanna declares: "It is in recognition of this principle that separation of church and state has never meant freedom from religion but rather freedom of religion."

"To permit restraint upon state and local educational agencies which are lawfully authorized to grant released time to our young citizens who wish to take religious instruction would constitute a suppression of this right 'of' religious freedom."

"It is tantamount to a denial of a basic right guaranteed by the letter and the spirit of our American concept of government. It would be a step in the direction of and be consonant with totalitarianism and communistic philosophies existing in jurisdictions wherein atheism and the suppression of all religions are preferred to the freedom of the individual to seek religious instruction and worship."

How does your church justify its existence? Perhaps this sermon by Rev. Joe A. French of Lanett, Alabama, may help answer that question!

Why Lanett Needs the Congregational Christian Church

In an editorial in the Valley Daily of June 29, 1950, it was stated that there are 42 churches in the Valley, where there are some 35,000 people. The question was raised as to whether there are too many churches in the six valley towns.

In answer to this question, we may well examine our church, its program, and purpose for existence. Why does Lanett need a Congregational Christian Church? Why do we want a new church building? Of what value is our church to the Kingdom of God in this area? These are rather searching questions, and unless a church can produce legitimate, logical and valid reasons for its existence it might do well to close its doors and hand its responsibility over to the other churches.

Many are the reasons for the establishment and the maintenance of churches, and, sad to say, some of them are rather poor. Sometimes these motives are human and drop to the level of pride or selfishness. Sometimes it is for the perpetuation of a creed, doctrine, or denomination that churches are continued.

If any of these reasons or similar ones were the only justification for the existence of this church, I can assure you that I would not be interested in being its pastor. There were weightier reasons which weighed heavily in my decision to become pastor of this church. It is because this church has a distinctive purpose for being here and continuing its ministry in this city that I am here as its pastor. There are ample factors in the situation which appeal to me. There are, I believe, God given purposes for the continuation of this church. There is a wide field of activity and service in God's Kingdom's work for which this church, by the nature of its organization and practice, is well fitted to render. The right of this church to continue its service in this community is validated in the great plan and purpose of God. It is this kind of need and appeal, along with the assurance of being wanted, which gives one compensation far beyond any measurement of salary. There is a satisfaction in doing a job that needs to be done, which cannot be bought with money.

The feeling that one is doing God's will is a most rewarding experience.

To me there are very definite and specific reasons why Lanett should have the Congregational Christian Church, why its program should be enlarged, and why its ministry should be strengthened.

First of all, Lanett needs a meeting place for free spirits. There are many people who seek freedom in worship and in religious expression who do not find what they desire in a church where everything is already prepared for them and all they have to do is to accept it on the authority of the church or its representatives. Such people want to think for themselves as they seek knowledge and light from all sources available. There are many people in the Valley who are capable of thinking for themselves and who are also capable of performing their religious duties without outward control. Of course, it remains too that there are some people who need the direction of an authoritarian church, which can prescribe all religious activities. They need the restraint of creeds and discipline. Such people thrive best in the harness of theological and doctrinal control. But there are those who need the fellowship of those who discipline themselves.

In a fellowship like ours, everyone is on his honor to live his own life in accordance with the teachings of the scriptures and as interpreted by his own enlightened mind and trained conscience. One of the primary factors in the formation of both the original Congregational and Christian Fellowships was "the right of private judgement." Throughout their history, it has been maintained that the "right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege which should be accorded to all." This church believes in the right to worship and serve God according to the dictates of one's own conscience.

Lanett needs a meeting place for people who want and must have freedom in religious faith and practice. It was for the love of freedom that this fellowship came into being. Religious freedom has always been a dominant note in the Congregational Christian Churches. The early church of the New Testament times has been an ideal toward which they have worked. The Bible is held in great reverence and the teachings of Jesus are accepted as the guiding principles for individual and church life. Congregational Christian Churches are democratic and independent churches. The government of each local church is in the hands of its members. While independent, Congregational Christian Churches of their own choice unite with local and national organizations in the great tasks of world wide missions, evangelism, education, and social service, the function of these bodies is one of fellowship and counsel to the local churches, and not of compulsion. Lanett needs a rallying place for such free spirits who seek together to determine the will and purpose of God and give themselves to the doing of His work.

Again, Lanett needs A Fellowship Free From Creedal, Doctorinal, and Ecclesiastical control. There are people who formulate their own theological conceptions, and such people need a place of fellowship where they will not be frowned upon for having their own opinions. People of this spirit do not like to have their religious conceptions and theology determined by someone else. They do not like to be bound by creeds, doctrines, and church polity which gives the church and the individual no liberties in religious practice.

Lanett needs a fellowship for people who are free to explore the claims of ancient creeds and tradition. They recognize the value in ancient creeds and doctrines, but with John Robinson, who was one of the leaders in the formation of the Congregational movement in England, they believe that God yet has revelations to be made to his people. Such men and women are "united in striving to know the will of God as taught in the Holy Scriptures, and in our purpose to walk in the ways of the Lord, made known or to be made known to us."

There are many churches whose objective is to perpetuate and propagate standardized religious beliefs and practices. There is a greater task for this church than that of trying to perpetuate some man-made opinion or desire. The Church of Christ was not called into being for this purpose, but to proclaim the wisdom of the councils of heaven. Creedal and doctorinal statements have a legitimate place and serve a worthy purpose in sharpening a man's think-

Rosemont's 48th Anniversary Held Sunday, August 13th

By HERBERT G. COUNCIL, JR. PASTOR.

Members and friends of the Rosemont Congregational Christian Church, Norfolk, observed the 48th Anniversary of their Church Sunday, August 13th, at the morning service with a large congregation in attendance.

As a part of the special program the minister and people rededicated this beautiful brick English Country Style Church to God "For the worship of His Holy Name; for the ministry of the Word; for the administration of the sacraments; for comfort of those who mourn; for help to those who are tempted; for strength to those who are weak; for the blessing of the family; for the guidance of childhood; for the summoning of youth to a life of service; for sympathy and fellowship with the needy; for brotherhood with all men; for the unity of all believers in Christ; for aggression against evil; for fostering civic righteousness; for promoting peace and justice in all the earth; for the sending forth of the Gospel unto the uttermost parts of the earth; for the giving of hope and courage to those that labor in the Lord; and for the consecration of life and service."

Mrs. Royal K. Gallup, Choir Director, sang as a solo, "My Prayer for Rosemont," the words of which were written by one of Rosemont's own members, Mrs. Mary H. Booth, now living in Raleigh, N. C. The music for the lovely poem was written by another one of Rosemont's members, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Goforth, organist.

Lord,

I would breathe a prayer for Rosemont,
I would pray for unity;
I would ask Thee Thy blessing
On each member personally.

I would thank Thee for Thy guidance
Through the years gone on before;
I would thank Thee for Thy servants
Now passed on to "Yonder Shore."

I would ask Thee to inspire us,
That we do more work for Thee,
May we ever seek Thy guidance
As we labor faithfully.

May our love for Rosemont deepen
As we come often to her shrine.
May the love and peace she teaches
Dwell within this heart of mine.

The pastor delivered the Anniversary Sermon, entitled, "Strength Out of Weakness." The members of the Senior Choir rendered a very beautiful selection, entitled, "Bless the Lord, O My Soul," by Gessler.

Rosemont Christian Church was organized August 14th, 1902, by the Rev. J. Pressley Barrett who was at that time pastor of the Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk, Virginia. But even before that, according to a history of the Church written by Mrs. Mary H. Booth, "Around the year 1900 the leading citizens of the community became concerned about having a place of worship in our community. Most of the people in the community attended the Providence Christian Church which was about two miles away. Arrangements were made to hold prayer meetings in the Portlock School which at that time was a one room frame building. Later a store building owned by Mrs. Charlie Tatem was rented. This building stood across the road from our present Church. Sunday school was held there on Sunday afternoons. Mr. John L. Gibson, a public minded citizen, much interested in the welfare of the community, offered to give a plot of ground for the erection of a church building. Mr. Edmund Christian loaned $560.00 in cash and the Rosemont Chapel was erected. Much of the labor was done by adult members of the Sunday school who gave their service without charge. When the Chapel was completed, the congregation assumed the debt due Mr. Christian. Mr. Gibson and his wife, Mary E. Gibson, gave a deed, dated August 12, 1902, to the trustees of the Rosemont Chapel for a plot of ground fronting 50 feet on Bainbridge Avenue and running back 100 feet."

It was during the pastorate of Rosemont's sixth pastor, Rev. D. A. Keys, that the second Church Building was erected. While he was serving as pastor of the South Norfolk Christian Church he preached on Sunday afternoon at Rosemont. In 1914 he became Rosemont's first full time pastor. About the year 1915 the second Church was built.

The third (and present) Church Building was erected in 1931 during the pastorate of the Rev. J. Frank Morgan. Members of the New Church Fund Committee whose untiring efforts made possible the realization of their dream of this beautiful House of God with tinted windows and open trussed roof, so worshipful both in outward appearance and inward design, were O. F. Smith, chairman (deceased), A. L. Gwynn (deceased), H.

L. Bondurant, Sr., and R. W. Bondurant. During the last six months of the campaign the following people were added to the committee: Mr. and Mrs. O. S. Mills, Mrs. H. R. Morrison, Sr., and Benjamin Ramsey. Mrs. O. S. Mills then served as chairman.

Mr. O. F. Smith, chairman of the committee, presented the following resolution to the members of the church on Sunday, July 10, 1927 at the morning service of worship; "That we give to the New Church Fund as the Lord prospers us, for three years, and at the end of that time, if we do not have the $15,000.00, the money given is to be returned to the donors." There were about 75 persons who signed this resolution that Sunday morning in a great consecration service.

Their goal was reached and a Building Committee was set up—O. F. Smith, chairman, A. L. Gwynn, W. H. Farrow, Dr. L. C. Ferebee, J. R. Morrison, Jr. (deceased), H. L. Bondurant, Sr., Mrs. O. S. Mills, Mrs. E. H. Cuthrell, H. R. Morrison, Sr., Rev. J. F. Morgan, member ex officio. The first dirt was removed for the foundation of the present structure by the pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan, September 24, 1930. The Corner Stone was laid October 31, by Dr. H. S. Hardcastle, president of the Eastern Virginia Conference. The New Building was completed February 15, 1931 and on the afternoon of that day it was formally dedicated to the service of the Lord by Dr. W. W. Staley, pastor emeritus of the Suffolk Christian Church, in the presence of a large and happy congregation. The members of Rosemont were very happy that their new church could be dedicated free of debt. Largely through the inspiring leadership of Mrs. B. F. (Aunt Betty) Gibson, the church has never used any means of raising money other than by free will offerings.

Under the splendid leadership Rosemont has had during its past 48 years both in pastors and in laymen and lay-women, the church has continued to grow until it now numbers about 550 people on its roll. Some departments of its thriving Sunday School facilities. A Planning Committee for Sunday School Extension has been set up by the church consisting of the following: C. L. Richardson, chairman, H. News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

ELON OPENS SEPTEMBER 5, 1950.

On September 5, 1950, the 61st annual opening of Elon College will occur. College authorities have been working diligently to make sure that everything is ready for the return of the faculty and students. Particular attention has been given to buildings and grounds, to make sure of the comfort and satisfaction of all occupants. The engineer and plumbers have been working since early spring replacing underground steam and water pipes and repairing plumbing equipment and heating facilities.

During the summer months, we have placed 30 carloads of coal in the coal bins at a cost of approximately $12,000. This is considerable money to advance during the summer, but we have not forgotten the experiences of last year when on two different occasions it looked like we would be compelled to close school for the lack of coal. We are preparing against an evil day of that nature.

A force of painters have kept their brushes going all summer, repairing and painting college buildings, dormitories, and other equipment. They have improved the appearance of the buildings greatly. We are anxious that everyone shall be comfortable and satisfied.

Expert painters and decorators are working on the auditorium. This has been needed for a long, long time. It is a big job and it really took courage to begin it. The good ladies of the church—the Woman's Missionary Society—encouraged us to go ahead with the work. They plan to donate their annual Thanksgiving Offering to help defray the expense of decorating the Whitley Auditorium (auditorium and music building). As I understand it, they are to undertake to underwrite the expense of the auditorium; the college is to pay for the expense of decorating quarters for the music department. This is the first time that this building has been decorated. It has been in use these twenty-five years, with the plastered walls as finished by the plasterers. We hope that the building will be most attractive.

The campus is in excellent condition, green and neatly trimmed.

Jimmy Darden and Jim Hailey have been working as field secretaries during the summer. Paul Plybon, who had served as field secretary for a number of years, resigned in the spring to enter another line of business. Mr. Plybon has done an excellent job. This was a new undertaking for Messrs. Darden and Hailey. They worked hard at their task and have done a good job. It is still a question as to what the enrollment will be in September, but indications are that it will not be much less than a year ago. The war has taken some of our students already. We trust and pray that the present conflict may be settled before the whole world is involved in war for the third time. If such a tragedy should occur, the government will probably need and use our colleges again. It will take an all-out effort on the part of every living being to win a victory over the sinister forces of today and guarantee freedom and security. May God grant that we shall not have another war.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The church and her institutions are supported by voluntary contributions. The church does not possess the power of assessment. If it did, it probably would be unwise to use it. Christian religion is a voluntary institution. It is left to the individual as to whether or not he shall enter the Christian fold. Man, being a free moral agent, can remain in the service of the Kingdom or withdraw at will. There is an impelling force in the Christian doctrine and in the Christian gospel, but no autocratic authority. The same is true with the support of the church and her institutions. Every individual is expected to contribute. He should contribute out of the gratitude of his heart and to the degree that he has been prospered materially. A Christian man contributes materially to the extent that he has allowed the Spirit to prosper him in religious matters. There is no such thing as a stingy Christian. If he is a Christian, really and truly and genuinely, he will give freely, since he has received bountifully. Elon College happens to be our church institution, and certainly one of the important institutions of the church. It is a productive institution, producing leadership for the pulpit and the pew.

At this moment, a bright young man twenty-four years of age is entering Elon College to prepare himself for the ministry. Another young man will present himself in the morning, Thursday, for the same purpose. The church needs ministers, pastors. Elon College was built to help supply this need. The college cannot comply with this holy commission or fulfill this high purpose without adequate funds. We constantly turn to our Sunday schools and churches for support. The college has given generously of what it has. It will be grateful for generous contributions from its church constituency.

WHAT A DIFFERENCE.

The two American Continents were discovered and colonized about the same time, but what a difference there is in literacy and legitimacy of birth between the two. If difference of opportunity and natural resources exists it is in favor of South America. However, the Northern Continent prospered markedly from the beginning in all those social, political, industrial and spiritual elements that make life what it should be. For four centuries the Latin American countries have suffered in almost general destitution, illiteracy and illegitimacy, and the question is, Why?

Look at the figures. In North America, exclusive of Mexico, illiteracy is 6 per cent and illegitimacy is 2.4 per cent. From the Rio Grande River to Cape Horn, illiteracy is 60 to 80 per cent and the illegitimacy is 25 to 50 per cent of the population.

The answer is that above the Rio Grande the whole area with the exception of Quebec had the Bible and the Protestant faith to guide the people. South of the Rio Grande the people were given the sword of the Spaniard and the idols of the priests of the Roman Catholic Church. But for Roman Catholic Quebec the figures on illiteracy and illegitimacy north of the Rio Grande would be less.—S. R. News.

RAMAZAN—A MOSLEM CUSTOM.

*Paul Nilson writes From Talas, Turkey,
About a Moslem custom and
Some of his friends
Observing it.*

Dear Home Folks:

Here in Turkey it's Ramazan! For 28 days pious Moslems honour God and control their bodily desires by fasting from sunrise to sunset.

Fasting! That means nothing to eat or drink from 4:00 a. m. to 8:00 p. m. And it's hot! Even the smoker tied by his habit puts aside his cigarettes. Look at these Turkish friends of mine who were here yesterday—

Mehmet is a husky, powerful workman of 19 who has been digging a ditch and hauling sand for us. He worked all morning in the sun, lay down under a tree at noon and worked till 6:00 p. m. Then he waited around till sunset when the boom of the cannon in the city announced to the faithful that the day's fast was ended. A sip of water or buttermilk, a slice of bread—then in silence the family sits around the heaping dish of food and eats. How does he control himself all day?

Sukru is a man of 50 who owns a big grocery. After the early breakfast he sleeps again till 7:00 a. m. and then goes to his store. All day he is selling food supplies, the frigidaire with its cool water is right at hand. Customers come and go but not a sip or a morsel of food passes his mouth. He is supporting two 16 year old village boys who are learning to be Moslem Hojas. Next year he hopes to pay their way to Egypt to study in the great Moslem Theological Seminary there. After the day's sales are over he goes home, washes up, waits patiently till he hears the Boom! All day long with his workmen and his customers he is patient. No anger or irritability must show.

Ibrahim is a boy of 15 who lost both parents and has lived with adopted parents. Last year though he was the poorest boy he was the first in his class! Scholarship gifts have paid his way here. But also he works in the summer right here in school fixing, patching and painting. Just now he starts in every morning at 8:00 with a paint brush, painting old doors and windows in the Gate House and old Fowle House. Nine hours of painting with no water or food, and no complaints and no angry word. And he slips off quietly three times during the day to say his Namaz (prayers). In the evening after the meal he unites with his adopted parents in the evening prayer.

Suleyman Bey met me in the bank yesterday morning. He had come from Ankara to visit the school and make plans for enrolling his 12 year old boy as a boarder here. At noon he rode up to Talas with me, the table was set and I invited him to have dinner with us. And I got a surprise! This banker from the big city said, "Thank you, but I'm keeping the fast. I'll sit in the parlour and look at the magazines!" Later as we talked about school and boys' character training he told me that on the train at 3:00 a. m. he had risen to eat a cold lunch his wife had prepared, said his prayers, rested till the train came to Kayseri. Then he did his business in the Kayseri bank and would eat nothing till sunset. His father and mother were pious Moslems and from childhood he had learned to keep the month's Fast of Ramazan. An educated man he is, and he profits from his self-imposed fast.

In the old days when the Moslem religion was a part of the Ottoman government, keeping the fast was a national as well as a religious duty. Many kept the fast because they had to. But today Turkey is secular, religion is separated from government. A Turk may smoke on the street, drink in the coffee house, eat in the restaurant and no one will stop him or even remonstrate with him. But the faithful here in central Turkey are quietly zealous in performing their religious duties. It's a hard day—16 hours of sunshine with no food or drink. That takes control! Of course many break it by secretly eating or drinking. There are hypocrites who lie when they say they are keeping the fast. But there are a great many sincere men and women and boys and girls who actually for 28 days eat or drink nothing during the long day.

It's a strange, powerful, custom that grips the faithful Moslem. Why does he inflict hardship on himself like this? I don't know. "This is the way to please God," he has been taught from childhood. It is a religious duty, a tradition 1,300 years old. It's a social custom too. With 95% of one's neighbours Moslem it is easier to do what the community does. But underneath in a man's soul he knows that after controlling his appetite for one month of daily fasting he is a stronger man.

After sunset comes the long awaited big dinner which mother has prepared. How good it tastes! No lack of appetite. Then after a rest the long evening prayer when all men in one room say their prayers, rising and falling to their knees in unison. Then sleep for five hours till about 3:00 a. m. Before sunrise the drummer and crier go from house to house beating the drum and calling the faithful to rise. Mother has been up earlier. Another big meal is ready. Again the family has its meal and prayer before the first steak of dawn. Then back to bed for a few more hours of rest before the day's work begins.

I can't explain the power of Ramazan on our Moslem friends. But I do know that their faithful observance of the fast is a condemnation of our self-indulgence! How little we give up for God!

In His fellowship,— PAUL NILSON.

Dr. Frank D. Watson and his wife, Dr. Amey Watson of Haverford, Pennsylvania, retired educators, are starting a new adventure at the ages of 67 and 65 respectively when they sail Friday, August 11, from New York on the *S. Dr. Frank D. Watson is Professor Emeritus of Sociology and Social Work at Haverford College and Mrs. Watson is a teacher of economics and social service. Both are experienced social workers, students of labor and economics and writers on kindred subjects.

Both Dr. and Mrs. Watson will teach in Pierce College for Girls, Athens, Greece, a Christian liberal high school and junior college for girls founded in 1923 by the American Board.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

NEWS FROM WOMEN'S GROUPS.

BETHEL (NEAR BURLINGTON).

The Woman's Missionary Society of Bethel Church has done several things this year that we might call "home mission" work. Two outstanding events of the year were the days that our ladies met and sewed for motherless children.

One day last fall the women in our group met and made dresses and slips for some twin girls whose mother had been a member of our society. We were all more than happy to furnish material and sew for these little girls.

Last spring, before Easter, the ladies met again to sew for a little girl whom our society has adopted from the Elon Orphanage. Each one carried a covered dish for lunch and material, needle and thread. At the end of the day, we had completed a coat and several dresses. We only had to look at the expression on the little girl's face to know how much she appreciated them. We felt that we had done some good and enjoyed the fellowship of working together.

FRANKLIN.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Franklin Church enjoyed their annual picnic in June, on the lawn of Mrs. Emerson Jones.

The Vesper Service was conducted by Mrs. W. A. Grissom, who used the theme for our May Fellowship program, "Our Daily Bread." The offering received amounted to $7.00, and it was disbursed to the proper channels. Maybe some other church would like to try this plan sometime, in case there is no local Council of Church Women. It worked for us!

The women have not failed in their part of the local church responsibility. Five hundred ($500.00) dollars was contributed to the building fund for the new addition to the church, which is nearing completion. We invite all our readers to come to see, enjoy and worship with us when our building is completed.

The three meetings of the Berta Rowland Circle, at which Mrs. B. V. Hargrave gave the Bible study for the year, were excellent. I would like to leave with you the original poem, "Have I a Share?" which she used to close the meeting.

* * *

HAVE I A SHARE?

By Mrs. B. V. Hargrave.

Shall I take a share in the task begun
By Jesus, when as the lowly Son
Of a poor carpenter, long, long ago
He labored to save men's souls, altho'
He knew that death on the cross would be
His agonizing penalty?
Shall I take a share?

If I say no, that would leave me free
For earthly pleasures. I could be Unburdened by my fellowman's plight,
I could hide my talents from the light
Of the world. I could live well
And carefree—So joyously I could dwell,
If I answer no!

But if I answer, yes, dear Lord,
My way, like thine, will oft be hard.
I must constantly head the piteous cry
Of needy souls, afar and nigh.
I must sacrifice myself each day,
My life at thy feet, I must lay
If I answer yes!

So, shall I take a share in the task begun
By Jesus, the lowly carpenter's son?
Yes or no—which shall it be?
What would you say, if you were me?
And what if you too, friends, were asked Concerning Christ's unfinished task,
Will you take a share?

FRIENDS IN TURKEY.

Betty and Bob Avery, who are well known to many in the Southern Convention, are now American Board missionaries in Tallas, Turkey. They have two children now. This is interesting news, especially since the women are studying the Near East this year, and Turkey is one of the places where the Congregational Christian Church is alone in its missionary work. Bob and Betty will be especially remembered for their work in Carroll County, helping the Gleasons, and in camp work during the summer. We wish for them success in their work.

REMEMBER TO KNIT.

Remember to knit a garment to send to someone on World Community Day, Friday, November 5. Since it takes time to knit, anyone who can should be making a sweater, socks, cap, or some garment, during the summer, so it will be ready the first Friday in November. These are to be sent through Church World Service to needy people in Europe, who will want warm garments this winter.

world affairs," says Dr. Watson, adding with a smile, "For us life begins at 65. We would like to be of service in foreign fields where there is so much need of educated personnel. To help those who suffered severely in World War II and we can think of no place where we would be happier than in Greece."

Born in Philadelphia, Pa., Dr. Watson is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and has taught on the faculty of his alma mater as well as in the New York School of Social Work, the Pennsylvania School of Social Work and Haverford College.

HUNGER IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC.

The theory that with the simple fish and fruit economy of the South Pacific you never can go hungry is exploded by the stories of devastating typhoons that ruined the breadfruit trees and all other growing things. Salt water blown with terrific force over the islands has much the same effect as a forest fire. It takes a year at least for the breadfruit trees to produce again. Meanwhile the people have to live on fish and a few coconuts. They won't actually starve, probably, but they can become mighty hungry. After a recent typhoon a missionary, concerned about the welfare of the people on a group of these islands, hopped a trade boat and visited the devastated area. As the boat anchored near one scene of the disaster there came drifting through the night, the strains of a hymn. Their church was having choir practice—hunger or no hunger.

The life of a missionary in the South Seas is filled with variety. Rev. C. L. Houser, young pastor from Maine, heads our Christian Training School, and he also teaches English Bible and arithmetic; he holds daily chapel and works with the boys on projects in the afternoon. Then he helps repair a pier or run a pipeline. He recently visited a nearby island and showed pictures of the Life of Christ. The next morning he went fishing on a reef and caught 200 lbs. of fish, which were salted down for the school.

Youth at Work in the Church

MAX VESTAL, Elon College, N. C.
MISS ANN TRUITT, Associate

MAX VESTAL VISITS GERMANY.

Oberammergau, Germany,
August 8, 1950.

Dear Friends:

Yesterday afternoon I was sitting on the lawn of the only Protestant church here. Around the tables were six of us who were Americans from Agape and two German youth workers. One had just finished high school, the other, seminary. Miss Mueller is now one of the leaders of Bavarian youth. Bill Graffman is here from Yale. He works with the youth throughout Bavaria. It was unfortunate that he was away on a retreat during our short stay here. The other girl at the table was Margret from near the Russian zone. Miss Mueller in her very good, but amusing, English said that Bill was with us in spirit, but his body was away on a retreat.

At first our conversation lagged. This space was filled with tea and wonderful pastries. We then told about Agape and our work there. They were very interested. Last week they had sent a girl there. She was not allowed to take any money at all out of Germany. They believed, and, after being there, so do I, that this girl was received gratefully at Agape and was well taken care of.

Our two German friends then started on a subject very dear to them—the German youth work. I wish each of the youth in the Southern Convention could have heard what they had to say. We asked the question, "What is happening in the Russian Zone?" Miss Mueller's answer should make all of us realize just how weak our Christianity is. It is so weak that we skip our meeting Sunday evening at the slightest temptation. It is so weak that many of the seats are unfilled at our rallies. Our Christianity is so weak that it is hardly noticeable. Perhaps it took this meeting with these Germans to make me realize this. This is what is happening in the Eastern Zone of Germany: Churches and Sunday schools are still open. They are not persecuted directly. The Communists are, however, working through the youth. Perhaps the father has a job. If his children go to Sunday school, he may lose this job. They are free to go if they wish to take this chance.

In Europe it is more difficult to go to college than in America. The high school graduate must pass very stiff exams. In the Russian Zone the student must be a member of the Communist youth if he is to pass. Is a Christian youth going to give up his chance to higher education, or will he give up his religion? It is a difficult question. What good can he do as a Christian in opposition to the well-educated Communist? If he gives up his religion, then he merely accepts the Communist religion. What would be your decision in the face of such obstacles?

Let me give you some of the answers of the German youth. In one school the youngsters were asked to write a theme for the next day called, "Jesus Christ Never Lived." But the Christians youth knew this wasn't true. So they went to their minister. He went to the superintendent. The themes were never written. The German Protestant youth wear a symbol which is a cross over the world. In a school in the Eastern Zone 150 boys were ordered to stop wearing these pins. Their parents advised them to stop wearing their emblems. The boys met. They decided, "If we take off our pins, we will be denying Christ just as Peter and Judas did. We will wear them." And they did.

Miss Mueller continued, "There the church is persecuted, but is growing by leaps and bounds. Here, we are free to do as we please. Because we are free, many of us are becoming careless. Perhaps it would be better if we too were persecuted."

Cholly Idler, one of our boys from Pennsylvania, pointed out that there are many places where it is too easy to be called a Christian. "Yes," said Miss Mueller, "but not in America. It seems that everyone there is either firmly Christian or not Christian at all." All of us around the table looked at each other. Then we looked at Miss Mueller. Yes, she really believed this. She had met with fine young ministers from America. She had seen only the best. How we wished what she said could be true. Now we had the job of telling her the truth about American "Christians."

There are, of course, some faithful ones, just as she believed, but we were forced to tell her of the others also. We told of the ones who come to church on Christmas and Easter, about those who belong because of their social standard, and about those who come if they get up in time on Sunday morning. We told also about those who merely come and never do anything. Miss Mueller smiled at us rather sympathetically. "Our problems are the same," she said.

If I have learned nothing else in Europe, I have come to the realization that the problems of all people are the same. We have the same desires, and the same sorrows.

Four of us stayed in the home of Peter Nairz, who was a pharisee in the play. If he had not made a special effort to get me a ticket, I would have missed the Passion Play. Mr. and Mrs. Nairz were both very nice. They had had two sons in the German army. One was killed in Leningrad. The other I don't know about. He was never mentioned.

The Passion Play was excellent. It is given by the people of Oberammergau, and no one else. There is a fifty-piece orchestra and a fifty-voice chorus. Nearly every one in town, it seems, is in the play. All the men have long hair and beards. They grow these continually. It is difficult to determine at a glance the sex of the children. I'll tell you more about the play later.

Paris, France,
August 12, 1950.

About two weeks ago Carl and I left Agape. We went by bus from Pinerolo to Nice, France. This was a beautiful trip through the French and Italian Alps. Our first glimpse of the Mediterranean Sea was from high in the Alps. It was magnificent. We passed through the famous gambling city, Monte Carlo. One day was spent in Nice. From there we went by train to Valence. This was a beautiful trip along the coast to Marseilles and then north. A full moon lighted our way. Our stay in Valence was merely a breakfast long. We then took a bus to the work camp at Chambon. Howard Schomer, the Congregational minister there, was away. Carl and I worked one day with our friends at Chambon. That night we talked on Agape. George Booth, who is in charge of all World Council work camps, was there. We had some interesting discussions with him.

To make a long story short—we

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Summer is nearly over and much of the vacationing and traveling will stop, but there are a few days before summer's end and Labor Day. At Crabtree Creek this summer during the Family Life Camp the little Les-ters said a prayer poem that they say when they are traveling in their car and seeing God's beauties.

Some families say a prayer for safety as they begin their journeys. Once I heard a man describe such a prayer as being of "journey mercy."

Traveling can be tiresome for little folk and here are some suggestions to keep them and the others happy: Singing. If all the windows are not down it is not liable to cause hoarseness. It is a good time to learn serious and nonsense songs, "She'll Be Coming Around the Mountain" is a natural for the mountain-farer and "Blow The Man Down" for the seafarer. Great pine woods may inspire one to sing "This is My Father's World." Don't forget the rounds!

Contests to see which side can: see the most cows, horses or a certain kind of tree, or have the occupants look for passenger trains and fast freights. There is the old favorite of picking out the alphabet from the signboards and X and Z are hard to find! Winners are those with the most objects or completing their alphabet first.

Small children enjoy small toys in the car. String bags, such as oranges come in, are nice to hold these. If the driver is the non-nervous type a small harmonica might be included in the kit.

Older children will enjoy finding the route on a road map and watching for the signs. Mother should tell them the history of the surrounding country and point out the historical markers. It is a good opportunity to teach geography and to point out types of crops.

Happy traveling!

THE HIGH WAY.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"I've enjoyed reading every one of these papers, Alice," I said to my niece, who had left samples of her year's work in English for me to see.

I was spending my summer vacation in the home of my brother's family. Alice knows that my work as a children's librarian gives me a great interest in everything written for or by young people.

"I thought you'd like to look them over, Aunt Lucia," Alice replied. "That's why I saved them for you."

"Your essay on candlelight is one that especially appealed to me," I continued, "and I think you have made the early days of our state come to life in the story about the fur traders. Did your teacher assign those subjects to you?"

"Not for those essays you mentioned," my niece answered. "We had written work each week. Sometimes we wrote an essay, sometimes we worked on a short story, sometimes we did a character sketch or a bit of biography, and sometimes we tried verse or plays. For certain weeks the type of writing was assigned, and for others we might choose whatever form we wished."

"Miss Lorance read to us, or gave us to read for ourselves, fine examples of each literary form, and we often talked about titles and subject matter. At the beginning of the course Miss Lorance told us we might write on any topic. She said she knew we thought too well of ourselves to write about anything that was not in good taste."

"I wish you could have heard all of our papers, Aunt Lucia," Alice said in finishing. "Some of the boys wrote such amusing stories, but their humor wasn't sharp or unkind—it was just fun. We did have good times in that class!"

"I can readily see that you did, Alice," I said. "Thank you for showing me your papers and telling me about the class!"

Later, when Alice had gone to the grocery store on an errand, I had an opportunity to talk to my sister-in-law about her daughter's school work.

"Don't you think Alice's stories and essays show great promise, Beatrice?" I asked.

"Yes, her daddy and I are very happy about her writing," Beatrice replied. "We appreciate her having had a teacher who encourages the students to do their best work."

"The teacher must have given them the right kind of pride in achievement," I suggested.

"Not only pride in achievement," Beatrice answered, "but also pride in themselves. When Miss Lorance told the students she could rely upon their not writing anything unworthy of themselves, she set them a high standard of both writing and conduct."

"Miss Lorance knows that 'the high soul takes the high way,'" I quoted.

"Yes," Beatrice concluded, "there is a kind of pride that should be encouraged in every child—the pride that keeps him from being satisfied with anything less than the highest attainment possible for him and, too, that turns him away from unprincipled companions. We want our children to be guided toward the highest way of life."

From that vacation visit I went home firmly resolved to set before the boys and girls who come to the library the kind of pride that keeps a person from doing anything unworthy of his finest self.

TELEVISION.

The promotion of the use of intoxicants by television is hardly less than scandalous. Nothing reasonable can be said in support of it. The whole tendency is to create an attitude on the part of children as well as on the part of others—and a very undesirable attitude. The linking of beer propaganda with the televising of sports is particularly obnoxious. Few people realize how far-reaching television is at the present time and still fewer realize its probable growth. Television is in operation in 40 of the 48 states; in 40 of the 42 states with cities of more than 250,000 population. Already, 3 out of every 5 U. S. families are within reach of television broadcasting and a statement by Mr. Sylvester L. Weaver, Jr., vice-president in charge of television of the National Broadcasting Company, states that 70% of those three-out-of-five families are being influenced by television in their buying habits.—Clip Sheet.

I have read that a frown of Queen Elizabeth killed Sir Christopher Hatton, the Lord Chancellor of England. What, then, shall the frown of the King of nations do? If the rocks rend, the mountains melt and the foundations of the earth tremble under his wrath, how will the ungodly sinner appear when he comes in all his royal glory to take vengeance on all that knew him not, and that obeyed not his glorious gospel?—Bradbury.

Sunday School Lesson

JOHN MARK, WHO MADE GOOD.

LESSON XI—SEPTEMBER 10, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: I can do all things in him who strengthens me.
Philippians 4:13.

LESSON: Acts 12:12, 25; 13:4-5; 15:36-40.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Luke 12:35-44.
The Influence of a Good Mother.

We know very little about Mark, who is also called John Mark. It seems that the first reference to him is embodied in the account of the arrest of Jesus. Mark, evidently out of curiosity about what was going on, followed the crowd that was going into the Garden after Jesus, and followed Jesus even after the disciples had fled. One of the soldiers, thinking Mark was one of Jesus' disciples, made a grab for him and got hold of his outer garment or of the sheet that he had hurriedly wrapped around him when he went out to see what it was all about. Forthwith, Mark got out of the loose outer garment or wrapping and "hot-footed" it away from the scene of action.

But we do know something about John Mark's mother. She was evidently a widow and a woman of fair means, for she had a very large house. She was related to Barnabas—the record is so worded that one is not sure whether she was a sister of Barnabas or a cousin. Her home was open to the disciples. It was probably in her "large upper room, furnished and made ready," that the disciples and the Master ate the Last Supper. It was in this same room that the one hundred and twenty were waiting when the Spirit came. It was in her house that the apostles were gathered for a special prayer for Simon Peter, when he was in prison. Mary's home was a meeting place for the followers of Jesus. It is a fine thing for children in the home to have the privilege of meeting and associating with Christians. The conversion of many a boy or girl had its origin in the visit in the home of the minister. It is a distinct help to a young person to have parents who are interested deeply in religion and in the Church.

Companionship with Great Spirits.

When Paul and Barnabas started off on the First Missionary Journey, they took John Mark with them. What a privilege that young fellow had—to be associated with two characters like Paul and Barnabas! Here were men of great minds and great hearts, sharing intimately with this young fellow who had given himself to discipleship and service in Jesus' name. It was better than a year in a seminary, a privilege any Christian worker might have coveted.

Mark Calls It "Quits."

When the missionary party got as far as Perga in Pamphylia, John Mark called it "quits." The record simply states that "John departed from them and returned to Jerusalem." Was he ill? Did he become homesick? Did he become afraid of what lay ahead? Did he realize he had bit off more than he could chew? Did he find it hard to get along with Paul? Why did he turn back? Nobody knows. We do know that Paul did not think that Mark had a very good reason. For when he and Barnabas started out on the Second Missionary Journey, "Paul thought it not good to take with them him who withdrew from them at Pamphylia and went not with them to the work." Paul evidently thought that Mark was a quitter, or at least a misfit. And he was so convinced of it, that he refused to take Mark along, and even broke with Barnabas over the latter's insistence that Mark go along. Mark evidently "fumbled the ball" that time.

A Friend in Need.

Barnabas, the Great Hearted, still believed in Mark. And he showed his faith in Mark by taking him with him on a missionary journey of his own. It meant a great deal to this young man to know that somebody believed in him, that somebody was willing to give him another chance. There are many folks, not all of them young folks, who need to find somebody who believes in them, who is willing to give them a second chance. A friend here is a friend indeed.

Mark "Comes Back."

Inspired and sustained by Barnabas' faith in him, Mark made a "come back." He became a faithful and fruitful worker for Christ. And Paul himself recognized this fact and gladly gave his approval of Mark's work.

Writing later in life, he says that Mark is profitable unto him in the ministry. Given a second chance, Mark kept faith with Barnabas and convinced Paul that he did have the stuff of manhood. Mark is representative of thousands of men and women, old and young, who out of failure have made good.

Mark Writes a Gospel.

Tradition has it that Mark was Peter's secretary and traveling companion. He heard again and again from Peter's lips the story of Jesus. And later, with Peter's approval he wrote these things down, not necessarily in order, in what we now call the Gospel of Mark or according to Mark. It is the shortest of the gospels and forms the outline of the other Synoptic Gospels: Matthew and Luke, who used Mark's outline as the basis for their gospels. Mark was impressed by the works of Jesus—he records but a few of the words of Jesus in comparison with the other gospel writers. Jesus, for Mark, is a man of action, a man of mighty works. His word is with power. Again and again Mark uses the word "straightway" or "immediately." Writing as he did with the Romans in mind, Mark's Gospel is a gospel of power. Jesus is the Son of God, showing his power by and in his mighty works. The Gospel of Mark makes good reading for those who are discouraged and weak-hearted. It is a tonic for the soul.

A LETTER FROM MAX VESTAL.

visited Geneva, Berne, Interlake, Lucerne, and Zurich in Switzerland. It rained during most of our stay in Switzerland. We did get in on the Swiss national holiday, on August 1. Then to Oberammergau, of which I have already told.

Our visit in Germany has included Munich, Mainz, and the work camp there, Wiesbaden, a trip down the Rhine, and Cologne. The ruins in these places are terrible to see. Even after five years there are whole blocks flattened. Shrubs are growing on many of them. It is hard to forget the war in Germany.

Now I'm in Paris. Today we plan to visit the Louvre. I'm enjoying my stay here very much. I wish all the young people could be here. I must stop now for breakfast.

WHY LANETT NEEDS THE CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

ing on religion. It is in our fellowship that men and women are invited to investigate to their own satisfaction all religious beliefs and accept that which is consistence with the teachings of the New Testament. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice for those who seek liberty of thought in the Christian religion.

This church is a meeting place for those who do not merely accept religious claims because they have approved by some church body. It is a fellowship whose standards of Christian living are not determined by any set of rules or regulations, for after all, a man's acceptability to God is not determined by any measurement of man but by God's demands and provisions through Christ. One is not a Christian because he has passed certain religious tests, observed specified ceremonies, conformed to a specific religious belief and doctrinal practice, or has been certified by a specific religious order. The process of becoming a Christian is that very personal and intimate experience which takes place between one's Lord and himself and his membership in the church is determined by Christian character. Christian character, rather than creedal tests, is the test of Christian fellowship.

Lanett needs such a rallying place as this church for those souls who do not want to be hampered by creeds or doctrines or rules which would limit their freedom of thought and activity.

Then Lanett needs A Church of Tradition and Practice. Edwin Markham, the poet, wrote:

"He drew a circle that shut me out—
Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout,
But love and I had a wit to win;
We drew a circle that took him in!"

It is a comforting fact that God in his love, mercy and wisdom drew a circle to include all mankind. The circle of his love is as wide as the world, as broad as the races and nations, as deep as human depravity, and men under its sway may bound to the highest heights of his grace. And yet, there are men and denominations who draw circles which shut people out of their fellowship. They build fences of theology, creeds, and rules which shut people out, who do not accept the special kind of a fence which they build to inclose their particular kind of religious interpretation. Such men would require the acceptance of man-made conditions for entrance into their church or denomination rather than the ways God has provided through his Son. I heard a prominent preacher say recently that he all but missed his ordination because he answered the question verbatim from the manual. When asked why he thus answered, he said, "I am giving you what you want, not what I believe."

Now Lanett needs a church for people who are excluded for one cause or another by the various kinds of fences which people build. Lanett needs a church with a broad outlook on social, economic, political, and religious questions where men, by study and research, may discover the underlying principles of Christian democratic procedure.

The desire for democratic procedure was one of the strong motives in the beginning of our fellowship and has been one of the strong factors in all the history of the church. A free church in a free state has been the one of the objectives of Congregationalism. This desire has had its helpful and healthy effect on theology in that the church has maintained a liberal and generous position. There may be differences of feeling on some questions, but there is the Christian spirit which respects the honest opinions of others; thereby giving to all the right of private judgement and liberty of conscience.

Thus, free from the weight of ecclesiastical machinery and the restraints of theological dogma, Congregational Christian people are free to think and act according to the dictates of conscience in facing a changing world. When the Pilgrims left Holland for America, their pastor, John Robinson, said to them, "If God should reveal anything to you by any other instrument of his, be as ready to receive it as ever you were to receive any truth by my ministry." This spiritual adventure has characterized the Congregational Christian Churches throughout their existence. They have been pioneers in progressive thought, in popular education, in social action, and reform movements of many kinds.

Once more, Lanett needs A Body of Christians to Help Carry out the Great Commission. Many people lack a motive or driving force for living. Walter Pitkin wrote a book in which he said life begins at forty, but life may begin at any age at which a man finds a real reason for living. One finds the real reason for living when he has made his commitment to Christ and learns the purpose of the gospel. A church may be ever so big in many things, but it is really not a big church in God's cause until it has learned that its chief purpose is to propagate the gospel of Jesus. Churches sometimes are so busy with many things that they lose sight of the distinctive and authentic purpose of God to have the gospel carried to the ends of the earth. Preachers are sometimes so busy with the fringes of the gospel message that they neglect the heart of it. Church members are often so busy with the many claims of life that they give little attention to spiritual claims of God. The result of these conditions, as well as other factors, often keep people in the kindergarten of religious knowledge and experience. They do not grow up spiritually.

Our Lord's commission is that we should go into all the world and teach all that he had commanded. It was for this purpose that God called his church into being. Personal salvation, therefore, serves as the means to greater ends, that of the salvation of others. This church will justify its existence and continuance by working, not for its own preservation, but by spending itself in the cause of God in making effective the gospel here in Lanett and to the ends of the earth. It is to the carrying out of his command that the Lanett church has set its hands.

It is the purpose of this church to challenge men and women to the highest achievement in religious growth and development; to call them to the noblest expression of the spirit of Christ here and abroad; and to inspire them to unselfish service to humanity out of love to God.

Certainly, Lanett needs this church. This church is needed because it is a meeting place for free spirits who seek the will and purpose of God and give themselves to its achievement. It is a fellowship free from creedal or theological controls who seek to walk in the ways of the Lord as they are made known. It is a church of liberal tradition where the love of God is a ruling motive. And, it is the body of Christ carrying out his commission.

The pearl-diver lives at the bottom of the ocean by means of the pure air conveyed to him from above. His life is entirely dependent on the life-giving air. We are down here, like the diver, to gather pearls for our Master's crown. The source of our life is the Spirit from above.—Henry Drummond.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

I am writing this letter on Sunday afternoon, August 27. I know that the printer in Richmond should have had it last Friday, but I also know that he will bear with me this time.

I returned to Elon with my family last night about 9 o'clock from Virginia Beach. Our good friends, the Floyd A. Turners of Suffolk, had let us have their lovely furnished beach house for a week "free for nothing." How we enjoyed it! Each one of us voted that that was one of the nicest gifts we have ever had. It was not the first time they ever did this either. But then I was his pastor, and while it was as greatly appreciated, this time it seems a bit more unusual.

Taking a hasty survey of some of the last day or two's mail, I find several 43d Anniversary checks. As badly as we need them, I do hope they keep coming. THE CHRISTIAN SUN really did us a good turn with last week's front page. All of us here at the Orphanage thank the editor and the managing editor for that.

This morning I taught a young adult class in our Burlington First Church Sunday school; I preached at 11:00 for their vacationing pastor, and at 12:45 I did my eleventh WFNS, Burlington, radio program. In the meantime, I have been over amongst the children and their helpers to see how everybody is coming along. Everyone is O. K.

This coming week we shall be busy getting ready for Home-Coming Day, Sunday, September 3. I am praying that scores of our former "children" and their families will be here. And I am hoping that many Sunday schools and churches will remember us on this occasion.

I noticed by that "peek" into my mail that one good layman and his wife mailed us a check for $43.00 for our 43d Anniversary. I shall give a full accounting when the day is over.

Thank you for all your help, and God bless you everyone.

ROSEMONT'S 48TH ANNIVERSARY.

present building have been almost completed, and the actual building of the new wing will begin in the near future.

As the people of Rosemont pause in this Mid-Century Year 1950 and look back over the past 48 years of their existence as a church they are deeply grateful for the love, sacrifice and devotion of their wise and godly parents. They are deeply conscious of the rich heritage which is theirs today, and they are accepting it with all the responsibilities it entails as a sacred trust. As they look forward into the future they are challenged by the splendid record of their church during the past years, they are eager to prove themselves worthy of directing the church to even higher ground in the service of the Kingdom, and they are determined to have Rosemont fulfill its great destiny as one of God's Churches—"A Friendly Church by the Side of the Road."

One of Rosemont's best loved members, Mrs. Maude A. Hedley, has written:

Whence came the name of Rosemont?

'Tis said that no one knows,
Yet in the name itself we find,
The firmness of a mountain,
the sweetness of a rose.

In Rose we see a beauty
Like the beauty of God's love,
The sweetness of His mercy,
The joys of heaven above.

In Mont the strength and permanence
Of our faith in Christ our Lord,
Which like a mount may stand forever
On the promises of God.

And so we pray that Rosemont
May stand forever and aye
The symbol of God's greatness
And a guide to Heaven on high.

Do not lay things too much to heart.
No one is really beaten unless he is discouraged.—Lord Avebury.

CHANDLER.

Mrs. Rosa Sanford Chandler, 83, daughter of the late Dr. and Mrs. James Sanford, died March 18, 1950 in Richmond, Va. She was married to the late Ruffin Thomas Chandler.

Surviving are three daughters: Mrs. W. D. Smith, South Boston, Va., Mrs. A. B. Burton, Lynchburg, Va., and Mrs. H. R. Glover, Columbia, S. C.; one stepson, Mr. T. W. Chandler, Virgilina, Va.; and 22 grandchildren.

Mrs. Chandler was a member of Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va. Funeral services were conducted at her church by Rev. Mark W. Andes and Dr. C. E. Newman.

May the Father God bless and sustain the family and friends in this and every time of need.

THE O'KELLEY MOVEMENT.

the colonies. When the war ended, the Church of England had lost considerable ground. The Wesleyan Societies were riding a high tide of popularity. Given a few circumstances in their favor, they could well ride this tide into being the most prominent and influential church in America. This, of course, they did.

The question of ordination was the one major problem that concerned these societies. Believing as the Church of England did in apostolic succession, no preacher was allowed to administer baptism, the Lord's Supper, perform marriages, or preach funerals unless he was "duly ordained" by a "duly ordained" bishop who was in turn "duly ordained" by another "duly ordained" bishop, and so on, back to New Testament times. The Wesleyan Societies had no preachers thus ordained. The animosity toward the old-line clergy only threatened their existence as societies. It was inevitable that they were due for a break with the Church of England, and these societies would in turn become a church.

John Wesley, himself a "duly ordained" bishop in the Church of England, ordained Thomas Coke and sent him to America to "set in order" these societies. At the famous Christmas Conference held in Baltimore in 1784 Coke ordained Francis Asbury, at the same time giving him the power of superintendent over the churches in America. At the same conference the discipline for the new-born church was agreed upon and the name established as the Methodist Episcopal Church. In basic substance the church was a compromise between the cry for liberty on the part of the colonists and the system of the Church of England. The Methodist Church retained all it found tolerated in the Church of England, but modified its government enough to offset the undesirable. Thus the Methodist Church was born. Although English in its background, it is American in its origin.

Asbury Versus O'Kelly.

Francis Asbury and James O'Kelly first met in North Carolina in 1780. Asbury wrote in his journal: "James O'Kelly and myself enjoyed and comforted each other. This dear man rose at midnight and prayed very devoutly for me and himself. He cried: 'Give me children, or I die.'" Asbury had hardly assumed the role as superintendent in America until O'Kelley rebelled. The whole procedure at the Christmas Conference was wrong in O'Kelley's view. While O'Kelley had never met John Wesley, he had read many of his sermons, and liked the way Wesley had magnified the Scriptures, insisting that they were the absolute and final authority in religion. The name "Methodist Episcopal Church" was obnoxious to O'Kelley. Added to this was his objection to the tyranny of Asbury, who was, as O'Kelley regarded him, not always fair in placing the preachers on their special circuits. But the intrepid O'Kelley was hardly a match for the more sagacious Asbury.

Republican Methodists.

O'Kelley struck a forceful blow at Asbury's rule when at the General Conference in Baltimore in 1792 he introduced a motion that each preacher be given the right of appeal to the conference if he did not like his appointment. Had this appeal been granted O'Kelley would have virtually made Asbury's work unnecessary. Asbury sensed it and retired from the chamber to allow the discussion to continue. For three days a heated debate raged, which ended in defeat for O'Kelley. Thereupon, O'Kelley, Rice Haggard, John Allen, John Robertson, and William McKendree withdrew from the conference.

Shortly after O'Kelley and his followers met at Reese Chapel, in Charlotte County, Va., and sent petitions of reunion back to the Methodists. They met again at Piney Grove, in Chesterfield County, the following August. Their overtures were ignored. Finally, on Christmas Day, 1793, they met at Manakintown, in Powhatan County, and officially severed all relations with the Methodists. The name they took was "Republican Methodist." "Theirs was to be a Republican—no slavery—glorious church, free from all the evils of misgovernment."

A committee of seven was appointed to report to the next meeting the following August in Surry County, Va., on the kind of church government to be adopted. They decided to lay by every creed and manuscript and go only by the Bible. Rice Haggard stood up and said:

"Brethren this is a sufficient rule of faith and practice. By it we are told that the disciples were called 'Christians,' and I move that henceforth and forever the followers of Christ be known as 'Christians' simply."

In the course of time "Five Cardinal Principles of the Christian Church" emerged. These were:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only head of the church.
2. The name "Christian" to the exclusion of all party and sectarian names.
3. The Holy Bible, or the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, our only creed and a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character, or vital piety, the only test of church fellowship and membership.
5. The right of private judgement and the liberty of conscience the privilege and duty of all.

Thus twenty to thirty years before Alexander Campbell became a forceful advocate for a return to the primitive order, James O'Kelley launched upon the same course. But O'Kelley was fiery, temperamental, and sentimental. Nor did he have the natural endowments of either Stone or Campbell. O'Kelley could never have been an Alexander Campbell. But as long as there are students who are interested in the Restoration Movement, the name of James O'Kelley will be remembered as one of the very earliest who advocated a return to the primitive order in religion.—Earl West in Gospel Advocate.

David Hume, who in his youth was a believer in Christianity, was appointed in a debating society to advocate the cause of infidelity, and familiarizing himself with the subtle sophisms of scepticism, became a life-long deist. Voltaire, it is said, at the age of five, committed to memory a sceptical poem, and the impressions made on his mind were never obliterated.—Exchange.

Will Bombs Stop a Flood?

By Charles A. Wells

We will deceive ourselves if we think that bombs and guns can stop communism in Korea—or any place else. We have been compelled to use force to drive back the armed Reds from areas our leaders consider vital to the security of America, but we cannot stop the inflow of communism by military action any more than a flood can be driven back by gunfire. The people of Asia, embittered and desperate after generations of exploitation by their own masters as well as foreigners, do not make staunch allies, even when we shove a gun in their hands and tell them to fight for freedom. Southern Korea began to crumble before the Red tide, because the people weren't interested in protecting American capitalism of which they know nothing, or democracy of which they know less. Killing Koreans because they've gone Communist, therefore, may in the end drive more Koreans into communism. While we can use our guns to hold back Red armies, we must remember that justice, truth and Christian good will comprise the only forces that really hold back Marxist infiltration.

CHOIR ENTERING CHANCEL AT PILGRIM CHURCH, ST. LOUIS

"Send out thy light and thy truth, let them lead me. Oh, let them lead me to thy holy hill." "Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion; and unto thee shall the vow be performed. O thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come."

The Processional, with its stirring and dramatic expression of Christian worship, is being restored in many of our Protestant Churches. Pilgrim Church in St. Louis, one of the historic Congregational Churches of the Midwest, made the transition recently from center pulpit to chancel; thus facilitating the majestic processional portrayed above. This is one of the most effective ways of making Christian worship a moving experience, for those who witness as well as for those who participate in the processional.

Dr. Albert Palmer calls attention to the values and advantages of a chancel when combined with a center aisle. It makes possible an orderly and dignified processional. Dr. Palmer says: "Anyone who has seen the struggles of a processional in a church without a center aisle or chancel sometimes trembles for the outcome as the choir, in two single files, threads its way down two diagonal side aisles, disappears through doors beside the pulpit and finally reemerges triumphantly, and still singing, through two doors in the gallery and so down to rest at last in the choir loft behind the minister! It is an adventurous pilgrimage and, I fear, more diverting than inspiring to the congregation; quite different from the stately and progressive movement through the center of the church directly into the chancel."

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE.

The 102nd Annual Session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference of Congregational Christian Churches was held at Newport Church, near Shenandoah, Virginia, on Wednesday and Thursday, August 9 to 10.

The theme, "Commissioned for Christ," provided the central thought at the conference. The pastor of the host church, Rev. R. E. Newton, and his people provided bountifully for the delegates and visitors. Practically every church was represented.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, the conference president, and the officers of the conference provided a practical program for the conference, and throughout the sessions was emphasized the central thought that we are commissioned for Christ to follow him and to develop his church as a working agency for the redemption of mankind.

An unusual privilege was to hear Miss Manorama Powar, a third generation Christian from India. Miss Powar is a social worker from Satarra, India. Her presence and her messages were noble testimonies to the Christian Mission endeavor of the Congregational Christian Church in India for the past 100 years.

Others participating in the program were Superintendent Scott, who spoke on "Our Church at Work"; Dr. F. C. Lester, who spoke on "Missions Today—Losses and Gains," also speaking at the Young People's sessions on the night of the 9th on "God in Our World"; Dr. William Moseley Brown, who explained the Elon College Sustaining Fund; Dr. John G. Truitt, Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, who reported on Stewardship of the Orphanage as an agency of our church.

The Worship Services were conducted by Rev. R. E. Newton, Rev. E. J. Rohart, and Rev. R. D. Coulter. R. O. Rothgeb, a layman from the Leaksville Church, presented the report of the Committee on Home Missions, and Rev. R. E. Newton presented the report on Foreign Missions. Rev. R. E. Newton, president of the Christian Missionary Association, presided over their session.

Other reports included: Laymen's Work, Roy A. Larrick, chairman; Temperance, Mrs. B. F. Sine; Religious Literature, Mrs. E. F. Frank; Stewardship, Rev. E. J. Rohart; Evangelism, Rev. R. D. Coulter, Woman's Missionary Conference, Mrs. J. E. Bryant.

The reports of the Committees on Home Missions, Evangelism, Stewardship and the Christian Missionary Association, adopted as a project for the coming year the beginning of a new church in Harrisonburg, Virginia, and a goodly sum of money was subscribed toward the purchase of a lot and a committee constituted to promote this work.

Most of the churches of the Valley have made an earnest effort during the year to pay in full their apportionments. It is always a source of joy to attend a session of the Valley Conference, where real devotion, harmony and wise planning are evident.

NEW WORK IN BURLINGTON.

The new church being launched in Beverly Hills has had a very successful Vacation Bible school. Starting with an enrollment of seven, the final enrollment was between 40 and 50, with an average attendance of over 30. William T. Scott, Jr., a student at Yale Divinity School, has been in charge of this work. Assisting him in the Vacation Bible School were: William Tolley, Misses Frankie Strader and Carolyn Simpson of the Burlington Church; Miss Shirley Cox and Nash Parker, grandchildren of the late Rev. L. I. Cox, a pioneer church builder in North Carolina; and Miss Lois Scott.

The recreational building which has been constructed, provided excellent facilities for the school's work. Plans are now under way for enclosing the building so that it may be used during the winter. It is expected that

“CHANCELITUS”

Some liturgically minded seminary graduates have the feeling that God can be worshipped properly only in a chancel. Hence, the transformation of every pulpit-centered church to the chancel arrangement becomes the major effort of their ministry. Other important considerations are lost sight of in this major endeavor, or “magnificent obsession.” A few years in the pastoral ministry may temper one’s zeal for a chancel, may cure the rash of “Chancelitus”! The worship of God is not limited to a chancel. Many people find and worship God in all his adequacy apart from a chancel. Countless pulpit-centered churches have exalted the most high God and have enabled people to worship him in the beauty of holiness.

It would be unfortunate to convert all churches to the chancel pattern. How monotonous! There are historic pulpits with well-nigh unalterable traditions. These spiritual landmarks should stand as an imperishable part of our religious heritage. They should be protected from the hands of the iconoclast. Some churches are ill-suited for a chancel, and no mechanical contrivance can automatically induce worship. “The word of God is not bound.” No, neither by pulpit nor chancel.

And yet the trend in church architecture is unmistakably and almost unanimously toward the chancel. While there is no perfect altar arrangement, since all arrangements have their advantages and their disadvantages, the preponderance of ecclesiastical logic points to the chancel. The centrality of the Cross as the focal point in worship, the minimizing of the human element, the direct access of eye and feet to the altar of God—these are unanswerable argument for the chancel.

Churches with a center aisle, with space for a divided choir, with sentiment permitting the use of cross and candles, and especially those churches desiring a processional, should be provided with a chancel. It is the spiritual opportunity of first magnitude. The setting for worship is transformed. Architecturally, the church assumes a universally accepted pattern. People are given an added opportunity and inducement to worship.

Musical Ignorance Is Not Bliss

When Professor Albert Edward Bailey published his great volume on “The Gospel in Hymns,” he wrote in the preface a devastating paragraph on our neglect of hymns. He said: “I have attended church, Bible school, young people’s meetings and week-day prayer meetings (off and on) for upwards of sixty years. On these occasions I have sung an average of at least ten hymns a week, or 520 a year; total, at least 31,000 hymns. Yet I can count on the fingers of one hand the persons who in all that time ever said a word about either the hymn or the author. Nobody in charge of those services ever called attention to the glorious heritage that was mine—the saints and heroes, the experiences of joy, of sin, defeat, triumph, aspiration, vision, that are embodied in those hymns.”

The gravity of this condition is realized when we reflect on the fact that Prof. Bailey’s experience is typical. Protestantism is woefully ignorant of its hymnodic treasury. So woefully ignorant is our general understanding of the hymns, the writer has known instances in which even the most elemental presentation was accepted as a sensational and unprecedented revelation. This condition presents a need and creates an opportunity. Here is a field in which the Church has no competitor, a field peculiarly its own. The study of hymns and tunes, authors and composers, is a study of endless fascination and revelation. Ministers, vacation Bible school and Sunday school teachers, and especially leaders of Pilgrim Fellowship, as well as leaders of departmental worship in Sunday school, have a grand opportunity to fill this vacuum in our knowledge of music. The facts are available and can be grasped and presented by anyone who is interested and willing to study.

The Christian Steward and the Tithe

By WILLIAM E. LAMPE

EDITORIAL NOTE: A letter from Dr. Warren H. Denison contained this article by Dr. Lampe and the following comment: "I have in today's news (August 18) the death of Dr. William E. Lampe, who just retired from the General Secretaryship of the Evangelical and Reformed Synod. He was a grand man. There were only three remaining charter members of the United Stewardship Council. Now there are two, Dr. Harry Myers and I. Dr. Lampe's The Christian Steward and the Tithe is one of the best articles ever written on the subject."

Christian Stewardship springs from the recognition that we are not our own, but, with body and soul, in life and in death, with all that we are and have, we belong to God and to our Savior Jesus Christ. This means that we are trustees, or Stewards, of our time, our talents and our material possessions.

The average Christian recognizes that time and the length of his life are given to him by God; he acknowledges that his talents were given him at his birth and that he has simply developed them; but he usually considers his possessions—his worldly goods, his own. As a Christian and a faithful church member he may be willing to use his time and his talents and his personal witness for Christ and the Church, but if he does not also use his money for that end he is not a true Christian Steward. After all, the late David McConaughy was right—"Money is the acid test of our stewardship." If we do not recognize that our money is a trust, as are our time and talents and our lives, and if we are not willing to give of our money and all that we have for the glory of God and to help our fellow men, we are hypocrites in calling ourselves Christian Stewards.

Everyone is willing at some time or other, especially when there is unusual need, to share his possessions with others. Most people recognize that there ought to be constant giving to help others. The Christian gives not only to help those who are in distress; he also gives to maintain and propagate Christianity and the Church. He knows that when money is lacking, or not provided in sufficient amounts, the work of the Church suffers. He thus naturally asks himself, "How much should I give to support the work of the Church and to help those who are in need and in distress?" The answer might be, "Everything that I do not actually need for myself," or it might be the other extreme, "Whatever I can afford—possibly as little as will satisfy my conscience."

Is there, then, any standard of giving? Paying a tithe—one-tenth of a man's net income—is almost as old as the human race. It antedates Christianity, and not only Christianity, but Judaism as well. Melchizedek, king of Salem, priest of God Most High, received tithes from Abraham, the father of the faithful, and blessed him.

Paying tithes became for the Jews a fundamental law or principle of their religion. It took its place alongside of honoring God the Father and worshipping him. Time and again throughout the Old Testament, the tithe is emphasized. A faithful Jew pays his tithes, not only one tithe but, at certain times, additional tithes. He paid these in addition to his taxes and his various offerings. When things went wrong for the Jewish people, God told them, through the prophets, that it was because they were not paying tithes. Through Malachi, the last of the prophets, God declared that from the days of their fathers they had turned aside from his ordinances and had not kept them. "Will a man rob God? yet ye rob me . . . in tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with the curse; for ye rob me, even this whole nation. Bring ye the whole tithe into the store-house, that there may be food in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith Jehovah of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast its fruit before the time in the field, saith Jehovah of hosts. And all nations shall call you happy; for ye shall be a delightful land, saith Jehovah of hosts."

The generosity of many pagans equals old Jewish standards. Many non-Christian peoples have given much more than tithes. Certainly the teachings of Jesus should lead men to give more generously than the Jews and the pagans.

New Testament teaching is not so explicit as that of the Old Testament regarding the tithe. Jesus pronounced woe upon the hypocritical Pharisees because they were giving tithes of everything, even of the herbs of the garden—mint, anise and cummin—but were leaving undone the weightier matters of the law—justice and mercy and faith. He commended them for tithing but condemned them for leaving undone the more important matters. Stewardship in the New Testament is not limited to giving a tithe or any other proportion of the income; it is on a much higher plane. A Christian is to give first his own self and to regard nothing whatever as his own. His time, talents and possessions are a trust from God, to be used for his glory and to help mankind.

Stewardship has been called "a lost segment of the Gospel." There is much more teaching of Stewardship in the New Testament than of the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper; more than about our duty to spread the Christian religion through missions; more than on almost any other subject. Yet the Church disregarded and lost sight of all these teachings. It saw other truths in the parables of Jesus, half of which are on Christian Stewardship, than the simpler and more fundamental truths. The Christian Church did not stress the giving of money—a tithe or any other proportion. During the Middle Ages the message of Stewardship was almost completely obscured.

Almost no Stewardship sermons, even those that might be remotely classed as Stewardship, have come down to us through the centuries. Many people now living never heard a sermon on Stewardship or even on tithing in their younger years. In those days a tither—one who set apart a tenth of his income for the work of the Lord—was almost a curiosity. The modern Stewardship movement began less than fifty years ago. It started with a few individuals here and there recognizing and emphasizing the principles of the tithe. To them Stewardship was solely the giving of money, with the tithe as the basis. Some declared the tithe was the minimum—one should pay the tithe and then give offerings. As they pressed their campaign, the advocates of tithing saw that this was not a broad enough basis, not an adequate conception of Christian Stewardship. It became clear to them that a tithe or any other proportion of income should be given for the reason that all of one's possessions are a trust from God. It also became clear that the acquiring of money, the saving of money and the use of money for any purpose should be on a Christian basis. Soon it became evident that Stewardship is for all of life and embraces all that one is and has.

In every building the first stone must be laid and the first blow must be struck. The ark was 120 years in building; yet there was a day when Noah laid his axe at the first tree he cut down to form it. The temple of Solomon was a glorious building; but there was a day when the first huge stone was laid at the foot of Mount Moriah. When does the building of the Spirit really begin to appear in a man's heart? It begins, so far as we can judge, when he first pours out his heart to God in prayer.—Bishop J. C. Ryle.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

THE ELON COLLEGE SUSTAINING FUND.

The Southern Convention is, and always has been, the mother and the guardian of Elon College. The college was founded for a purpose—that purpose to insure and offer to the homes of the church, an institution of higher learning to which their children might go and receive the advantages of Christian Higher Education under moral and religious influence. This purpose has never changed. As people have changed, it has been more difficult to adhere to the original purpose of the college; but oppositions from within and without have not succeeded in driving the college from its original purpose. Christian character is still the ultimate goal of the college. It has not lowered its educational standards or has it weakened its courses in the least, but these standards have been lifted higher and the college's curriculum has been benefitted and broadened. The work done on the campus is of a high grade, and the influence of the college has gone far and is felt not only in our own and other churches, but in the whole realm of society wherever you go in this country.

When you think of Elon College, its financial holdings and economic resources, past and present, and clearly appraise its present facilities and position in the field of Christian Higher Education, you are made to wonder and to marvel, how in the face of conditions that it has always had to contend with, it has come to its present status and rendered the services that it has.

Elon College comes today, as the Board of Trustees and the Southern Convention realize, to the crossroads. It has built its curriculum, its faculty, and acquired obligations in keeping with other institutions of equal educational standing, regardless of its far smaller financial resources. If Elon College is to maintain its present status and move forward as it should and must, additional financial support must be secured. This fact is accentuated by the unusual increase in cost of everything essential to the ongoing of the college. Instead of lower cost of operation, present indications are that prices will advance and cost of operation increase.

For the past 15 years the church and friends of the college have not contributed one dollar to the current needs of the college other than the contributions received through conference apportionments. All money given to Elon College during the past 19 years has been applied either to debts, improvements or endowment. Present indications are that now the story changes. The college is compelled to look to the church, the alumni, and friends for money with which to meet current needs. Coal and light bills, janitor service, supplies, faculty salaries and administrative expenses—these are terrific.

The Convention has authorized the Elon College Sustaining Fund to give the members of the church an opportunity to express their gratitude and appreciation of the fine record that their college has made through the years and their interest to insure the continuation of this service that is indispensable to the advance of our church and her institutions.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

When you give a penny, five cents, a dollar or more to your Sunday school or church, it may seem insignificant. Certainly you do not miss it seriously, but if 35,000 people would contribute the same as you, when you total the figure you would probably be amazed. There are about 35,000 members of the church in the Southern Convention who have the privilege and are asked to make regular contributions through their Sunday schools or churches to Elon College. Many of our Sunday schools and churches take advantage of this privilege and are glad to comply with the Convention's plan for current support of the college. Representing the college, I assure you and all that these contributions are greatly appreciated and that they are accomplishing wonderful things in the field of Christian Higher Education. The fruits of their efforts are being felt in many of our local churches today. Just look over the ministerial roster of the Southern Convention and see how many of our pastors have been instructed and guided on the campus of our college. Not one of these ministers during his entire stay at Elon College paid one dollar of tuition.

The college is glad to make this contribution to the church through our ministerial students.

ELON FOOTBALL WORKOUTS GET UNDERWAY.

Forty-five men, including 23 letter men, reported to Coach Jim Mallory and his assistants at Elon on last Friday morning, when the "Fighting Christians" staged their opening work out for the 1950 football season.

The athletic director, J. L. Pierce, stated that though most of the gridmen checked in on Thursday evening, several of the men may be delayed some days in reporting, and that the status of two or three of the letter veterans is doubtful due to impending Selective Service calls.

Coach Jim Mallory, starting his third year as head mentor for the Christian grid squad, is being assisted by G. L. "Doc" Mathis as well as Athletic Director Pierce. The two workouts daily of the first week will drop to one daily when classes get under way this Friday.

The Elon Christians have barely two weeks in which to get ready for one of the toughest opening battles in Elon history, for the Maroon and Gold gridmen will invade Virginia on Saturday, September 16, to meet the Emory and Henry Wasps in their own nest, no light task in view of the bowl game record of the Wasps in recent seasons.

POWER HOUSE BEING TORN DOWN.

The old power house, long a landmark on the Elon campus, will soon be a thing of the past, for workmen are now busy tearing down the old brick structure which for so many years furnished light, power and heat to the students of the college.

The completion of this work will make possible the re-landscaping of the south campus.

The old power plant was built in 1904 or 1905, and at that time was the very latest in power and heating facilities. The plant continued to function for more than forty years, being replaced by the larger and more modern present structure in 1949.

Christian Missions

At Home and Abroad

THE AROUSAL AND THE ROPE-HOLDERS.

It was only after a blank of fourteen months, in which William Carey and his companions seemed to "have disappeared forever," that letters were received in England from the intrepid pioneer missionary. It should never be forgotten that the triumvirate at home—Fuller, Sutcliff and Ryland—as they waited and watched for tidings, stood in a position hardly less responsible, perhaps no less difficult than his own.

The work of organization and maintenance, though less captivating to the imagination than work on the field, is not a whit less essential. The task of these men at home was no light one. In connection with the difficulty of relegating any part of his responsibility to others, Andrew Fuller said:

"Friends talk to me about coadjutors and assistants, but, I know not how it is, I find a difficulty. Our undertaking to India really appeared to me, on its commencement, to be somewhat like a few deliberating about the importance of penetrating into a deep mine, which had never before been explored. We had no one to guide us, and, while we were thus deliberating, Carey, as it were, said, 'Well, I will go down if you will hold the rope.' But before he went down, he, as it seemed to me, took an oath from each of us at the mouth of the pit to the effect that, while we lived, we should never let go the rope."

An anecdote of interest and significance has come down to us in the quaint phraseology of the eighteenth century.

"On a certain occasion," so the story runs, "Mr. Fuller called on a pious and benevolent nobleman who, though a churchman, was friendly to dissenters and was generous in his charitable contributions. Having laid before him the operations of the mission, his lordship handed him a guinea. Mr. Fuller, observing that it was given with an air of indifference, asked:

"My lord, does this come from the heart?"

"What matter is that?" inquired the nobleman. "Suppose it does not come from the heart; it may answer your purpose as well. If you get the money, why should you care whether it comes from the heart or not?"

"Take it back," said the man of God. "I cannot take it. My Lord and Master requires the heart."

"Well, give it me back," said the nobleman; it did not come from the heart."

"He took the guinea, then stepped to his desk and drew a check for twenty pounds. Handing this to Mr. Fuller, he said: 'This comes from the heart. I know the principles by which you are governed. I love the Lord Jesus and His cause. I know that no offering is acceptable to Him unless it comes from the heart.'"

These three men—Fuller, Ryland and Sutcliff—who formed the first missionary board in the history of modern missions, were giants in their day, "mighty men of old, men of renown." Of Fuller, untiring in his gratuitous service of continual journeying in Scotland, Ireland, Wales and England, north and south, to arouse interest and collect contributions for "our East Indian mission," it has been said, he "was not only the first of foreign missionary secretaries; he was a model for all." Ryland was the Christian scholar, the profound theologian, spiritual guide rather than executive. Sutcliff's talents have been defined as "more useful than splendid," but his sound judgement and common sense cut many a gordian knot in those early experimental years.

It was on the 29th of July, 1794, that Andrew Fuller, Dr. Ryland, and others were at length rewarded by letters describing Carey's voyage, his first impressions of India and the outlook for his work.

These letters acted upon Christian England like an electric spark. They kindled a fire which, by the grace of God (to use Latimer's words), shall never be put out. Well might Fuller write to Carey as he did not long after.

"The eyes of the religious world are upon you. Your undertaking has provoked many. The spirit of missions has gone forth. I wish it may never stop till the gospel is sent into all the world."—From "Wonders of Missions," Mason.

JAPANESE STUDENTS ARRIVE FOR GRADUATE WORK.

Twenty-eight Japanese students coming here for graduate study on scholarships, provided by U. S. and Canadian Protestant church groups, arrived in San Francisco during August on the S. S. President Wilson.

Their arrival was announced by the Interboard Committee for Christian Work in Japan, whose member boards have already furnished scholarships abroad for some 70 Japanese students since the end of the war.

One of the students in this week's group, a committee spokesman said, is Professor Kaoru Oguro, of Hiroshima Women's College, a survivor of the bombing of Hiroshima. He will be taking graduate studies at Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas.

Another is Miss Yoshiko Yamamuro, daughter of Dr. Gumppei Yamamuro who established the Salvation Army in Japan. Miss Yamamuro herself is an editor of "Fujin No Tomo," Japan's largest and most influential woman's magazine, and a teacher at Ji-yu Gu Gakuin, a progressive school in Tokyo modeled after experimental schools for children here. Miss Yamamuro will take courses in journalism at Princeton University and religious subjects at Princeton Theological Seminary in New Jersey.

All the 12 women and 16 men arriving last week will be studying at American colleges and universities except one: Mr. Akira Nishio, who will attend the University of Toronto in Canada.

Most of the group are ministers and teachers specially selected to become leaders in the Church of Christ in Japan and its affiliated educational institutions. Church groups paying their tuition, transportation and living expenses include the Congregational Christian, Evangelical and Reformed, Methodists, Presbyterian U. S. A., Reformed Church in America, United Church of Canada and the Y. W. C. A.

A friend asked a life-saver at Newport, R. I., how he could tell when any one of the thousands of persons on the beach and in the water were in need of help, to which he replied: "There has never been a time when I could not distinguish the cry of distress above all other noises." And that is exactly like God. In the midst of the babel and confusion, he never fails to hear the soul that cries out to him for help amidst the breakers and storms of life.—The Expositor.

N. C. WOMAN'S CONFERENCE, OCTOBER 4.

Our North Carolina Woman's Conference will be at Liberty Vance Church, Rt. 1, Henderson, North Carolina, October 4, from 10:30 a. m. to 3:30 p. m.

This will be a good meeting, and it is important that the president of your society for the past year, the president elected to serve next year, circle leaders, and your minister's wife, attend. Of course, it is hoped that many others will also attend.

Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury is the guest speaker—one of the world's best! Miss Seabury is the educational secretary for our Foreign Mission Board. She has spent a year in Japan recently and has at her fingertips information from our mission fields all over the world. She was given a doctor's degree by Elon College.

It will be possible to spend the night in case anyone lives such a distance that the trip is too long for one day. If overnight accommodation is desired, write to Mrs. H. F. Mitchell, R. 1, Kittrell, N. C., the president of the Liberty Society.

NEWS FROM HERE AND THERE. ELON COLLEGE.

The Woman's Society of the Elon College Community Church met on August 24, at 6 p. m., on the lawn beside the parish house. An informal picnic supper was enjoyed by about 52 persons. There were several guests invited to the annual picnic, but the group was especially pleased to meet for the first time the new pastor and his family—Rev. and Mrs. Howard P. Bozarth and their daughter, Grace, and daughter-in-law, Mrs. Donald Bozarth.

The group sat in a large circle, while the president, Mrs. William T. Scott, made introductions of the several guests and gave a brief outline of the procedure for the evening.

Mrs. Scott used several quotations from Dr. Frank C. Laubach's book, Women at Prayer, for the devotional. Dr. Laubach places special emphasis on the powers of prayer and the need for prayer for peace.

The picnic committee was recognized as follows: Mrs. J. B. Taylor, chairman; Mrs. Eugene Bustard, Mrs. Archie Braxton and Mrs. J. W. Matlock, Sr.

Mr. Bozarth asked the invocation, and everyone enjoyed a most bountiful supper.

After supper, the group divided into their circles for a brief business meeting. Mrs. J. L. Foster, Sr., is chairman of Circle No. 1, Mrs. John G. Truitt is chairman of Circle No. 2, and Mrs. Eugene Lankford is the chairman of Circle No. 3, the evening circle.

The society as a whole feels that a very successful year has been experienced. Regular circle meetings will be held September 4 and 5, and the last general meeting is planned for September 11, at 8 p. m.

MONTICELLO.

The Monticello Missionary Society met in July at the home of Mrs. Joe Hardie, Jr. Miss Russell McKinney led the service of worship, using the theme, "Brotherhood and Human Relationships." She read Leibermann's "I Am an American" as an introduction to our program. Miss Mary Lewis Walker presented the program in the form of a "Calendar of Progress," promoting religious and civil freedom to individuals of all races and creeds not in our United States alone, but in the world.

The annual picnic was held in August at the Woman's Clubhouse. The families of each member were invited to share the supper, and an old fashioned game session followed. A severe hailstorm cut the attendance, but it failed to dampen the spirits of those who managed to arrive before the storm.

ELON CRADLE ROLL PARTY.

The Cradle Roll of the Elon College Community Church, an auxiliary of the Missionary Society, met on Friday afternoon, August 25, at 3:30, at the parish house, for the annual party.

Mrs. Ruth Rogers, leader, called the meeting to order and asked Mrs. W. T. Scott, president of the Missionary Society, to lead the opening prayer. Mrs. J. L. Foster, Sr., led the group in singing "Jesus Loves Me" and "Praise Him All Ye Little Children."

As the roll was called, each child brought his mite box to the front. The total enrollment is 76 children, with 39 having been added this year. Only four are being promoted because of having reached school age. Mrs. Foster assisted the children in playing a song game.

While the children played games on the lawn, Mrs. W. T. Scott gave a few words of greetings to the mothers and explained the importance of teaching the children the purpose of the mite box: how to use and take care of their own boxes.

About 95 persons were present, including children, mothers and special guests. The Cradle Roll was delighted to have as special guests the new pastor and his family—Rev. and Mrs. Howard P. Bozarth. Miss Dorothy Foltz, the pastor's assistant, was also a guest.

The Cradle Roll now possesses a library, consisting of 98 volumes. The librarian, Mrs. Rogers, and her assistant, Mrs. J. G. Waugh, with the help of Mrs. M. D. Joy, Mrs. J. W. Matlock, Sr., Mrs. J. W. Matlock, Jr., Mrs. G. O. Lankford, and Mrs. James Hailey, see that these books are circulated among the children and mothers each month.

Ice cream and cookies were served to the group as they sat in a circle on the lawn.

MISS ANN TRUITT, Associate

AGAPE FOREVER.

By MAX VESTAL.

A Sermon used for the last Sunday evening services at camp.

Genesis 11: 1-9.

St. Luke 21: 1-6.

St. John 14: 12

Most of you have heard the legend that St. Peter guards the pearly gates. One day he was doing his usual good job. He was checking passports, serial numbers, photoes, and fingerprints to make sure that there were no illegal entires into heaven. You can imagine his surprise when he looked down the fence and saw people slipping over the fence into heaven. And that wasn't all. There was someone on the inside helping them over. Peter closed his gate as quickly as possible and hurried off down the fence to see what this strange thing was. When he arrived, he saw Jesus Christ helping the poor, the weak, and the crippled over the fence into heaven. At first Peter was disappointed in his Master.

Petre thought for a moment, however, and smiled when he looked into the eyes of Christ. Now he remembered the times that the mercy of Christ had fallen on him. He remembered when the disciples had argued about which should be greater in the Kingdom of God. Jesus, as he so often did, answered James and John with a question: "Are ye able to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" Again Christ had said, "He who would be great among you let him be your servant." Peter remembered giving up his job to follow this man. He had taken Christ as his Master—then Jesus had washed his feet. Peter remembered that he had been unable to understand. Now he knew why. The expression on Peter's face changed. He had gone to sleep with the rest of the disciples in the garden of Gethsemane. Christ had rebuked him for becoming angry when the soldiers came. These were memories that Peter wanted to forget. Yet, they were the memories that made him strong. Signs of pain were evident on the face of Peter as he recalled the three times he had denied Jesus of Nazareth. He had prided himself on his bravery.

He had failed the real test. He did not, however, make the same mistake again.

After his resurrection, Jesus asked Peter three times this question: "Simon, son of Jonah, lovest thou me?" Three times Peter had denied. Now three times Peter answered, "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee." Jesus said unto him, "Feed my sheep." Peter remembered that he was the rock on which Christ had built his church. Peter had taken over the leadership of the church with this charge—"Feed my sheep."

This is the charge of each of us who seeks to bring the Kingdom of God on earth as it is in heaven. For too many this part of the Lord's prayer is a fanciful dream. "Impossible" we say. So instead of trying to bring his Kingdom on earth, we seek to build our kingdom to heaven. This is the same mistake that was made by the builders of the Tower of Babel. They sought to build a tower, not to the strength and glory of God, but to the glory and honor of man at the expense of God. They sought to show God their power. God does not need our power, but our humbleness.

We who work at Agape should remember this. I was impressed Wednesday night when Pastor Vinay said that spiritual aid was more important than financial aid. Of course, it is. If Agape is merely a work project to build a few buildings, our time here is wasted. The Psalmist said: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." If the building and nothing more are to be dedicated to Christ, our time is wasted. If he had desired buildings, Jesus could not have said, "Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all." Her two mites would not have built a very strong structure. The next sentence of Christ is very significant. "For all these have of their abundance cast into the offerings of God: But she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had." It is true that we are to lose our lives for his sake—he certainly said nothing, however, of our wasting our lives for his sake. I think it is very significant that Agape is being built by those who are giving of their living. This is the only way a true Agape could be built. There will come a time when not one stone will be left upon another upon the hill. Even then Agape will stand live because of those who have given of their living that it might live. Have we been among this group? Do we expect to remain in this group after we leave the camp at Agape? For certainly our Christian love must not end when we leave the camp. As I've said, if the camp here is nothing more to us than buildings and a road, then we have missed the spirit of Agape. The buildings and road are symbols of Christian love. Without this love they are worth no more than the rocks and mortar of which they are constructed.

It is certainly no intention of mine to under-value the work here. As Allan pointed out last Sunday, faith without works is dead. But in like manner, work without faith is dead. Neither have I noticed a lack of faith that causes me to say this. I want you to try with me to strengthen our faith through our contacts here with the love of Christ and our fellowship with each other. May this be our goal in our work.

Sometimes we have disagreements about our work. We feel we should work eight hours, or ten. We feel that our job isn't important. We move something one day—then we move it back the next. We shift jobs until we are confused. Peter would probably smile at us when we complain about these things. I use Peter because he was very human. He made mistakes just as we do. The big fisherman rushed in where angels feared to tread. Yet, he profited by his errors. In fact, they are what made him strong. Without Peter's mistakes the Gospels would lack much of their force and appeal. It is to those of us who make mistakes that Christ comes. "It is not the well but the sick who need the doctor." We must confess our sins to him if we are to receive his divine guidance.

Agape is and can continue to be a great thing. I want you to remember however, the verse of scripture from St. John: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." Let all of us who work at Agape keep in mind this reason why we are able to build the camp. Let all of us who work for Agape remember that

FISHING!

Johnny and Anne were playing in the very shallow water of the lake. It was cool and the sand was oozing through their toes:

"Lookee, Anne, lookee a fish!"

"Wher's any old fish?"

"It's not an old fish—it's a very young fish."

"Gee, how do you know?"

By then both of them had dropped to their knees and looked intently in the clear water to the bottom and as they waited dozens of little silvery fish swam past them.

"I'm going to catch me a hand-ful," bragged Johnny "Me too," echoed Anne.

And so they tried. They were very still and tried to snatch the little fish out of the water. They cupped their hands and made little traps but the fish swam over or under. Johnny found an empty jar and held it as a trap but it was always facing in the wrong direction.

Their mother had been watching them and waded in to see if she could help, but no matter how she tried the little fish swam past her too. Occasionally one little fish would swim into the children and dart away as quickly as it had struck a leg of foot. Finally they gave up and went back to playing.

They began to run up and down the beach and saw many interesting things: hundreds of softly colored pebbles, arrow root and water lilies. They left the beach for a long pier and watched a man loading his small boat with fishing poles, bait and finally pull the string to his motor and start his boat towing another.

The afternoon sun felt warm and pleasantly across their shoulders and they were ready for their supper when mother called, "Come."

As they started home Johnny asked, "Mom, why couldn't we catch those fish?"

"I suppose you were clumsy and made a dark shadow that frightened them away."

But Anne said, "No, Moms, God made the little fish and he knew we would only hurt them—any children would—so he made them to dart swiftly away from harm."

"True, Anne, so true," answered mother.

The little fish still swam in the shallows and the children went happily home.

DRAMATIZATION.

By LELIA MUNSELL.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

How children love to act out any incident! This love may serve, educationally, in many ways. I have tried this with groups of children under all sorts of conditions and have never found it without value. It holds attention while a story is being told, helps to fix a story or fact in mind, stimulates inventiveness, and quiets restless groups.

Here are a few suggestions to parents and teachers. Tell a Bible story; for instance, the finding of Moses. Then choose children for the characters in the story. Let the group select the place to be the river, sections for the princess and Miriam to enter, and other spots for scenes of special interest. Appoint one child to retell the story, while the others pantomime it. State the general plan beforehand, and all will show happy attention. You will be delighted with the performance.

All of the nursery tales, from Red Riding Hood to Little Miss Muffet, lend themselves to this treatment. Stories of history or heroism are excellent, too. The Boston Tea Party, Washington crossing the Delaware, and the little Dutch boy holding back the sea by keeping his hand at the hole in the dike are illustrations: In the case of the Dutch boy the children will need to improvise a bit—naming his father, mother, and brothers and showing what they all did, also what the village people did. Even Hawthorne's "Great Stone Face" would not be too difficult, if you know how to tell a story so that little children can grasp it.

Tolerance and interracial understanding can be absorbed through dramatization of national games played by children in other parts of the world. One can find a book of such games in almost any library.

Take the Chinese game Cat Catching Mice, which is to be found in "Children at Play in Many Lands," by Katherine Stanley Hall. One child is chosen to be the Chinese boy to describe the game. He then has the group select one child to be the "cat" and one the "mouse." The others he instructs to stand in a circle, holding hands. The circle revolves, and the mouse—on the inside—tries to keep as far away as possible from the cat, who is on the outside. Suddenly the ring stands still, and the mouse darts from one "hole" as the cat pounces in through another. The cat must follow in and out through the same holes as the mouse. Finally he catches the mouse; the mouse then plays the part of the cat, and another mouse is chosen. There is much opportunity for variation by those who personify the two animals.

Sometimes the children like to act out a theme such as Helping Mother. The story can be improvised by one child or by the group. In either case you may be surprised at the ability shown.

I have often quieted large groups of restless children by giving them the joy of very simple dramatization or pantomime. I would announce that I was going to whisper the name of a child who was to come to the front. Each one of them would be silent, eager to hear his own name should I whisper it. I would then assign to each of the children I had selected a character in the familiar story I intended to tell. Next I would name the story to the entire group, and they, one by one, would recall much of the action that was to take place, so that each of the actors could plan just what to do. After that, to the delight of all, these children would act out the tale while I told it.

Of course, in dramatization by children the parent or teacher should never try to bring about a highly finished production. If the children are to be benefited, the aim must always be for free expression on the part of each child. This, with a little help, will develop physical as well as emotional control and co-ordination. The entire activity must be just "make-believe" to the child—fun—and it should never be allowed to become an overstimulated show, which would tend to develop self-consciousness and vanity. Dramatization can become one of the unfortunate, but is should be—and can easily be made to be—one of the most delightful influences in a young child's life.

"It is better to do even a little bit about it, than just to hope everything will come out all right."

JAMES, LEADER IN THE JERUSALEM CHURCH.

LESSON XII—SEPTEMBER 17, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Be doers of the word and not hearers only deceiving yourselves.—James 1:22.

LESSONS Acts 15:13-20, Galatians 2:9-12.

DEVOTIONAL READINGS James 1:19-27.

The Brother of Jesus.

We are studying today about the brother of our Lord. That ought to make the lesson interesting. Like so many other characters of the Bible, there are only a few scattered references to the man, and some of these references are somewhat confusing. But such references as we do have tell us a great deal about the man: He was an apostle, a brother of Jesus, and a brother of the man who wrote the little letter of Jude in the New Testament. He was a witness of the Resurrection—at least the Risen Christ was seen of James (I Corinthians 15:7). By the time of the Council at Jerusalem James was recognized as the head of the church, and was one of the "pillars" of the church. He addresses the Council at Jerusalem in words of wisdom and of far-reaching consequences. He is sought out by Paul and hears Paul's story at first hand. And last but not least he wrote one of the books of the New Testament, the Epistle of James. This much at least the New Testament tells us about the brother of our Lord. Clement of Alexandria says that "Peter and James and John, who were the three apostles most honored by our Lord, chose James, the Lord's brother to be the bishop of Jerusalem after the Lord's ascension." This tradition agrees well with the references to James in the New Testament books. When Peter was released from prison he asked that James be notified. After Peter and Paul and Barnabas had spoken at the Jerusalem Conference, James sums up all the discussion, and his decision was accepted by the assembly and formulated in the historic letter sent to the Gentiles. Paul particularly mentions James as one of the leaders whom he saw when he came to Jerusalem after his conversion. These and other references indicate that James stood in a position of supreme authority in the mother-church at Jerusalem, the oldest church in Christendom.

From Unbelief to Faith.

Now all of this is all the more remarkable because there was a time when James did not believe in his brother Jesus. On at least two occasions it is stated in the New Testament that James did not believe on Jesus. But he evidently had an open mind and a responsive heart, and a willingness to follow the truth where it led him. Perhaps the crowning factor was the fact that the Risen Christ appeared unto James. In any event, James became a devoted disciple of Jesus and one of the most useful apostles. There was in him "the faith of honest doubt."

James the Broad-Minded.

The decision which James made at the Jerusalem Council, and which the Council itself accepted, was an important factor in the establishment of Christianity as a universal and all-inclusive religion. To be sure it was that in the mind and heart of Jesus himself. But it was hard, almost impossible for the apostles, steeped as they were in Judaism and the Mosaic law, to break the fetters of legalism and to accept the larger and the more inclusive aspects of the new faith. There were among the early church members, many who insisted that a man must come into Christianity through the door of Judaism. This was the significance of the insistence upon circumstances as a condition of discipleship. The issue had become acute in Antioch, so acute that that church decided to send delegates to Jerusalem to confer with the leaders there. It was James who got at the heart of the problem and who insisted that the new faith was all-inclusive and universal. A man became a Christian through simple faith apart from any Jewish rite or ritual. Gentile as well as Jew was eligible for the immediate grace of God in Jesus Christ. In a sense the church had a new birth of freedom in the decision which James made at Jerusalem. In any event James proclaimed the principle in terms that all could understand. Here was a man who interpreted the Christian faith in the Spirit and not in the letter. Here was a man who insisted that every man, regardless of color or creed or culture or class or condition could come into a saving knowledge of Christ through faith and without legalistic requirements. The Christian faith was much to James the brother of our Lord.

James the Humble.

Like all truly great men, James was humble. He was the brother of our Lord—how some folks would have strutted their stuff on that grounds. He was the leader of the Church at Jerusalem, the acknowledged authority in spiritual matters. But he was humble, self-effacing, unassuming. When he begins his letter he refers to himself as "the servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ." He conceived of his power as a sacred trust and used it as such. He possessed to a remarkable degree the Spirit of him who said the "He was meek and lowly in heart."—his own brother.

James Writes a Book of the New Testament.

James later wrote a book of the New Testament. It is simple and practical in form. Indeed there are some who regard it simply as a collection of ethical precepts with little religion in it. It seems to emphasize works alone. Luther refers to it as "an epistle of straw" for he felt that it emphasized works to the exclusion of faith. But James was emphasizing the practical aspects of religion. His thesis was that one showed his faith by his works. Like his brother he was urging men to be doers and not simply hearers of the word. In simple language, much of it suggestive of the languages of the Sermon on the Mount itself, James shows how the Christian faith expresses itself in action. Like the Master he insists that men shall be known by their fruits.

AGAPE FOREVER.

Christ's great works never included a building of any sort. Not even a house of his own did he have. His great work was building a Kingdom within the hearts of men. Let us try to make room in our own hearts for his Kingdom. Then we will become beacons drawing others to Christ. Then will His will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Then Agape will grow from its humble beginning here in the Alps into an Agape that will cover the whole earth.

THE CHRISTIAN STEWARD AND THE TITHE.

Thus a Christian Steward does not believe that a tithe belongs to God and the other nine-tenths to himself. The tenth is not all a man owes. "All to him we owe." The Steward may use the other nine-tenths as he wishes, but that too is God's, it should be used in ways that he approves. The tithe should be the first tenth. In the Old Testament the first fruits were for the Lord. The best of everything was for him. A sacrifice of an animal with a blemish or defect was not acceptable unto the Lord. Paul wrote that on the first day of the week Christians should lay by in store as God had prospered them. From that tithe or other separated portion, they should make an offering in worship, and from it they should give to worthy causes as God might direct them.

Giving a tithe should not be regarded as legalism. It is the loving recognition by a Christian of his Father's ownership and of his own Stewardship. A man may have a mortgage of a thousand dollars on his house and forget it most of the time, but the payment of the interest, annually or semi-annually, is a recognition and acknowledgement of that obligation. The Christian Steward gives a tenth of his income as the acknowledgement of his Stewardship. He often gives more—a second, a third, or as much as the ninth tenth of his income, as some great Christian souls have done. The first tenth, however, is an obligation of honor and all the rest is a program of partnership with God. Giving the tithe creates right relations with God in regard to the whole of a man's wealth. Just as scrupulous recognition of one day in seven as holy unto the Lord pours a holiness over a man's conception of all his time, so the habit of tithing has the unspeakable value to the Christian that it keeps him from forgetting his immeasurable debt to God. The larger life of Stewardship is not to be found in a heart too small for the practice of the tithe.

A sincere Christian who is seriously and prayerfully considering becoming a tither frequently faces problems and difficulties. One of these is that he hardly knows just what his income is. In a general way this is answered at the time of making his income tax report. Even a farmer, these days, knows what his net income for the year is. Every tither, however, must answer this according to his own conscience. Moreover, in distributing the tithe he is responsible to no one except the Lord, whom he represents and whom he delights to honor. Giving to any good cause or objective that is not for himself and for which he would not otherwise be responsible is a proper use of tithing money.

Perhaps the greatest stumbling block is that every Steward is expected to give a tithe. "The poor man cannot afford it, and the rich man should give more." It is true that far greater sacrifice is necessary for the man who is not rich in this world's goods than for one who has wealth. But there were poor people in Old Testament times. Christ said that the poor we have always with us. He commended the giving of the poor widow whose whole living was only two mites.

The poor are not the ones who complain of the tithes, but the rich. The majority of tithers are among those who have small or only moderate incomes. As riches increase, men set their hearts upon them and their hearts become hardened. Many a rich man can hardly find it in his heart to give his tithe of thousands of dollars from his big income as readily as the poor man gives from his meagre income his tithe of a hundred dollars. Almost all large givers, especially those who are tithers, began to tithe when they were poor or had little wealth. As wealth increased, they continued to give their tithe, and then two tithes, five or nine tithes of their income. "When a man gets rich, God gets a partner or the man loses his soul."

Some people hesitate to begin tithing because they are in debt. They wonder if they should pay their creditors first and then begin to tithe. But are we not more deeply in debt to God than to anyone else? Is not our first obligation to him? Many have found that they got out of debt more easily and more quickly after they began tithing.

It is often claimed that those who tithe become wealthier as a result. This raises the question whether "it pays to tithe"? God never promised to pay a man back. There is no justification for expecting God to return anything material to a person who tithes. It is true, however, that a tither is more careful with the nine-tenths that he has left and for which he recognizes a Stewardship than is the person who does not tithe.

God does promise, and throughout the ages tithers have received, spiritual blessings beyond compare. There is joy in giving. When Jacob at Bethel became a tither he experienced great joy and said, "Surely, the Lord is in this place and I knew it not." Tithers witness to such satisfaction in giving as they had never known before. The late Thomas Kane, who devoted almost forty years to distributing literature on tithing and probably did more to promote the tithe than any other man, often said, "I have never seen a long-faced tither." Throughout the years, in church papers and millions of leaflets, he asked if anyone knew or had ever heard of a tither who was not happy and spiritually blessed because of the practice, but his question did not bring forth a single affirmative reply.

The challenge of the tithe is as applicable to Christians in China, India, and Africa as to Christians in America and Europe. In those mission lands, the average income is very small—in India about five dollars a month for an entire family—yet the Christians in those countries tithe and find great joy in doing so.

When a Christian becomes a Steward and begins to tithe, he is very likely to find two things: First, he discovers that he is able to give more and through his giving accomplish more than he ever thought possible, and that he finds great joy in it. Second, he is surprised to learn that the gifts of tithers constitute such a large proportion of the money given to the Church or to any good cause. Then he thinks, "What could be accomplished for the Church, and through the Church for the Kingdom, if every Christian gave at least a tithe of his income for the work of the Lord!"

An eminent surgeon, who was also an eminent Christian, visited a lady who was a professed believer in Christ, but who was frequently troubled with imaginary diseases. The good doctor was frequently called in, until at last he said to her: "Madam, I will give you a prescription which I am certain will make a healthy woman of you, if you will follow it." "Sir," she said, "I shall be so glad to have good health that I will be sure to follow it." "Madam, I will send you the prescription this evening." When it arrived, it consisted of these words, "Do good to somebody." She roused herself, and in seeking out others who needed her help, she who had been so constantly desponding and nervous, became a healthy, cheerful woman, for she had an object to live for, and found joy in doing good to others.—Spurgeon.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Counting the $100.00 which we reported last week, and the $179.00 which we are reporting this week, the special Home-Coming and 43d Anniversary contributions have amounted, so far, to $279.00. I appreciate these gifts more than I can tell you. I hope there will be many more coming in by mail and still many others coming when representatives of Sunday schools and churches, and visitors come to see us Sunday. The matrons and children have worked hard, looking forward to Home-Coming. Mr. Wagoner and Mr. Hilliard have done their best to have everything in readiness. Many more than usual have written in telling us to reserve a portion of our big picnic for them. If the weather is good, it looks like there will be a big crowd.

Since I wrote you last week, we have had additional vaccinations getting our first-graders ready for school. We have had three tonsillectomies. And we have had some fifteen of our boys and girls to finish their two-weeks Red Cross swimming lessons. Our children have had twice all the bananas they could eat for a day or so, and they have twice been served watermelon by friends. Pate & Dawson, Burlington, fruits, etc., wholesalers, have given us two pickup loads of bananas. We had no cold-storage room, so some of them had to go to waste. We badly need cold-storage. We greatly need ice-cream freezing equipment since we have such a plenty of milk. But we are not able, with the funds coming in, to pay for the first essentials, so such things remain off the list of equipment.

One of our smallest children hid away for about four hours one day this week, and I wish you could have seen how alert and anxious all the others became. We searched every nook and corner until the lost was found. But the whole air of the campus was different until that time. I saw anew how we are a family—a team, and everyone is deadily in earnest about the welfare of each in a crisis. Why little children will hide and scare the wits out of their loved ones I do not know, but they still do it.

All of our children, or most of them, as some are pre-school age, are looking forward eagerly to the change in tempo which starting to school again brings. Shoes by the dozen are in demand, and even a North Carolinian cannot persuade them differently!

We want you to begin thinking about the Thanksgiving offering. All the churches and Sunday schools should be looking over their records to see what they have done for the orphanage this year. How is your record? So many are not yet on the Big Chart. Many are there for only a very little. Several are there for every month, and a goodly sum each month. In this category are both large and small churches, and country and city. What is your record? I do not have to tell you that it takes much more than it did several years ago. It will take nearly four times as much as has been allotted from the churches. If you are willing to help make up that difference, I shall most greatly appreciate it, and I speak for these needy ones who are depending upon us.

Pray for us that we may rear these children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

In Memoriam

FONVILLE.

We the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Burlington Christian Church wish to pay tribute to the memory of our member, Mrs. D. R. Fonville.

She was a woman of fine Christian character and we shall always cherish her memory. Therefore: be it resolved,

1. That we are grateful for what her life has meant to us as individuals and also for what it has meant to our Church and Community.

2. That we extend our sympathy to her loved ones and pray God's Blessings upon them.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family. A copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication and a copy entered on our Auxiliary records.

Mrs. W. W. SELLARS,
Mrs. J. D. STRADER.

APPLE.

Mrs. Florine Scott Apple, 79, daughter of the late Loftin B. and Elizabeth Scott, died January 9, 1950, at her home in Washington, D. C. In 1889 she married Russell Apple, grandson of the Rev. Solomon Apple, an early minister of the Christian Church, and a son of the Rev. C. A. Apple, an Episcopal minister.

Mrs. Apple is survived by two daughters, Miss Elizabeth Apple and Mrs. Louise A. Tice, both of Washington, D. C.; by one granddaughter and two great grandchildren.

Until her marriage, Mrs. Apple was a member of Lebanon Christian Church, Semora, N. C. She then united with an Episcopal Church in Washington, D. C., from which funeral services were conducted for her. The committal service was held in the cemetery of Lebanon Christian Church, Semora, N. C. by the writer.

a church will be organized in the early fall. The work is known as the Beverly Hills Community Church (Congregational Christian) and is under the supervision of the Mission Board and the First Church in Burlington. Rev. Henry E. Robinson, pastor of our First Church, has given unstintingly of his time and energies in this church extension venture. The spacious lots were made available through a gift from Mr. D. R. Fonville, in honor of his parents.

THE FRANKLINTON PASTORATE.

Rev. Carl E. Wallace, a graduate of Elon College and entrant at Duke Divinity School in September, has done an unusual job with the five churches being served by him—New Hope, Beulah, Oak Level, Bethlehem and Antioch. Under Mr. Wallace's leadership and with the assistance of the Mission Board, the parsonage at Franklinton has been redecorated.

New Young People's groups have recently been started at three of the five churches, making four active Young People's groups in the pastorate. Vacation Bible Schools were held in three of the five churches and transportation was made available so as to give the school privilege to the remaining two churches. The revival meetings in each of the churches were conducted by the pastor.

During Mr. Wallace's service as pastor of this group, a total of 62 members have been added, 39 on confession of faith. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace have endeared themselves to their people, and we feel very fortunate in having them as the leaders there.

PALM STREET.

Rapid progress is being made with the building program at Palm Street, under the leadership of Rev. Mack V. Welch. The educational building has been completed to the point where the church services are being held in it, and the old church building has been torn down preparatory to the erection of a new church sanctuary.

son were appointed to construct a stage in the adult department auditorium. The completion of this platform will be a real asset in presenting programs and staging special events.

HOLLAND FOLLOWS SUIT!

The giving of an automobile by a congregation to its pastor has become a happy and contagious precedent in the Southern Convention. The chain reaction continues with marked benefits and evident satisfaction for those who give and those who receive. While Virginia maintains a slight lead in the score at the moment, this score is likely to be upset at any time by a new outburst of generosity in North Carolina.

Rev. and Mrs. James H. Lightbourne, Jr. and James H., III, who arrived in Holland, Virginia, the first of June, were presented recently with a new automobile by "friends of the Holland Christian Church, through the courtesy of Mr. Floyd Briggs of the B. B. H. Motor Co., Franklin, Virginia." The automobile, a 1950 Chevrolet Styleline Delux Sedan, was a surprise gift to the new minister and his family.

Prior to the arrival of the Lightbournes, the parsonage was painted inside and out, and the pantry was stocked with food. A new sink and a new electric stove were installed in the kitchen.

The new minister and family are happy and grateful.

NEW COLOR FILM TO BE RELEASED.

Release date for "Lord of All," a new sound and color film sponsored by The King's College, King's College, Delaware, has been set for October 1, according to Rev. Percy Crawford, the college's president.

Leading roles in the new movie are played by Colleen Townsend and Noel Reyburn. Miss Townsend recently gave up a promising Hollywood career in order to prepare for Christian service.

More than a hundred students of the college also appear in the cast.

Filmed by Cavalcade Productions, "Lord of All" tells the story of a talented young musician who found his self-centered life decidedly out of tune with the spirit of a Christian college.

The original screenplay for the three-reel production was written by Dale McCulley, with the photography and direction by Henry Ushijima. Cavalcade has also produced "Out of the Night," a documentary of Chicago's Skid Row.

"We are expecting a wide ministry for this unusual film, particularly among young people," Mr. Crawford stated. "Everyone who sees 'Lord of All' will be deeply convinced that we cannot have our lives for ourselves and still claim Christ as Lord."

The new film is available through both rentals and sales.

SUGGESTIONS WANTED.

The Committee on Ministerial Ethics of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference is soliciting suggestions for inclusion in a "Code of Ethics" as proposed at the 1949 session of the conference. It was voted there to receive the suggested code and to hold it open until this coming conference for suggestions to be added.

The proposed code will be found on pages 95 and 96 of the 1949 Annual. The committee will appreciate your suggestions and asks that they be sent to the chairman, Rev. Robert T. Woodruff, at Vernon Hill, Virginia, before the last week in September, in order that the committee may have ample time for their study and inclusion in this year's report.

"O Sing Unto the Lord"

CHOIR ROOM, FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, LONG BEACH, CALIF.

Our singing forbears had few, if any, musical accessories. Lacking for hymnals, someone "lined the hymn out," or it was sung by rote. Today it would be folly to deny our generation the vast advances and improvements in musical education. Pianos, organs, robes, hymnals, anthems, chimes and various instruments are available for the average church, whether located in city or open country. Multiple choirs, with a continuous program of musical training extending from childhood through adulthood, are becoming the accepted pattern.

The accoutrements of music play an increasingly important and indispensable part in the modern church. Too long churches have been expected to make musical bricks without straw. This ethereal thing called music must have its physical setting and counterpart. That church has the greatest chance to succeed and minister musically which makes the most intelligent provision for a musical program.

With the increasing emphasis on multiple choirs, it becomes necessary to have a room with adequate space, heat and light for frequent rehearsals, and good cabinets for the storage of robes, anthems and other paraphernalia. The room should be located near or within reach of the point where the processional originates. A room dedicated to music is a worthy project for every church.

NUMBER 36

Church Extension in Burlington

Rev. W. T. Scott, Jr., and Rev. Henry E. Robinson, pastor and sponsor respectively, view with satisfaction the sign calling attention to a second Congregational Christian Church to be erected in Burlington, North Carolina.

The church site is located on N. Church Street, near Mayfair Apartments, and was donated by the family of D. R. Fonville, Sr., in memory of Mr. Fonville's parents. The grounds are sufficiently large to provide space for the church, parsonage, educational building and a large recreational area.

The new church is an extension project of the Southern Convention's Mission Board and First Church, Burlington. Supt. W. T. Scott and Pastor Robinson have initiated the project with the assistance of a strong committee from the Burlington Church: Garland Huffman, D. R. Fonville, Sr., J. D. Strader, Mrs. Ed. Foster, Mrs. M. Z. Rhodes and E. N. Pearce.

MILTON WRIGHT TO INTER MINISTRY.

Milton Wright, son of Rev. and Mrs. T. Fred Wright, is studying for the ministry, on the West Coast. Since returning from the Armed Services he has been employed by the Motor Vehicles Department and in the Adjutant General's Office in Sacramento, California. Milton is married and they have one child, Kenneth Allen, who is seventeen months old. They have been active in our new Sierra-Arden church in Sacramento and the minister writes that Milton was recommended by its members to the Northern California State Conference last spring and was placed under the care of the Conference. He is now a student at Pacific University in Forest Grove, Oregon. Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Wright in North Carolina and Virginia will be interested to know Milton's decision to enter the ministry and he will have their best wishes as he begins his training.

The church may have seen its duty imperfectly, for it is made up of fallible human beings, but when all is said, it has been the one power through nearly two thousand years which has stood for peace, for brotherhood, for the cause of the poor and distressed—Ernest F. Scott.

REPORT ON THE EVANGELISTIC ADVANCE.

We are about three quarters of the way through the program of the National United Evangelistic Advance, which, as you know, began on Worldwide Communion Sunday last year and is scheduled to continue through December of this year. In many respects this has been the most fruitful cooperative effort of American Protestantism, not only in the increase of membership but also in the vitalization of the Church's faith and work.

Now, as this special program draws to its close, we should like to take stock of ourselves:

What have we accomplished, and—

What is our next step?

It is true that many churches in our fellowship show a net gain in membership as the result of their Visitation Evangelism Programs (see page 30, July Advance). Our 1949 totals show a gross increase of 90,707, which, indeed, is the largest in our history; but our net gain of 20,128 is the one that tells the story; and the story is plainly told that there is much more we Congregational Christians can do to reach the vast numbers of people outside the Church. If you have not already shared in this united Protestant effort, we lay it upon your heart now to plan to do so during the few remaining months. The two simultaneous efforts agreed upon by the Federal Council to reach the nation this fall are as follows:

October 29-November 5—Preaching Missions in every Church.

December 3-7—Visitation Evangelism programs in every community.

We simply cannot move forward in any way unless we move forward in this work of Evangelism! The Commission and your Conference Committee on Evangelism stand ready to help you.

WOFFORD C. TIMMONS.

No man is worthy the honored name of a statesman who does not include the highest practicable education of the people in all his plans of administration. He may have eloquence, he may have a knowledge of all history, diplomacy, jurisprudence; and by these he might claim, in other countries, the elevated rank of a statesman; but, unless he speaks, labors, plans, at all times and in all places, for the culture and edification of the whole people, he is not, he cannot be, an American statesman.

Horace Mann, a Christian Church layman, was the father of our public school system.

CHRISTIANS IN KOREA TODAY.

Since the invasion of South Korea began on June 25, over 200 Protestant missionaries stationed below the 38th parallel have been evacuated to Japan, according to reports received by the Foreign Missions Conference in New York City. Approximately 20 missionaries have remained in Korea, with six American Methodists incommunicado behind the North Korean battle lines. The Methodists, three men and three women, were stationed at Kaesung (Sondo), about fifty miles northeast of Seoul.

Writing from Taegu, Korea, August 9, Rev. Edward Adams, Presbyterian USA missionary, declared that "some three or four hundred pastors and their families have congregated in Taegu" after fleeing from Seoul and intermediary points. An equal number, Mr. Adams continued, have come into Taegu from the west coast of the peninsula. With the aid of Church World Service supplies, a refugee center has been opened up for these Korean Christian leaders at Kampo, sixty miles north of Pusan.

Mr. Adams declared that the National Christian Council of Korea was "completely disorganized," with Dr. H. Namkung, secretary and other national members of the council caught behind the Communist lines. Another missionary reports that the vice-chairman of the Korean Republic's Legislative Assembly, a Presbyterian elder, has been executed.

No further word has so far been heard from indigenous Christian congregations behind the communist battle lines, but according to Dr. John C. Smith, Presbyterian (USA) mission executive, some indication of the fate of these groups might be drawn from the experience of the congregations north of the 38th parallel. Since 1946, Dr. Smith said, an estimated two-thirds of the North Korean Christian leadership and half of the North Korean Christians have fled south of the 38th parallel. Those pastors remaining in North Korea were required to pledge their support to the North Korean regime. Though the number of church services and meetings were restricted by the government order, North Korean pastors report well attended services and an increased interest in evangelism.

Those missionaries staying in South Korea have been devoting their time largely to emergency relief work among the refugees streaming in from the north. Mr. Adams reports distributing wheat, beans, flour and lard to refugees at Kimshun along with "a very excellent tract to hand out with the food."

While the fighting is still in progress in Korea, mission leaders are planning a renewal program for the beleaguered country provided the North Koreans are pushed back to the 38th parallel. Outlined by Dr. Rowland M. Cross, Congregationalist of the Far Eastern Office of the Foreign Missions Conference, the program includes a strengthened National Council to breach some of the post-war divisions among Christians which have been "scandalous and a disgrace to the church."

To meet the challenge of Communism, according to Mr. Cross, "a social type of Christianity" must be developed. . . . "a comprehensive rural reconstruction program. . . and community centers adapted to the needs of the city and industrial police." Dr. Cross also noted that prior to the North Korean invasion, the Christian community had completed plans for a $120,000 radio station at Seoul to broadcast the Christian message not only to the South Koreans, but north of the 38th parallel.

Founded in 1884 when the first American resident missionaries arrived at Inchon, the port of Seoul, the Korean Christian community includes nearly 400,000 Protestants and 200,000 Roman Catholics. Missionary work, prior to the invasion was carried on predominately by American churches, with British, Canadian, and Australian churches also represented in the field.

Everybody knows "blue" Monday. Sometimes we see "red." "Black" looks are disconcerting. Often the weak-hearted show the "white" feather or a "yellow" streak. And that "dark brown" taste is not unknown. But if you want to keep in the "pink" of mental condition you must not let disturbing riots of color mess up your environment.—Townsend.

Our Principles

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- 2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- 3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
- 5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE LOGISTICS OF CHURCH EXTENSION

Modern church extension is based on serious and thorough calculations. Increasingly, denominational responsibility for a particular area is assigned by comity arrangement. Unfortunately, this procedure is not accepted among some denominations in the South as it is in the North, in the open country as in the large city, in the home land as on the mission field.

The Burlington project was preceded by a thorough survey conducted under the leadership of the Rev. Ira Black, a secretary of the Board of Home Missions. Statistical information of this kind is indispensable and it is required procedure in all major denominational extension.

Our national Board of Home Missions, the Mission Board of the Southern Convention and a sponsoring committee of a local church constitute a formidable triumvirate in church extension.

The Burlington pattern should be duplicated elsewhere. Members of First Church, Burlington, have set a commendable example in giving full cooperation to this project. Fear of losing members has maintained the status quo of having the one and only church of our fellowship in many cities where there could and should be two or more churches. Too many have been more concerned with the law of self-preservation than with the law of spiritual procreation.

Church extension must begin at the discussion stage, but it must not linger too long at that stage. Someone must take the initiative, make the study and organize for action. Surely Burlington is not the only place in the Southern Convention for such a thrilling adventure.

The farmer's task is to make two bushels of corn grow where one grew before. Our problem is to make two churches grow where one grew before. This is being done by courageous churches today. Spiritual fission is being liberated. A Methodist Church in Jacksonville, Florida, carries on with more than 500 members after having sent an equal number to set up a new Southside Church, whose $100,000 educational building has been built already and whose $200,000 sanctuary will be constructed in the near future. Here is the pattern for progress and expansion.

RELIGIOUS COLUMNIST DIES

One of the influential characters of our generation completed his assignment at the age of seventy-six and passed to that realm about which he wrote so eloquently. Dr. William T. Ellis, author of the syndicated column, "The International Sunday School Lesson," for fifty-two years, died on August 14 at his summer home in Ontario. He was one of the unique characters in the journalistic world. He claimed to have visited every place mentioned in the Bible. His Bible expositions were never tedious, but lucid and pungent. He knew how to set biblical truth in its contemporary perspective, or vice versa. Countless Sunday school teachers looked to his column for inspiration and guidance in their task.

It is estimated that his syndicated column enjoyed a combined circulation of 4,000,000. Many people read his column who never subscribed to a religious publication. Perhaps one of the great needs and opportunities of our secular world is to have more first-rate religious columnists.

ARE YOU 76?

Early in his reporting career, Ernie Pyle wrote this poignant soliloquy: "I wonder—yes, wonder very much—if when I am 76 years old I will be able to build a house with my own hands and paint pictures that look pretty to me, and have time pass pleasantly, and have to depend on no man in this world whether for company or for the necessities of life?"

He did not go on to raise the ultimate question, whether or not he would be alive. As a matter of fact, he met an untimely death by Japanese machine-gun fire on April 18, 1945.

Those who are 76 now, who can use their hands, who have the necessities of life, who can enjoy the passing of time, are fortunate indeed. Many hold in their hands unsuspected blessings. Are you among that fortunate number?

The New Frontier . . .

By STANLEY U. NORTH.

Three and a half million urban and rural non-farm housing units have been started in the four years, 1946-1949, according to Bureau of Labor statistics. Approximately 1,000,000 units have been started in 1949, breaking all previous records. Nor is the end in sight. The Federal administration has embarked upon a six-year program to aid in the construction of 810,000 low-rent home and apartment projects, towards which $20,000,000 was authorized the latter part of 1949 by President Truman.

This means a vast population in transit from former homes to new homes. It means still more new communities with the need for services, stores, schools and churches. It means the up-rooting of people who find themselves strangers among strangers. The church is desperately needed but in many communities it simply does not exist, either as a building or an organization.

All of the denominations are greatly concerned. All of them have developed programs for establishing the needed new churches. In part, but not in sufficient degree, a fine spirit of cooperation prevails. Statesmanship requires it. Limited financial resources demand it. Just ordinary common sense commands it. All of our Congregational Christian Churches are highly composite, with people coming to us from all the major denominations. Many of our churches have more members with non-Congregational Christian backgrounds than they have with Congregational Christian. This composite characteristic is true of the other denominations in comparable degree. Denominationalism is in much part merely a Reformation inheritance transformed to this country as people from Europe and Great Britain emigrated to these shores. Surely our loyalty is greater than an "ism," greater than denomi-nationalism, greater than Protestantism. If it isn't primarily Christian then it isn't adequate. Traditional competition among the churches has impoverished the community which simply cannot afford to support numerous excessive units. But more important it has impoverished the community religiously, denying to many of the churches programs that are vital, leadership that is able, music that is noble and inspiring, buildings that are in any degree adequate. Denominationalism is an anachronism. It has served an invaluable function. But in this day it tends to make Protestantism weak and ineffective. Councils of Churches have been organized to bring order out of Protestant chaos. They are only moderately successful. Each denomination has its own program and strategy which is frequently pursued without any concern for the greatest good of the community, of the city, of the region.

Urban America is the new frontier. There are congregated the great, surging masses of people. There temp-

God's Trumpet Call to the Churches . . .

Full Schedule Planned for Final 120 Days of Evangelistic Advance

By JESSE M. BADER.

Only four months remain in the fifteen months' period of the United Evangelistic Advance. These last days of the Advance must be the best. Much has been done already, but much remains to be done. The National Committee of sixty-four members suggests the following plan and program for ministers and churches across America and expresses the hope that every congregation will co-operate in some part or all of the program in order that America may be evangelized.

What Local Churches Can Do.

World Wide Communion Sunday—

This annual observance has come to be one of the most important days in the calendar of the churches around the world. This year the date is October 1. One of the major objectives of the day is for each local congregation to secure the presence of every resident member at its own Communion Table. To this end, Sunday afternoon, September 24 should be used to send out a group of workers in an every member visitation in order to urge attendance. A folder "Guide for the Minister and Visitors" has valuable suggestions in it. The minister and the appropriate officers of the church will want to take the Holy Communion out to all the aged and infirm and to the members who are ill in homes and hospitals in order that every Christian may be a part of this day of world fellowship with Christ and others about His Table.

Church Attendance Crusade—

There are five Sundays in October. Beginning on World Communion Sunday and during the entire month, church attendance should have a strong emphasis. By organization and publicity every congregation can fill the pews every Sunday. Many communities are ringing church bells and chimes on Saturday evening at seven o'clock, to remind the people of the approaching Lord's Day and the duty and privilege of worship. The bells and chimes are rung simultaneously for fifteen minutes. Why not inaugurate this plan in your community? One of the revivals that many congregations need is a revival of church attendance. Empty pews are no inspiration to anyone. Fill the pews in October. In most instances, if the members of a congregation will attend church worship services for five consecutive Sundays, a habit will have been established following the summer vacation which will continue for some time.

Reformation Sunday—October 29 is Reformation Sunday. Its observance in every local congregation is a part of the United Evangelistic Advance. Many communities this year are planning interdenominational services for Sunday afternoons or evenings. Whether interdenominational services are held in the community or not, it is hoped that every minister will preach an appropriate sermon on this anniversary day.

Simultaneous Preaching Mission—

The National Committee of the United Evangelistic Advance suggests that the week of October 29-November 5 be observed by every local church for the holding of an eight-day Preaching Mission. Each minister may do his own preaching or secure a guest preacher. If for any reason this week is not satisfactory, any other week in November may be selected. "Let America flourish by the preaching of the Word." Such a week can mean a spiritual quickening of the entire Church.

Visitation Evangelism—The week designated for a nationwide participation in Visitation Evangelism by all local ministers and churches is December 3-7. Wherever this week is not satisfactory, the week preceding or following may be chosen. Many churches have selected, trained and used their laymen heretofore in Visitation Evangelism. This trained group can be used again during this week to work on another prospect list just prior to Christmas for another ingathering of new members. Those churches which have never tried Visitation Evangelism will want to participate in this nationwide effort to win others to Christ and the Church. A serious use of this method will mean thousands led to Christ and into the membership of the churches during the Christmas season.

Mid-Century Jubilee Sunday—

Sunday, December 31 marks the end and climax of the United Evangelistic Advance. Every congregation can make this a day of celebration. If the congregation is fifty or more years old, a history covering this half-century would be interesting. Younger congregations could take the span of history covering their life and work and celebrate that. All churches are urged to have a Watch Night Service on New Year's Eve. This whole day can be so planned and used that it can be memorable in the life of any congregation.

God's trumpet call to the churches of America is for a united advance in evangelism. This work of bringing others to Christ through preaching, teaching and personal work cannot be done in our own strength but only in His. The power behind us is greater than the problems and responsibilities before us. "He is able to save to the uttermost," now as always. Just how far individual Christians and congregations advance in evangelism this autumn is determined by their faith, interest, concerns and vision.

SCRIPTURES ARE BEING CIRCULATED IN CHINA.

An estimated circulation of Scriptures in China, covering the last six-month's period to be reported, totaled 578,406 copies, according to a statement issued by Dr. Eric M. North of the American Bible Society. The report, which came from Dr. Ralph Mortensen, the society's secretary in Shanghai, also stated that sales were said to be improving in all regions except Central and Northeast China.

There has been some shortage of stock due to the difficulty of securing paper during the blockade, but now locally manufactured paper is available and a full printing program is being taken in hand.

The China Bible House has recently secured as an addition to the staff a promotional secretary, who will be engaged in developing distribution and support.

Preparations are being made to issue a Latinxua transliteration of the Gospel of Mark. The Latinxua is a recently developed method of printing Chinese in Roman characters that is being fostered by the Government.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

GOING TO COLLEGE.

Within the next fifteen or twenty days, hundreds, thousands, literally millions of young men and women will be entering colleges and institutions of training from one end of our country to the other. These students are in the morning-time of life. For the most part, they are happy, optimistic, ambitious and hopeful. They enter college with the background of home, a place of tenderness, interest, sympathy and love. They also enter college with a disturbed world as a background, a world for the most part contentious, disturbed, torn by fear and by war itself. In the transfer from home to the campus, they leave some of the restraints of life and are at a distance from solicitous and affectionate counsel. They are largely in the hands of their professors. They are looking not only for information and instruction, but they are hoping for counsel and guidance. The way is not clear. The task is confused, and the end is uncertain. Much responsibility rests upon the hearts and souls of college professors.

Young men and young women, even of college age, may be molded by the influence of an instructor—either for good or for bad. College professors have a great deal to do with the formation of the characters of those whom they instruct. Their conversations should be wholesome and their examples worthy of emulation.

We have come to an age in which the futility of materialism is evident. The general public has sensed the need and is feeling for something different, that something that is intangible and indefinable, but takes hold of an individual, lifts him out of the slough of despond, puts his feet on solid ground and starts him on the way to success, satisfaction and happiness. Fortunate are the students whose instructors approach their privileges in the classroom with a sense of the need of the wisdom that comes from contact with the supreme. In this matter of building character for the conflicts of the future, something more is required other than reading, writing and arithmetic, or, languages, history, philosophy and science, if you please. These are good, necessary and, in most instances, es-

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

As the days and weeks pass, our churches come nearer to the end of the present conference year. At the beginning of the year, certain goals were set for each individual church within the Convention. These goals were to be met during the current church year. Some have taken these goals seriously, and others have used them as guideposts in their services and benevolent giving. No church exists by itself. It is a part of its denomination and, as a part of the whole, it has the privilege of sharing in the responsibilities and the support of the institutions of the Convention. The Convention has apportioned definite financial amounts for each church for each individual cause within the Convention. If every church will comply with the request of the Convention, the support of our institutions will be more simple and evidently more adequate.

Elon College's needs are greater now than in any time within the past fifteen years. It is certain that our churches will rally to its support and make possible the continuation of its fine services to the church and the cause of Christian Higher Education in general.

Superintendent Scott Receives Latest Letter from the Jasksons

Foochow, Fukien, China,
August 13, 1950.

Dear Bill, Della and all the rest:

In a few hours you folks will be getting up for a busy Sunday, at about the time we're going to evening service.

Meantime, your July 24 letter has reached us, Bill, and brightened our Sunday muchly. We've been wondering if our letters ever reached you. Apparently Dick's did get there in time for the Convention; perhaps mine, then, got to THE SUN all right. Dick has written one SUN letter since that. The Boston office sent letters to our families after receiving the Foochow table listing all those planning to leave here. As a consequence, apparently my family stopped writing, jumping to the conclusion that when one says he's leaving, why he just leaves—which isn't the case at all in this country. Anyway, we're mighty glad you wrote.

We think Dick's SUN letter was written before the decision to leave, and that it told about the situation out here which made us missionaries question our usefulness to the Chinese Church at this time. Aside from all the parades, posters, demonstrations and newspaper articles lambasting America, there have been serious meetings and conferences between church leaders and government officials regarding the situation of the church and foreign missionaries.

From the beginning, our work has been hampered by travel restrictions and regulations about foreign teachers in the schools; all educational work suffered greatly last year from the time-consuming propaganda meetings required for students, teachers and workers. But it was the reports of these government-church leader conferences that finally swung the decision. We are still awaiting the formal official report of these meetings; but we have heard enough to gather that Chou En-lai, though sympathetic, thinks all foreign personnel and funds should be dispensed with as soon as possible. Independent, self-supporting, self-propagating churches are the goal; that, of course, has been the goal of missions, too. Here in Foochow, the decision was made to have all our personnel leave over a two-year period, gradually, so as not to disrupt too violently the church work.

Then came the Korean crisis, America's move toward Formosa, and renewed pressure here against America. Some local church leaders felt, "You'd better go now." The Mid-Fukien Synod foreign secretary was informally advised by the synod leaders that it would be best if the leave-takings were to be speeded up, all foreign personnel gone within six months. Even Chou En-lai realizes that dispensing with foreign money must be far more gradual and slow; but moves must be made more rapidly along that line, too.

When we heard the decision for all to leave, we wanted to go as soon as possible, having already left our main field of service, Shaowu, and having only a few more weeks of work in the school here. We put in our request to the government for an exit visa about the second of July, even explaining to the police that because of baby-expectations in October, we needed to leave early. We have not received the pass to leave; and neither has anyone else. Yet one of Mr. Chou's statements to the church leaders was that foreigners should leave when their passports expired, and most of us Americans now have expired passports. So, we're still here in a half-packed state, having attended already a goodly number of farewell meetings. No boats or planes are coming into Foochow; so even if we could get permission to go, the only way out—a long, difficult inland route—is out of the question for me under the present condition. We are just beginning to adjust ourselves to the idea of being here for some months yet to come—not a pleasant thought in view of the worsening international situation and the lack of opportunity to do any worthwhile work. However, there is something adventurous about being in a ringside seat, as it were, close enough to feel a little differently from the Voice of America and Time-Life reporters.

We are not surprised at Timothy Chang's desire to get a master's degree. I don't know any Chinese who has gone to America who did not want a higher degree. Americans put great stock in college degrees; but Chinese put far more. However, the New Day here is now emphasizing a different type of thing. Education itself supposedly no longer wins prestige. Certainly many government leaders lack formal education, and they have no respect whatsoever for college degrees. . . . There is another point about the new regime here which may affect Timothy's future. In some areas, ministers have not been allowed to function unless they supported themselves by some other vocation, too, a little like Paul of old and his tent-making. Certainly rural ministers here are at an advantage if they can help the farmers produce better or raise the level of a community by public health work or in any way help raise the material level of their people. Every minister must be on his toes intellectually, too, to answer the serious questions that the present regime is stirring up with its dialectic materialism propaganda.

. . . Right now, when foreigners are pulling out, the churches sorely need leadership. We believe that Timothy would be exceedingly welcome right here in Foochow where he might gain much practical experience in his own country, where there are others to guide him, some of whom have studied in America.

An airplane just came over, flying low. A few minutes later we heard Lewis making "bang-bang" noises in imitation of the anti-aircraft fire, apparently. So young do they learn war! But at least he is getting over his fear of all big noises.

We are deeply pleased over the increasingly good work done in the Southern Convention; the new ministers, Pattie Lee and the youth work, your son, Bill—how we hope with you that nothing will interfere with his preparations at Yale.

Our love and greetings to all.

Sincerely,

DOROTHY & DICK.

I am not surprised that an African observer who had been seeing white men come and go for many years was a bit puzzled when these first missionaries came. He turned to a trader who spoke some English and asked, "Who are those people?" "Those?" replied the trader. "Those are fools." And the African took the word and Afracanized it on the spot. He didn't know the meaning, of course. And to this day among the older people we often hear ourselves referred to, with great respect, as "Afoolu"!—Sidney Gilchrist.

1950 THANK OFFERING.

September brings fall; fall brings beautiful days and lovely thoughts of Thank Offering time—a time when we can, with our generous gifts, go the “second mile” in helpfulness.

Last year, we sent our Thank Offering to far away China, to be used for the improvement of Han Mei School in Shaowu. This year, the Woman's Board is recommending that our 1950 Thank Offering go also for a school. However, this time, the school is much nearer, and—shall I say dearer, because through the years it has touched our lives in so many ways. We are asked to make our Thank Offering for renovating and redecorating the Whitley Memorial Auditorium at Elon College.

Those of us who sat looking at the walls of Whitley Auditorium during the School of Missions, as the announcement was first made concerning the 1950 Thank Offering, knew full well that never could we have chosen a more worth-while project. The need was quite evident. We felt that here was something at home the women could do that would have a far-reaching effect not only upon ourselves, but upon our young people, our college, our church, and our visitors.

November 5, 1950, (or as near that date as possible) has been designated as the day for the Thank Offering service. Mrs. Marion Hall of Suffolk, Virginia, has been appointed the chairman of the Thank Offering Committee. She will be assisted by Mrs. R. L. House and Mrs. Russell T. Bradford. I feel that we could not have chosen a better committee, but they will need the full cooperation of every society.

You will be hearing all about their plans, as they keep you informed and challenged through correspondence, THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Woman's Conferences.

Let us set our goal for $3,500.00. I have the faith to believe that we can do even more, for the women of the Southern Convention have a way of backing us up and seeing us through all our worthwhile planning.

So get ready, get set, and go all out for our biggest and best Thank Offering.

MRS. O. H. PARIS, President,

WOMEN REPORT MANY ACTIVITIES.

ISLE OF WIGHT.

The most outstanding meeting of our society was in June, when we had the privilege and pleasure of having with us, Mrs. Wm. T. Harrell, the president of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference, who brought to us a most interesting review of our home mission book, Missions at the Grass Roots. It was also our privilege to have the societies of the Antioch and Windsor churches with us on this occasion.

We have, as a society, not failed in our part of local church responsibilities, contributing to our building fund and other needs.

We hope to do even better work in the year to come.

KAY P. WHITLEY.

BETHLEHEM (NANSEMOND.)

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Bethlehem Church, under the very able leadership of Mrs. T. H. Dilday, wish to report a good year's work.

Interesting programs were planned each month by different members of the society. In March, we enjoyed an all-day fellowship meeting, with a covered dish luncheon served in the Fellowship Hall.

We have met all requirements of a superior society.

We have given four Life Memberships and two Memorials.

We observed World Day of Prayer with Liberty Spring and Union of Southampton.

We sent clothing to the Elon Orphanage, and also gave baskets to the needy.

We regret losing our retiring president, Mrs. Dilday, but with our new that even greater works may be accomplished in the coming year.

Secretary.

SPOONS CHAPEL.

The Spoon's Chapel Church recently gave a picnic supper for all the elderly people of the church and community.

Some twenty special elderly guests, ranging from 60 years to 76 years, gathered on the lawn of Mr. and Mrs. Gorrell Luck of Asheboro, Route 1, and enjoyed a delicious meal together.

FRANKLIN JUNIORS.

The thirty (30) boys and girls of the Junior Missionary Society of the Franklin Church are active and a very enthusiastic group to work with.

They have studied their Home and Foreign Mission books at their monthly meetings.

Last Christmas they sponsored the "White Gift" program and saw that all the children at Elon Orphanage received a gift.

In May they packed a kit for the Migrants and sent it to Rev. and Mrs. Paul Cassen at West Palm Beach, Florida. Their service of dedication for the kit was very impressive.

"BROKEN ARROW."

PICTURE OF THE MONTH.

We have seen a good many pictures depicting the legendary struggles between American Indians and pioneers during the settlement of our western country. They follow a set pattern and are usually concluded by the well-known "Indian bites the dust" cliché. In "Broken Arrow" however, 20th Century-Fox has given us a different story, captivatingly interesting because it is based on historical facts.

The title of the film is derived from a bit of symbolism, the breaking of an arrow by the Indian chief to signify peaceful intentions. The story sets out to prove that there have been Indians, like Cochise, the Apache Chief, who wanted peace and kept their word. "To talk peace is easy," said Cochise, "to live peace is hard." True in 1870, and true today!

Cochise is portrayed as a dignified and brave man by Jeff Chandler. The Indian scout, Tom Jeffords, who introduced General Oliver ("Bible-reading") Howard to Cochise to make peace, is played with unaffected simplicity by James Stewart.

"Broken Arrow" is more than a play; it is a slice of history, and its presentation is enhanced by its semi-documentary quality and the Technicolor photography of the Arizona locale. This is not far from the White River reservation, where many Apaches live to this day and 375 of whom take part in the action.

Artistically, this film is of high caliber. Folkways are brought out in the colorful Indian marriage rites and tribal customs. Indian tunes are used with good effect as foundational themes.

There is, of course some violence; the story could not be told without it. But in every case the violence is shown as wrong, by whomever perpetrated. "Broken Arrow" has been endorsed by the Association on American Indian Affairs, Inc., and we are glad to add our approval.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

er. The supper was furnished by the Missionary Society of the church.

Rev. Clyde Fields, pastor of the church, greeted the elderly guests and made appropriate remarks concerning the occasion. He mentioned the fact that in most cases the older people are not forgotten by a church, although at times it would seem that the opposite was true.

The Missionary Society is also buying hymn-book racks for the pews of the church.

Our society at Amelia Church was glad to have Ray Kirch, whom we are sponsoring, come on a visit to our community from Elon Orphanage. He spent a week-end in August, and most of the missionary society met him at a weiner roast given in his honor.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Back to School!!

Are those magic or musty words to you? I hope they are magic.

The other day I accompanied a young gentleman to school for the first time, and, my, how school has changed since I first went. As a matter of fact, the first time I went to school, it caught on fire! Our teacher was young but experienced and she told us about fire drills, and by the time she had us lined up on the curb the fire engines arrived. It wasn't much of a fire, just a smoking furnace from burning too much trash, but it certainly furnished a lot of smoke and excitement, and lots of mothers came running. Do you know that one doesn't often see mothers running. But that day we saw lots of people running.

When I started to school, I went to Magruder, and my mother had gone to the same school. The principal had been her teacher. We sat in rows in small chairs and it seems to me that we learned to read the first month, but my memory could be poor about that. The main difference in the school that my son attends and the one that I went to is this—I had to sit still and only leave my seat when I was told, and my son can walk around with ease and freedom. We learned the alphabet before we could begin reading.

No matter how the methods have changed, the things to learn are the same. That's where the magic comes in. You can learn about ships and boats, kites, gardens, people, electricity, printing, inventions, dramas, art, and on and on. You can read for yourself the stories of Jesus and other people of Bible times. There is so much to be read and learned and not nearly enough time to learn it.

Some of my best friends have been school teachers. They aren't all perfect—how could they be?—but they are your friends and have studied to help you study. Not to enjoy school seems the worst kind of a mishap. Have fun and enjoy every bit of the magic.

And a special wish that Carol Ann, Dickie and Jonathan like their school, too!

UNDIRECTED ENERGY.

By M. LOUISE HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Undirected energy is like a train running wild.

It is a good plan for our boys and girls to bring their friends to our own yards to play, where Mother can observe how their energy is being used. Seeing them at close range, we get to know our children's companions, we listen to their spontaneous conversations and become acquainted with their likes and dislikes. If we find one boy has bully tendencies and so disturbs the peace, or if he loves the gangster type of play, we can gradually eliminate him, in unobtrusive ways, and find a more suitable companion. The games of our older boys and girls are not always desirable for the younger ones. Children of about the same age are more apt to be good companions.

A new housekeeper was in charge while the mother of a certain family was in the hospital. The twins were elated at the idea of the baby brother whom Mother would bring when she came home, and this may account for their exuberant spirits. The housekeeper did not realize that there was need to direct this unusual energy, until one morning before breakfast she found the furniture in the living room all disarranged and the twins climbing from one piece to another—even walking on the piano keys! They were barefooted—which helped the piano a little!

Both boys and girls love to climb. I remember my mother giving me a low stool and a high stool and a kitchen chair. Day after day I played at climbing mountains. The climbing age has its place in every child's life. Undirected energy is apt to work into misbehavior or trouble.

Walter had a new bow and arrow. He kept aiming it at a gray squirrel. His neighbor did not know him well, but she talked with him on several occasions about birds and animals, and very soon he lost interest in killing creatures.

Sandra and her mother were visiting the kindergarten. Next year Sandra would attend, and this was to be an introduction to the experience. She seemed very much impressed.

Marion, one of Sandra's next-door neighbors, was one of the pupils. Suddenly Sandra slipped out of her chair, which was beside her mother's, and running up to Marion poked her in the back. Marion turned around; she had been painting at an easel. Sandra seized a brush and began to streak the furniture with paint. All the children watched. Her mother smiled; she thought it was amusing. Of course, the teacher did not; she sensed the situation, however, and quietly took Sandra's hand and led her back to her mother. "Sandra is not quite ready for kindergarten. Will you take her home, please?" she said. "We'll be glad to see her next September."

A small neighbor of ours came up on our front steps and visited politely. He is six years old and very active. He asked, "What do you do all day long?" I replied, "Well, part of the time I write stories for boys and girls." He continued, "Do you read them to Fredda?" I answered, "Yes. There is a story about Grandfather Bullfrog and His Family that she likes. Would you like to hear it?"

He listened to two chapters; that was all he wanted. Then he said, "I think it is supertime now." The reading had served to direct his thoughts in a quiet way for a little while. Children must have activity, but they also need quiet periods for rest now and then. They must continually be doing something. That "something," if undirected, may well prove to be mischief. Directed energy results in constructive activity.

Do you possess property, or does property possess you? I mean: Is your business your master, or are you the master of your business? I once read a story of a man who left his home for the Klondike, where he became rich, and declared he would go home and take care of his parents. With a leather belt around his waist, filled with gold dust, he took ship. The ship was wrecked and the man was thrown overboard, and the weight of the gold was too much for him to stay afloat. Down and down he went to a watery grave. It was said that the gold he thought he possessed finally possessed him.—Nichol.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

PAUL, WORLD EVANGELIST.

LESSON XIII—SEPTEMBER 24, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: I decided to know nothing among you except Jesus Christ, and him crucified.—I Corinthians 2:2.

LESSON: Acts 26:9-20.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I Cor. 2:1-13.

What a Man!!!!

What a man, this Paul was! He stands second only to Christ in the Christian Hall of Fame. To him Christianity owes more than to any other man, save Jesus himself. When Christ laid hold on him on the Damascus Road, he undoubtedly got the one man who above all others could do what needed to be done for the Christian Church as it began its world-wide mission.

Instead of dealing specifically and in detail with the lesson assigned for today, these Notes will rather give a summary of Paul's character as a whole. It will consist of some impressions that the writer has received out of many years of study of Paul's life and his writings. It will be written rather spontaneously from memory instead of out of detailed study for this particular occasion.

Dr. Jefferson wrote a whole book on The Character of Paul, so perhaps the writer can write one page on the man.

A Man of Gigantic Intellect.

Paul was a man of gigantic intellect. It fell to his lot to take this Christian movement in its infancy and to give form and content and meaning to it. Under the leadership and guidance of the Holy Spirit, Paul created and somewhat systematized its theology. He had the capacity for clear and deep thinking. He thought in universal and timeless concepts. Although the Jews were not philosophers, Paul had a philosophic mind. He was familiar with the thought life of his day, and he could match wits with the greatest minds of his day. Much of the fruit of his thinking is profound. And, as Peter wrote, some of it is hard to understand. But some of the greatest minds of the centuries since Paul's day have taken off the shoes from off their intellectual feet, as it were, as they stood in the sublimity and the profundity of his thinking.

A Man of Dynamic Energy.

Paul was a man of dynamic energy. Tradition has it that he was not strong physically. He seems to have been afflicted with some ailment which remained in spite of prayer, "a thorn in the flesh." But he was a veritable human dynamo. He seemed to be tireless. He throbbed with energy and power. Sustained by the Spirit of Christ within him, he traveled to the ends of the earth, wrote incessantly, preached constantly, visited industriously, labored tirelessly, suffered greatly, and underwent hardships that might well have broken a stronger man. It hardly seems possible that the man did what he did under the conditions under which he did it. His iron will and his indomitable spirit kept him going in season and out of season, a man literally on fire for God.

A Man of Deep Convictions.

Paul was a man of deep convictions. He believed something and he knew what he believed and why he believed it. He lived by his faith and not by his doubts. And his faith grew out of his experience. He had had a personal, intimate, vital experience of Christ, and what he thought and what he did was rooted in and based upon that supreme fact. Paul's theology was not a fine-spun theory, but simply an attempt to put in thought the meaning of the experience he had had.

A Man of Friendly Spirit.

Paul was a man of friendly spirit. This does not mean that everybody liked him. Indeed, he was one of the most hated men of his time, and more than once his enemies tried to do him to death. But the man had a genius and a great capacity for making and keeping friends. His letters abound in references to his personal friends, and in joy in their friendship. Universal as he was in his thinking and in his outlook, he gave heed to the individual and the personal. There were a host of folks who gladly would have died for him, and there were many who risked their lives by showing their friendship for him.

A Man of Great Compassion.

Paul was a man of great compassion. He wanted to see men saved. It broke his heart to see men out of Christ. All men. His heart's desire and prayer unto God for Israel was that his fellow-countrymen might be saved. But he yearned also for the Gentiles. And he went to the ends of the earth of his day to share with the Gentiles the good news of Christ the image of the invisible God.

A Cosmopolitan in His Thinking.

Paul was world-minded and cosmopolitan in his thinking. He thought in terms of the whole world and of all time. There was nothing provincial about the man. He had an imperial mind. He wanted the whole world for Christ and he tried to bring Christ to the whole world. He was the world's greatest missionary.

A Man of Utmost Consecration.

Paul was a man of the utmost consecration. He was also a man of strong will. But when he met Christ on the road to Damascus, he yielded his will to Christ. "What wilt thou have me to do Lord?" was the touchstone of his life. He loved Christ with a supreme passion. Christ was the center and the circumference of his life. Religion for him was no set of rules and regulations, no rites and ritual, no creed and ceremony, but a living, warm, personal relationship between Christ and himself. And to know him, and to know him increasingly intimately, Paul called all other things as loss. It was the love of Christ that constrained him, that helped him to endure all hardship, to undergo all suffering, to be subject to persecution, and that sent him to the far ends of the earth, and finally to die for the Master.

A Man of Humble Mien.

Paul was a man of humble mien. Like his Master, this was one of the marks of his character. He counted himself as least of all the apostles, although he was by far the greatest of them all. His humility is all the more remarkable in the light of his dynamic character and his amazing passion, as well as his strong will and deep convictions. But Paul measured himself by Christ and not by others. He sought not to be served, but to serve. His humility was, of course, not false meanness. He thought very highly of himself in one way—the fact that Christ had died for him gave his life dignity. But he was willing to decrease if only Christ could increase. And he tried to keep self out of the way so that men might see Christ in him. It was because he was willing to humble himself that God was able so highly to exalt him and give him a name that is above every other name except the name of Jesus.

Though being dead, yet he speaketh. What he wrote, never suspecting that it would be preserved, comprises nearly a third of the New Testament. The theology he formulated is still the basic theology of Christendom. His words are the basis of thousands of sermons every year. And his example and influence are still the inspiration of countless thousands of the friends of Jesus who try to find the secret of his joy and his power, and who try to express his spirit of service.

THE NEW FRONTIER.

tations, sin and crime thrive. There the forces of secularization are in every block, glamorous, seductive, prosperous. The Church has a battle on its hands and it needs to awaken to the fact. The need is for a unified command and an attack in sufficient force to command attention, respect and support.

The problem which the Department of City Work faces is basically twofold. There is first the inner-city with its relentless deterioration; and secondly, the outer-city with its new communities. Planning and adjustment are of the utmost importance in the inner-city. Some churches, like First Church, Fresno, California, and First Pilgrim, Kansas City, Kansas, have needed to relocate, and in doing so have experienced a new enthusiasm and vitality. Other churches like Plymouth and Dwight Place, New Haven, Connecticut, have needed to merge and relocate with the promise of many added years of effective service. Still others require the strengthening of their programs, like South Church, Brooklyn, New York, in the neighborhood of which Protestantism has largely withdrawn. Still other situations are to be met by simply strengthening the ministry, such as Union Church, Jacksonville, Florida. While some of these adjustments can rightly be accomplished with local church initiative and denominational assistance, others involve interdenominational concerns. No church has a moral right to relocate without due consideration being given to the effect of its removal upon the neighborhood it leaves and the effect upon the churches already established in the neighborhood to which it proposes to move.

The inner-city presents difficult problems, but it is the vast new communities to be found everywhere in metropolitan United States, some of them in the form of apartment-house developments representing sizeable cities in their own right, others of them large scale suburban developments of varying qualities, which present emergency needs.

The Department of City Work is cooperating with the various state conferences, and in conjunction with the other denominations, with a view to establishing churches in the new communities across the nation. Thirty-some Congregational Christian churches have been started. Each one of them has a fascinating story. Possibly none is more unique than that of Sierra Arden, on the edge of Sacramento, California. The work began in a parsonage purchased by the Board of Home Missions. There were no stores in which to hold meetings. There were schools but California law precludes the use of such for church purposes. But where there is a will there is a way. The will belonged to Mary McKee Chester, the minister, employed by the state conference to initiate the work. Mrs. Chester's husband happens to be a retired Methodist clergyman, and while he renders valuable assistance to the project, it is she who is the minister in charge with the responsibility for its program and its progress.

The work quickly outgrew the parsonage so that other homes were solicited and secured for the purpose of the Sunday school. Progress, however, doesn't just solve problems, it also creates them. An added home was only a temporary solution. Over the three years the project has been in operation the Sunday school has met in 24 different homes with as many as nine homes being used on a single Sunday. The Sunday school itself has grown from zero to a registration of 317. There are today six departments, all using graded materials, with a staff of 20 teachers. That is no mean record for a church without a building, for a Sunday school without the normal tools with which modern religious education is conducted. It comes very close to brick-making without straw.

This is only a part of the story. Adults need a church, too. Church services were held in nine different places during the three years, all of them make-shift; but even so the total attendance for the period has amounted to 9,424. Auxiliary organizations have come into being as needed, each new idea requiring a meeting place for its implementation.

Mrs. Chester reports that 120 homes have been used over the three years in developing the church.

At long last the first unit of the church-to-be has been erected. The labor involved has been contributed in considerable part by the men of the church. The erection of the building is a story in itself. All last winter volunteer labor crews gathered Saturday and Sunday, week after week. Women of the church prepared noonday meals. One wishes that some of our churches which have fine equipment might also have the devotion of these good people of Sierra Arden.

A word should be said concerning securing the church site. The community was restricted to single family dwellings. That is quite characteristic of the modern real estate development. The truth is that churches can be nuisances, if they are clustered, creating thereby periodic traffic congestion; and if they do not provide off-street parking. But certainly good community planning requires provision for a shopping center, a school, and for one initial church, others as the community grows. The problem at Sierra Arden was solved by purchasing a three-acre site before the property adjoining the community was platted. Today the open field of which the church site was a part is filled with new homes and a host of new children.

Similar stories can be told of each of the projects. The churches at Woodland Hills and Paradise Hills, California, likewise were constructed in much part by contributed labor. Certainly this does something to a church. It cements the people to it with a deep affection. The children and the young people play a part, too, and that is meaningful; but possibly most significant is the example of their elders. Neither of these two communities had a church of any sort. They were totally lacking in religious symbolism. And certainly their children were underprivileged in the best sense of the American dream.

Our program is but a small part of the total effort being made by Protestant churches across the nation. The Methodist Church requested and was granted 26 comity assignments in Los Angeles County in 1949, the Presbyterians received 16 assignments, the Congregational Christian Churches only one. The need is truly colossal. Our leadership is able, but the funds available are woefully inadequate. The opportunities, however, are not

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Home-Coming Day was a big success. The crowd was large with the "girls" and "boys" of yesterday, and their families and friends. Many visitors came to see us, too. One of the boys brought $360.00 in cash, and reminded me that he would make it $500.00 by Christmas. When his poor old grandmother died, he and his little brother were left homeless and friendless. The Orphanage stepped in. For many years he has been coming back each Home-Coming Day with a goodly sum, and usually makes it $500.00 before the year is over. His wife comes with him, and they spend Saturday night here and love it. He is so quiet and of very few words. But he said as he handed me the three one-hundred-dollar bills and three twenties, "Dr. Truitt, I'll see that it is $500.00 by Christmas." I thanked him and reminded him that he had blessed my soul last year when he did the same thing. "I can never pay back all I owe the Orphanage," he said, and he let it be at that. He is held in highest esteem by those with whom he works, and it is a great credit to this institution.

The sum of $1,188 has gone into our recent reports—some of it included by request in the Sunday schools offering column—as a result of Home-Coming Day. Letters of commendation on the work of the Orphanage were received from several people. And many visitors made all of us who work here feel good with their kindly expressions of approval as we ate at the big picnic table.

Now that fall has come and our children are back in school, our expenses have greatly increased. The churches and Sunday schools are urged to send us any offerings they may have on hand for the Orphanage. We have promised our creditors when fall comes we will pay in full. The Orphanage has never failed to meet its obligations, and I know you will not fail us now. Take that monthly offering for the Orphanage and send it in.

This week, one of our most active pastors sat in my office and told me a pathetic story about three little children who have no home and no hope for any unless we take them. Do you want us to turn them down? We simply must have more funds with the rising tide of cost of living if we take them. They are of our own church. I want to take them. With the small gift of only one dollar from the people who read these lines dropped into an offering for the Orphanage, we could prepare for them, and take them.

To all those who are sponsoring a child here, let me suggest that we have not bought any school shoes as yet, holding off until a little later. Send a check with which to buy the shoes for the child you are sponsoring. It will help us a great deal. Thank you. And I thank all of the very, very good friends who have made this good report possible.

Has it been noted to you that the gods of the heathen are represented as seated or resting gods? Someone has well referred to them as "sitting gods." Contrast the idols with the God of Christianity. Our God is a working God. Do not think of him as abiding in some place oblivious of the needs of his creatures. His eyes are over the righteous, his ears open to their prayers. He withholds no good thing from his creatures who love him; he permits no temptation to come to those save those they can overcome, and with each temptation (test) he makes a way for their escape. Satan cannot triumph over a child of God unless that child is willing that he should do so.

God's Concern.

For God so loved the world that he gave his only Son, that whoever believes in him should not perish but have eternal life. John 3:16.

"If you will." . . . And being moved with pity, he stretched out his hand and touched him, and said to him, "I will; be clean."

Mark 1:40,41.

Who desires all men to be saved and and to come to the knowledge of the truth. I Timothy 2:4

Like the deists, some frustrated Christians rule God out of the current scene. They think of the allpowerful Creator as not concerned with what is happening on China's campuses. Prayers, theirs or others', seem unanswered. God could but doesn't do anything. Such attitudes easily develop a cynical unbelief closely akin to atheistic materialism.

If Christians in so-called Christian countries have their faith tried by conditions in the world, and especially in China, how much more will that of our Christian brothers and sisters on these campuses be tested. They are confronted by an increasingly vigorous and powerful godless ideology. God is concerned about this "God is love" and is ever alert to save.

Almighty and everlasting God, who art always more ready to hear than we to pray, and art wont to give more than either we desire or deserve; pour down upon us the abundance of thy mercy; forgiving us those things whereof our conscience is afraid, and giving us those good things which we are not worthy to ask, but through the merits and mediation of Jesus Christ, thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

God Working.

My Father is working still, and I am working. John 5:17.

We know that in everything God works for good with those who love him. Romans 8:28.

Since God is able and concerned, it is not surprising to find that he is busily engaged in doing something about the evils and hatreds of our world. Though not responsible for them, God is working in them, bringing good out of evil.

Out of the bloody Boxer attempt to drive Christianity out of China, fifty years ago, came a quarter of a century of unprecedented progress for the Christian movement. During this period some of the Christian Colleges were established and others showed remarkable development.

Then the Nationalists and Communist coalition of the '20's drove nearly all missionaries from China and threatened the Christian program. Out of this came the successful transfer of leadership from the missionaries to their untried Chinese associates.

Thus God has used seeming disasters to develop these colleges and to provide them with the outstanding Chinese Christian leadership which today is their hope.

"God works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform"

Almighty God, give us that due sense of all thy mercies, that our hearts may be unfeignedly thankful, and that we may show forth thy praise, not only with our lips, but in our lives, by giving up ourselves to thy service and by walking before thee in holiness and righteousness all our days; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

GOING TO COLLEGE.

sential, but they do not constitute the final word in laying the foundation for a sane and successful life. Mystical though it may seem, there must be the intrusion of spirit, inspiration and power that comes only to the open mind and the responsive heart. The spirit of truth and right puts meaning into life, gives a sense of direction and makes you confident of success. The university, college or seminary whose professors live in textbooks, instruct out of textbooks, and fancy that the individual student who learns the facts of life and is able to solve problems by philosophical or mathematical means only, have missed their opportunity and have deprived their students of that which alone will rescue them in the crises of life and make it possible for them to triumph over wrong and become the exponents of truth and righteousness on the earth. The universities, colleges and seminaries of our country are rendering an unselfish and magnificent service in the training of young men and young women for our homes and country. They will not forget that they must be trained in the spirit in the things that matter, as well as in the fundamentals of learning.

THE NEW FRONTIER.

repeatable. Communities which are not being churchd by our fellowship will be churchd by some other. We must carry our share of the load now of we will not be permitted to carry it in the future. Magnolia, Seattle, Washington, after four years has a church school of 480 and a budget of $25,000. The budget of Christ Church, Silver Spring, beginning its fifth year is $27,000. The North Shore Church, Milwaukee, called its minister on August 1, 1949. His first service was held the first Sunday in September. On the first Sunday in November 329 people joined church, over 100 of which were on confession of faith. The first Every Member Canvass, held the middle of November, raised $15,000—not bad for a church less than four months old. It reflects able leadership. But it also was made possible by a statesmanlike attitude on the part of the inner-city churches, one of which surrendered 66 members to the new church, commissioning them to their task and pledging the loyalty of the mother church.

Thirty projects is less than one per state. We could start one hundred new churches if we had the funds. The communities in question are unchurchd or underchurchd. They are rich in people and especially in children. They will have much to say about the future of religion in the tomorrow, whether it shall be liberal, intelligible and appealing, or literalistic, emotional, militant and uncompromising. If we wish to witness tomorrow, we must bear witness today in the communities of America.

Burlington Has New Church

Unit One in Community Church, Burlington

The long-contemplated establishment of another Congregational Christian Church in Burlington, North Carolina, has now been realized. The first unit, containing offices and an open-air shelter, was in use this summer. Rev. Guy H. Veazey, the chief carpenter, was ably assisted by Revs. Scott and Robinson and a contingent of men from the First Christian Church. The next item on the agenda is the enclosing of the summer shelter for year around use. It is contemplated that organizations such as Boy and Girl Scouts and 4-H Clubs will have access to the building under the direction of church personnel.

Rev. W. T. Scott, Jr. gave full time to the project during the past two months, making further surveys, aiding with the construction of the first unit and conducting a Vacation Bible School. The maximum attendance at the Bible school was 50, with a representative group of parents attending the movie programs. Mr. Scott returns to Yale Divinity School this fall, and a new resident minister will be secured.

While plans for the parsonage have not been completed, present plans call for a large basement room to serve as an initial meeting place for church services until the church building can be constructed. Electricity, water and sewerage connections have been brought to the area, with the thought of eventually adding the other units.

ROBERT RAIKES, SUNDAY SCHOOL FOUNDER, MEMORIALIZED

Dr. Luther Wesley Smith (standing at the microphone), chairman of the Board of Trustees of the International Council of Religious Education, speaks at the Memorial Service held at the statue of Sunday-school Founder Robert Raikes during the World Convention on Christian Education held at Toronto, Canada

One of the early cooperative efforts of Protestants was the World's Sunday School Association, launched in London in 1889. Now known as the World Convention on Christian Education (and Sunday School Association—this addition is now optional), the international organization met in Toronto, August 10-16, for the first time since 1936

Thirteenth in the series of assemblies, the Canadian meeting was the first in the western hemisphere since 1928. It drew 5,000 Sunday school teachers and educational workers from 60 countries.

New Sunday school statistics released during the convention show that there are 40,738,364 Sunday school pupils, teachers and officers, in 150 countries and colonies. Since the last world convention at Oslo, Norway, in 1936, the average annual rate of increase has been .75 per cent. This is nearly double the rate of increase during the previous period, when it was .4 per cent.

MT. OLIVET (G) VA. VALLEY.

Mt. Olivet (G) is looking forward with pleasure to a return visit of the Rev. W. J. Andes who will be the guest speaker at the annual revival services beginning October 8. Mr. Andes is a former pastor of Mt. Olivet (G) and still has many loyal, staunch listeners among the congregation and throughout the county.

Mt. Olivet experienced one of its most successful Bible Schools this summer from July the 10-16. It was closed on the 16th with a well-planned commencement program followed by a picnic given by the Sunday school for the entire Sunday school and Bible School.

Enrolled in the Bible School were 44 children and 8 workers. The staff was composed entirely of local help and consisted of Miss Faye Morris, Miss Irene Herring, Mrs. B. G. Snow, Jr., Mrs. Harold Herring, Mrs. Everetta Snow, Mrs. Elphis Morris, Miss Winona Morris and Miss Thelma Morris.

With only one or two exceptions, the school had perfect attendance each day.

On July 1, immediately following the Bible School commencement, Miss Thelma Morris of our congregation left for Powell's Fort Camp to teach the course "The Most Wonderful Book in the World." Our pastor, Rev. S. E. Madren served as Dean of the camp during Congregational Christian week.

Miss Morris also attended the Y. W. C. A. Camp at Bevard, N. C. in August and had charge of all worship during the week.

Others who had camp experience from our church were Miss Winona Morris, N. W. Morris, and Wilbur Morris, and Miss Isabelle Sheetz who attended the Young Men and Women's Leadership Training Camp at Virginia Beach.

On Saturday night they had charge of the evening vespers.

Miss Sheetz has been teaching in the Dyke Elementary School for the past two years and has been a real asset to the church and it is with regret that we lose her to the Henrico County School system. The church greatly appreciates all she did for the young people while she was here.

On July 29 the entire church co-operated in sponsoring a Lawn Party for the purpose of adding to the Building Fund. From this the fund received $231.00 and the church felt keenly the fine spirit of working together.

Because of the thoughtfulness of Miss Pattie Lee Coghill the church and community had the rare privilege of seeing the movie "Second Chance," which we commend to each of our Congregational Christian Churches.

The church will be pleased when its dreams of an addition which is badly needed to accommodate the activities is realized.

WIDENHOUSE FETED.

Rev. Philip M. Widenhouse, one of the younger leading churchmen of the Congregational Christian Church, has just assumed the post of general secretary of the American Missionary Association under the Board of home Missions.

He was welcomed by his divisional committee at a dinner in the Gramercy Park Hotel, New York City, on Monday evening, September 18. He takes over the direction of this historic association following the retirement of Dr. Fred L. Brownlee, who has been its head for the past thirty years.

The American Missionary Association, more familiarly known as the "A. M. A.," has had the American Negro as its major concern for more than a century. It has made frontier advances in race relations, Negro education and public health, both studying and acting upon such problems as segregation, housing, fair employment practices, restrictive covenants and education. It also carries on work among "minority groups," including social, medical and church work in Puerto Rico.

From its very beginning, in 1846, it has had a rich history of achievement in education for the Negro and before the close of the War between the States had opened hundreds of schools, many of which later grew into such fine institutions as Atlanta University, Fisk University, Talladega, Tougaloo and LeMoyne Colleges, Hampton Institute, Tillotson and Berea.

HARTFORD SEMINARY ADDS INSTITUTE OF SOCIAL SERVICE.

The Hartford Seminary Foundation, Hartford, Connecticut, pioneers another area in the field of education for church vocations with the opening this fall of its Institutes of Church Social Service. The Institute provides a professional curriculum, and facilities for research, in the field of church social service, along with an extension program.

Dr. Charles G. Chakerian, Graham Taylor Professor of Social Ethics at the Hartford Theological Seminary of the Foundation, is director of the new unit.

This latest development increases to four the sections for specialized professional training that make up this university of religion. The Foundation already consisted of the following schools, two of which were also pioneer developments in their time: The Hartford Theological Seminary, founded in 1834, The Hartford School of Religious Education, initiating in 1885 the training of religious educators on the professional plane, and The Kennedy School of Missions, opened in 1911 and today still unique in its exclusive concern with thorough preparation at the graduate level of a highly qualified missionary personnel. All the schools of the Foundation, and the new Institute of Church Social Service offer graduate work and require the Bachelor's degree or its equivalent for entrance.

President Russell Henry Stafford of the Foundation outlines the four chief objectives in the new enterprise as follows:

"First, it will enrich our offerings in the area of the religious and cultural components of social work; in sociology, in anthropology, in social psychology, and in social ethics, so that students in the three schools of the Foundation will be better equipped to make use of community resources wherever they are subsequently stationed. In areas where such facilities are not available, whether in town or country, in this country or abroad, our graduates should be prepared to approach the social needs which confront them with at least an elementary measure of professional competence.

Second, it will provide special seminars, lectures and conferences on our campus, which will help keep workers, both professional and voluntary, in church related welfare agencies, and also their Board members, abreast of current developments in this general field.

Third, it will promote research studies in the interrelations of religion and social work, with special reference to a variety of human cultures, as they are or may be represented by scholars on the Foundation faculty.

Fourth, it will offer for a limited number of qualified students who plan to engage specifically in social service under religious auspices, a two-year course of study leading to the degree of Master of Arts from the Hartford Seminary Foundation. The equivalent of one these two years will be devoted to the first full year of work at the graduate School of Social Work of the University of Connecticut. The other year will be occupied with related subjects on our campus."

FEDERAL AID FOR EDUCATION INDEFINITELY POSTPONED.

Legislation for Federal aid to education, which has engendered considerable religious controversy, is dead so far as the 81st Congress is concerned.

Representative Graham A. Barden of North Carolina, chairman of the House Education and Labor committee, has conceded that the legislation has no chance of enactment in the present session of Congress. This means that Congress will have to begin all over again in 1951, if Federal aid is to be voted for schools.

Representative Barden said that the Korean war has killed the last chance for getting the legislation on the floor of the House for debate.

The Thomas bill, approved by the Senate, would give Federal funds to the States, leaving distribution up to them. Representative Barden's substitute bill, killed by the House committee, would have banned the use of funds for parochial schools.

Though supporters of Federal aid to education believe a satisfactory solution can ultimately be reached, the whole issue must now be regarded as indefinitely postponed.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

RAIKES' SCHOOL

Every Sunday school is a memorial to two men: Robert Raikes and Jesus Christ. Raikes' school, which began in England in a very humble way, has had a phenomenal growth. And the best is yet to be. New advances are being made in Sunday school work. New methods, new equipment, new workers, and wider objectives are coming into use.

Raikes' school has had a marked influence on both teachers and pupils. Who can compute the stimulus to learning experienced in this mutual enterprise? Many people date their mature religious experience from their first induction as a Sunday school teacher. Assuredly, Christ has many eager learners and intelligent followers among the 40,738,364 Sunday school pupils throughout our world. He has never had more hands, feet and voices to do his bidding.

Never was there a time of greater opportunity for Sunday school workers. Some of our erstwhile handicaps in building and equipment are being corrected. Widespread educational advantages enable teachers to do better work more rapidly. The fruits of secular education may be freely utilized in the educational program of the Church. Teachers in the public schools may be the conscious or unconscious allies of the religious educator in laying spiritual foundations.

The Sunday school teacher has unique opportunities in the field of religious nurture. The minister is handicapped. He has the opportunity to "spray the congregation with words" once or twice a week. His advice or exhortation may go unheeded. The teacher, on the other hand, can plan and institute dramas or projects which translate the gospel into action, the word into deeds. In this way religion becomes a first-hand, creative experience.

BRITISH CONGREGATIONALIST TO TEACH AT DUKE

All who are concerned with theological education in the South will applaud the announcement that Dr. William David Davies of England is becoming a member of the Duke Divinity School faculty this fall. He will occupy the chair of Biblical Theology. Many of our readers will find added interest in the realization that Dr. Davies is a distinguished Congregationalist. Ministerial students in the Southern Convention may have an opportunity to study under this theologian.

Dr. Davies gained pastoral experience in the Congregational Church at Cambridgeshire, 1941-46. Since that time he has served as professor of New Testament Studies at the Yorkshire United Independent College and as a teacher in Leeds University. Dr. Davies has studied at the University of Wales and Cambridge University. He engaged in extensive research under the supervision of Professor C. H. Dodd, and it was for this original research he was awarded the degree of Doctor of Divinity by the University of Wales.

Welcome, Dr. Davies, to America, to Duke University, to the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches.

ANOTHER MISS AMERICA

Beauty contests may soon run their course, or go on ad nauseum. It will be interesting to note the limits of this publicity stunt. There is the tobacco queen, the corn and cotton queens, the apple and peach queens, and a sea-food queen. Perhaps we could have cigar, cigarette and snuff queens (sho nuff!). Every state has a queen, and surely every county, township, town and hamlet deserves a queen. Surely we can find a queen for every industry, every plant and animal.

The nation's new Miss America has more than glamour to commend her. Yolande Betzeze lives with her widowed mother, we are told, in a small bungalow "right in the middle of Mobile, Alabama." She has been studying voice for the past six years, and in addition she takes language courses at the University of Alabama Extension School in Mobile. Miss Betzeze is a teetotaler and a non-smoker.

The South is by no means devoid of beauty, brains or talent. Every girl in the South should endeavor to improve her appearance, her education and her talent. Traditions and ideals are important. No generation is without its hero worshippers. That generation is most fortunate with the presence of heroes and heroines who combine fine moral and intellectual as well as physical assets.

Ours is an age which recognizes and rewards talent. What greater incentive could one desire? The unparalleled opportunities for girls of our generation should provide a powerful incentive for studious application. Every Southern girl can lift up her head and sing. The humblest home may give beauty to the world. God willed it so. There is that which money cannot buy; inherent beauty, vivacious personality. God, the amazing creator, is lavish and unpredictable in his gifts.

Make no little plans, they have no magic to stir men's blood and probably themselves will not be realized. Make big plans; aim high in hope and work, remembering that a noble, logical diagram once recorded will never die, but long after we are gone will be a living thing, asserting itself with ever-growing insistency. Remember that our sons and grandsons are going to do things that would stagger us. Let your watchword be order and your beacon beauty.

—Daniel H. Burnham.

World Convention of Christian Education

By LEM PETERSEN

Director of Public Relations, International Council of Religious Education

More than 5,000 Christian teachers and leaders have returned to their homes in 61 nations to make new advances in Christian education as a result of the inspiration, fellowship and discussions of the Thirteenth World Convention on Christian Education, held in Toronto, August 10-16.

The convention worked in four divisions. General Christian Education, Christian Education of Children, Christian Education of Youth, and Christian Education of Adults. Each had major addresses in the morning, followed by many small forum groups discussing the addresses. In the afternoon the divisions had sectional meetings on many additional Christian education subjects.

Other special features during the convention were: a memorial service at the Robert Raikes' statue on Sunday afternoon (see page one), world-wide denominational meetings one evening, and regional meetings one afternoon, including the 22nd Quadrennial Convention of the International Council of Religious Education, for United States and Canadian delegates.

From the colorful procession of nations on the opening night, with delegates of many nations wearing their national costumes, through the 15,000 attending youth service of witness on Sunday night, and concluding with an act of dedication and the Hallelujah Chorus on the last night, there was created an atmosphere of worship and consecration which will be carried around the world and which will long influence Christian educators, even in remote churches and humble homes.

In many rooms and small groups there were to be found earnest discussions by delegates from the many countries, comparing conditions, problems and methods of Christian education. At worship, at meals and in conversation—delegates gained new insight into the world-wide fellowship of the Christian church.

Sunday school teachers had opportunity to meet and talk with leading Christian leaders who had only been names to them before. Old-timers in the Christian education movement shared their wisdom with youth, and youth brought new zeal and enthusiasm for the task of preaching and teaching the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ throughout the world.

Attempts to eliminate God from government and education were scored by Dr. L. A. Weigle. Who said that this disposition is due to "an extreme interpretation of the principle of church and state, which confines God to the church and outlaws him in the state."

Lord Mackintosh said that the work of Christian educators was more important than the meetings of statesmen in Paris, London and Washington.

Looking back on the 60-year history of the World Council of Christian Education, he said: "We look to the past with disappointed hopes and we survey the future with fear and apprehension. If man's spiritual side could only be developed in keeping with his material progress, the end of the century would see the beginning of the millenium."

Dr. Kagawa told of working in the Japanese slums, with laborers and among the farmers. "If we want to have permanent results among the laboring classes, we must employ the educational method with unselfish devotion," he said. "There is no other way to bring the lower classes to Christ." He continued, "One of the chief reasons for the great success of Korean Christianity lies in the seasonal Bible schools. The Koreans have large hostels around their churches to help those who attend the seasonal Bible school."

Bishop Stephen C. Neill told the Christian educators at the closing session that he was always glad when young people told him that they had had "a definite experience of Christ."

"However," he continued, "I do not ask what emotional experiences they have had, but whether the next morning they got out of bed in time to say their prayers, and whether they had become less difficult to live with at home."

The Western world must share its material goods more liberally with the rest of the world, if the threat of communism is to be successfully met, declared Dr. Charles Malik, Lebanon Ambassador to the United States. He said, "It is impossible for Western civilization to defend itself against the onslaught of communism as long as the standard of living in the United States is ten to a hundred times higher than what it is throughout Asia, and so long as the United States and the rest of the West do nothing effective about it." Dr. Malik felt that there is "a terrible crisis of faith in the world today. Men cannot live without faith. Of all the tasks facing Western civilization today, the greatest, the most important, is how to bring faith back to the hearts of men."

Mr. Mateo F. Occena, head of the Philippine Purchasing Agency in the United States, called on Christian leaders to "rid themselves of any belief that there is a shortage of ability, manpower, or funds, for such a vital project as the spreading of the Christian gospel."

A new historic role has fallen on the youth of this generation, according to C. W. Li of China, chairman of the World Christian Youth Commission. "Either we accept this role or it will be forced upon us; either we will be the free agents of the only true God in Jesus Christ, or we will be the inevitable victims of the other gods," he said.

"Now is the time for Christian youth of the world to wake up and realize that Christ wants us to be in the places where crucial decisions are made—even in politics," declared Rev. Joel Sorenson of Stockholm, the youth secretary of the Baptist World Alliance.

"The making of the Christian home should be the most important business of the church to which all else should be subordinated," stated Miss Vimala Rajamanickam of India, a student of religious journalism at Syracuse University.

If the present rate of increase in the number of children and youth who receive no religious instruction in America continues, "the total paganization of American life is merely a problem in arithmetic," according to Dr. Paul Calvin Payne, chairman of the International Council of Religious Education.

Christian education is more than "so-called classes in religion," stated Dr. Gonzalo Baez-Camargo of Mexico. He called for a "total, well-planned, well-balanced program of Christian education."

"Many people neglect the gospel, not because they think it is false but because they believe it is irrelevant to their life," stated Dr. T. G. Dunning, British Baptist leader, in a paper read in his absence. "Nor do we bring the gospel nearer to them by our systems of thought. Doctrine is most invaluable, but not as a means of faith but rather as an exposition and systematization of faith."

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

THE ROAD TO SUCCESS.

President Smith's message to the students of Elon College on the occasion of the opening of 1950-51 session.

Success is an inspiring word. Everyone likes to succeed. No one likes to fail. So strong is the desire to succeed, that the very principles of success are threatened by fear—the fear of the possibility of failure. A man with an alert mind sees the possibility of a successful business undertaking. He believes in it. He is reasonably certain of success, but the mere possibility of failure prevents the undertaking. Another sees the opportunity, undertakes it, and goes on to success.

Only recently I was talking with a young man who has been successful in business—unusually so for a man of his age and experience. He was then planning to go to the University of Indiana for a special course to better fit himself for a special type of business. He remarked, "I think that I can make it all right, but I admit that I am a bit afraid. If I make it, all well and good, but if I should fail, I will wish I had never gone." Fear had begun to battle with his sense of security and was threatening to undermine his faith in himself and in his undertaking.

As you enter college, you will find it a step ahead of high school. Are you confident? Do you believe in yourself and in your ability to accomplish what you have undertaken, or is your mind full of questions? Are you beginning to wonder? Do you see the possibility of failure? Is fear beginning to hammer away at the principles which you felt sure would bring you success?

Whatever may be your attitude as you face this year in college, with its complex realities. I would like to give you a few words—one brief sentence—which if believed, kept in mind, hidden in your heart, will settle questions, take away fear, prevent failure and will move you conscientiously along the road to success.

There was a man on one occasion who had been in serious straits along the highway of life. He knew what it was to be in want and to abound in plenty; to be surrounded by enemies and to be supported by friends. He knew what it was to be defeated; he knew the joy of triumph. He was speaking to friend and foe alike. With all this background of information, authenticated by experience, he uttered these words that have given assurance to thousands and tens of thousands of perplexed individuals, and will give the same assurance to you. Here they are: "I can do all things through Christ who gives me strength." You will recognize these as the words of the Apostle Paul, spoken out of a rich experience and triumphant faith. Christ did give Paul strength. He will likewise give you strength.

1. Mental Strength. He will inspire you, stir you, quicken your mind, make you alert to the opportunities and privileges that confront

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Days and weeks add up to months. There are only twelve months in the year. As the months pass, if a church has met its obligations to the denomination and to its institutions, its members are happy and congratulate themselves. If time passes without meeting these obligations, the church feels its responsibility greatly. Some of its members begin to wonder how they will ever meet their apportionments. From a sense of obligation, if not from pride in their church, they want to see their church on the list with all requirements paid and all obligations met.

Just a few more weeks, and the conference year for many of our churches will have come to a close. So far as Elon College is concerned, the churches of the Convention have a long way to go before the apportionment is met in full.

If our churches could know the real situation and the acute needs of the college, they would not hesitate in raising the full amount and forwarding the same at an early date.

MESSAGE FROM PRESIDENT SMITH TO MEMBERS OF THE FACULTY AT THE OPENING OF THE 1950-51 SESSION.

Today freshmen are beginning to register in Elon College. They are not registering in as large numbers as for the past few years. The majority of these young men and young women are away from home for the first time. They are embarking upon a new effort. They will look to you for assistance and guidance. They will need you. It is your opportunity as members of the faculty of Elon College to give to these students the correct understanding of Elon College and higher education. It is our privilege to build Elon College into their consciousness and hearts. This may be done by personal interest.

Ordway Tead in the Educational Forum has expressed this idea succinctly and impressively in the following paragraph:

IN LOCO PARENTIS.

"For real character results, each student has to know that there are one or two adults on the campus who deeply care about him or her as a person. What is required is a direct relation which is warmly personalized without being excessively solicitous and intimate. The college years present a subtle problem of transition from adolescence to adulthood. The college does stand in loco parentis, more at the outset and hardly at all by the time of graduation. And the solicitous interest of someone who will care about how each student is unfolding, is a virtual must. How we can achieve that in huge student bodies is not easy to see, unless a wholly new emphasis in relations with students is aggressively developed. Just as home is where the heart is, so the college—beyond the things of the mind—is where the heart is—the heart of the student and of someone among those who shape the education. . . . There is no escape from the psychic reality that if there is to be guided growth, some individual, warm of heart and wise of mind, should be the guide, counsellor and friend of every student."

I am sure that you will see the wisdom of this statement and dedicate yourselves to these ends.

The above message is one of the finest that I have ever seen and is published in The Christian Sun in order that the parents of the Elon College students may understand something of the attitude of the administration and faculty toward the members of the student body.—W. M. B.

NORTH CAROLINA-VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE'S RALLY.

The North Carolina and Virginia Young People's Conference will meet for its fall rally on October 15, at Happy Home. This will be a real important rally, for at that time we shall elect new officers, hear reports from some of our many activities, hear from our work campers and other things.

The rally will open at 3:00 and will end promptly at 7:30. Please plan to stay until 7:30. Bring your minister with you. I want especially to urge all of you whose young people might not have an organized group to come, for this rally is as much yours as those larger groups.

Each person is asked to bring sandwiches, and the hostess church, Happy Home, will furnish the drink and dessert.

Mark the date, October 15, on your calendar, and please urge all of your young people to attend. Let's make this rally a huge success.

President.

UCYM PROPOSES COMMON YOUTH COMMISSIONS, TAKES OTHER ACTIONS.

Plans for a common Protestant youth program and organization have been formulated and referred to denominational youth fellowships for study during the coming year.

The plan was developed during the annual meeting of the General Council of the United Christian Youth Movement recently held at St. Thomas, Canada. This council is the official youth agency of 39 denominations, 35 state Christian youth councils and councils of churches, and 17 national youth-serving agencies.

The proposal is based on a five "commission" plan. Youth fellowships in local churches and in denominational and interdenominational organizations would be organized into five commissions: Christian Faith, Christian Witness, Christian World Outreach, Christian Citizenship and Christian Fellowship.

The council proposed "this structure to the denominations for consideration and for possible adoption as the basis for their own commissions, and requested a report of their reactions to the proposed plan at the next meeting of the council" when these reactions would be reviewed and final adoption would be made.

The new plan is different from that used at present in any denomination. It is not mandatory, but it is expected that many of the denominations will sooner or later reorganize their programs and structures on the basis of this new plan. It offers greater opportunity for interdenominational cooperation on the part of youth fellowships, especially in small towns and rural areas.

Other important actions taken at the General Council meeting held August 17-21, with 96 persons in attendance from the United States, Canada, and eight other nations, include:

(1) Approval of plans for the next Christian Youth Conference of North America to be held in 1952 for some 3,000 youth delegates.

(2) Development of plans for the Call to United Christian Youth Action, for which financial support is to be secured by November 1.

(3) Perfection of a number of world youth projects and for a U. C. (Continued on page 15.)

THE STORY OF CHO HSIU-CHING.

As Related to

HELEN HUNTINGTON SMITH,
Foochow, China.

Cho Hsiu-ching was in her second year of junior high school in the Wen Shan Girls School when she attended the pastor's Preparatory Class for church membership. After a personal talk with the pastor, he told us that he thought she was still too young and not quite ready for membership. That was the first day I remembered knowing who she was. Another teacher and I were talking informally with her, asking if she herself felt sure enough of her belief to join the church.

"Surely," she replied with a dimple showing when she smiled. "I have been at Wen Shan two years. Surely I know enough of Christianity." A nice compliment for the school which I felt was hardly justified.

"Do your parents know of your intentions to join the church?"

Her face fell, "No. I am afraid to tell them, because I am sure that they disapprove." Without discouraging her too much, we tried to persuade her that there was plenty of time. She still would be in school for a good many years and six months later might be better. During that time we suggested that she bring her mother to church and talk it over with her. Little did we know what was going on in her mind or in her home.

The story was continued for me this morning when Hsiu-ching, now in second year senior high, came to talk to me about a classmate she is worried about. We had talked before about Pin-hsuh.

"There is something terribly wrong there. She is so upset by things that she is cross with everyone and then regrets it later. Our classmates are so provoked with her they are all leaving her strictly alone. I have prayed for her and talked with her and gone to see her especially often this vacation and I don't know what to do next."

We talked for sometime how we could best help this girl, also a Christian, whom these days of strong propaganda and uncertainty have literally knocked off her base. Then I turned to Hsiu-ching and said, "I remember clearly the day I first talked to you when you wanted to join the church so badly. You have come a long way since then."

"I don't remember that talk, but maybe I don't remember those first two years when I became a Christian!! I shiver now to think of the terrible time I had. My parents, even now, do not believe and are still opposed to my becoming a Christian. I didn't dare tell my mother for days and weeks. Goodness, I didn't even have a Bible and knew nothing of praying. First, I borrowed a Bible. Do you know where I got that? I was a bit ashamed. In Junior high first year a group of us were really rude and ridiculed Mrs. Lin whenever she preached to us about Christianity. Naturally I was a bit scared to ask her to loan me a Bible, but then I thought she wants me to be a Christian, I think she will lend me one. I took it home and hid it under the covers. (In crowded homes the children still sleep in the rooms with their parents.)

"Then one day came the real test. It was a feast day and we had to burn incense to the idol. I knew this was coming and that when it came I had to tell my mother. I had been praying to God for strength to meet this crisis. When she called me to go and get the incense, light it and bow before the idol, I said: 'I cannot do it, mother, I am a Christian now.' She lost her temper, swore at me and said I was the most infilial child and she all but beat me. Instead, she threatened me. 'You cannot go to school any more.' That was the worst threat possible, and when they were burning incense, I ran to hide in the bed and I never prayed so hard. Finally I said, 'I can even give up school for you, Jesus.' But the next day she did let me go back to school.

"The next hurdle was to get permission to go to church. Finally one Sunday I screwed up my courage and said, 'There is the church bell, mother, I am a Christian now and I must go to church.' 'Go to church!!' she screamed at me. 'Of course you won't go to church. If you go to church you need not expect to have any dinner here when you return.' I thought to myself, 'I can easily do without dinner,' so I ran away to church for the first time. When I got to the entrance I was scared to go in. I had never been in the church before and I walked up the street and down trying to get my courage up. Fortunately one of my classmates came along. Her family are all Christian, and she took me in. How happy I was."

"Did you get dinner that noon?" I interrupted.

"Oh, of course, parents love their children whatever they do. But every Sunday after that my mother could think of more things for me to do, hoping that I couldn't make church. I'd work fast and then she would pile on more work. I'd ask her on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, after school, if there was any thing I could do, but no. Never those days, but come Sunday and the whole house needed to be washed. But I was adamant, and when the last bell rang I would say, 'There's the third bell, mother. I am going to church now.' Each time she scolded me, and what a temper she has. I used to answer back. I have a terrific temper too, but I soon learned that if I was going to be a true Christian I had to control my temper. I learned better not to talk back but I kept going to church.

"Then that spring my father became very sick indeed. We thought he would die and my mother used a lot of money to hire about seven or eight priests to come and chant and offer incense to drive the evil spirits away. Again my mother begged me to pray to the idols to save my father's life!"

Again I interrupted, "Are you the only child?"

"No, I have a brother. But he was away from home on business, and I was the only child at home and was expected by all to pray for my dying father. Those were terrible days. My aunt came to plead with me, and my uncle and all the neighbors. 'You are a very, very bad child. If your father dies, your mother will blame you and she'll drive you out of the home for disobedience. We wouldn't blame her one minute for it either!' They surely put the pressure on me full force and I said, 'I'll obey my parents in everything else, but in this I cannot. I believe in my God and not those idols.' Thought I to myself, 'What would I do if I were kicked out of my home?' Then I thought, 'Parents don't do that I know. They love me and won't kick' (Continued on page 10.)

OUR NEW "GUIDES."

Whether we call it "The Rating Scale," "Standard of Excellence," "Achievement Goals," or what not, it seems that we have to have some guide to carrying on our women's work during the year. From time to time, it seems necessary to change our guides to meet our needs. The following new goals, or guides, have been proposed by an appointed committee, approved by the Executive Board of the Convention, and are now ready for the vote at each of our Woman's Conferences. The committee—Mrs. R. L. House, Mrs. J. S. Rollings and Mrs. W. T. Scott—submits the following for your approval at conference:

GUIDES TO PROGRESS.

Evangelism and Spiritual Life—

Do we:

1. Cultivate personal religious growth?
2. Provide devotional services for group meetings?
3. Have a place for Bible study in our program?
4. Seek ways of reaching new and unchurched women?
5. Help each woman to find her place in the fellowship of the church?
6. Stimulate church attendance.

Stewardship—

2. Contribute to the Thank offering?
3. Accept, each year, a financial goal commensurate to the financial ability of our group? Increase our goal and our giving as we are able?
4. Make quarterly financial reports to our Conference treasurer? Make annual financial reports to our Woman's Convention?
5. Cooperate with the plan of our Woman's Convention in giving a Life Membership or a Memorial?

Christian Education—

Do we:

1. Actively support our Church school?
2. Cooperate with parents and leaders of children and youth to strengthen the church's program for family life and the church school?
3. Foster activities for all the family in our church?
4. Encourage and help support attendance at Youth Camps and Conferences?
5. Promote missionary education through Sunday school and vacation school, or sponsor missionary societies for the various age groups?
6. Use our periodicals: THE CHRISTIAN SUN, The Missionary Herald, Advance, Guide Posts, Church Woman and others?
7. Become informed concerning Southern Convention work by attending our State Conferences, Conventions, Rallies, and School of Missions?

3. Use the packet prepared by the Superintendent of Literature?
4. Use designated Mission Study books?
5. Arrange and encourage programs and study groups on interdenominational themes of the year?
6. Observe World Community Day, May Fellowship Day and World Day of Prayer?

Christian Social Action—

Do we:

1. Know the work of the Council for Social Action?
2. Cooperate with women of other churches in our community in bringing about more Christian living conditions?
3. Help our community to solve its problems?

4. Help our women to become more intelligent and more Christian in their citizenship responsibility?

Friendly Service—

Do we:

1. Meet the needs for material aid and equipment in our missionary and benevolent institutions (hospitals, colleges, orphanages, mission stations, community centers, etc.)?
2. Give to designated Friendly Service projects?

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

RICHMOND WOMEN HAVE CHINESE SPEAKER.

At an early summer meeting of the Woman's Fellowship of Richmond First Church, Mrs. S. A. Virden, the president, secured Mrs. Irene Chang Ma as the speaker. Mrs. Ma was born in Shanghai and has been in this country for twenty months. She is being educated for youth leadership in China by the Baptist Union of Virginia.

Mrs. Ma stressed the advantages of being a native worker in Communist occupied China, and she impressed each one present by her genuine sincerity and Christian purpose. She asked that the group remember the work and the workers in daily prayer, believing as she does that prayer availeth much, even to the point that support seemed almost of secondary importance in comparison.

She also felt keenly the urgency of an early return to China. She displayed Chinese garments, hand embroidery art work, and some exquisite specimens of Chinese jade in mountings.

She is a young woman of unusual charm, and her address was much appreciated.

Mrs. George T. Parsons gave helpful and appropriate devotions, using a missionary theme.

Mrs. R. C. HELFENSTEIN.

UNION (SOUTHAMPTON).

The members of Union (Southampton) Missionary Society thank our Master for a wonderful year of Christian fellowship and work. Our membership has increased very rapidly. THE ROAD TO SUCCESS.

you. Not all minds are equal, to be sure, but all minds have equal access to God, who is the source of all grace and all power, and the fear of him that is God is the beginning of wisdom. If you have been diligent and faithful, and if you believe, then you are on the road to success.

You are a student in college. You want to succeed, you want to make friends, to be popular, you want your instructors and college mates to be proud of you. Your friends and neighbors back home are waiting to see what you do. Your parents are praying for your success in all of your undertakings. Your failure would be disappointing—terrifically painful to you and all who are interested in you.

If you are a student of average intelligence (it is not necessary to be brilliant or a genius, but of sound simple intelligence, as your graduation from high school has demonstrated), will apply yourself diligently and faithfully, and will believe that Christ will give you strength, there is no possibility of failure.

Did not Christ say to his disciples, "They will oppose you. They will abuse you. They will persecute you. They will say all manner of evil against you. They will seize you and bring you before the courts of judgment. Take no thought what ye shall say, for in that hour it shall be given you what you shall say." He will not leave you. He will give you:

2. Moral Strength. Your lot has been cast in a disturbed world, a world that has been torn asunder by contentions, strife, fighting, wars, and fears of wars. You do not know when you will be engulfed in this cataclysmic destruction. In the meantime, when you are in a reasonably peaceful society, you are confronted with the possibility of all kinds of wrong and sin, temptation on every hand and of every kind and type—temptations to cheat, to lie, to steal, to be immoral. Yes, these will meet you on the campus of a Christian college. Yes, the devil is here. We wish that he were not, but he is. Are you proposing to meet these temptations in your own strength, to contend with the devil single-handed? If so, you will go down in defeat. You are doomed. Trusting in your strength alone, there is no possibility of escape.

But in such temptations, such trials, there is one who will give you strength who will make you strong. Listen to the still small voice as it says, there is no temptation that will overtake you but that is common to man. Christ will not suffer you to be tempted above that which ye are able to bear, but will with the temptation make way of escape. Believe him, trust him, give yourself to him, and he will give you moral strength, the strength that you will need when trials come—strength sufficient to make you victorious in every struggle. He will give you:

3. Spiritual Strength. Strength suggests power, force. We know something about power and about force. We have seen their demonstrations. We have seen all kinds of power. We have seen the giant locomotive sweeping along its track with a long string of cars drawn behind it at almost incredible speed. We marvelled at it and said, "There is power—mechanical power." We have seen the flying fortress moving through space, far outdistancing the birds that fly, and we have said, "There is power—mechanical power." We have seen the winds blow at hurricane speeds, uprooting trees, unroofing houses, and demolishing buildings, and we have said, "There is power—power about which we know little—power, uncontrollable power." We have seen the mighty rivers of earth rise on beyond flood tide, bearing rubbish on their bosoms and tearing bridges and fortresses from their foundations, and we have said, "There is power—uncontrolled and uncontrollable power." You are right, this is power, destructive power; but this, nor any other power can equal the power of the living God, the spiritual power that he released in the world through Christ. Power was the most miraculous thing about Christ during his entire ministry on earth. The manifestation of this power was the one thing that left his impress upon the heart of the world, upon the heart and soul of man, the power to make the blind see, to make the deaf hear, to make the sick well, and to make the dead alive. When he came to the end of his earthly ministry, he wanted to leave his power with those who were to continue to represent him. He said to them, "Go to Jerusalem and wait until the skies clear, until your minds are clear, until your hearts are on fire. Tarry until ye shall be baptized with power from on high."

I can do all things through Christ who gives me power—mental power, moral power, spiritual power. With this power, I can lift him up that the world may behold and accept him.

me out.' Fortunately, my father got well.

"But the feast days—I never knew there were so many. Each time there was a real scene, but I thought, 'My mother cannot keep this up for ever. Some day she will know I mean it when I say I am a Christian and will not worship those idols.' The last thing I held out for was not eating food offered to the idols. At first I gave in there."

Turning to me with a quick smile, "What do you think? Is it really evil and wrong to eat food given to the idols?"

After questioning her about it and finding that there was no significance connected with the food, it being only a matter of economy, I said that I didn't think it was wicked.

"Well," she said, "I really didn't think it mattered, so for a long time I did eat that, but now my mother is kind enough to prepare an extra bowl of something for me. So I haven't eaten any food offered to idols for a year now."

She continued, "The last of all came grace at the table. At first I thought I couldn't stand to have my parents, relatives and even neighbors laugh at me. You see there are no believers in our whole neighborhood. Then I thought how foolish and weak I am to be afraid of people laughing at me. Now it has become so much a habit that no one ever mentions it at home and of course no one laughs at me."

"Did you finally join the church at Easter or wait until the following Christmas?" I asked, forgetting in the end what she had done.

"Of course I joined the church that Easter. I had opened my heart to God and he had come in and there was no question in my mind that I was a Christian. It was a bit hard to have the pastor doubt me when I was having such a hard time at home."

"When did you accept?" I asked.

"Don't you remember when Mr. Hsu, the evangelist was here? One night he surely got under my skin and I wept a good part of the night but once I accepted Jesus I haven't had any real doubts."

"Do your parents have any leanings toward Christianity now?"

"I do so hope that my father will become a Christian some day. I pray about him a lot. He says that he is too old to learn something so new but whenever the opportunity comes I

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

The Twilight Hour (for Juniors) at Southern Pines had a real treat last Sunday at their meeting when Mrs. Fern Fielding of Richmond, Va., showed her collection of character dolls from the Bible.

These dolls were designed and clothed by Mrs. John Gray of Washington, D. C. Each doll was the same size but had different hair, coloring and facial expressions. Mrs. Fielding showed each one and told the story of the character. Her collection is all female. Among them were some who had been very good: Ruth, Martha, Esther, Rebecca; some of the wicked: Jezebel and Delilah; and others: Hagar, Pharaoh's Daughter, Deborah, and the Queen of Sheba. The queen was the most beautifully dressed, with a golden crown, long flowing train and a fan of plumes. She was a great favorite with the girls. Jezebel had a slinky look in her dark red dress with much gold braid and she had a fierce expression.

Ruth, Rebecca and Martha were dressed in quiet colors with the simple, every-day clothing the women of the Holy Land wore. Rebecca had her jug in hand just as she must have had when she met travelers at the well. Martha looked just right for her home chores. Deborah was neither plain or fancy, but rather in-between, and she had a scroll in her hand, for she was a zealous, hard-working woman.

Hagar was a slave, or servant girl, and she was dressed in a short garment with little adornment and had her hair bound tightly with a fringe of bangs. Pharaoh's daughter had an Egyptian gown of white with very beautiful ornaments and head gear.

I wish each of you could have seen them and heard Mrs. Fielding as she spoke about them. They did not seem like dolls, they did not seem like musty old folks from the far away past. They seemed like real, living people!

The program was held at the home of its leader, Mrs. James Prim. Her sons, Jimmie and David, had something to show the group too. It was the tiniest baby squirrel that had been lost from its mother. They have adopted it and are raising it on milk, fed through a doll baby bottle! At first, the little squirrel, whose name is "Big Boy," stayed in Jimmie's hip pocket, but finally he climbed out to nibble some gingersnap, and later he went to sleep in layers of cotton batting placed in a basket. He was curled in a ball with his front paws under his chin. I wish you could have seen that too.

Although Mrs. Fielding's dolls were custom made, I think you could have some too. Do you know the plastic (undressed) 7-inch girl dolls seen often now in dime stores? They are just the right size, and you could easily dress them to suit your needs or favorite characters from the Old or New Testament. Their coloring and eyes would be the same, but types of clothing would change their looks a great deal. An exciting project would be the study in detail of the type of garment worn by different characters and then it would be fun to fashion their costumes and add jewel or embroidery touches. If any of you undertake such a project please share your results with us. Look in Bible story books and Sunday School lessons for pictures showing clothing. You might decide to illustrate a scene and add the background as well as the character.

BEHAVIOR INHERITANCE.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

A small group of women in our neighborhood—some of them mothers, all of them deeply interested in education—meet from time to time to discuss the welfare of children. As one brown-eyed mother expressed it, "We're thinking of boys and girls the wide world over, not only those of our little world!"

"Our little world" sounds like a phrase our grandmothers might have used." Sherrill Shaw, a student of political science, responded. "Provincial civilization belongs to the past. We must all be international in our thinking."

"You're right, Sherrill," the first speaker agreed, and Sherrill continued, "We're forever talking of heredity and environment, but so often we ignore behavior inheritance—one of the most influential outcomes of environment. Is there any more significant factor in the lives of our children?"

"Tell me about behavior inheritance," the youngest mother asked quickly.

"Behavior inheritance is the passing on of the trends and behavior attitudes tendencies of the older generation to the younger generation. It stresses the power of human behavior multiplied by the influence of the home and parents' authority."

"Does this mean that if my mother was a dominating person who reared my brother and me in austere, unsympathetic manner I may have inherited, not by birth but from my environment, these same traits, and that I am very likely to manifest them in rearing Sandra and Throck and—if I may use the expression—am likely to bequeath them to my children?" Stacie Lowe asked, aroused to an unusual degree for one usually reticent.

"That's it, Stacie!" Loretha Potter spoke up. "Behavior inheritance accumulates like compound interest. It is frequently passed on from one generation to the next, unless something occurs to counteract its influence."

"I see what my mother meant when she said, 'Although children may stray from the good life, if they have been taught the fundamentals and have formed good behavior patterns, they will usually return to the way of life they knew as children.'" my next-door neighbor philosophized, as her deft fingers knitted rapidly.

"Sometimes something happens that makes it difficult to return to the old way of living," Loretha told us, passing on the knowledge learned in her eugenics class. However, early behavior patterns frequently become ingrained until they are almost a part of one—like the color of one's eyes."

"Many of us fail to realize the importance of emotional maturity until we're parents and are faced with our lack of it," petite Ann, the mother of twin boys, contributed.

Loretha agreed, and added, "Psychologists' files are full of cases where almost irreparable damage has been done by the formation and the continuation of wrong behavior patterns."

After all I have heard here, I'm beginning today to strive for emotional noise and for spiritual, physical, and mental growth," the youngest mother announced. "I have not thought about behavior inheritance. I'm not

WHAT IS CHRISTIAN LIVING?

LESSON I—OCTOBER 1, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Let your manner of life be worthy of the gospel of Christ.—Philippians 1:27.

LESSON: Matthew 5:13-16, 20; Phil. 1:27-30; I Thes. 5:15-23; James 1:22, 26, 27.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Luke 10:25-37.

"Growing in Christian Living."

We begin today a series of lessons on the general theme, "Growing in Christian Living." These lessons will consider different aspects of Christian life and Christian service in the light of our own lives and of our own times. They come down to the place in which we live. They put the Christian religion "right down in our back yard." The emphasis should be put upon GROWING. Christians are to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. All too many Christians stay too close to the place where they got into Christian life. To be sure, one has to be born into the Christian life. But he is not to remain as a baby in his religious life. The ideal is to grow into the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ himself. The lessons will be both a searching test as to whether we are growing Christians, and also a help in growing in grace.

The Function of Christians.

The Sermon on the Mount was a kind of platform of the Kingdom of God or of heaven. In it Jesus was proclaiming the fundamental principles of the rule of God in human life and the ideals which should govern members of the Kingdom. In the opening verses of that sermon, Jesus spoke of the character of the citizens of the Kingdom. The Beatitudes present certain qualities characteristic of those who are members of the Kingdom. The next section emphasizes the function of the citizens of the Kingdom. They are not only to be good, they are to be good for something. And with rare spiritual insight and genius, Jesus states the function or mission of Christians in simple language and vivid pictures. He says simply that they are "the salt of the earth" and "the light of the world." That is all that he said, but in saying that, he said all.

"The salt of the earth." So simple, and yet so significant. Salt, as the people of that day knew, and as we of this day know full well, is a seasoning element. Most food is insipid and tasteless without salt. One of the most prominent and most used articles in the kitchen is the salt cellar or the salt shaker. A good cook puts salt in almost everything she cooks. Salt seasons food, makes it more palatable, more enjoyable, more nourishing. Well, said Jesus, my followers are to be a seasoning element in the world. Life is to have a better taste because of the spirit of members of the Kingdom of God. Home, office, factory, farm, mill, counting house, market, school, everywhere life is to be richer and sweeter if people have the spirit of Christ.

And salt is also a saving element. We use salt to preserve food. Meat can be saved and kept almost indefinitely if it is properly cured with salt. Salt saves things. In a very early writing, some man said that the Christians of his day "were holding the world together." It is true today. If the world does not go to the dogs, it is because Christians, as the salt of the earth are saving the world, keeping it from becoming absolutely rotten, keeping it from going to pieces entirely. The ultimate salvation of the world does not depend upon armies and navies and air forces and what have you, but upon a certain quality of life. Now as never before and more than ever before, the world needs the Church and the Christ whose body the Church is. But if the Church loses its savor, it cannot help save the world. This is no time for insipid and weak Christianity.

Jesus used another homely and helpful figure of speech in describing the function of Christians. He said, "Ye are the light of the world." And again he said much in little. Light cheers, light guides, light reveals, light heals, light gives life. Ultimately, there can be no life without light. So the function of the Christian in our modern world is to do what light does, to cheer, to guide, to reveal, to heal and to give life. But when a light shines, it must burn, it must give itself. If we are to be burning and shining lights, we must give ourselves. To save life is to lose it.

Worthy Christian Living.

"Only let your manner of life be worthy of the gospel of Christ." Paul had a great deal to say about the Christian life, but he summed it all up in these words. We are to live worthy of the gospel of Christ. He wrote to some of his friends on one occasion and told them that some were living in such a way that it moved him to tears. Indeed, they were the enemies of the Cross of Christ. The highest and strongest motive to Christian living is not fear of punishment or hope of reward, even though both of these motives may have a legitimate place in human life. But the purest and greatest motive is to have the spirit of love and gratitude in our hearts so that we shall try to live worthy of the gospel of Christ. The love of Christ must constrain us.

The Scripture from Thessalonians (I Thes. 5:15-23) which is a part of today's lesson, is a collection of literary gems, short verses, each one of which emphasizes some aspect of living worthy of the gospel of Christ. It should be read carefully and used as a chart by which to measure ourselves as to our growth in Christian living.

Practicing What We Profess.

James, the brother of Jesus, was very much like Jesus in many respects. He felt that a person's profession should find expression not in words alone but in deeds as well. He did not minimise faith, indeed he magnified faith. But he insisted that faith ought to find expression in works. He stated bluntly that it was difficult, if not impossible, for a man to show his faith without works. We are to work out what God has worked in us. Out of a good life, we are to bring forth works.

And good words. James had a great deal to say about a man's words as well as about his works. And he emphasized the fact that the words and the works of a man were but the expression of his real nature within. It was only as the inner springs of life were pure that the fruits of life could be good. One hears the echo of his Brother's words, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

"The whole Church is a venture in Christian faith," stated Dr. Paul H. Vieth of Yale Divinity School. "The more mature Christians will need to take responsibility for the education of the less mature," he admitted, but added that even these "elders" are themselves constantly in need of an ongoing educational program.

False gods have been substituted for the real God by modern science, according to Rev. Emmanuel Jung, president of the Swiss Sunday School Association. Man's power has been increased, and it seems as if God is no more needed, Mr. Jung said in characterizing the results of science. "But human beings cannot exist without a creed. Therefore, new gods have been created, and instead of real religion, there is pseudo-religion. Secularism and communism are samples."

STORY OF CHO HSIU-CHING.

talk to him. My father is so worried about the air raids and the whole present condition."

A little horrified I asked, "But you don't tell him that if he becomes a Christian, he won't be bombed do you?"

"O no. I just tell him that he will not be afraid of death. I'm not afraid to die, are you?" A pause then, "There is such a fine margin between real religious faith and superstition isn't there?"

After discussing that for a few minutes we returned to the first problem of how we could help Pin Hsuen get peace in her heart.

Cho Hsui-ching has a year and a half more before graduation from the high school. She doesn't yet know what she wants to do upon graduation. She says she knows college is out for her but she had so wanted to be a doctor. Perhaps she could be a nurse or, her eyes twinkled, "I love little children, perhaps I could be a teacher."

Watching her eager attention teaching a Sunday School class at our Social Center, or her sparkling eyes as she sings in the church choir, or her fine laughter with her classmates, or her thoughtful concern for a friend, we know that her life will count for Christ to whom she gave her heart in spite of so much opposition.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

only going to think, but I shall read and study and act upon what I learn."

"I should like to pass on to my children understanding, gentless, noble aspirations and courage, also, the ability to think for themselves and strength of character, so that they will become splendid world citizens!" Sherrill Shaw's eyes held dreams as she spoke, her friendly voice rich in the charm of its Southern accent.

"What a wonderful goal!" Loretha exclaimed appreciatively. "One could not ask for better behavior patterns."

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you for all you are doing for these children and for this most worthy institution. Thank you for your faith, your prayers, your goodwill and kind words, as well as for your contributions. We overlook no one of these things in our sincere appreciation.

Mrs. C. C. Branch, our diningroom-matron made us very happy this week when she planned a birthday occasion for five of our children and two matrons. All September birthdays were celebrated at one time. She prepared and decorated a center table in our big dining room. Miss Fannie Newman, one of our best beloved workers, chief kitchen matron, cooked a cake, and decorated with "Happy Birthday" and many candles. When the dinner was finished all honorees surrounded the table, and the waitresses along with Mrs. Truitt and me came from the pantry bringing the cake and singing "Happy Birthday To You." The glow on the faces of the children was highlighted by the light from the candles, and the "ahs" and "ums" would have done your heart good. Those honored were: Bobby Kinch, 17; David Haith, 15; Norman Simmons, 13; Richard Bridges, 8; Margaret Simpson, 7; and Miss Fannie Newman and Mrs. Besie Stadler.

Birthdays next month are as follows:

October 2, Jerry Wilkins, age 11; October 7, Billy Proctor, age 6; October 8, J. C. Davidson, age 12, and Thurman Arnold, age 11; October 16, W. C. Harvell, age 13; October 22, Ray Kinch, age 13; October 28, Charles Simmons, age 16.

How odd that not a girl is in the list of those born in October! It must be the month of "snips and snails and puppy dog tails." Anyhow these fine boys will be mighty glad to hear from you. Thank you for your cooperation.

It is time now for Sunday Schools to get themselves together and come to see us. The weather is pleasant for driving, and the Orphanage is pretty. The children are prettier still. Please pay us a visit.

At our Wake Chapel church we have laymen who see to it that everybody in the community with benevolent funds to give have a chance to make a donation to the Christian Orphanage. So also does the Burlington church, and two or three others. There are leaders in many communities who would make a charitable donation to these children if they were reminded by a neighbor of our need. It is time now for you to be thinking of such persons and planning a little call upon them, telling about the work here. They are going to give their extra benevolences somewhere, and would be glad to know about giving some of it to this institution. How proud you would be if you could voice that "word fitly spoken"! Thank you for giving this matter a little attention and seeing what you can do for us.

I took Larry Jordan with me to a supper at Union Ridge and they gave him a dollar for himself and one dollar for each of his four brothers and sisters here. They sent by him another dollar for Wayne Knight, and as he went out of the door when the supper was over, they gave him $2.53 in coins. How happy the six children were for that bit of "tangible friendliness."

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

The continuous upsurge in cigarette smoking throughout the nation, apparently unaffected in the least by the recent rise in cost and the steady addition of new taxes, is headed to new high records. The government reveals that in the year ended June 30 some 335,000,000,000 cigarettes were used, to constitute an all-time record, and the demand is still increasing. This despite the fact that the new price rise will cost the smokers about $125,000,000 extra in a year.—Boston Post.

A person can hate you wholeheartedly but if you persistently refuse to give him anything but friendliness, his hate will usually die of starvation.—Earl Riney.

In Memoriam

ARMENTROUT.

Our Heavenly Father in his love and Kindness has seen best to remove from our church circle, our loved and faithful sister and worker, Mrs. Delphine Elizabeth Armentrout.

Therefore may we bow in humble submission to his will, knowing that he doeth all things well.

Mrs. Armentrout, "Dottie" as she was known to us, lived some distance from the church yet she was a faithful, loyal worker.

May her long life of faithful service help all who may follow her example of Christian service for the Master.

OLIVE SHOWALTER,
GRACE WOOD,
Committee.

DEAVERS.

May we humbly bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, who in his infinite love and mercy, has seen best to remove from our midst our much loved and faithful sister, Mrs. Bettie Deavers.

Therefore may we commit all things into his power, who loveth and doeth all things well.

May her loving faithful service in the home, in the church and in the surrounding community be helpful to all who follow her example of faithful loyal service to the Master.

OLIVE SHOWALTER,
GRACE WOOD,
Committee.

RAWLES.

Whereas, on June 22, 1950, God, in His infinite wisdom called Mrs. Ida M. Rawles, 90 year old member of the Woman's Missionary Society of Liberty Spring Christian Church, to her eternal reward, and realizing the great loss we have sustained; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That her faithfulness throughout long years in the Master's service, inspire us with more loyalty and devotion to the Kingdom.

2. That we express gratitude for her many Christian qualities; among them a strong faith, fervent hope, sincere love and deep humility.

3. That we emulate her consecration to eternal values and zealously carry on the missionary work so dear to her heart.

Mrs. S. H. RAWLES,
Mrs. THURMAN COPELAND,
Mrs. WILLIAM T. HARRELL,
Committee.

JOHNSON.

In the passing of Mrs. Carrie Johnson, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Liberty Spring Christian Church has sustained the loss of a much beloved member. In recognition of her loyalty and faithfulness we offer the following resolutions to her memory:

1. That we shall cherish the memory of her unfailing cheerfulness, though her body bore the burden of pain during a long illness.

2. That her sweetness of spirit was an inspiration to all who knew her.

3. That we express our sincere sympathy to her bereaved family.

"Long after a beautiful life is gone,
To a fairer world on high,
Our lives are bright with lingering light
For a true life cannot die."

Mrs. S. H. RAWLES,
Mrs. THURMAN COPELAND,
Mrs. WILLIAM T. HARRELL,
Committee.

HANBURY.

A token of true and devoted love. I will never forget that peace in my heart for a devoted Christian husband—Cary Edward Hanbury, who passed away five years ago September 17, 1945. Since then I have spent many lonely hours, but the Heavenly Father has been with me and cared for his own.

Some sweet day Jesus will come and take me home to my loved ones there. Jesus our Savior will come and take me home to Heaven.

Around the great white throne, when my work here on earth is done, we will stand in love complete. When I reach the Golden Shore sorrows will come no more, when we all get home to Heaven, with its beautiful angels there, then I'll see him in his mansion, in his home so bright and fair. Now our days are swiftly passing away. We must do our best for Jesus each and every day. You are gone but not forgotten, never will your memory fade. Loving thoughts will ever linger in my heart.

Some sweet day we will be together, in that beautiful land where we will never grow old.

A devoted wife,
IDA V. HANBURY.

UCYM PROPOSES YOUTH COMMISSIONS, TAKES OTHER ACTION.

Y. M. commission to develop policies for these projects.

(4) Recommendation of community and state interdenominational youth projects in evangelism, social action, and other areas.

(5) Preparation of plans and procedures for the celebration of National Youth Week in 1952.

(6) Approval of participation in the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A. as the youth agency of the new international agency to be set up in November at Cleveland, Ohio.

The U. C. Y. M. General Council is made up of youth and adult representatives from its member agencies, with youth predominating in leadership and discussions. It pioneers in the development of youth programs for Protestant youth of the United States and Canada. It is administered by the International Council of Religious Education.

DETAILS OF PROPOSED U C Y M AND YOUTH FELLOWSHIP COMMISSIONS.

The five commissions for the U. C. Y. M. and denominational youth fellowships would have the following functions: worship, study and action.

The proposed commissions and their areas of responsibility were defined as follows:

(1) Commission on Christian Faith—Personal Christian commitment Bible study, prayer and worship (personal and group), Christian beliefs, Christian heritage, the meaning of church membership, cell group experience, personal growth and enrichment, personal conduct.

(2) Commission on Christian Witness—Evangelism (group and personal), stewardship (time, talents, material possessions, churchmanship (individual participation in life of the church), Christian vocation.

(3) Commission on Christian World Outreach—Home missions, foreign missions, relief and reconstruction, international relations (world order, world peace, etc.).

(4) Commission on Christian Citizenship—Service in the local church, community service projects, interracial relations, interfaith understanding, industrial relations and economic life, social problems (alcohol, gambling, juvenile delinquency, etc.), service to community institutions, local, state and national political action, civic improvements.

(5) Commission on Christian Fellowship—Recreation, leisure time, creative arts, boy-girl relations, Christian home life, interchurch relations, local church as a fellowship.

There would be also a cabinet (or council) made up of the executive officers and chairmen of the five commissions. Its functions would be general program planning and correlation, leadership training, public relations and finance.

The plan was developed as the result of an overture from the Westminster Fellowship (Presbyterian U. S. A.) National Council, which asked the U. C. Y. M. to make a study of various kinds of youth organizations and to develop a common plan which could be adopted by the U. C. Y. M. and be presented to denominational fellowships for consideration and voluntary adoption.

The commission plan was hailed as one of the major achievements of the U. C. Y. M. in its 16-year history. It was felt that common agreement on this plan would substantially further the progress of the ecumenical movement.

How Serves the Church?

Ministers, religious educators and Christian laymen have been concerned for a long while over the inadequate use made of our large and expensive church plants. The Church should practice what it preaches: the full use of stewardship of possessions. This is not done by operating a plant one day, or a half day a week. Many churches have been delinquent in their responsibility to the community and have been more concerned with what they were getting than they were with what they were giving.

The church that is truly Christian gives itself, like its Master, to the uttermost. It finds ways, multiplied ways, to serve. It exercises ingenuity in finding new patterns of helpfulness. It endeavors to become, as St. Paul suggested, "all things to all men."

A week-day nursery or kindergarten is one of the added services in a number of churches. Through this service the church may minister regularly to families beyond its own membership.

Sessions are held each morning from 8:45 to 11:45, in the nursery room of the church. Trustees of the church made renovations and additions to the facilities to bring about all modern conveniences for safety and comfort. All children are five years of age. A full enrollment was attained several weeks before the school opened.

The Word Hath Still Its Ancient Power

"There are unrepresented opportunities today in India to influence the growth of this new nation through its boys and girls, who are the leaders of tomorrow," say Rev. and Mrs. Charles Paul Heineman of Albany, New York, Congregational Christian missionaries under the American Board, who sailed from New York back to their posts in Pasumalai, India on September 15 on the S. S. Friesland.

MR. HEINEMAN

Mr. Heineman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul G. Heineman of Albany, New York, and Mrs. Heineman, the former Mary Ellen Moore, is the daughter of Mrs. Otis Moore, former secretary of the Methodist Women's Board of Foreign Missions, New York City.

Charles Heineman is head of the Pasumalai Mission Trade School, which has a dual object, namely, to train boys in trades so they can earn an honest living, and to build creative Christian character so they can become leaders in their community, church and nation.

"Whenever technology has a bearing and can be used creatively, we seek to bring it to bear on rural life, for most of India's people live in villages," explains Mr. Heineman, whose boys try out their skill as printers, carpenters, mechanics, etc., in the needy rural areas. "I am anxious to blend into one ministry the technical side of my work and the Christian gospel," he says.

Charles Heineman was educated as a mechanical engineer at Rensselaer Institute, but after actual experience as a mechanical and test engineer in New York and Connecticut states, he decided to enter the ministry and took his theological training at the Hartford Theological Seminary.

Mr. and Mrs. Heineman met on the mission field in India, and their two children, four-year-old Margaret Rose, and one-and-a-half-year-old Timothy Otis, were born in India.

All over the world today, the work carried on by missionaries under the American Board is helping to make the world a better place in which to live. Your contributions make this work possible.

MRS. HEINEMAN

The annual Home Coming service will be held at the Liberty Christian Church, Nathalie, Virginia, on Sunday, October 1. The pastor, Rev. M. W. Andes, will deliver the sermon for the morning service at eleven o'clock. The afternoon service will be devoted to a musical program under the leadership of the chairman of the program committee, Mrs. Barkley Perkins. Rev. R. T. Woodruff, the pastor of Ingram and Pleasant Grove Christian Churches, will assist with the music.

MOUNT CARMEL CHRISTIAN CHURCH HOME COMING.

On the first Sunday in October, October 1, there will be a Home Coming at the Mount Carmel Christian Church, Walters, Virginia. There will be morning and afternoon services. The morning service will consist of special music by the choir and a sermon by the pastor, Rev. Ellis Clark. At this time opportunity will be given to the congregation to make pledges to increase the parsonage fund. It is hoped that definite work can soon be started toward building a parsonage.

The guest speaker of the afternoon will be Dr. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk, Virginia. All members, former members and friends of the church are cordially invited.

Dinner will be picnic style. Bring your basket, the church will furnish the drink. Come and enjoy a day of fellowship with friends and old acquaintances.

ALBEMARLE SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS MEETS.

Mrs. Hill's Sunday School Class of the Albemarle Church, held its regular meeting at the home of Mrs. Elmer Varner on Broom Street.

The program opened with the singing of "Let Others See Jesus in You." Mrs. Darrell White had charge of the worship service of the evening, her subject being, "Why All Christian People Should Be Soul Winners." Prayer was led by Mrs. Quince Whitley, and the service closed with the singing of the hymn, "Face to Face."

A short business session followed. $50.00 was sent to Mrs. J. L. Molton, who visited the church several months ago by special invitation of this class. At that time Mrs. Moulton gave a very interesting talk. Several other matters were discussed before the meeting was adjourned.

Mrs. Varner was assisted by Mrs. Willie Talbert in serving delicious refreshments to those present.

MRS. JOE PENNINGTON.

REV. LUTHER GRICE STILL ILL.

The following comes to THE SUN from the Woman's Missionary Society of Eure Christian Church:

"For the benefit of those not knowing of the illness of our pastor, Rev. Luther B. Grice, he at present is a patient, critically ill, in Kecoughtan Veterans' Hospital, Kecoughtan, Va. 'We, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of Eure's Christian Church, wish for Mr. Grice a speedy recovery and that he will soon return to guide us in the work which he did so naturally and well.

"We also wish to extend our condolences to his loving and faithful wife, Mrs. Grice.

"As Mr. Grice's friends and faithful followers, let us all remember him with cards, letters and flowers, to make his stay at Kecoughtan more pleasant."

STEWARDSHIP INSTITUTE—WESTERN N. C. CONFERENCE.

In an "Open Letter" to the pastors and churches of the Western North Carolina Conference, the chairman of the Stewardship Committee, Rev. W. T. Madren, states: "The month of October has been designated as Stewardship Month. . . Stewardship is to be the theme of each regular service for that month. . . It is hoped that each church will, in its own way, promote stewardship among its members. . . Let us be good and faithful stewards of our Lord. Let us begin by tithing."

A well balanced Stewardship program has been prepared for the Institute which is called to meet at the Asheboro Church on Sunday, October 1, from 3:30 to 8:45 p. m.

TEMPLE TIDINGS

The fine uses of visual education are indicated in a program initiated at The Christian Temple, Norfolk. Kodachrome films of the Temple program in action were made by Mr. C. E. Reynolds, Jr.; a script was prepared, and the presentation was made at a Sunday evening service. Through the medium of films, the members were taken into parts of the church seldom visited by all, and were given a glimpse of the total church program. This presentation and the showing of "Second Chance," were part of the stewardship program for the raising of the annual budget, $22,728.

Visual education needs to be brought nearer home. Too long we have depended almost exclusively on commercially produced films. They are useful and should be utilized, but films of the home church as well as of the home town, create interest and preserve history. A bit of effort and ingenuity in this category will pay dividends. The organization of a Camera Club would be a step forward in every church.

Some ministers claim to be overworked, and a few really are, but few churches provide assistants for their ministers. The old Pastor's Aid Society was a tacit confession that the pastor needed aid, but experience indicated that he needed assistance more than once a month.

The coming of Miss Haynes to The Temple is an example of fine and progressive churchmanship. The churches should encourage young people, young women as well as young men, to give their lives to full-time Christian service, but they must also create the opportunity for these young people to serve. Every church which calls such an assistant is not only helping its pastor do a more efficient job, it is creating another full-time Christian vocation and helping to set the pattern of a modern program of Christian education. This pattern should be duplicated increasingly and extensively.

KOBE COLLEGE ANNIVERSARY

Since Miss Angie Crew went to Japan as a missionary of the Christian Church in 1923, our readers have had a keen interest in Japanese missions. Miss Angie served in Sendai and Tokyo from 1923 to 1930. Thereafter she has served under the American Board and spent much of her time teaching at Kobe College.

American Board missionaries began teaching at Kobe in 1875. During the first two decades, the enrollment reached 193, with 71 Christian students, 16 student baptisms and with the organization of a Missionary Society. The enrollment reached 980 in 1938. Now 1228 students daily attend the high school, music and college classes. There is a staff of 71 teachers, including 11 Americans. The American Board grants to the Kobe College Foundation an annual subsidy and the services of a number of missionary teachers. Hiroshi Hatanaka, who had a number of speaking engagements in The Southern Convention a few years ago, is the president. He is an alumnus of Oberlin College.

The Seventy-fifth Anniversary will be celebrated on October 12. Two historical pageants will be presented: one is the life of the founder, Miss Eliza Talcott; the other is a series of scenes from the college's history. The school has remained faithful to its founding purpose of "giving a Christian education to young women and equipping them for useful service to God and their fellowmen."

A letter from Dr. Charlotte B. DeForest, president emeritus, states that, "A lot of Korean missionaries have been evacuated to Japan on short notice. Fifty men, women and children of the Methodists from Seoul were the first we heard of, when a listing of possible vacant rooms was made for them. If we can get cots from the army, we can offer the Social Center Building (having a big kitchen) and the dormitories as far as they are not needed by the students. Forty Presbyterian missionaries arrived at Kobe on July 12. Many of the missionaries came away in the wee hours of the night with only an hour's warning and were short of clothing and other necessities. So we are donating the rest of our clothing sent in American parcels. The Japanese are rallying to their aid. Our college matron has worked her fingers off getting the dormitory in apple-pie order, and the students have been glad to help. The fact that this is a world of uncertainty and change has been deeply impressed upon us."

Greetings to our Christian comrades in Japan, and all good wishes for a happy Anniversary.

ANOTHER TEACHER GOES TO KOBE

The American Board has just made the announcement that Miss Florence Esther Freiheit of Charlotte, Michigan, has been appointed for a two-year term as a teacher in Kobe College.

"Today we need world understanding and a brotherhood of man. I hope that by my work abroad I can help in a small way toward achieving the Christian unity that is needed so much for lasting peace. Asia and its people follow Communism too easily. Through the efforts of missionaries it may grow in a Christian way toward democracy," says Miss Freiheit, who is a graduate of Michigan State College, Class of 1950.

Born in Lansing, Michigan, 21 years ago, Miss Freiheit was active in musical lines at college as well as in dramatics and church work. Swimming, volley ball and square dancing are among her favorite recreations.

She is the daughter of a World War I Army veteran.

Portrait Placed by West Memorial Class

A service, beautiful in its simplicity, was held Sunday morning, September 17, 1950, by the West Memorial Bible Class of Suffolk Christian Church. Its purpose was the dedication of a portrait of its late teacher and leader, Colonel J. E. West, who taught the Senior Philathea Class from 1913 to 1946. A short time ago that class united with the Young Women's Bible Class to form the West Memorial Bible Class.

Miss Virginia Brinkley, associate teacher of the class, conducted the service. The prayer was offered by Mrs. C. C. Rawles, also associate teacher of the class. A tribute was read by Mrs. L. E. Rawles, president of the class. The litany of dedication, prepared especially for this service, was read responsively by Miss Brinkley and the class. Rev. Duane N. Vore, pastor of the church, offered the dedicatory prayer. Miss Gladys Yates, teacher of the class, taught a brief lesson on "James, Leader in the Jerusalem Church."

The flower arrangements of mixed flowers were presented by Mrs. J. E. West and their daughter, Mrs. Henry Frazier.

A large gathering of class members and friends were present for the service. Special guests were Mrs. J. E. West, Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Frazier, Henry, Jr., West and Billy Frazier, and Mr. Caleb West of Newport News.

Suffolk Christian Church has been blessed with great leadership, and unites with the West Memorial Bible Class in this tribute to one of those leaders who served so well.

A TRIBUTE.

Given by Mrs. L. E. Rawles, in tribute to the memory of Colonel J. E. West, on the occasion of the dedication of his portrait by the West Memorial Bible Class on Sunday, September 17, 1950:

Going back in memory over the years I spent with Colonel J. E. West as my teacher, I remember so many things that stand out as a contribution to my life, then and now; little things like pieces of a puzzle fitted together and making a pattern to guide our lives.

Wanting nothing for himself but to see his beloved class grow in spiritual grace, his 33 years with us left a heritage rich with memories. His concern for his class was manifested in so many ways. The improvement of a sick member, a worthy project decided upon, the relation of the church school to the church projects, and our share in all that drew us closer together in our Father's service. His class was never left without a teacher on the Sundays that he could not be in his regular place. He

MINISTER'S ASSISTANT AT CHRISTIAN TEMPLE ASSUMES DUTIES.

Miss Josephine Haynes of Rockport, Massachusetts, arrived in Norfolk recently to become minister's assistant to Rev. W. Millard Stevens, at The Christian Temple.

MISS JOSEPHINE HAYNES.

Miss Haynes graduated the past spring from Tufts College, Medford, Massachusetts, having taken a course in religious education.

During the last two summers, Miss Haynes worked with the Massachusetts Congregational Christian Conference as director of Vacation Bible Schools.

At The Temple, Miss Haynes will assist the pastor in the administrative work of the parish. She will have major responsibility for the youth program.

One of her undertakings will be to seek to develop a week-day program in the church for the children of the community as well as the usual Sunday program in Sunday school and the Sunday night youth program.

Mr. Stevens writes: "Miss Haynes has just begun her work with us and is proving to be a very capable worker. The people have accepted her services with great enthusiasm."

always provided someone to teach the lesson.

I think the word "faithful" could be written beside his name in his ministry in his classroom.

A born teacher, a deep thinker, a student of the Bible, he gave to those who listened the deep truths of righteous living which will never be forgotten.

The lessons that I learned from Colonel West have been many and varied. There are many things that he told us that I have long ago forgotten, yet there are things which he strove to implant in our minds that have made a lasting impression upon my life. I learned from my teacher Stewardship; the joy of giving of one's self in service to the Master and returning to him who gave it, a share of our material possessions. I learned that God's blessings must be shared with those who knew not a Heavenly Father's love, for Missions was a large part of his life.

The parable of the sower fitted into his life as a teacher of this class, for his many lessons, as the seed fell on fertile ground, were received and multiplied in many ways.

Prayer life was an outstanding part of his teaching, as talking to God was a part of his life. He told us always that we should take everything to God in Prayer.

He taught us that between the covers of our Bibles lay the treasures that money could not buy. He urged that we live by its laws and take comfort in its promises.

We learned from him humility, and that the greatest Teacher of all was a humble servant to his twelve pupils; that life is made up of small services through Christian love; also, that life is a privilege to be dedicated to the best that we can do.

This is a pupil's tribute to the memory of a wonderful teacher and some of the things of value that have been left to me from his teachings.

The latest word received from Dr. Harold F. Matthews of the China Department of the American Board, is: "We have received a cable from Foochow saying that Richard and Mrs. Jackson and their son, Lewis, have received their exit permits. They are now waiting for a chance to leave by sea, rather than take the overland route back over the mountains and the railroad trip down to Canton. It is a question how soon they can actually leave Foochow, but at least we know that they have permission to go as soon as transportation can be secured."

"Beginning a New Church"

A Resume of a Summer at the New Beverly Hills Community Church Burlington, North Carolina

By ~~Rev.~~ WILLIAM T. SCOTT, JR.

It seems next to impossible to put into writing all the things that have gone to make up this summer's work at the Beverly Hills Community Church. And more, it is impossible for one person to describe all the feelings and hard work that have been put into the "project" by so many people. Indeed, this is the story of many people, who, endowed with the compulsion to help establish a church, have answered this call of God.

It is the story of Mr. D. R. Fonville, a Burlington business man and Christian laymen of the First Christian Church, who for eight years had dreamed of a church in the Beverly Hills section—who gave the land for the church—and who has given his untiring efforts to every phase of the work.

It is the story of the First Christian Church of Burlington and especially of its minister, Henry E. Robinson. The First Church has done much: Its men have put on overalls to help with the construction of the "hut." They have grubbed roots and cleared land for the sheer joy of seeing the job done.

It is the story of Guy H. Veazey, minister and builder, who worked and sweated constructing the "hut," even though he was carrying on a full time church program at Long's Chapel.

It is the story of a group of Elon College students who, though lacking in the know-how of construction, had a willing spirit (and like most college students, liked to have some "hamburger money").

It is the story of four girls who love children and who gave their time and energy at the Daily Vacation Bible School.

It is the story of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, of Dr. Wm. T. Scott, the superintendent of the Convention, and Dr. F. C. Lester, the chairman of the Mission Board. Without the financial support of the Mission Board and without the far sighted emphasis of the Convention, plans in Beverly Hills could never have been brought to fruition.

And it is the story of everyone who has ever dreamed a dream and has seen the partial fulfillment of that dream. So this is your story too.

It all began in the early days of June when the committee of the First Church, Rev. H. E. Robinson, D. R. Fonville, Garland H. Huffman and Jerry D. Strader met with Dr. Scott, representing the Mission Board, and me. I had been hired as Summer Director of the project. Of my title I was rather dubious; of the meaning of the title I knew nothing. But luckily, the others present knew what had to be done—"We need a bulldozer to clear that land," said one. "I'll get one," said another—and that was that. Unfortunately the bulldozer and the rains came at precisely the same time. Rain, rain, rain! It seemed for a time that the monsoons of India had found a new home—in Burlington.

In the meantime it was my job and my joy to visit the homes of the community. The first few calls were torture to me. I know now how a Fuller Brush salesman must feel as he walks to the door of his first prospect. I envisioned all sorts of ogres, all armed with sub-machine guns and all ready to blow my heart out. So far as I know, however, there's not one ogre in the Beverly Hills Community. In fact, everyone received me as a friend. Everyone that I called on seemed quite interested in the project. "We were afraid that the bulldozer was clearing land for another filling station," said one woman. How much is it going to cost for me to send my boy to the playground?" said another.

And then it was July and Rev. Guy H. Veazey had been asked by the Mission Board to build the "shed." So it went—First there was the digging of the footing. It seemed like routine operation to Mr. Veazey but to the "bourgeois intelligentsia" (green college students) the whole job seemed rather futile—to take out that perfectly good hard clay merely to replace it later with concrete! Still it rained!

Between showers the footing was poured and the slag blocks were laid. Then we were ready to build!

Until this summer I had lived under the delusion that a "sill" was simply the portion of a window to which the screen was hooked. Now I know that "sill" may mean a number of things. In this case it meant solid wood 30 feet long, 1½ feet wide and ¾ foot thick—so heavy that I often wished I had answered that Charles Atlas ad which appears so often in the comic books. But through a great deal of brute force and the slight help by a derrick we were able to get the sills and trusses in place.

From then on it was clear sailing—that is except for the fact that for some time all the sawing had to be done by hand since electricity had not found its way to our property at this time. This made the process of putting on the sheeting (a term used by carpenters to mean almost anything but usually the boards which compose the roof). Men from the Burlington Church helped us put these two inch thick boards in place with 20 penny nails (why nails are referred to as "penny nails" I have not yet discovered. It has nothing to do with the price per nail, however.) The sheeting in place, we put the roofing on. This was a relatively simple task. So simple in fact that the roof leaked in a dozen spots when the job was finished!

Electricity and plumbing were put in and the Beverly Hills Community Church was open for business. The Daily Vacation Church School began with five teachers and seven pupils. Although the teacher-student ratio was in perfect harmony with the program of quality education recommended by the International Council of Religious Education, we as teachers felt that a few more pupils would help the situation materially. And so, utilizing the well attested psychological principle that a hungry child will respond to the stimulus of a popsicle, we procured same. And the Bible School grew until it was necessary to purchase fifty popsicles at the end of two weeks. Of course there was a good deal more to the Church School than popsicles. At the beginning of the school, we had no idea how many pupils would come, nor in what age brackets they would fall. So it was decided that Miss Carolyn Simpson would teach those that were too young; Miss Frankie Strader would teach those that were old enough, and Mr. William Tolley would teach those that were too old. (This complicated pattern of grading was arrived at only after many prolonged hours in staff meetings.) Mr. Parker (who by the way had been working on the project from the beginning) volunteered his services as recreational director and I served as custodian of paints, crayons and saws.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

ELON SERVES THE CHURCH.

Elon College is an institution of the Church. It was created, founded, built and is being supported for a particular purpose. The purpose of Elon College is to conduct a complete program of Christian Higher Education in the interest of good scholarship, statesmanship and Christian ideals. Its main purpose is to emphasize the importance of religion and Christian teaching in the curriculum of higher education. It proposes not only to include religious and Christian content in its curriculum, but it proposes that the entire program of education on its campus shall have the impetus of the Christian spirit through Christian men and women serving on its faculty. There has always been a careful screening of prospective instructors from the standpoint of the Church and Christian activity. Elon College realizes that buildings, grounds and a curriculum, though requisites and prerequisites in the field of religion, do not necessarily make a Christian institution—that in the final analysis, the men and women who do the teaching quite largely and definitely determine the character of the college. If they are Christian, the college will certainly be Christian.

For more than sixty years, Elon College has been working away at the business of discovering talents and training young people for Christian leadership. Her efforts have borne fruit not only in the Christian Church, but in other denominations as well. Her leaders are not confined to church and church organizations, but you will find them in all walks of life, particularly in the classroom. Wherever you find these Elon College men and women, you will find the stamp of the college on them. Their influence savors of Christian teachings and Christian ideals. Elon College has endeavored to be faithful to its trust. It has served the Church in every conceivable way, not only in the matter of providing leadership, but in the matter of developing the Church in the field of stewardship.

Under the guidance of the leadership trained at the college, the Church has become more generous and more considerate of the economic needs of the Church if the Kingdom of God is to come in its fullest.

To induce young men and young women who have been called to the ministry to prepare themselves for their high calling, Elon College has not, in all of its history, charged ministerial students tuition. In recent years, ministerial students living off the campus have been asked to pay half tuition. The free tuition to ministerial students and full-time Christian workers granted by the college annually, amounts to nearly $4,000.00. This, of course, is not a great amount in a budget of a half-million dollars, but at any rate, it counts.

The college also contributes to the support of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Convention office. We count it a privilege to render this service in response to the services rendered the college by the Church. The Church has been generous to the college—perhaps not as generous as it would like to be—and the college appreciates this support greatly.

WHAT WILL BE YOUR RESPONSE?

On July 20, 1943, at 3:40 p. m., Reverend T. B. Dawson, father of Mrs. A. L. Hook, Elon College, North Carolina, came into my office with a note to the effect that he had a $2.50 gold piece which he desired to be placed to his memory and on interest or investment so that it would increase in value. Mr. Dawson stated that he wanted this to be placed as a part of the endowment of Elon College. Of course, years and years will be required for this small contribution to be of real assistance to the college. The gift is appreciated, not because of the amount involved, but because of the spirit and the desire back of it. The banks do not wish to handle this small amount, but it is being used in a definite way to increase in value.

Mr. Dawson lives at Elon College with his son-in-law, Professor A. L. Hook. He is now 94 years of age, and Mrs. Dawson is 81 years old. Mr. Dawson is quite feeble. Mrs. Dawson is able to be up and about. It is good of them to think of the college and offer this assistance certainly in good will and in petitions. Mr. Dawson's gift may give others an idea.

We all love life. We want to live. In spite of our desires, we know that we can not continue to live always. Sooner or later, in God's good time, we shall be called hence. As we live, we all want to live worthily. We want to bear a good name, assert a good influence and do all the good we can while we live. It is not necessary for our good works to stop when we die. John, in recording his revelation, declared, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, ye, henceforth sayeth the spirit, they shall rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

What an individual accumulates while he lives is definitely a part of him. He has exchanged mental ability, physical energies and spiritual ambitions for substance that we call money. If an individual will take a part of the earnings of life and turn it over to an institution such as Elon College is, with the instruction that it is to be invested safely and permanently, that the principle is never to be spent or endangered, that the income from such investments may be used for the benefit of the college to help pay faculty salaries, current expenses of the college or scholarships for worthy students, he in that way shall continue to live forcefully and effectively. He will write his name and his family's name on the minds of the present generation that will transmit it to the succeeding generation and so on so long as time shall last.

Life is too valuable and too precious to exist and to be felt on this earth for such a limited time as the average span of life. We need to leave our footprints on the sands of time in such a way that the winds of the coming years will neither mar nor waste them. This is our privilege and unto God may we take advantage of it.

I would like to express in this public way my appreciation of Mr. Dawson's thoughtfulness and generosity.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

As we move out of the summer months into the fall of the year, it is to be expected that contributions on apportionments for the college will increase. Contributions are increasing, but very slightly. Our giving for this part of our budget must increase considerably if we are to realize the full amount apportioned to the churches for the support of the college.

Not since 1935 have the current

At Home and Abroad

THE CHINA EXODUS.

Malcolm White reports from Foochow on the first anniversary of "Liberation."

All of us American Board Missionaries of the Fukien Mission expect to leave China within the next few months. This is quite startling news to us as well as to you. We had hoped we could remain longer, but we believe we should leave China now.

As the People's Liberation Armies swept through China, Christian missionaries in one area after another had to decide whether to leave or to stay. The communists themselves said there was no reason to leave, promising protection to missionaries and other foreigners. A few missionaries left, feeling that they could not carry on Christian work under the new government. Most of us, however, elected to stay and attempt to continue to bear witness in communist China. Believing that Christ is the Savior of the world, we felt that lasting peace could be achieved only under his banner. We hoped that China might be the place where the communist powers and the western powers could come to terms.

Recent changes have convinced us that foreign missionaries are becoming less and less effective in promoting the gospel of peace in China. People here are being taught to fear, suspect and hate the westerners. Although, officially, the enemy of China is "imperialism," and especially "American imperialism," it is very difficult for the average person to draw a distinction between a westerner who is an "imperialist" and one who is not.

Therefore, after careful and prayerful consultation with our Chinese fellow-workers, we decided on a gradual evacuation. We believed that would relieve our Chinese churches of the suspicion of being "foreign" churches. After we leave, we hope our Chinese leaders will find it easier to deal with the government, and will be able to prove that Christianity is not a foreign religion or a seedbed of imperialistic thinking.

The decision to leave was made before the outbreak of war in Korea and the arrival of the American Seventh Fleet in the waters between Taiwan and the China mainland. These events have led to an intensification of the "anti-American imperialism" propaganda. The walls of buildings all along the streets are covered with cartoons and posters denouncing American imperialism. And in special spots are larger posters bearing the same theme. At South Gate, for example, is a picture of a giant Chinese communist soldier, stepping from China to Taiwan and kicking Chiang Kai-shek and Uncle Sam off the island. In the waters between is an American warship being sunk by the victorious communists. Recently the city staged an anti-American imperialism parade which began late in the afternoon and ended at two o'clock the following morning. In such an atmosphere the effectiveness of the missionary is destroyed.

What do our Chinese fellow-Christians think about our leaving? Their first reaction was one of bewilderment. For more than a hundred years our American Board missionaries have been in Fukien, providing inspiration, leadership and necessary financial assistance. Lately we have been working rapidly toward an independent Chinese church, but wars and other calamities have retarded this movement. Last year the Synod adopted a new constitution, again placing more authority in the hands of our Chinese leaders. But our Chinese church is still weak in experienced leaders. And financially, everyone is suffering. One friend has guessed that twenty percent of the people in Foochow had just one meal a day, and half the people had only two meals a day. Many people do not taste meat for months at a time. In the face of these conditions, the Chinese feel utterly unable to assume the complete support of their church at the present time.

One of our outstanding Chinese leaders said that the greatest loss the Chinese will suffer when the missionaries leave is a weakening of ties with the ecumenical church. We missionaries are a living witness to the Chinese that the Church of Jesus Christ is world-wide. Our presence constantly reminds them that they are not weak but strong, that their small churches are a part of the Church of Jesus Christ which has marched triumphantly through the centuries. That witness of the universal and eternal church will be weaker when we leave.

In the faces of other Christian leaders I can see shining the great love they have for special missionaries who have nurtured them in the faith. As the missionaries depart, they will see their best friends go, to return—who knows when? It is a bitter personal loss. And yet, perhaps our Chinese friends have been leaning on us too much and need a spiritual weaning. But we part with not a few tears.

The departure of the missionaries will not mean the end of our churches in China. The government has repeatedly reaffirmed its policy of freedom of religious worship. By experience the communists know that the "blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church," so government policy does not encourage martyrdom. To be sure, our formerly "Christian" schools are subject to strict control; our hospitals and other church-sponsored institutions must adapt themselves to the new order. But the government safeguards the right of Christians to worship God. The government often borrows church buildings for special meetings, but is always careful not to interfere with a regularly planned church activity. Church services, Sunday school, vacation church schools, prayer meetings, health lectures—any other regularly planned service of the church is given priority over political meetings. We know that the government will expect the cooperation of the churches in promoting government policy. Nevertheless, the Chinese Christians rejoice in the measure of freedom given them, and use it to glorify God and proclaim the gospel. When the missionary leaves, suspicions may be removed so that the freedom of the churches may be increased. Our mood is to thank God for the blessings we have, and not to complain about what we have not.

Our greatest hope is in the consecrated Christians we are leaving behind. Government officials refer with respect to the million Protestant Christians in China. Among that number, I have come to know personally a few who really glorify the name of Christ by their faith and lives. They will weather the storm, they will overcome whatever difficulties arise. But they need our prayers, and they need our constant assurance that we are all one in Christ. It is a

THE ECUMENICAL REGISTER.

Note: Since opportunity to join the Ecumenical Register will be given at the State Conference in October, women are especially urged to read this article.

The word Ecumenical comes from the Greek word meaning "Household." Its Christian meaning is "the household of faith throughout the inhabited earth," or "the whole household of God, all nations, all branches of the Church."

Christian believers through the years, in all parts of the earth, have felt the need of unity with kindred spirits. Step by step, and after years of planning, at Amsterdam in 1948, the World Council of Churches became a reality, with 150 member churches, Protestant, Evangelical and Orthodox. They stressed unity, not uniformity.

Today's world is perplexed, bewildered and divided.

Hoping that this would be at least one step toward a Christian unity, at the National Board Meeting of the United Council of Church Women, in Los Angeles, in October, 1949, the Ecumenical Register was launched. The goal is "One Million Christian Women giving $1 each as a token of thanksgiving for their Christian privileges and as a symbol of their interest and concern in the Ecumenical Church. Their slogan is "To stand up and be counted," and they say, "Count me, and count on me."

There are a few questions which perhaps should be answered in connection with the Register.

1. How Register?

Registration envelopes and information may be obtained from the United Council of Church Women. I will be glad to send anyone an envelope to register. Fill in your name on the envelope flap, take the prayer card off, sign it and read it often. Send the envelope with your $1.00 to the woman in your society who is acting as registrar or to me. Present an envelope to a friend who might be interested.

2. Where will the money go?

I quote Mrs. B. W. Hamilton, the chairman of the Registration Committee, in April, 1950, Church Woman, "No group has been authorized to spend the money that is raised. When the names of the women (The National Scroll of Christian Women who make up the Ecumenical Register) are brought to the Biennial Assembly in Cincinnati, November 13 to 16, that great representative group of women will have the tremendous obligation of recommending how the money is to be used. They will not want to take that responsibility without your help. So won't you all be sending your ideas, your recommendations, to us, here at the United Council office (with your registration if you like), so that the Assembly may make wise and far-reaching decisions under the guidance of God."

3. Why should I register?

First—It is always a privilege to stand up and be counted as a Christian.

Second—It is one concrete way in which I may express my thanksgiving and praise for the growing spirit of Christian unity.

Third—I may help widen the scope and influence of Woman's work in the Church.

Fourth—That I may feel the joy and strength that comes from the share of 1,000,000 women in the Ecumenical Movement.

Fifth—That I may feel like a frail little lady living in an Old Ladies' Home, who, when she heard of the Register, eagerly came to the front and said, "I want to sign. I want to be one of the First Million Church Women. I've felt so helpless. I read the newspapers, and the world seems to be in such a terrible condition of misunderstanding and greed and it has grieved me that I could do nothing about it. Now you've shown me that I can. A million earnest Christian women can be used of God. I can have my little share in all that we can do together—and God will use us to his glory."

Sixth—The forces of evil are well organized. Says Mrs. Harry Brown, in June, July Church Women, "The Communists are organizing a campaign to enlist 500,000,000 Asian women to communize Asia. U. S. officials say this is the most ambitious effort to recruit women for a political cause in all world history. One million Protestant Church Women in America, pledging allegiance to Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord, endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, will present a mighty fortress against the fiery darts of the wicked one."

Seventh—I dare not fail myself, my God, nor the world, to do anything in my power to help save that world by uniting with fellow Christians in presenting Christ at a time when he is so much needed.

It will not be long until November 1, when the totals are compiled.

Surely the women of the Southern Convention can be counted on as always to "stand up and be counted." Won't you be one of the First Million?

Chairman, Interdenominational Cooperation.

READERS, PLEASE NOTE:

All during the summer months, hardly any news items came in to the editor for publication on this page. Now, since Fall Conference is so close at hand, everybody decides to send in an article. Consequently, some days I receive as many as six at one time. That means that some articles will have to lie on my desk for a month or more before they are printed, because this is the busy season for news. Besides articles from societies, we also have to publish information about Thank Offerings, World Community Day, Conference, and so forth. It would be well to send articles at different times during the year, and it would be more interesting to describe some special event which took place, instead of listing everything that has been done—things which we all do.

NEWS OF WOMEN'S GROUPS

LITTLE CREEK (NORFOLK).

The most outstanding program for the year in the Little Creek Woman's Missionary Society was our vesper service at our August meeting. This meeting was held on the lawn of Mrs. Alma Daugherty, with her lovely flower garden vividly colored as our background and the sun sinking in the west. We used as our theme, "The Day is Done." Appropriate songs such as "An Evening Prayer," "Day is Dying in the West," "Now the Day is Over," were sung. A sharing of sunset experiences, using Bible verses and poems in these experiences, made us feel a quiet peace

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Jesus was very tired. He had had a very busy day. He began to think about his friends. "I will go to see my friends, Mary and Martha," he said. He thought about the quiet and peace of their home and their pleasant garden. He remembered that he felt happy after being with them.

And so he went, going quietly to their home and knocked gently at their door. Mary and Martha answered his "Tap, tap." "Come in, Friend Jesus," they said. Mary invited him to go in the garden where it was cool. They went to sit under the shade of a fig tree.

Martha told Jesus they had thought of him and wished he would come. Jesus replied:

"I'm glad to be resting in your garden. I'm glad to be in the shade. I have walked a lot under the hot sun."

Mary jumped up and started toward the well. "You must be thirsty as well as hungry. I'll bring you a drink."

Martha hurried to get the food. She gathered some figs and went for the dates.

"I will soon have supper for us," she told them and went into the house. Mary sat down by Jesus to talk with him and to ask what he had been doing since his last visit.

While Martha prepared the meal Jesus told Mary of the children and people he had seen during the week. Martha was busy in the kitchen, preparing a meal for her friend Jesus and that was what she liked best to do. Mary liked to listen and she did that very well. They had a brother whose name was Lazarus. He was a friend to Jesus too. Jesus liked to visit his friends, and they liked to have him visit.—From Luke 10.

PERSONALLY INDEPENDENT.

"Mother, today can I play on Ted's horizontal bars?"

"You need may in that sentence, not can, Bob, and those bars are horizontal bars," replied the mother.

"All right; may I? And does Peggy have to tag along?" Bob did not notice Peggy's crestfallen face, hidden as it was behind a profusion of curls.

"Bob! What a question! You are fortunate to have a little sister. Of course, Peggy must play with you. Why not?"

"Well, Mom, none of the boys have to ride sisters on the back of their trikes, and Peggy can't play on the bars; she has curls; and pants—pants with lace."

"Oh!" Mrs. Baker looked thoughtfully at Peggy's clouded face. "As a matter of fact, Bob, Peggy can't play with you at all this morning. She is going to town with me," replied his mother.

"Oh, Mom, let me go, too" pleaded Bob—a trip to town being more to be desired than playing on the horizontal bars.

Mrs. Baker was firm. "Not today, Bob; Peggy and I have business to take care of."

So they had. It led them to a store where Mrs. Baker bought Peggy two pairs of sensible, boyish looking overalls; and it led them to a friend's house—a friend who was about to cross the ocean with her family to live with her husband's people.

"What are you going to do with the new tricycle you bought Ricky, Helen?—take it along?"

"No, Ruth, I want to sell it—maybe to you," she added hopefully. "It is almost new but the secondhand man does not offer me much. I'd be glad to let you have it for what he offered me."

As Peggy's birthday came in snowy weather, a tricycle had never seemed a suitable gift, and so Peggy had been dependent on Bob's generosity for her sidewalk rides.

"Oh, please, Mummy, may I have it?" pleaded Peggy, her eyes shining at the prospect.

"I didn't know you longed so much for a tricycle, dear," said her mother.

"I didn't know how much I wanted one until I thought that you might get this for me," answered Peggy.

"Mummy, could you buy it for my birthday present? That would be wonderful!"

"If I do buy it, and if I let you ride it now—before your birthday—are you sure you will not expect another gift next winter, when your birthday comes?"

Very happily and sincerely Peggy promised.

So the tricycle was bought and arrangements made for its immediate delivery.

On arriving home, Mrs. Baker combed out Peggy's curls, sighing sadly as she arranged them into two braids tied snugly to her head by narrow plaid ribbons.

"Oh, Mummy, no more curls?" cried the delighted child.

"Not for weekdays, dear—perhaps on Sundays." Peggy's face fell. "Nor for Sundays either, if you prefer braids on Sunday. Already I'm beginning to like the appearance of my little all-tailored daughter."

"Oh, Mummy, I just love to be like this." Peggy surveyed herself in the mirror with intense satisfaction.

When the tricycle was delivered Peggy donned the overalls and went into action. Patiently her mother helped her to understand each manipulation, and by the time Bob arrived home from school Peggy was mistress of the machine, even achieving considerable speed.

"This is entirely your own tricycle, Peggy—yours entirely," explained Mrs. Baker. "You may let Bob ride on it sometimes, but only when he asks politely."

From behind the curtains, Mrs. Baker watched Bob's reactions as carefully and admiringly he examined the tricycle. Then he mounted it to ride away, but Peggy stopped him. With a diminutive air of authority, she seemed to be emphasizing her ownership of the "trike," which Bob respectfully accepted as her right.

"Mother," he said later, "tomorrow may Peggy come with me to try bars?"

His mother nodded assent.

"Will you come, Peggy? Say but your hairdo and overalls are terrific!"

The little sister was, after all, of womankind. "Maybe, Bob, after I'm tired of riding my trike," she promised.

Peggy was no longer a hanger-on. She had slipped into her place in the sun; henceforth she was a personality in her own right.

The saying that knowledge is power is not quite true. Used knowledge is power, and more than power. It is money, and service, and better living for our fellowmen, and a hundred other good things. But mere knowledge, left unused, has not power in it.—Edward E. Free.

FAMINE IN SOUTH INDIA.

The vivid sentences written by Mrs. Emmons E. White of Aruppukottai, South India, in the August "Letter of the Month," truly represent the conditions which prevail in considerable sections of the area where our Madura Mission works. Mrs. White wrote as follows:

"I am used to seeing the emaciated bodies of these poor, exploited people even in good times, but I was appalled by what I saw in the past two days. The people look even worse than the pictures in the newspapers. Nearly 100 men, women and children sat before us in a group, their bodies sagging, their eyes listless. Only one person in the group had any life in his eyes. This was in Mel Ramnathi, Muthukulathur Taluq. The young men acted as if life were about over. Their collar bones protruded, their ribs looked like the hoops on a barrel. They looked too tired to do anything. Even the children couldn't smile. They told me that they get one fourth measure of rice per week for a family of four. There is a little ragi sometimes available in the Black Market, sometimes not. They don't have the strength to earn money to buy it. Anyway there is no work, because there is no rain. They know no other work except field work. Sometimes there are a few dried beans obtainable at exorbitant prices. They can get no vegetables. There is not even the wild spinach or keeria in the fields burned dry and bare. They cannot get even the oil cake, or tamarind seeds that are being eaten in some places. They cannot eat statistics. . . .

"We must face fairly and squarely the fact that informal rationing has broken down. I who have staunchly preached depriving ourselves and changing diet habits rather than buying in the black market, and have practised what I preach, have to face the fact there are no longer substitutes to use in place of grains. And even black market grains are unavailable in many places. . . . I do beg of you to keep up your good work, and to get a note of even greater urgency into your pleas, for it is almost too late. It is already too late for many."

Our Service Committee is spending nearly $5,000 in shipping food to India to help meet these needs.

It is now agreed that the best and quickest way to help is to avail ourselves of the CARE packages which are stocked in New Delhi. They can be delivered in approximately four weeks from the date the order is given in America. The content of these packages is good to meet Indian needs.

The "India Food Package" priced at $10.00, contains 33½ pounds of food, as follows: 10 lbs. rice, 5 lbs. sugar, 5 lbs. flour, ½ lb. hard candy, 4 lbs. dried peas, 4 lbs. dried lentils, 3 lbs. milk powder, 2 lbs. laundry soap.

Those who desire to help save a life may send $10.00 to CARE, 20 Broad Street, New York City 5, New York, or their local CARE office.

The package should be designated to Rt. Rev. J. E. L. Newbigin, Bishop, Madura, South India.

It is tragically true that "Soon May Be Too Late."

At the close of the school all concerned felt that the venture had been a great success. (Such a success that meetings of the staff continued even after the closing of the school.)

The summer's work was brought to a fitting close with a worship service and community meeting on September 10. Approximately 100 people were in attendance at this service held at the "hut." Special music was provided by the choir of the First Christian Church, Burlington. Dr. L. E. Smith delivered the sermon and superintendent Scott outlined plans for the future development of the work. Several of the Congregational Christian Churches in the vicinity of Burlington were represented, and a goodly number of people from the Beverly Hills Community came.

There had been a number of laughs during the summer, and there had been a few tears shed also, for all was not as this summary would seem to indicate. There is something quite thrilling about fifty young voices singing "Jesus Loves Me." And there is something quite prophetic of things to come with the remark of one little boy: "I wanna paint!" For it is only by the love of Christ that

PERSONAL COMMITMENT TO JESUS CHRIST.

LESSON II—OCTOBER 8, 1950

MEMORY SELECTION: To me to live is Christ.—Philippians 1:21.

LESSON: Matthew 16:24, 25; Mark 1:16-20; Philippians 1:19-26.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I John 5:1-12.

Personal commitment to Jesus, the Christ, is the heart of the Christian religion. It is the beginning of the Christian life, and it is the condition of the continuing Christian life. When a person, young or old, comes to the place where he is willing to commit himself personally to Christ, he will experience the "new birth," or be "born again." It involves, of course, a great adventure of faith. One hardly commits his life into the hands of another unless he has faith in the other person. Personal commitment to Christ is based on a simple yet strong faith in Christ. And it is only as one keeps his life committed personally to Christ that he can really grow in grace and in a knowledge of Christ. There are many things that can be done after one has committed himself to Christ; there is little that can be done until one has made his commitment. Determination and decision come first.

The Cost of Discipleship.

Jesus played fair with his followers. He frankly, and even bluntly, told them that if they would become his disciples, they must deny themselves and take up their cross and follow him. One must quit insisting upon having his own way. One must say, "Not my will or way, but the will and way of Christ and God." Denying one's self does not mean simply denying one's self of something, but actually yielding one's self to Christ, making Christ the center of one's life. And taking up one's cross does not mean getting along with handicaps and getting along with folks who are hard to get along with, or things of the kind, but living by the will of God, no matter what the cost may be. And it is a daily matter. Most of life is commonplace and routine, a matter of dull and drab, of pale and gray days. Hence a person needs the grace of God to stand up under this routine of life.

One suspects that we have made

Christianity too easy. Perhaps we have not emphasized enough the sterner aspects of following Jesus. We have been afraid that it would keep folks out of the church. But Jesus always called attention to the demands which discipleship would make upon his disciples.

In connection with the demands of discipleship, Jesus spoke one of the many paradoxes that characterized his messages. He said that if a man tried to save his life, he would lose it, but that if he lost his life for his and the gospel's sake he would save it. It is a universal and timeless principle. Again and again it has been demonstrated that if men live for themselves they lose life in the best sense of life. But if they lose themselves in service to others or live for great causes, they find a richer, fuller, more abundant life. All too many people today are unhappy and are missing life, because they are concerned too much with self.

The Call to Discipleship.

"Come ye after me and I will make you to become fishers of men"—thus does Mark record the words of Jesus when he called Simon and Andrew to become his disciples. There is much in these few words. There is, for instance, Christ's appeal to real, he-men. Peter and Andrew were rugged, out-of-door men, men who stood up on their own legs and made their own way in life. But there was about this Young Teacher something that laid hold on them and called forth their glad response. Through the centuries, Christ has commanded by the sheer beauty of his character and the dignity of his moral and spiritual authority the loving allegiance of some of the biggest and brightest men and women on the face of the earth. Let no man think that it is sissy to follow Christ. To be a real follower of Christ is about the biggest and hardest thing that a man can do. That marks manhood at its best.

"Come ye after me." It was a call to personal discipleship. It was to begin in personal commitment. There was no theological test involved, no examination on theology, no acceptance of a creed, no emphasis or insistence upon any form or ceremony. It was simply, "Follow me," "Come after me," "Commit yourselves to me." Thus it was then, is now, and should evermore be.

"And I will make you to become." The thing began with personal commitment. But it did not end there. They were. But they were to become. It was a matter of learning, growing, developing, maturing. Many Christians have been born into the Kingdom of Heaven, they have been "born again, or anew, or from above," but they are still babies in Christ. There has been little growth or development in their Christian lives. The Christian life begins with a fact—the new birth. But it is also a process—we are to become, we are to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Fishers . . . fishers of men." "I will make you to become fishers of men," said Jesus. It is a striking way of saying that Jesus gives new dignity to everything he touches. Even life's everyday work and common experiences take on new meaning and new dignity when he touches them and is brought into them. Family relationships, work, play, career, everything has new dignity if Christ is Lord of our lives.

It is all very personal. "Come ye after me." As has been stated above, the heart of Christianity is a personal relationship between God in Christ and the individual believer.

The Rewards of Discipleship.

Somewhat strangely, it may seem, the Lesson Committee has embodied in today's lesson a few verses from Paul's letter to the Philippians. And these verses deal with the aged apostle's desire to have done with this world. He was old, he was tired, he was a prisoner, he was ready to go. In fact, he wanted to go. "Having a desire to depart and be with Christ; for it is very far better." Who could blame the old fellow for wanting to get away from it all? But even at the end of a long and faithful and fruitful discipleship, his desires were brought into harmony with the will of God in Christ. The fact that he was still alive was evidence of the fact that God still had something for him to do. "Yet to abide in the flesh is more needful for your sake. And having this confidence, I know that I shall abide." Not his will, but the will of the heavenly Father was the touchstone of his life. Nowhere does the old fellow appear to better advantage than here.

And as he came to the end of the long, hard road, his heart was filled with joy and peace. If he had had a thousand lives to live, he would have done the same thing a thousand times. He was not rich in this world's goods, but he had treasures immeasurable and immortal. If he had lived for wealth and pleasure and power and self-gratification, death might have loomed before with terror. But for him to live was Christ. Death could not affect that relationship at all. Death would only make it more complete. In fact he did not speak about death, he simply said that when he did what folks would say was dying, he would simply be "departing to be with Christ." Like the Master, he thought of death as a going to be with the Father.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

that comes when we commune with God.

Family week is a busy week for our society. Besides our May Fellowship Day, we have Family Night. All families of the church were invited and enjoyed a wiener roast furnished by our ladies. Games and contests were enjoyed by all.

On Mother's Day, at our morning worship service, our ladies sponsored a "family contest." Families were invited to sit in groups, and the largest family received a beautiful picture, "Gethsemane."

We especially enjoyed our mission study, Which Way, Japan, as we met with the Bay View society to hear Miss Pattie Lee Coghill review the book. At our February meeting we had the film, "Kyoto Story," which helped us to understand our mission work in Japan better.

Mrs. Moulton spoke to our church people, and we were happy to give her a donation for the work in India.

Our church is being enlarged, with a new Church School Plant, and our society is busy making money to help with this much-needed addition.

MRS. M. E. TAYLOR,

HENDERSON.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Henderson Church has completed one of its most successful years under the leadership of Mrs. T. A. Park, having added 11 members to make our total number 63.

At the beginning of the year each member was presented with a year book, including roll, (three circles), hostesses, and programs and aims for the year. For our worship programs in each circle, we used the Bible study book. The foreign mission study book, Which Way, Japan, was presented to the circles by Mrs. Thurston Clark. One of the highlights of our mission study was the opportunity of our society, along with several others, to hear Mrs. Carl Wallace teach Missions at the Grass Roots at Liberty Church, and to enjoy a social hour later.

Our society completed all Friendly Service projects by sending a box to the migrants in Florida, materials overseas in observance of World Community Day, and an Easter box to the Orphanage at Elon. In addition to these, we sent Christmas presents to Timothy Chang and collections from our Birthday Bank in the Sunday school, sponsored by the Missionary Society, were sent to the Jacks- sons in China.

Our year's work was concluded with a "hit and miss" supper, to which all circles and honorary members were invited.

May each member be inspired to greater effort in the service of the Kingdom this year.

MRS. VICTOR LANGSTON.

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Look at our list of contributions this week. Isn't it wonderful? I thank you everyone, and I continue to pray that God will give you generous hearts toward a work that is worthy of every gift. We live in the spotlight. People just do not like to see our swings broken down on the campus, and our lawns bare of anything for little folks to play on while others are at school. They simply do not like to see these children sleeping in ugly rooms, and looking bed-rabbed in their clothes. They will give more for a decently kept home, and a rightly trained child.

Our record over the splendid years shows that. We are far from the highest priced Orphanage, but we covet to be, and we believe we are, one of the best orphanages in this section of the country. At any rate we have a team of workers here with that worthy goal.

A patron of the local Parent-Teacher Association took me aside the other day and said, "There is something I think you ought to know." I was afraid there was. "Time was when the children at the Orphanage would go into my watermelon patch, take my melons out under cover and burst them open before they were grown. They do not do that now. I greatly appreciate that, and I wanted you to know it." I just quietly said, "Thank you." "Well," he said, "It's a mighty big compliment." "Yes," I said, "to the boys and their helpers."

To be sure we have our problems. Apple trees grow close by. Ten boys are campused for a month right now for getting the other fellow's apples and pears. They understand that we want to be right with our neighbors—and incidentally our neighbors like us and do many kind and gracious things to help us. Some of them were once boys and girls themselves. Dying out is the thought that if it is done badly, an orphanage boy did it. Plenty of them do nobly and on the best of honor. God grant that they may have heaven's help today and always. Take it from me, we have fairly good boys and girls here—not perfect, but perhaps near enough, if you know what I mean.

Our Board of Trustees met here on September 20. They saw good signs and gave all the workers most kindly assurance of the fact that reports and the general appearance everywhere met their approval. We bowed in prayer together that we be a worthy enterprise of our church and for our needy children, and that God would vouchsafe to us his guidance and his blessing.

Our goal for the year is set at $55,000.00, which is only $9,000.00 more than we raised last year. We want all our churches and Sunday schools to help us as much as they can. And we want many individuals to remember this work in their benevolent giving. There are people in your community who, if they knew the story of our Orphanage, would be glad to make a donation. Other orphanages are raising a good bit more per child than we are. I wish you could see the monthly reports and financial statements from the other orphanages of this section of the country. Men and women of means really do big things for them. Our reports will show how we, too, are doing well.

This Orphanage has a glorious record, which has been made by both sacrificial gifts from many and large gifts from some who saw the worth-whileness of the charitable work being done.

GLASSCOCK.

A funeral service for Mr. Joe Glasscock, of Lacrosse, Virginia, was conducted at Union Congregational Christian Church, Virginia, on Monday afternoon, September 11. The service was conducted by the Rev. M. W. Andes and Dr. C. E. Newman.

Mr. Glasscock, age 21 died as a result of an automobile accident.

Besides his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Glasscock of Lacrosse, he is survived by one sister and six brothers.

May the love of God sustain the family at this and every time of need.

GRIFFIN.

Charles C. Griffin, 66, son of the late W. L. and Aries Anne Griffin, died March 13, 1950 at his home on Route 4, Reidsville, N. C. He endured a lengthy illness.

He is survived by his wife; two sons, Iredell and Milton Griffin; five daughters, Mrs. Aleta Ellison, Mrs. Marian Law, Mrs. Anne Leebrick, Misses Ethalinda and Virginia Lee Griffin; by three grandchildren, and two brothers, R. R. and W. L. Griffin.

In May 1915 he was married to Miss Ethalinda Jones. At a very young age he joined New Lebanon Christian Church and was its youngest member for several years. For many years he was a Sunday School teacher and was teaching the Men's Bible (Baracca) Class before his illness.

He was active in civic affairs of the community; having taught school for many years; was a retired farmer and member of the National Grange Organization; and was a rural merchant.

Funeral services were conducted at New Lebanon Christian Church on March 14th with burial in the church cemetery. Many relatives and friends were present and tokens of love and appreciation were shown by the beautiful flowers brought to the rites.

A FRIEND.

THE CHINA EXODUS.

glorious fact of our Christian fellowship that we take joy in bearing one another's burdens. That is still the privilege of western Christians.

As we leave China, I have two pleas to make to American friends of our Chinese churches. First, let us continue to seek ways to encourage and help our Chinese fellow-Christians. Financial help will still be possible, letters will continue to come back and forth, and we will remember them regularly in our prayers. In the absence of the missionary, we will have to be more diligent in finding ways to maintain fellowship with our Chinese churches. My second plea is that American Christians will go beyond thinking in terms of international politics when they think of our Chinese Christian churches. We should rejoice at the presence of Christians and Christian churches in China now. On the level of politics, the world is in a sorry plight. But we hold to the belief that the presence of Christians in many countries of the world forever provides a basis for spiritual reconstruction when hate and violence have spent themselves.

the shed was built and it will be only by the raising of many hands as willing workers that the Beverly Hills Community Church will assume its place as a Congregational Christian Church in the city of Burlington.

Plans are now being made for enclosing the "hut," provide heating facilities, to provide leadership from "now on," and to organize the Church.

Note: Bill Scott, Jr. has returned to Yale Divinity School for his second year. Ministerial Students from Elon College have offered their services to help with the work until a pastor can be secured for the Church.

MINISTERS AND RELIGIOUS GROUPS ENCOURAGED TO PARTICIPATE IN 1950 FREEDOMS FOUNDATIONS AWARDS PROGRAM

Categories Open for Sermons and Community Efforts
By Adult and Youth Groups

"Sermons delivered in the nation's churches are at top rank as a means of expression for the basic concepts of the free American way of life," reports Kenneth D. Wells, executive vice-president of Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge, based on an analysis of materials submitted by persons in all walks of life in its 1949 General Awards Program.

"Because of the key patriotic role of the local ministry, sermons have been designated again as a principal category in which 1950 Freedom Foundation awards are offered to encourage more citizens to 'speak up for freedom,'" reports Mr. Wells. In addition, categories have been added to include activities by mens', womens', and youth groups, many of whom are associated with community or neighborhood churches. In all, there are 18 award divisions for 1950, totaling $100,000.00, plus 300 Honor Medals and 200 Certificates of Merit.

In commenting on the 1950 Awards Program, Dr. John R. Hart, Rector of the Valley Forge Memorial Chapel and a director of Freedom Foundation, stated: "The particular attention of ministers of all faiths and religious groups everywhere is invited to this Awards Program, because our 1949 experience has shown that such persons and groups are intimately acquainted with the patriotic and citizenship efforts of the entire community. It is noteworthy that among the recipients of the 1949 Freedoms Foundation Awards were religious leaders from among the Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish faiths, including members of virtually all denominations, nationalities and races in our American community diversity.

"A local minister may not only nominate his own or another's sermons," added Dr. Hart, "but it is also in order to nominate a speech by a church member, a good deed by a neighbor, an editorial or photograph in the local paper, a patriotic pageant by a youth group, poems, songs, local publications, or any other endeavor taking place in his community which has contributed to the furtherance of understanding and practice of our way of life. Any material not covered in the specific categories is eligible for nomination in the general category."

Nominations are open for any material completed after September 20, 1949, and mailed to Freedoms Foundation, Inc., Valley Forge, Penna., before November 1, 1950. An independent Awards Jury of 21 members, composed of outstanding citizens will review the material and select the award recipients. Dr. Milton S. Eisenhower, president of Pennsylvania State College, will serve as non-voting chairman of the Awards Jury.

Entries in the $100,000.00 Awards Program should be made directly to Freedoms Foundation, Valley Forge, Penna.

Why Go To Church

HOPE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

1. BECAUSE the stress of modern life demands "A power other than my own" if I am to live victoriously.
2. BECAUSE I can't get away from that "inner urge" that demands communion with God.
3. BECAUSE after six consecutive days of such strenuous living as this age requires, I need SOUL REST.
4. BECAUSE I feel that my presence may be helpful to a divinely created institution that is helping God to make a better world.
5. BECAUSE I wish to be identified with the one institution whose future success is guaranteed by its Founder. . . . "Upon this rock I will build my Church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."
6. BECAUSE I wish to aid the institution that cooperates most effectively toward making my home and my community more desirable.
7. BECAUSE I know there will come the inevitable crises of life where I must depend upon the Church alone for its service.
8. BECAUSE I have children who are watching me and who will, in most cases, follow my example.
9. BECAUSE many years ago my parents taught me to go to church and it's hard to break away from the old habits.
10. BECAUSE I am still old fashioned enough to take God's word seriously, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

CHURCH STARTS NEW BUILDING.

Ground-breaking ceremonies for the new Ebenezer Christian Church building were held on Sunday afternoon, October 1, on the church grounds, located about seven miles north of Raleigh, North Carolina, just off U. S. Highway 70.

Rev. W. C. Farrell of Sanford, the pastor of the church, was in charge of ceremonies. The new building will be of brick construction and is expected to cost between $15,000 and $20,000. It will be located on a lot adjoining the present church and will include basement Sunday school rooms. The 70-year-old frame building in use at the present time will be razed to give additional space in the church cemetery.

IMPORTANT.

The Home Mission Committee of the Eastern Virginia Congregational Christian Conference will meet at the Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., October 18, 1950, at 2:30 p. m. All persons, or churches having business with their committee are invited to present their claims in person or by proxy, together with due information concerning the same.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

[] Renewal Name of Church

THE CHURCH BEAUTIFUL—BEAUTIFULLY APPOINTED, NAMED AND LOCATED

Expurgated worship begins with the elimination of the bizarre and the incongruous. A beautiful church may have an unfortunate or ludicrous name. A church with a euphonic and spiritually suggestive name may lack an appropriate physical structure. The name, location and architecture should synchronize, corroborate. Lacking this unity of design, a church loses the sharp focus of distinctiveness and becomes a kind of ecclesiastical mongrel.

Modern churchmanship requires a restudy of much inherited architecture and nomenclature. One church may need renovation, another relocation, and yet another renaming. Old Zion in Norfolk changed its name to Second Church and is planning now for a new location. Damascus Church, Sunbury, changed its location, but did not change its name. If a change of name is desired, the opportune time comes with the change of location. Emancipation may await relocation in many instances.

Hope Church in Springfield (see front page) and Beneficent Church in Providence (see book review) are examples of fortuitous names. Protestants should use more imagination in naming and designing churches. That which lacks imagination in its conception is not likely to inspire the imagination.

A choir director emphasizes the fact that a good beginning and ending make an anthem. Some teachers of homiletics emphasize the same truth with reference to sermons. First and last impressions linger. For this reason some churches place flowers and pictures tastefully near the entrance and exit. The last as well as the first impression of worshippers is pleasing.

SOUTH NORFOLK SETS RECORD

We salute the South Norfolk Sunday School for its fine record of attendance. The conclusion of the past quarter established an enviable record. The church uses the pin and bar system to honor members having perfect attendance. Honors went to Mrs. Margie Humphries and Mrs. H. E. Seymour, who have established a 29-year attendance record unmarred by absence. Mrs. Humphries is a charter member of the school, and Mrs. Seymour has taught the same class for 29 years.

Congratulations to Mrs. Humphries and Mrs. Seymour. Superintendents would have fewer headaches if there were more pupils and teachers of this type. Kindly notify the editor if any of our readers have a better record.

In all, 54 members received pins and bars for attendance records. Some of these were: W. B. Daniels, awarded a 9-year bar; Lonnie Hanbury, 12-year bar;

Grace Simons, 12-year bar; Mrs. Lonnie Hanbury, 6-year bar; Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Hollowell, 5-year bars; Carlton Blade, 7-year bar; Shirley Tull, 6-year bar; Dan Jones, 5-year bar; Margaret Ann Williams, 4-year bar; Caroline Blade, 5-year bar; Janie Leggett, Claudia Leggett and Linda Smith, 4-year bars.

Think of the cumulative influence of this Sunday school in South Norfolk. Contemplate the lessons prepared, taught and learned; the fellowship engendered, and the evil counteracted. The Sunday school is a powerful force for righteousness in a community.

How is your Sunday school attendance—regular or spasmodic? Does your school recognize and honor those with perfect attendance? Those who neglect attendance at Sunday school forego a grand opportunity for fellowship and Bible study.

MOULTON RETURNS TO INDIA

Many of our readers will be interested in the announcement that Rev. Joseph L. Moulton, who had numerous speaking engagements in our midst last spring, is sailing this week from New York City on the S. S. Georgic back to his post in Ahmednagar, India. Mr. Moulton returns with the conviction that "India is destined to play an important role in the eventual stabilizing of Asia." He went out to India first in 1918.

A very substantial reminder of the great Pine Tree State of Maine is going with Mr. Moulton in the shape of a Plymouth-DeSoto suburban carry-all automobile, the gift of the Congregational Christian Churches of Maine. On its shining sides it will proudly bear the name of the Maine Pilgrim. The car will serve as transportation and home for Mr. Moulton as he travels throughout a territory some 1,000 miles square with 90 villages. Sometimes the Maine Pilgrim will even be an ambulance.

Gifts for this automobile came in varying sizes, but one of the most important to Mr. Moulton was the 26c presented him by a small boy down in Norway.

Mr. Moulton is a graduate of Bates College which gave him an honorary degree in June 1949, and Hartford Seminary. In addition to his work as a Christian pastor, traveling superintendent and educator, Mr. Moulton helped organize the Rotary Club in Ahmednagar and is the only "foreign" member.

Every returning missionary is a strong and sailent unit in Our Christian World Mission.

Thousands of engineers can design bridges, calculate strains and stresses, and draw up specifications for machines, but the great engineer is the man who can tell whether the bridge or the machine should be built at all, where it should be built, and when.

LAYMEN'S SUNDAY--OCTOBER 15, 1950

EMPHASIS UPON TITHING AS AN EXPRESSION OF CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

George D. Colclough, chairman of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, makes a timely suggestion that the emphasis on Laymen's Sunday of 1950 be Stewardship, with particular stress upon Tithing.

A packet has been prepared and will be sent to a key layman in each church of the Convention; and it hoped that either on the third Sunday, or one near that time, each church will make it possible for its laymen to present this great matter of Tithing. The Fellowship of Tithers, the national group of the Congregational Christian Church, invites your cooperation with them in this act of Christian Stewardship.

Their invitation is as follows:

You are invited to join
THE FELLOWSHIP OF TITHERS AMONG CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH FOLK.

Tithing means giving one-tenth of one's income to God through the church and philanthropic channels.

Tithing was a part of religious observances from earliest times. The Christian attitude toward the tithe is that it is a simple, workable way of dealing with the question of proportion in giving. Every Christian will give; the question is: Will it be a worthy proportion? Those who practice tithing have found great spiritual enrichment. The tithe will mean real sacrifice for some. It is a good minimum for all.

Several hundred of your fellow churchmen have an informal organization, The Fellowship of Tithers Among Congregational Christian Church Folk, the purpose of which is to promote tithing. This year, as a part of the Stewardship Biennium Emphasis, 1948-1950, the Commission on Stewardship of the General Council is cooperating with this Fellowship in seeking an enlistment of 100,000 tithers among our people.

You are invited to consider and practice the tithe as your minimum proportion in Christian giving and to join the Fellowship of Tithers Among Congregational Christian Church Folk.

RONALD BRIDGES, Chairman,
The Fellowship of Tithers.
WM. C. JONES, Chairman,
Commission on Stewardship.

On the reverse of this "Invitation" there is given the following enrollment card:

ENROLLMENT CARD.

I purpose under the guidance of the Holy Spirit to regularly give at least one-tenth of my income for church and philanthropic causes.

THE FINE ART OF GIVING.

A GUIDE TO A JOYFUL HABIT.

By CHARLES R. BROWN, D. D.

The right mood for giving is one of high and glad privilege. The Lord blesses the cheerful giver. "When the burnt offerings began, the song of the Lord began also with trumpets." The people of Isreal gave of their best to the God they served, and they clothed the self-denial they practiced with the radiant joy that they felt in doing the will of the Most High. Their gifts came with a burst of music.

The whole world has been torn to pieces politically, industrially, socially by the ravages of war. The cost of repair must of necessity be met by those who have not made the supreme sacrifice. The High Cost of Living leaves nothing untouched, and the expense of carrying forward the charitable and missionary enterprise already organized into nation-wide and world-wide usefulness shares in the common advance. We have to give more abundantly than we gave before the war to achieve the ends in view.

Giving had best be proportionate and systematic. The man of method has the wind and the tide with him. He wins out over the man who works by rule of thumb, or who intrust valued interest to passing moods and impulse. It is significant that the two most methodical organizations on earth—the Standard Oil Company and the Roman Catholic Church—are both "going concerns."

The old scriptural rule of giving a tenth of one's income to the work of religion and charity has stood the test of experience. The early Hebrews were blessed in heart and soul, in basket and in store by their practice of tithing. The Mormon Church, whatever limitations may attach to some of its convictions, has been able by its system of tithes to send forth an army of missionaries into all parts of the world, and to care for the needy with an admirable thoroughness. Let there be some definite percentage which mind and conscience can approve! Let people give as they live! If they are compelled to live sparingly, there can be no reproach when they give sparingly. Where they live bountifully, let them also give bountifully. When a man spends, or saves for investment, nine dollars, let him see to it that at least one dollar is given to interest quite outside the field of his own comfort.

I began to give a tenth fifty-one years ago. My salary was a very modest one at that time—it was just one thousand dollars a year—and when I took out the tithe it made a big hole in it, but I kept it up through all the years that followed. When the World War came with so many calls for aid to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., the Salvation Army and other charitable agencies, I felt I must increase it to two-tenths. I have maintained that ratio ever since, keeping an exact account of income and of my gifts to benevolences. I have never been tempted for a moment to return to the old spasmodic, haphazard method of giving to the Lord.

I do not feel that this should be imposed as a hard and fast rule upon all people alike. For Mr. John D. Rockefeller to give a tenth of his income to benevolence would not be generosity on his part. He has undoubtedly been giving for many years a very great deal more than that proportion of his income. For some man on the other hand, whose wages are meager and who finds it difficult to maintain his family comfort, any insistence upon his tithing would be unwarranted. But for a great multitude of people in this country who are neither millionaires nor those who are living on very narrow margins, the practice of tithing would be entirely practicable and wholesome.

The Christian world has never as yet had the moral courage to test the readiness of Him, who has all the resources of earth and sky under His direction, to meet systematic giving with blessings bountiful beyond all our anticipations. Here in the closing words of the Old Testament the Lord flings down a kind of Challenge! "Bring all your tithes into the storehouse that there may be meat in my house! Prove me now, saith the Lord

UNDER THE SHADOW OF THE ALMIGHTY.

Sermon by the late

REV. HERBERT E. FOSS, D. D.

Pastor of the Congregational Church Southern Pines, N. C.

"He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."—Psalms 91:1.

In every walk of life there is more or less of the superficial. In trade some men are content to remain at the foot of the ladder when they might as well stand upon the topmost round.

The superficial mechanic begins just where he left off years before. The "would be" scholar, swallow like, skimming along the surface touching here and there to grasp a bit of truth, placards himself a scientist; but none of these men are the true representative of their spheres of life.

The true exponent of business is the man who gives himself and all his energies to its conduct; the man who forgets ease, comfort, pleasure, everything save principal, in his earnestness to expand and widen his operations.

The successful mechanic is the man is ever striving to better himself, to dig deeper into the subsoil of his occupation, and to understand more perfectly all its principles.

The true scholar is not satisfied to pick up the fragments of truth; he is ever striving to get down to the bed rock.

The true scientist is not content to hang upon the outskirts of those vast realms that lie before him, he is ever seeking to push aside the veil that he may grasp the treasures of truth that lie hidden in the inner chambers.

The importance of religion would seem to render it impossible for superficiality to gain a foothold there.

Though a man were careless as to his business prosperity, indifferent to his professional standing, satisfied to glance merely into the vestibules of knowledge, though he were careless of everything bounded by his life, it would seem that when highest earthly happiness, his eternal safety, and through the avenues of influence, the welfare, perhaps the everlasting destiny of other souls, were at stake, indifference would be banished and carelessness would give place to the most scrupulous and painstaking care.

The church of God, humanity's guide and hope, stragglers under the destinies of a world, ought to be the last place into which indifference and superficiality should find entrance, and yet these things do find their way even there, and the thing above all others that saps the power of the church, that rises in its pathway to stop its onward march, that opens wider breaches than all the batteries of the enemy, is this half religion, this outer court piety.

It is one thing to be a Christian and ever stand in the outer court, gazing longingly at the veil before the holy place, but it is quite another thing, and far grander, to be a Christian and live in the secret place of The Most High, live in the holy of holies. There are times in the lives of most Christians when they brush aside the veil and step in, but they do not abide.

When difficulties come to hedge our way, when doubts perplex, when dangers confront, when the billows of grief roll in upon our souls, seemingly to overwhelm us, when sorrow comes almost to crush us, then it is, when earth affords no resting place and the heavens above seem brass, that we flee for refuge to God's secret place, that our terrified and smitten souls ride from their pursuing enemies, and there they rest in security and peace until the sunshine of prosperity bursts through the clouds, dispels the darkness, and then, like restless children, we forsake our refuge and go out to fight the same battles over.

This is not dwelling in the secret place of the Most High, it is simply fleeing there to escape the storm, but God wants us to live there.

What does the text mean? What is it to dwell in the secret place of the Most High? It means a peculiar nearness to God and it ought to be said that a person's usefulness, his plane of Christian life, the depth of his experience and his capacity for the truest and highest enjoyment depend upon his nearness to God, more than upon his mental, social or material qualifications.

I look out upon the earth and remember that God made it and peopled it with life. I look out over the sea and remember that God created that, and filled its depths with wonders. I look up to the heavens and remember that God unrolled them and sentinelled them with suns and stars. I ponder upon my own creation and mysterious endowment, and ascribing all to God, I have no conception of him that has practical worth to me as yet, for of what value to me is the mighty power which performed these marvels if its author sits upon the throne from which he spake them into being, cold, distant and impersonal?

I need to know God, not only as the motive power of the Universe, not only as the author of all the wonders by which I am surrounded, but as a friend beside whose friendship the closest and dearest friendships of earth are distant.

I want to conceive him as a Father whose tenderness and love outreach the strongest and deepest affections of earthly parents, for they are finite but He is infinite.

I desire to think of him as a God whose watchful care is ever above me, who reads my every thought, who bends his ear to catch my broken petitions and from his boundless love supplies my every need.

I desire to think that he sits upon his throne up yonder, in power and awful majesty, and yet I want to know that his spirit fills my heart and pervades my whole being every moment of my life, and we may know him thus, but only as we become dwellers in his secret place.

Yes, to dwell there means to know God.

It would seem to be a strange question to put to the Christian, "Do you know God?" But let us ask ourselves—Is our acquaintance with God as close and intimate as it should be—as it may be?

It is not enough that I know that there is a God. It is not enough that I know that unbounded power, is his. It is not enough that I know that impartial and unerring justice belongs to him.

I must know that he is God of infinite love, love that yearns over every sinner, no matter how vile, love proved by the greatest sacrifice the world ever saw.

I must know him as a God of mercy, mercy broad enough to cover the sin and ingratitude of the whole world—specific enough to single me out of the great mass of humanity,

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

ELON COLLEGE SUSTAINING FUND.

The following "bulletin was recently sent to the members of all Sustaining Fund committees and to all ministers of churches in the Southern Convention. It is reprinted here for the information of SUN subscribers. Its contents are extremely important and should be read carefully.

BULLETIN.

There have been certain misunderstandings in some quarters as to the character of the "Sustaining Fund." It is to clear up these misunderstandings and to answer questions, which have been asked in the last several weeks, that this bulletin is issued.

Please note the following important facts:

1. The "Sustaining Fund" is a purely voluntary effort. But, at this juncture in the history of the college, it is extremely important not only for the present but for the future that the program succeed this year.

2. It is not intended to replace any program or effort already being made among our churches.

3. It is exactly what its name implies, a program to sustain our church college and to enable it to carry out its mission effectively without so-called "deficit financing."

4. The success of the "Sustaining Fund" effort depends entirely, of course, upon the effective cooperation of our ministers and our lay leaders. If they do not give it their full cooperation, it will not achieve its announced objectives.

5. There has been no change in the previously announced purposes of the "Sustaining Fund." They are listed for your information as follows:

- (a) Erection of a dormitory for women.
- (b) Furnishing this dormitory.
- (c) Additions to the permanent endowment of the college.
- (d) Meeting special needs of the college, which may arise out of the present emergency.
- (e) Unrestricted gifts, to be applied to such purposes as the administration may decide.

6. It is to be emphasized, that the right of designation resides in the donor, of course. Each individual and each church may, and should, designate one or more of the above-listed purposes, to which his or its gift shall go.

7. The offer of a free scholarship for $100.00 to each church reaching its goal of $1.00 per member not later than September 1, 1951, still stands.

8. Each church is to decide the best method of presenting the "Sustaining Fund" program to its members. Some churches have decided to include their contribution to the "Sustaining Fund" in their budgets. Other churches are making it an individual matter to be handled on "Sustaining Fund" Sunday or at the time of the annual Every-Member Canvass. In any event, it is assumed—and urged—that the ministers and the officers of the local churches use their own best judgment as to the method to be employed in their respective churches. The main thing is that each church give its members a genuine opportunity to say whether the college is worth $1.00 (or more) per year to them.

9. The date of "Sustaining Fund" Sunday is left, of course, to the local churches. Whenever possible, it is hoped that this will be some Sunday in October, so that the program may get off to as active a start as possible.

10. Remember:

That the "Sustaining Fund" is voluntary on the part of the church and its members;

That every contributor may designate the specific purpose to which his contributions will go;

That all contributions are to be sent to the Southern Convention office, earmarked for the "Sustaining Fund" and for the specific purpose or purposes listed in No. 5 above as may be desired;

That the Southern Convention office will turn these gifts over to Mr. Clyde W. Gordon, secretary-treasurer of the Elon College Foundation, who will disburse them exactly in accordance with the wishes of the donors.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

There are certain facts which the ministers and churches of the Southern Convention should observe and consider carefully. The Convention apportioned $15,000.00 to the several conferences constituting the Convention. The conferences, they were instructed to apportion this amount to the several churches constituting the conferences.

The annual meeting of the Eastern North Carolina Conference is scheduled to meet on October 17-18, and the other conferences will meet regularly thereafter until the last one is held. It has been customary for the conferences to collect apportionment money before or during the annual session of the conference. To date, the college has received a total of $6,857.65 on its apportionments. Only a few more weeks remain in this year. It would be of great assistance to the college if the total amount could be secured between this and Thanksgiving.

I realize, and I am sure you do, that the Convention directed that conference apportionments should be paid during the calendar year. All money contributed by the churches on college apportionments during 1950 will be credited on this year's apportionment unless the church's apportionment has been paid in full, or the church directs otherwise. This point is important, and I am sure that everyone will work in compliance with this discussion.

The college greatly appreciates the assistance of every church.

At Home and Abroad

MISSIONARY EXCERPTS.

From Dindigul, Samuel Dovapragam reports on famine in South India—

South India has never experienced a more severe drought than this year. Rain has failed us. Summer rain and the South West Monsoon have forgotten us with the result, all the trees look as if experiencing a Wisconsin winter. There is no water in the well and the water supply both in the town and rural areas is almost nil. The electricity was cut as much 60% owing to the low level in the Dam. Women in the villages walk four to six miles to get a pot of water, and the people in the town buy water. Prayers are offered by people of all creeds for a heavy down pour, failing which the effects will be disastrous. It was interesting to hear from a Hindu lawyer last night that the reason for the lack of rain is due to one of the planets taking a doog sleep in the South and the same will be in slumber for another three weeks, after which we would get rain.

The quantity of rice has been cut from eight to seven ounces and wheat to two, per day per adult, while the normal consumption is fourteen to sixteen ounces. Two weeks ago a representation was made to the District Head about the lack of supply of food grains to the poor in the villages. The Government officials sent a contradictory report. So we had the chance of taking the District Collector to the affected areas, and as he went from house to house, found to his dismay, just a pile of empty pots. Men have gone from villages to seek work and some have returned with their condition worse than before, since they could not find work. The women and children, with skin and bone, told harrowing tales to him that it was two days since they had any food. Three women showed fruits which they have plucked from the wild-cactus, which they have been eating for some days. They showed wells which have been dry for more than four months and also told him, that their voice for deepening them has been a cry in the wilderness. The children of the very poor are beginning to sit listlessly on their doorsteps instead of playing. Tuberculosis—which is a hunger disease—is mounting steadily. Hunger oodema, which is the stage of actual stravation, is increasing fast.

Through the help of a Missionary, we rushed one hundred and forty-four small tins of multipurpose food to the people in seven villages in this area and gave each family one fourth measure. It is a drop in the bucket. Today I am taking delivery of thirty-six bags of lima beans sent by Church World Service, for distribution in this area. I hope to do it beginning tomorrow. The transportation to the villages is difficult and costly. Something needs to be done to continue such help to these people for another three or four months.

Mrs. Maxwell Welch tells of her husband's busy life in Galangue, Angola—

I see Max now and then these days. He comes in from the villages with the intention of spending a few days in his office catching up on correspondence and accounts. But as soon as he lands there, the parade starts. One of the church leaders has walked two days from the village of a different tribe where he has been working and he wants to talk about the work there, or a deacon wants to discuss the location of a new center in his area. Or perhaps a boy comes who wants to go to Dondi, our American Board institute for higher education. But the boy doesn't know where he is going to get the necessary money. Or perhaps a teacher from a village and wants Bibles, hymn books, and the new Laubach reading lesson to take back with him. I could give him the books, but that is not enough, for he wants also to contact the new missionary, the opportunity to get better acquainted in an informal way and to go back to the village with, "Nala said. . . ." and Max, too, wants to get acquainted with the teacher. Then there is work on the pickup, to put it in condition for the next trip. He is training a boy to do the routine jobs like filling the gas tank, greasing the proper places, checking tires and a number of other time consuming things that may spell the difference between arriving at your destination on time or a half a day late. When you can drive for sixty miles without seeing a single habitation, you learn your Boy Scout motto well. In the rainy season the roads often resemble the logging roads in northern and eastern Maine. During the dry season, which is now, you some times make roads for yourself. A couple of weeks ago Max, the pastor, and a guest, one of our best-educated leaders, (he just returned from a year's study in South Africa), did just that. They found the road to one village very good, and were congratulating their good fortune when it ended. The king of the village tried to persuade them not to go on, but others said that if they continued they could find a good road soon. Max decided to go on. At first he was able to weave in and out among the trees, but then they became too thick. So they got out and cut them down. This they did for nine kilometers. Then sure enough they found the good road. But they later ended at the river, where they crossed by foot a native log bridge and finished their journey on bicycle. On the return they were dreading their road but were happily surprised to find that the old king had called out all the men in the village and that by dint of much hard labor they had cleared a passable picada, as such roads are called in Portuguese. A lot of repair work on the Ford Max is forced to do himself since the nearest mechanic is eighty miles away. By the time it is the day to start off on another tour his paper is still in the typewriter with a beginning paragraph written.

of Hosts, and see if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out such a blessing that there shall not be room to receive it."

How the treasures of the Christian Church would be filled with the sinews of war for a more effective campaign against the forces of sin and want, did all professing Christians begin to practice tithing! How the needs of our missionary societies, at home and abroad, would be met, their arms lengthened and strengthened for a mightier service, by this adequate support! How the noble army of aged ministers who have been giving their lives to the service of Christ on very meager salaries and with no comfortable Carnegie pensions awaiting them, could be maintained in decency and self-respect until God calls them home! And how the heart of the Master Himself,

OUR THANK OFFERING PROJECT— 1950-1951.

When we refer to "Dates to Remember" in your Year Book, I am sure that we are reminded at once of the fact that the month of November is fast approaching. We must begin to think seriously about making plans for our annual Thank Offering service, to be held as near Sunday, November 5, as possible.

For four consecutive years, we have designated this offering for educational and religious programs in Shaowu, China.

Our project this year is to renovate and redecorate the Whitley Memorial Auditorium at Elon College, N. C., as Mrs. O. H. Paris, convention president, has already informed us through this page.

We, who attended the School of Missions this summer, certainly observed the need of this work. Since the college offers us the auditorium as often as we, the women of the Southern Convention, need it for various meetings and conventions necessary for us to go forward with our work, and since it is so widely used by our young people, our College, our church and distinguished visitors, we feel that it will be a high privilege and a pride and joy to have our Thank Offering for 1950 go for this most worthy project.

Programs are being prepared to be sent to leaders of our missionary societies in the conference in time to use at their meetings in November.

As chairman of the Thank Offering Committee, I urge you to give this your prayerful attention, and, together, let us make it one of our finest Thank Offerings!

MRS. M. F. HALL, Ch'n,
Thank Offering Committee.

NEWS OF SOCIETIES. SHALLOW WELL.

The Maggie I. Moran Missionary Society of Shallow Well Community held its August meeting in the basement of the church.

An informal picnic supper was enjoyed by about 29 persons. After supper, we played several games that were greatly enjoyed by all.

The society was called to order by the president, Mrs. Jack Campbell, Sr. Our devotion was taken from the 12th chapter of Romans.

Several business matters were attended to. Then the president, in very heart-warming words of praise, presented to Mrs. A. S. Thomas a Life Member.

MT. CARMEL.

The Junior Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Church, feel that we have had a good year.

We have our meeting every second Sunday morning at the church. We have used the mission study books as part of our programs, reading certain chapters and asking questions about what we read.

The Juniors, with some of the larger children in the Cradle Roll, gave a program on Mother's Day after Sunday school. In July we had an enjoyable picnic.

Each member who has been sick was remembered with cards and fruit.

We hope to do greater work for God's Kingdom in the coming year than we have done in the past one.

MRS. JASPER CARR,
Leader.

LIBERTY SPRING.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Liberty Spring Church has enjoyed the great privilege of dedicated service in this year's work.

On World Community Day, we prayerfully met together and placed our "Pieces of Peace" bundles on the altar for overseas shipment.

So that we might boost our Parsonage Fund, we sponsored a Baby Contest, which netted a total of $1,101.20.

We packed a box to aid our Migrants in this country.

As sponsor, we entertained our Young People during National Youth Week.

During National Family Week, we observed a Family Night supper and program. Using as our theme, "God Works Through Homes," we enjoyed the following: Welcome, Mrs. N. H. Bradshaw, president, W. M. S.; Invocation, Dr. Jesse H. Dollar; Food and Fellowship, Song Fest; Poem,

"The Invisible Guest," by Mrs. W. T. Harrell; Solo, "Bless This House," by Mrs. Joseph Savage; Address, Dr. Stark Jett, Jr., pastor of Whaleyville Methodist Church; Hymn, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds"; Benediction.

Dr. Jett is a most forceful speaker, with humor enough to make you interested in every word. He made us see that a dedicated home, with a Family Altar, is the kind of home we should have and should encourage among our friends and neighbors.

During the year, we have lost two members by death and one by transfer, yet we find joy in having had four new members added to our roll.

We now look forward to a more consecrated new year.

MRS. J. E. HARRELL,
Secretary.

DENDRON (VA.) SOCIETY.

The Missionary Society of Dendron Congregational Christian Church has enjoyed a very successful year, under the leadership of our president, Mrs. Garland Spratley, and a membership who are interested and loyal.

We meet each month, having a well prepared program from the plan book. We feel that the high-light of our meetings is the worship service, which is prepared with much thought and effort by our Spiritual Life Superintendent, Mrs. Owen Whitmore.

With other denominations, we observed World Community Day with a program and gifts. We also observed May Fellowship Day, and held a Thank Offering service, with a liberal offering.

We have sent gifts to Japan and to Migrants in Florida. World Day of Prayer was observed, and also the Week of Prayer, at which time we studied the book of John.

The Home and Foreign study books have been arranged for us by our Visual Aids chairman.

Our Life Membership has been purchased and we have funds with which to meet our apportionment and go over and above last year. We feel very thankful to God, knowing that it was through him that we were able to achieve these things.

October is here with its bright red and brown and yellow leaves. John and Ann were walking in their yard. Their brown oxfords scuffed up lots of leaves.

John stood on his head in the bright leaves.

Ann stood on her head in the bright leaves.

Mother came into the yard. She saw the children's bodies and feet coming out from the leaves.

"Where are the headless children?" she called.

Bump-up popped two heads that were covered with stems and leaf bits.

"Here we are," they called back to her.

Ann began to sing her version of a church school song,

"Red leaves are falling

Like feathers,

Down—

Down—

Down."

The prettiest leaves you find may be pressed between pages of magazines and big books for weights.

To preserve them for a long time, do this: Rub a white candle or a piece of parafin, over a warm iron. Then rub the iron over the leaves until they shine with the wax. Protect mother's ironing board with lots of newspaper, and it is a good plan to have her close by when working with a hot or warm iron.

For Teachers . . .

Last Sunday marked the beginning of a new quarter. Some of our church schools are using the Pilgrim Series for their children's departments or throughout the school. If you are not acquainted with this literature, there will be opportunity in the future to learn about it. The present course is about "Our Church" and has stories, pictures and activity sheets that are correlated. Write to 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Massachusetts, for specific information.

Nursery teachers who have little play equipment might collect tin cans—the kind with tops removed smoothly—paint them bright colors and nest them. Saw mill odds and ends make excellent blocks. They need not be painted, but should be sanded and waxed. These are good for Kindergarten, too.

For Parents . . .

NO TEASING, PLEASE.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Oh, Mother, Mother, my nose!"

My sister Doris' three-year-old son rushed into the house with that frantic exclamation. His mother and I looked up from our knitting to see a sturdy little boy with both hands pressed tightly over his face.

Doris gathered the excited child into her arms. "Did you fall down, Bruce?" she questioned. "Please take your hands away so I can see where you are hurt."

"I didn't fall, Mother. I didn't hurt myself," the boy replied, removing his hands from a round face that showed no sign of injury.

Doris looked relieved. "There's nothing the matter with your nose, Bruce," she assured him.

"Oh yes, Mother, there is! It's broken! Mr. Phillips said so."

My sister's face darkened, but she spoke in a lighthearted tone. "Mr. Phillips must have been joking, Bruce. He likes to make up funny stories."

"Mr. Phillips said Jerry broke my nose. He said Jerry has my place. What does that mean, Mother?"

Doris put aside her knitting and took the little boy up onto her lap. Holding him very tenderly, she explained. "Mr. Phillips just doesn't understand about Jerry, Bruce. Jerry doesn't need your place in our house or in Mother's heart—or Father's. Jerry has a place of his own. Don't you remember how we fixed his little bed before he came and how you have been saving some toys for him to play with as soon as he is old enough to handle them?"

"Yes, Mother." Bruce smiled happily and jumped down. "How soon can Jerry play with me?"

"Very soon," his mother replied. "Jerry likes to smile at you now. When he wakes up from his nap you may give him that soft little rubber kitten you've been saving for him. Jerry can't hold it yet, but I think he'd like to see it."

"All right, Mother."

As the little fellow went to find the toy, Doris looked at me soberly. "How can people be so foolish?" she asked. "Fred and I have spent months building up a happy relationship between Bruce and the new baby, and a few careless words of teasing could tear it all down."

"I'm sure you have built too well for that, Doris," I told her. "Bruce was satisfied when you explained to him that your neighbor was joking. You helped him to understand that each of your children has a place of his own in the family. Ever since I first came to visit you I've noticed how joyously every one of them has welcomed the new little brother."

"I'm glad to hear you say that, Lucia," my sister continued. "From the moment we knew Jerry was coming to us, we tried to prepare the rest of the family to welcome him. Especially, we did not want Bruce to feel that he was being pushed out; we did not want him to experience any feeling of jealousy. It would have been much easier for us if the neighbors hadn't given him some wrong ideas."

"People do not realize what harm they can do to a sensitive child by teasing," I concluded. "Friends and neighbors should learn to help, instead of hinder, in the adjustments that must be made when a new baby comes into a house."

speaker, yet to be selected, on "Building for Religious Education."

Matters to be discussed will be: how to make a church worshipful, how room can be found for the new influx of children into Sunday school, the use of new building materials, the responsibilities of architects and contractors.

There will be an unusually interesting pictorial exhibit.

There will be no fees; each person will make his own arrangements for meals, etc.

MAX VESTAL, Elon College, N. C.
MISS ANN TRUITT, Associate

LET'S GO TO A RALLY.

No young person in the Southern Convention is without a rally to attend during the month of October. The first of these has already passed. Next Sunday, October 8, finds the rally at Bethel Church in the Valley of Virginia Conference. The program is well planned for an interesting, informative and worshipful session. This rally begins at 2:30 and lasts until 7:45. The program includes reports from Powell's Fort Camp, from Evelyn Allen and Warren Matthews on the National Council of Pilgrim Fellowship, and from Max Vestal on Agape. Don't fail to come; bring a supper, and we'll eat picnic style.

Betty Showalter, president of the Valley Young People, will preside. She writes: "We hope to have a representative from each church. I'll be looking for all of you."

Maxine Dofflemyer of Bethel says: "We are expecting a large crowd and are looking forward to having you at our church. There are some young people in every church in the Valley Conference and we want you all to send representatives. Come and we will enjoy the program and fellowship together."

All the rallies are important, but the Eastern N. C. Young People offer the only week-end conference, October 21-22, at Liberty Vance Church. Their first week-end conference was held one year ago. They liked the idea; so now the conference is an annual affair. There is an interesting program planned for the two days. Of special interest will be the report of the Cobbs on their experience in Puerto Rico. Max Vestal will tell of his experiences at Agape on Sunday morning.

S. C. Haywood, president of the Eastern N. C. Young People urges all young people to come and make this the finest rally yet. Emily Eanes, a conference officer and a member of the local church, says, "The Liberty Vance Young People send a hearty welcome to everyone."

"Build a wall between the children and the first glass of any alcoholic beverage."

A Month of Sundays for Youth

There will be Young People's Rallies covering every Conference of the Convention in October. Every church (no matter whether it has an organized young people's group, or whatever its young people's group may be called) should plan NOW to be represented at the Rally in their area. Below are listed the places, the dates and the presidents of the Conference organization.

October 8. Bethel Church. Valley of Virginia Young People's Rally. Betty Showalter, president.

October 15. Happy Home Church, North Carolina and Virginia Young People's Rally. Dorothy Ballinger, president.

October 21-22. Liberty, Vance. The Eastern North Carolina Young People's Week-end Conference. E. C. Haywood, president.

October 29. Pleasant Union Church. Western North Carolina Fifth Sunday Rally. Bill Simmons, president.

If there is an further information that you or your local organization may desire, please write to—and wrap itself about me, claiming me as its own.

And then there is a still closer acquaintance with God. I may not only know these overshadowing elements in his character, but I may know those things which may be known only through the most intimate and confidential relations.

The man who stands in the outer court catches glimpses of God, only as the veil is brushed aside to let some more earnest seeker pass in, and such knowledge of God is not worth very much.

Think how deceptive superficial acquaintance with men is. How likely we are to misunderstand the person whom we know but slightly. How cruelly we sometimes misjudge the man the surface of whose life only, is open to our view. We go into his home and hear a cross or fretful word, drawn forth by the cares and perplexities of the day's business, and we go out and call him a tyrant, but if we lived in that home we would see that harsh and hasty word atoned for by a thousand deeds and words of love.

In the rush of business life we are jostled against a man as we go, our way we discover a scar, and call the man a rascal but a closer acquaintance would in many cases show him to be scrupulously honest. Such cases are not all rare. It is a frequent experience that we come to admire and then to love the very ones whom as casual acquaintance we utterly disliked. We did not, in the true sense, know them.

So it is with God.

The God whom we come to know closely and intimately, is not the same God at whom we look from a distance.

We behold the numberless manifestations of his power and when the stroke of that power falls upon us we call him harsh and cruel, but if we had his abiding presence in our hearts, the cruelty of the stroke would be banished.

If we would, like tired children, but nestle in his arms he would not seem so cruel and harsh, but kind and tender.

Sometimes prop after prop is stricken away, friendship after friendship fails, until we stand alone facing a seemingly hostile world. Calamity follows calamity until it seems as if adversity's clouds had emptied themselves upon our heads.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

USING THE BIBLE.

LESSON III—OCTOBER 15, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Thy word have I laid up in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee.—Psalm 119: 11.

LESSON: Psalm 19: 7-11; Acts 8: 26-35.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Luke 24: 25-32.

A Cheap, but Priceless Book.

There was a time when a Bible was the most expensive book in the world. So costly were they, that only the very rich, or a few churches, could afford to own them. And those who owned them zealously guarded them. Those in churches were chained with a heavy chain to the pulpit so that nobody could steal them. And, of course, only a few people could read the Bible. It was a precious and a priceless book. And there was a reason for the ignorance of the people concerning the Bible.

But times have changed. The Bible, once the most expensive book in the world, is now one of the cheapest. The American Bible Society, which prints and distributes Bibles and portions of the Bible at cost, can furnish a Bible for a paltry sum. Bibles can even be bought in 5 and 10 cent stores. To use slang, "they are a dime a dozen." There is no one so poor that he cannot own a Bible today.

Yes, times have changed. The Book, once so expensive, is now very inexpensive. But it is still priceless. It is the one indispensable book in the world. Its words are spirit and life. Their entrance into life give light and life more abundant. In them men find eternal life and they testify of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Bible is the Word of God. Through it God speaks to men. Through it he often makes known his will to men. A Christian cannot be furnished unto good works unless he allows the message and the spirit of this Book to guide and gird his life.

The Bible in the Home.

Every home ought to have a Bible. It need not be an expensive Bible, but it ought to be a good one, well bound, with good type, usable and at hand. This is true both in the case where there are children and where there are no children. The Bible has a message for old and young. It is a universal book, both in its sweep of time and in its range of interest. The writer of these Notes likes to see a Bible in the homes into which he goes, a Bible displayed in a prominent place. To be sure there is no magic values simply in having a Bible on display. But there is a value in the people in a home bearing witness to their Christian faith by displaying the Word of God along with other literature.

It is even better for every member of the family to have his or her own Bible. It will take on new meaning if it is a personal possession. There are arrangements of the Bible for even small children. Children of every age can find a Bible suited to their needs as to binding, print, helps, and so forth.

The Bible in the Hand.

It is not enough to have a Bible in the home. One should take the Bible into his hands. As has been stated above there is no particular merit simply in having a Bible in the home. It is not a "good luck charm" to keep away misfortune. It has little value, unless it is used. Christians should form the habit of reading the Bible, of taking it in their hands and using it regularly. Even five or ten minutes a day with the Bible would make a difference.

The Bible in the Head.

It is not enough to have the Bible in the hand; one should also get it in his head. One should bring to it attention, concentration, expectancy, eagerness to learn, determination to master what he reads. There is little value in trying to read while listening to the radio, or while thinking about school work or business or what have you. One suspects that Jesus would emphasize entering into the secret place for Bible reading even as he did concerning prayer. One reason why many people prefer the early morning hour for Bible reading is because the mind is rested and fresh. A few minutes listening to God as he speaks through his word may give tone and zest to the whole day, and in like manner to the whole life. One should store his mind with the treasures of the Bible. I heard a man well along in life, who had spent a couple of years in a Japanese prison camp during the recent war—he was a missionary who was interned—tell how he spent many of the long, long hours of his imprisonment, repeating and calling to mind the verses and sections of Scripture he had read through a lifetime. What a source of comfort and inspiration they were to him.

The Bible in the Heart.

We often use the term "to learn by heart." Perhaps this is what the Psalmist meant when he said "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee." It is not enough to have the Bible in one's head. There are some folks who study critically and they have a wide knowledge of the Bible in their head. There are others who read it without any ulterior motive but who know the Bible only as facts. It is not for them a literature of power. The message and the spirit and the power of the Bible must find a place in the inner life of the reader if it is to mean what it ought to mean. It must function in the realms of the emotions and the will as well as in the head. If we hide its words in our hearts we will find the secret of victory over temptation, and of power for service.

These comments have not followed the lesson text as printed in the Quarterly. Perhaps this is unfortunate especially in the case of the stirring story of Philip and the Ethiopian eunuch. One could write a whole page on that and then not begin to exhaust the rich treasures to be found therein. But teacher of the Lesson will probably deal with that section more in detail—they ought to at any rate. Perhaps what has been written in a more general way for the average reader of THE SUN will not be altogether amiss. Not if he becomes a doer as well as a reader of these words. Here endeth the reading of these Notes; now for the doing of them.

(Based on lesson copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education.)

The function of a modern religion is to accumulate spiritual power in life and for life. We need that power all the time, but if it has not been accumulated, it is not there when we need it most. In a world like this, particularly like the one at the present time, can anyone get along just as well without the inspirations of religion. Indeed, he cannot. Religion keeps us up to the everlasting effort to attain the best life and best things in life.

—Minot Simons.

LAYMEN'S SUNDAY.

who said "It is more blessed to give than to receive," would rejoice in witnessing the advance of a more generous service to the hungry and the sick, the orphaned and the imprisoned, as an acceptable service rendered to Him.

If the Christian people of this one land, rich in its resources and prosperous beyond all the other lands of the earth, could be moved to give a tenth to the Lord, it would seem at once as if all our benevolent activities had been harnessed to some Niagara of power. There would come a new thrill of life along the whole line of religious effort, and presently we would see the kingdom of God on earth coming with power and great glory.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF TITHING.

World-Old and World-Wide.

We do not know when or where the tithe originated. We do know it originated with God. We do know it is one of the most ancient customs known to man. It antedated the Mosaic Law by centuries. It was already old in other parts of the world when Abraham insisted on giving Melchizedek the tenth of all the spoils he had won in battle. (Read again the story in the 14th chapter of Genesis.)

Two Schools of Thought.

There are two clearly defined schools of thought on tithing. One teaches it is no longer binding, and is Old Testament legalism from which Christ set us free. The other teaches that it has never been abrogated, and is as binding today as the Ten Commandments. Those of the latter school insist that Christ demands more from his followers in this noonday of the twentieth century A.D. than was demanded by the Mosaic Law in the twilight of the fifteenth century before Christ.

"To whomsoever much has been given, from him much will be required: and to whomsoever much has been entrusted, of him more will be demanded."—Luke 12:48.

Did Christ Tithe?

Members of this latter school insist, also, that Christ himself must have practiced tithing, otherwise the Scribes and Pharisees, who were sticklers for the tithe, would have challenged his position, as they did on everything else where he disagreed with them, either in theory or in practice. In support of their position they quote Matthew 23:23 where he clearly approved tithing along with his demand for the observance of the weightier matters of the law—"Justice, mercy and truth."

Present-Day Trends.

An increasing number of both clergy and laity every year look upon tithing as an invaluable first aid in the development of a stewardship-consciousness. Tithing groups are being organized in many congregations. Calls for tithing literature are becoming more frequent. It is becoming the rule rather than the exception to introduce the subject into round table discussions when it is not on the regular program. A growing number of pastors are "talking out loud" on tithing, from the pulpit, and inserting tithing appeals in their church letters and bulletins. Objections to tithing on the ground that it savors of legalism are becoming less and less vocal. All of which augurs well for a general awakening on the whole subject of Christian giving.

What Tithing Does.

TEACHES the tither to "put first things first," by accepting the scriptural doctrines of (1) divine ownership, (2) man's stewardship and (3) the translation of both into Christian service. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God."

GIVES the tither an enlarged vision, a willing mind, a liberal heart, and a closer partnership relation with Christ. "The love of Christ constraineth us."

CREATES within the tither's soul a growing appreciation of spiritual values, a spirit of liberality, and an attitude of cheerfulness. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

RETURNS to the tither constantly growing spiritual dividends, and material dividends, too. This is the universal testimony of tithers, born of experience. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth."

CLEANSSES the heart of the tither from selfishness, covetousness, self-satisfaction and self-centeredness, substituting for them the double satisfaction of life. "Beware of covetousness" . . . "Freely ye have received, freely give."

RESULTS in more careful spending of the other nine-tenths. Any tither will testify that after he has paid his tithe, Christ makes the other nine-tenths go farther than ten-tenths did in other days. "Wherefore do you spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not?

SOLVES all financial problems early, certainly, and more satisfactorily, than any other method of finance. This because tithing converts the pocketbook. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse." . . . "The tithe is the Lord's."

DEVELOPS Christian character. That is the tither's supreme reward—the reward every sincere Christian steward justly covets. "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

When Giving Becomes Sharing.

These are some of the benefits and blessings tithing confers on tithers. Why? Because tithers accept—at their face value—the promises in the quoted Scriptural passages; as they do all similar promises with which both the Old Testament and the New Testament abound. Tithers look upon giving as a spiritual force, an expression of devotion, an act of worship, a first aid to the building of a Christian life. They always remember the fact that Christianity is the religion of giving—in the sense of sharing—as so tenderly and beautifully expressed in "The Vision of Sir Launfal." When Sir Launfal, on the verge of starvation, following his lifelong quest for the Holy Grail, shared his last crust with a supposed leper, Lowell sums up the result in these never-to-be-forgotten lines:

And the voice that was softer than silence said,

"Lo, it is I, be not afraid!
Thou hast spent thy life for the Holy Grail;
Behold, it is here—this cup which thou
Didst fill at the streamlet for Me but now;
This crust is My body broken for thee,
This water His blood that died on the tree;
The Holy Supper is kept, indeed,
In whatso we share with another's need,—
Not what we give, but what we share,—
For the gift without the giver is bare;
Who gives himself with his alms feeds three,— Himself, his hungering neighbor, and Mee."

Representative Tithers.

While not synonymous with Christian stewardship, tithing is just about the best "first aid" in the development of a Christian stewardship life. For proof read the life tithers and testimony of such representative tithers as William Colgate, Albert Alexander Hyde, Dr. Charles E. Welch, Nancy J. McConnell, Captian Robert Dollar, and others like them. Their experience is a thousand times more impressive than non-tither's theories.—From "First Steps in Stewardship." Lutheran Laymens Movement.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

This week I called on one of our young men who came to us when we were receiving babies, went through school with the highest grades in his class at Elon High School, completed an engineering course at State College, and is now superintendent of power—both electric and steam—for the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company. He has a nice family, and a lovely home. He is a credit to all concerned.

Many of our former boys and girls will join with us in sincere regret that L. W. Wagoner, of our staff, had a very serious injury to his right hand and wrist while trying to unblock a heavy-powered corn harvester. He is carrying the hand and wrist in a cast, and it is hoped that it will not be permanently impaired.

One of our former boys, Lester Moore, who had a job here as a worker on the farm and in the dairy, has been called to the service of his country. "Lac" is a very fine young man, and knows how to handle the machinery on our farm and dairy. We are sorry to lose him and pray that he may return to us in due time safe and sound. He is such a quiet young man and did his work well. It was a sad day when he left here.

This week I called on Miss Nannie Kernodle, who has been in a nursing home in Winston-Salem several years with arthritis. She is a member of Union Ridge Congregational Christian Church in Alamance County, reads THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and is greatly interested in the work of the church. She was glad to see me because she wanted to give me the following verse which she had placed in her prayerbook:

God will add his blessings
To whatever you may give;
And happiness will come to you
Who help a child to live.

She could not recall the author's name, but she said as she read it she thought of the eighty children at the Orphanage who would be without a home were it not for the contributions of generous, thoughtful people. I feel indebted to Rev. W. J. Andes for taking me into her room, as it was a joy to witness her Christian fortitude and charm.

On September 27, three matrons, Miss Hattie Brakefield, Mrs. Sarah Goode Branch and Mrs. Oie Black, and I attended the State Conference of Orphanage Superintendents and Staff Members at the Oxford Orphanage. We heard several addresses and forums on how it should be done. We got a good many new ideas, but on the whole we felt very proud of the work being done at our Christian Orphanage.

The annual conferences are close at hand. Do not be content to just follow the letter of the law in making your contributions to enterprises of your church. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." "It is more blessed to give than to receive." God richly blesses us all, and takes notice of those who with grateful hearts go the second mile in their giving. Count your blessings and see what God has done for you, and generously give to his work that needs it so much. Do you really wish to show your deep gratitude? "In as much as ye do it unto one of the least of these, ye do it unto me," says the Christ.

Book Reviews

PADDY WILSON'S MEETING HOUSE. By Arthur E. Wilson. The Pilgrim Press. $3.00.

Any one who takes the time to search the records and compile the history of a local church has rendered a distinct service to his contemporaries and to posterity as well. Most people are too busy to do this kind of thing or find church records too dull. Consequently, few churches are fortunate enough to rate a biography.

Arthur E. Wilson has studied with meticulous care the well-preserved records of Beneficent Church in Providence. A lively but disciplined imagination has made colorful reading of this church chronicle. The author states in his preface: "The story of the beginnings of American civilization is primarily a story of its churches. Nowhere was this more true than in New England where the developing pattern was of such tremendous influence on the growing country. Beneficent Congregational Church on Weybosset Hill in Providence Plantations offers a rare vantage point for a study of the process by which American religious life grew. It has had only eight shepherds in two hundred and seven years, and only twice during these years has there been a single Sunday's lapse between pastorates. . . . No man had greater influence on the post-Revolutionary history of Providence than James Wilson, second minister of Beneficent Church. . . . who became affectionately called Paddy Wilson. Round Top is the familiar name of the famous meeting-house which was built in 1810, and which for generations was known as 'Paddy Wilson's Meeting House.' "

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

All of the required Friendly Service projects have been completed. The World Day of Prayer, Thank Offering Day and May Fellowship Day were observed with appropriate services. The Burton's Grove group were our guests at the World Day of Prayer and participated in the service.

This society, as a special project, is sponsoring a Cradle Roll department, which has an enrollment of twenty babies. An afternoon tea was served to the mothers in July.

The study book of John was presented by our pastor, Rev. W. L. Wood. The foreign mission study book, Which Way Japan, was reviewed by Mrs. Wood, and Missions at the Grass Roots, will be given by Mrs. Wood in the near future.

An evening with Mrs. Moulton as our guest speaker and the Burton's Grove ladies as our guests, proved to be one of the high lights of the year.

One memorial was given this year.

UNDER THE SHADOW.

Cloud is piled upon cloud, until rising mountain high all above us, the last ray of light is shut out, and looking through our blinding tears, up into the blackness, we see only a frowning Providence, but when we make these fallen props, these unstable friendships, these dire calamities rounds in the ladder which leads our souls to Him, when step by step we scale these mountains of doubt, and with the last one under our feet, stand in the full glow of the sunlight of faith and trust the frown is changed to a smile and what from the valley beneath, seemed to be cruelty, now shines out as loving kindness and tender mercy.

Oh, if men would only get near to God, if they would only learn to know Him, if they would scale the heights of his love and sound the depths of His mercy, how many would praise who now scoff and curse.

We might make some excuse for the ignorance of men whose hearts had never been touched by the divine finger, but he who has felt that magic touch, who has had the scales removed from his eyes and the shackles stricken from his soul, can plead little excuse for ignorance of God.

The first and greatest privilege of the Christian is to know God. How? From nature? Yes, in bud and flower and tree in mountain, river, and ocean. In sun, moon, stars, we may know of God but after all that is not really to know him.

The picture that nature paints of God is at best but an imperfect one. And the man who is content to stand dreamily gazing into the book of nature as each day it turns its leaf, gets very little knowledge of God.

(I have seen pictures of Niagaras, but I never saw Niagara until I stood at the foot of the mighty cataract.)

From the Bible? Yes, make it the text book of your life, though your library contain the latest and rarest volumes, let the Bible be the first of all. And yet it is possible to know the Book of books from lid to lid so far as mere words are concerned, without knowing God very much. We may draw knowledge of God from a thousand different sources but until it is grasped by the soul and assimilated into spiritual life, until we have an experimental knowledge we do not know God.

(Did I know Theodore Roosevelt or Warren G. Harding? I have seen them, heard them speak, have shaken hands with them, but did not really know them.)

Are we as Christians living as near God as it is our privilege to do? Are we satisfied with our Christian life? Not the satisfaction that merges into apathy, but rather the satisfaction that tells us we are improving every opportunity to speak God's praise to do his will and to perform his work?

Can we today say, I am dwelling in the secret place of the Most High? If we can say that the latter part of the text comes to us with infinite sweetness, and if we cannot, with a mighty inspiration.

"He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

Oh, do we understand what that abiding place is?

Do we know what it is to rise above care and anxiety and perplexity, into an atmosphere of perfect and constant rest?

Do we know what it is to leave all that is sinful and polluting here, to go up there and commune with God? A perpetual transfiguration.

Do we know what it is to stand in that shadow and see the enemies which have followed us, like angry wolves, slink back. Do we know what it is to stand there and see the waves of sin, seething and surging beneath us, but with no power to engulf us? Do we know what it is to face the great emergencies of life, when all that is dearest to us trembles in the balance and feel perfectly calm and safe because we know that God's hand holds the Balance?

If we do know what refuge, that abiding is, let us hold to it more strongly than ever. But if we do not let us never give up our efforts until we gain it. For it is the pearl of great price to which nothing else can compare.

Some people seem to think that this experience is for a favored few.

Ah, no! The Secret Place of The Most High is large enough for all humanity, and all may come to it and share its safety and joy.

THE ENCIRCLING GLOOM

By Charles A. Wells

If all the Americans who maintain some religious affiliation were to move into adjoining states, we would find that nearly half of the map of the United States would literally be designated as pagan. Yet we speak fondly of Christian America! We may be thankful that our forefathers instilled Christian principles into the life of the nation so deeply that until this day the fundamental concepts by which we live are still Christian in content. But how long can that condition last when half of our people have lost all connection with the source of our strength? Also when we add the fact that of those who maintain religious affiliations, only about a fourth or a third are loyally active to the religious affiliations they do maintain—how long can we expect our traditional religious environment to last. It is for this reason that we face dangers to our society from within—dangers that we cannot blame on the Communists. Spiritual disintegration from within is as mortal an enemy as attack from without.

Next in length of perfect attendance, Miss Grace Simons and Lonnie Hanbury each received 12-year bars. W. B. Daniels received a nine-year bar; Carlton Blades, seven-year bar; Mrs. Lonnie Hanbury and Shirley Tull, six-year bars. FUNERAL SERVICE HELD FOR DR. GRICE.

The funeral service for Dr. Luther B. Grice, pastor of the Holy Neck Christian Church, was conducted at 3 p. m., October 3, at the Hill Funeral Home in Suffolk, Virginia, by Rev. Duane N. Vore, Dr. N. G. Newman and Dr. I. W. Johnson. Burial followed in Lakeside Cemetery, Port Huron, Michigan.

Dr. Grice died in the Veterans Hospital at Kecoughtan, after an illness of over three months.

Dr. Grice had served as pastor of the Holy Neck (Nansemond County) and Eure (N. C.) Christian Churches for the last two years, living at Holland. For many years previous he served in numerous pastorates in Virginia, North Carolina, Florida and Illinois. He was a preacher of unusual poise and power, faithful in his pastoral duties, and a true servant of the church-at-large.

A son of the late W. H. and Martha Valentine Grice of Wilson County, N. C., he was graduated from Hillsdale College, Hillsdale, Michigan, and the Yale University School of Divinity. He received the degree of D. D. from Stetson University, DeLand, Florida.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Laura Haskell Grice; four sisters: Mrs. John Hyatt of Norfolk; Mrs. Lanny Lamm and Miss Lillie Grice of Kenly, N. C., and Miss Jane Grice of Durham, N. C.; and four brothers: E. P. Grice of Augusta, Ga.; W. W. Grice of Selma, N. C.; Ernest Grice of Durham, N. C., and Allan P. Grice of Four Oaks, N. C.

RALLY DAY AT BURLINGTON.

An attendance of 500 persons was set as the goal of the Sunday School of the First Christian Church, Burlington, for the annual observance of Rally Day last Sunday.

Wayne Morton, Sunday School superintendent, appointed the following committees to promote the effort:

Program committee: Rev. Henry E. Robinson, M. Z. Rhodes, and Mrs. R. W. Brannock; attendance, R. L. Cooper, Jr., John Teer, C. L. Hinshaw, Eugene Gordon, Donnell Tate, Lyman Lamm, Don Frederick, Allen Miles and Mrs. Mary Hooper; and transportation, Kendall Morton, Harold Ingle, J. A. Campbell, Curtis Blanchard and Bobby Morton.

With this excellent organization, superintendent Morton was confident the goal of 500 would be reached.

THE CHURCH AT REIDSVILLE.

Sunday, October 1, was Rally Day in the Reidsville Church. The slogan for the day was "Come to Sunday School, Stay for Church." Mr. Clem Lipscomb, Reidsville superintendent of schools, addressed the assembled Sunday school. The pastor, Rev. T. G. Humphries, used as his subject for the morning worship service, "When Discouragement Tip-toes into Your Heart."

On Saturday night, October 7, the Father and Son banquet was held. A delicious meal was served by the Woman's Auxiliary of the church. The program following featured Rev. Robert Woodruff of Ingram as the speaker—with a magician, a hill-billy and his guitar, and lots of group singing and a stunt or two thrown in. Mr. Humphries believes that it is good for the church to get together for good food, good fun, good fellowship.

Sunday, October 29, will be Boy Scout Sunday. Our troop is a year old on this day. The Scout officials of the city have been asked to attend, and certain boys will be honored at the 11 o'clock worship service, when the pastor will deliver a special youth sermon.

Another interesting feature of the fall program will be the coming revival to be held from November 19, through the 24th. Rev. Victor Murchison of Winston-Salem is to be the speaker. Mr. Jay Strickland, together with Miss Marion Foust, our minister of music, will plan the music for these services.

There is much enthusiasm being shown in the Reidsville Church for the things of God and the work of the Church.

MISS SEABURY AT WOMEN'S CONFERENCES

Ruth Isabel Seabury is a perennial favorite as a speaker for Women's Conferences. She rings the bell, stops the clock, and brings the house down. Men take a back seat when she begins to speak. Missionary concern receives a new emphasis and expression wherever she goes. No one questions her right to enter a pulpit. Her life, as well as her voice, bears eloquent testimony to the power of women in the public ministry of the Church. The women of the Southern Convention were happy in the privilege of hearing Miss Seabury tell the thrilling story of Christ and the Church in Japan.

Since she has made the rounds of the state conferences, with repeat performances in many associations, we propose something new under the sun, and through The Sun. We propose a Lend-Lease. Since Dr. Seabury has given momentum to the work of women across the country and in other continents and since they can be depended upon to run on that momentum for a while, at least, we propose that Ruth Isabel be loaned or leased, or both, to the Laymen's Fellowship. That is a new movement, understaffed and lacking the momentum which the work of women has gained through the years. Our laymen need to hear her story, feel her spiritual pulse, catch her vision. Stewardship would receive a new and powerful impetus. Let this itinerant champion of missions devote a valuable year to the laymen, go into their associations and unleash her enthusiasm for our Christian World Mission and give our men a new conception of life investment.

At any rate, the women of Virginia and Carolina had grand conferences. Commendable work has been done (witness their reports) and scads of work has been planned. The women were pleased to have Miss Seabury and, in turn, she was gratified with the program and achievements of our women.

LAYMEN'S SUNDAY

With laymen in many of our pulpits this Sunday, ministers will be able to relax in the pews. It will be a grand experience for ministers. They talk so much they are apt to neglect the art of listening. And if, perchance, the lay-preacher goes on and on like Tenyson's brook, the minister will know from immediate first-hand experience what it means to sit through a long sermon. He will be able to say with Ezekiel: "I sat where they sat"—for at least an hour, if not seven days! The theological increment of that hour may be negligible, but the psychological value will be tremendous. During subsequent hours of sermon preparation, the preacher will revert in imagination to that pew and those who sat with him. From that mental setting he will draw anew on the inexhaustible resources of the Holy Gospel.

The congregation will enjoy hearing a new voice and witnessing a different set of mannerisms. Perhaps the preacher has been guilty of harping too long and loud on one string. Now they have a reprieve, at least for one Sunday. The sermon may not be as good, but there will be other and compensating factors. Then, too, the pastor's sermon should be a better one next Sunday. If not, it will seem better and the congregation will hear their pastor with renewed interest and appreciation.

No one will profit more from the experience than the lay speaker of the occasion. The speaking engagement will impose the necessity of careful and, in some instances, stringent preparation. Reading and research will be a part of the preparation. Hitherto unknown authors will be discovered and consulted. The interest generated may lead to protracted reading. Newly-found authors may inaugurate a program of study which will extend far beyond the exigencies of the occasion. Thus some of these speakers may find a decided change in their habits of reading, a shift from the secular to the religious, a shift from the habitual reading for pastime or pleasure to the disciplined program of reading with a purpose and for profit.

LAYMEN SCORE

Calling on all American laymen to share in the efforts of the national, non-sectarian program, Religion in American Life, J. C. Penney, vice-president of the Laymen's Movement for a Christian World, Inc., says: "As the layman in his local community works with religious convictions on week days as well as Sundays, the forces which deny God's concept of man will be overcome."

The interdependence of spiritual values and everyday activities was stressed by Mr. Penney, founder of the J. C. Penney Company, in an announcement that the Laymen's Movement has become a sponsoring body of the Religion in American Life campaign.

Dr. Albert Stauffacher, minister of the Missions Council of the Congregational Christian churches, and vice chairman of the program, emphasizes the ways that the cooperating bodies could make maximum use of the program. "A major responsibility," Dr. Stauffacher says, "rests with the churches to grasp this opportunity to make the program function successfully. Since this important emphasis on religion is backed by national agencies, we will need full cooperation and support of the whole nation, and we should all take advantage of this great opportunity."

Dr. Stauffacher suggests four basic steps to be followed by denominational leaders in order to receive full benefit of the program. These are: (1) Fully acquaint every pastor with Religion in American Life through endorsement and support. (2) Promotional and publicity leaders should tell the RIAL story effectively to their people. (3) Encourage all pastors to secure, to read, to use and to distribute all promotional materials. (4) Encourage churches to use the month of November to conduct their Every Member Canvass or other similar activity.

The movement has a two-fold purpose: to emphasize the importance of religion and religious institutions in personal and community life and to urge everyone to attend and support the church or synagogue of his choice. Through the press, radio and display advertising, intensive attention will be directed towards the place of religion in national life, centering around the campaign theme: "Take your problems to church this week—millions leave them there!"

Throughout the nation more than 5,000 communities are organizing to conduct local programs based on the national movement directed by Earle B. Pleasant with headquarters at 214 East 21st Street, New York City.

The religious institutions of six American communities have been selected for national awards in recognition of their outstanding accomplishments in increasing church attendance and funds during the 1948-49 season.

Each year the program's Achievement Award Committee honors those communities which organize the most effective campaigns based on the Religion In American Life program whose two-fold purpose is to emphasize the importance of religious institutions and to urge all Americans to attend the church or synagogue of their individual choice.

Petersburg, Va., was picked as the outstanding city of the South for its vigorous efforts in focusing community attention on the importance of religion and religious institutions in community life, with special mention for the significant increase in church attendance during the campaign. Of the 76 churches cooperating in the local Religion In American Life program 26 reported a 5,000 increased attendance at the end of the program.

What has been done in Petersburg could be done in other cities and communities.

A Layman Speaks

Jesus and Paul both taught that the grace of giving is one of the necessary, spontaneous outflowerings of Christian character. One simply cannot be a genuine follower of the Master unless he is demonstrating his joy in and gratitude to God by regularly investing an important part of himself, both his time and his substance, in the work of the Kingdom. Accordingly, the raising of money for the work of the church is a spiritual, rather than a material, enterprise; the dollars collected are incidental and of secondary importance.

Any church which is largely dependent upon a few wealthy givers is in an unhealthy condition, for three reasons: First, the man whose gift has become indispensable, either consciously or unconsciously, tends to exert a proportionate veto power—there are pastors whose unsealed lips could tell some tragic stories. Second, the loss of such a giver, either by death or by removal, cripples the church. Third, the church member of average means tends to feel relieved of the responsibility for doing his share. Possibly this last consideration is the most serious.

In every church, the number of members (many of them still attending services) who, for some reason or on some pretext, make no pledges, can be regarded as little less than an ecclesiastical scandal. There may be exceptional cases; but I make bold to suggest that any church family which is so hard-pressed that it cannot afford to contribute, is in such straits as to require financial assistance from the church itself, and the deacons would do well to investigate the case with that thought in mind. When the head of the family loses his job or suffers other reverses, one of the first results, all too often, is the cancellation of the church pledge, even though the telephone, the automobile and music lessons remain intact. Is religion so much more a luxury than these tangibles that it should be thrown overboard at the first squall? I have always assumed that when Jesus, in the much debated passage in the twenty-third chapter of the Gospel of St. John, asked Peter the searching question, "Lovest thou me more than these?", he was referring to the fish lying on the fire of coals. But entirely aside from this, is there any time when a man needs to practice his religion more completely than in the midst of trouble?

In the church of which I am a member, only one out of every three subscribers to current expenses, makes any pledge for the benevolence program; and I believe that is a fair average for our Congregational Christian churches. If so, is not this a major scandal? It is difficult to perceive how any conscientious reader of the New Testament could confine his religious interest and activity to his own parish. Entirely aside from that, however, I venture seriously to raise the question whether a subscription to the running expenses of the local church may properly be classified as a gift at all. If the essence of a gift is the parting with something of value without any intention or expectation of a direct return, then the money which we contribute for the purchase of good preaching, acceptable music, a comfortable sanctuary, religious education for our children, etc., is hardly more than a quid pro quo; for which we receive full value. It is only when we pioneer into the realm of contributing to benevolences, most of which could not possibly bring us any return, except in spiritual satisfaction, that we are dealing with the grace of giving in the deepest sense of the term.

Like most worth-while things in life, the joy of intelligent giving is a matter of education—slow as that process must be. We have a denominational Commission on Stewardship which is more than glad to suggest plans and organization for such a project.

The technique used in most churches for conduct of the Every Member Canvass is capable of considerable improvement. There are, however, a few underlying suggestions that ought to be carried in mind. The work naturally falls into two parts, namely the training (both technical and spiritual) of the canvassers, and the approach to the canvasees (to use an extremely non-Websterian word). Canvassers should be paired with the greatest care so as to bring together men who are well acquainted with each other or who represent different types of thought. The young men should be drafted and paired with older men. It is astonishing how the bonds of fellowship can be strengthened by an afternoon's unselfish work with a man of different age-group or point of view. Every home in the parish should be called upon, even those in which there is no likelihood or possibility of a pledge; and the approach in every instance should be with the spirit that the church is far more interested in the family called upon than in anything they may give.

Any church which seriously and prayerfully undertakes a problem of

SUGGESTIONS FOR LAYMEN'S WORK

WHAT A LAYMAN CAN DO.

The Laymen's Movement for a Christian World, Incorporated, suggests the following things in these critical times:

1. Have faith in God, in man, in yourself. Faith is the ultimate victory of right over wrong. Have faith in our leaders and in God's ability to use them for his purpose.

2. Be an island of calm confidence in a world of turmoil—not blind wishful thinking, but belief in the power for right of a God who cares.

3. Be friendly to everyone you meet. Throw a pebble of kindness into the pool of human relations to help overcome hatred.

4. Pray repeatedly, realizing that you are using an overwhelming power for good. Use spot prayers more and more frequently during the day to try to beneficially condition destructive situations.

5. Practice the exclusion of doubt and fear from the mind. Keep a record of constructive thoughts put into words during the day and of destructive thoughts not uttered. Be sure the balance at evening is on the positive side.

6. Develop the consciousness that there is a constructive answer—no matter how depressing events may seem.

7. Look upon yourself as a child of God, made in his image—then love your neighbor as yourself.

* * *

We wish they might add one more—Throw your life completely into some local church. A perfect, peaceful world won't come about in our day, perhaps, and long after we are gone, the Christian Church, universal, will long remain. We should build it strong now.

* * * * *

WHAT OUR CHURCHES NEED MOST.

Our churches need active laymen—not merely a few "pillars of the church," but every man, 100% active. Laymen with conviction and enthusiasm for the church can stir our churches more profoundly than any series of revivals ever could do. We need hundreds of such men where now we have only a handful.

Two major approaches are necessary, in my opinion, to accomplish this. One is more effective Christian education for adults; the other is organization to achieve the educational objectives. Let us look at organization first, because that is something two or three determined men can accomplish for a state within one year: We have tried it in Nebraska and find it successful.

1. Make full use of the National Laymen's Committee and the Executive Director.

2. Use an executive committee of a few officers and the state superintendent to function as the top level group in the laymen's work of your state.

3. Use field directors (non salaried laymen) to serve three to seven churches. A field director (or whatever you may call him) is generally informed about the denomination, its facilities and personnel. He does not know all the answers, but visits each church at least annually and sees that it is an active participant in the state and National Laymen's Fellowship.

4. Encourage district associations to have association fellowships. Whenever an association is inactive the field directors should arrange suitable meetings.

5. Every local church should be actively affiliated with the state organization. The Nebraska State Fellowship elects one man in each church as a correspondent to the State Committee. Normally, it is the chairman of the local fellowship or brotherhood. If there is no organized men's group, the church board or minister is requested to nominate someone. The correspondent is formally elected by the state organization. Vacancies between elections are filled by appointments from the state officers.

With this organization, laymen are in position to make effective use of the best educational techniques, materials, and leadership. I recommend four emphases in Christian education for laymen.

(a) Every man, over 18 years of age, needs to sit down with the other men in his local church and "think" about the basic concepts and problems of Christianity. I do not know of an effective program to meet this need but hope to have something to offer after another year.

(b) Every man should look over his church and see where he can make the most worthwhile contribution. He should tithe his time for the church.

(c) Every man should spread the good news; that is, he should evangelize. Get other men to join your church. Get the church members to attend regularly. Double the attendance. Double the church membership.

(d) Every man should examine his Christian stewardship. Excellent aids for the local church are available. Ask your state office about planned education for the Every Member Canvass. Get your church to double its benevolence giving next year.

There are other worthwhile goals and techniques but I suggest the above to be what our churches need most now.

Member, National Committee,

VACATION SCHOOLS AT SEAGROVE-ETHER-SHADY GROVE CHARGE.

Vacation School was held at Seagrove Christian Church, June 12-16. The attendance was 74 with 25 having perfect attendance and 13 missing only one day.

A closing program was given on Sunday evening, June 18. An interesting factor was that six Latvian children, who could not speak English very well, entered into the school with genuine interest and appreciativeness. They helped us with their courtesy, appreciativeness, and deep worshipfulness and we tried to help them with American idioms, games, and food.

The Beginner Department was taught by Misses Doris Owen and Martha Luck; the Primary Department by Mrs. T. D. Sutton and Miss Evelyn King; the Junior Department by Mrs. Blanche Spencer, assisted by a Latvian interpreter, Miss Rita Vosecalns; and the Junior High Department by the pastor. Miss Helen Farlow served as Pianist.

Ether Christian Church Vacation School was held June 19-23. There were 43 on roll with an average attendance of 36. There were 27 students with perfect attendance and five others who only missed one day.

A closing program was given on June 23 after a delicious picnic was served. Highlight of the school was the excellent way in which all classes seemed to have a true reverence and appreciation of worshipping God.

The Beginner Department was taught by Miss Betty Floyd; the Primary Department by the director; (Continued on page 15.)

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

ELON'S FUTURE.

Should you drive from the heart of the city of Norfolk, Virginia, out Granby Street, toward Ocean View, by and by you would come to DePaul Hospital, which is a Catholic institution. Adjoining the grounds of the hospital is another elaborate and very beautiful building. Over the entrance of this building is inscribed, "Norfolk Catholic High School."

The Catholics pay taxes as all other citizens pay taxes. In addition, they tax themselves to educate the children and the youth of their church. There are two very fine high schools in Norfolk, Virginia, to which any child of high school age, with preparation, may enter without charge. The Catholics prefer to build and support their own high school, which includes the expense of administration.

Sixty to one hundred years ago, practically every protestant denomination in different states built and maintained what they called institutes, academies, or seminaries. The first school recognized by the Christians in the South was Junto Academy, located near Concord Church in Orange County. Later, our people, or representatives of our church, built and conducted the Graham Normal Institute. Concurrently with Graham Institute, our church recognized and gave some support to Suffolk Collegiate Institute, Suffolk, Virginia. The state began its extended program of instruction in our public schools, including all grades through high school requirements. The state-supported high schools paralleled denominational institutes, academies, and seminaries. It was only a matter of time before the state-supported high schools completely supplanted the church's program of instruction at the high school level. Today, we do not have any of these educational units comparable to high school requirements supported by the church. They have all disappeared. We do have military schools in some of our states. These, however, are private institutions, privately-owned, and privately-conducted. A sufficient tuition is charged to pay the cost of conducting these schools.

At present, we have in this country a dual system of education-state-supported and privately-endowed institutions. Prior to World War II, the support given state schools and universities was not sufficient to challenge the existence of the privately-endowed or church-related college. During and since the war, such enormous sums of money were appropriated for the support of state schools as to justify unprecedented expansion of these schools, equipment, and personnel. Dormitories, libraries, gymnasiums, and every conceivable facility are being provided for our tax-supported schools, and such funds for instruction that enable these schools to pay salaries in excess of what the average small, church-supported college is able to pay.

These conditions exist today, and they challenge not only the efficiency but the continuance of our church-related colleges. This presents to our democratic civilization a serious problem. It may not seem to be serious now, but eventually the seriousness of the now-existing situation will become evident.

I am writing to call to the attention of our church constituency these salient facts. Elon College is plainly in the hands of our church people, and I trust on their hearts. The church is the only agency that we have that can do anything for Elon College.

Other denominations are coming to the rescue of their colleges in a very fine way. The Western North Carolina Methodist Conference in session in Asheville, North Carolina, September 22, faced squarely, fearlessly, and generously the existing conditions of their colleges in North Carolina and endeavored to provide in a measure for their future. This conference voted to contribute to their institutions of higher learning in this state a total sum of $1,500,000, and memorialized the Eastern North Carolina Methodist Conference to raise a total of $1,000,000 at its session in Kinston, North Carolina, November 1, making a total of $2,500,000 to be raised by the methodists in the State of North Carolina for their four colleges, to be allocated as follows:

Greensboro College, $600,000; High Point College, $800,000; Brevard Junior College, $700,000, and Lewisburg Junior College, $400,000.

These amounts were voted, notwithstanding the fact that they have recently received some $3,000,000 for these colleges from the $25,000,000 campaign conducted by the Methodists in this country.

The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, in session at Oakland Church, Chuckatuck, Virginia, in May of this year, requested the churches of the Southern Convention to raise a total of $15,000 annually for Elon College on apportionments for the next two years. At the same time, it authorized the officials of the Convention to inaugurate a Sustaining Fund from which it hoped the college might receive a total of $1 per member for the entire membership of the Convention. It is not for the college to say that the churches must raise these amounts, but it is the earnest hope of those directly connected with the college that our churches will raise these entire amounts. They are essential for the continuance of our college. The future of Elon College is in our hands—the hand of our church. What are we going to do about it?

A CHRISTIAN LAYMAN WRITES.

More and more interest is being shown in the Sustaining-Fund effort. That, of course, is all to the good. The other day we received a letter from one of our outstanding laymen, who is not an alumnus of Elon College, and who asks that his name be withheld. He says:

"The average of $1.00 per member for this fund seems to me entirely reasonable, and I am very sure that our church can readily take care of the matter if it is well advertised. The suggestions of systems in advertising coming direct from the college, through the Elon College choir, the literature and possibly the pictures, would be of real help, but I think it will take someone of your ability to put it across. The scholarship offered to churches which reach their goals is of real interest, and we might be able to help some worthy young man or young woman get a start at Elon.

"I want you to know that you can depend on my cooperation. Of course, I, myself, would like to give much more than $1.00, and I think I can make you this proposition, that I would personally contribute $1.00 for each member of our church who really for financial reasons could not easily make such contribution. Furthermore, I realize that there are at David Van Jackson, second son of Rev. and Mrs. Richard L. Jackson, born October 1, 1950, Union Hospital, Foochow, China. The Jacksons have received permission to leave China and expect to return to America as soon as Mrs. Jackson is able to travel and transportation is available.

THE MISSION OF THE CHURCH IN KOREA.

American churches should launch an immediate drive to collect funds for relief work in Korea, the policy committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America recommends.

The agency includes representatives of 99 foreign mission boards and societies in 54 major Protestant denominations in the U. S. and Canada. Its policy committee acted on recommendations set forth by a recent emergency meeting on the Far East.

At the same time, the committee said the collection of clothing and other supplies while eventually needed should wait shipping facilities.

For the administration of church relief in Korea, the committee requested that a "unified voluntary relief program" be established, similar to the set up under LARA (Licensed Agencies for Relief in Asia) in Japan. LARA, it was explained, includes all private relief agencies operating in Japan, including those of the church, both Catholic and Protestant, labor and other private groups.

In another resolution, the Foreign Missions Conference pledged support to other church agencies engaged in promoting a series of conferences devoted to problems arising from the church's relation to Communism, Syncretism, and political Roman Catholicism in "strategic world areas."

Syncretism, it was explained by a spokesman for the Conference, is the tendency on the part of some Christian groups, mainly in southeast Asia, "to dilute their religion with a country's dominant faith in order to gain acceptance and avoid discrimination and to indentify their faith with nationalistic aspirations."

Conferences dealing with these three movements, the resolution stated, were designed to formulate a "crisis strategy" and "to fortify the churches against all contingencies of further national and international conflicts."

A resolution on the Point IV program urged the churches to maintain their "historic position" by avoiding any solicitation of government funds for mission projects abroad. On the other hand, the resolution said that in the event such funds were offered by the government, they should be given "favorable consideration" only under the following condition:

(1) "The terms of the grant should not hamper missionary purposes, create suspicion or tend to alienate the people of the country where the project is located;

(2) "The project concerned should be initiated at the request of the recipient country and carried on with its full cooperation;

(3) "The services requested in return for the proposed grant should be specifically stated;

(4) "And the grant should be approved by the government within whose bounds the project is carried on."

MISSIONARY PHYSICIAN DIES.

Dr. James B. McCord, M. D., L. R. C. P., M. R. C. S., distinguished veteran Congregational Christian medical missionary of the American Board in Africa for over 40 years and founder of the McCord Zulu Hospital, the first hospital for Africans in Natal Province, died recently at the age of 80 in his home at Oakham, Mass.

Dr. McCord began his medical work in the kitchen of his small home in Durban, South Africa. His operating table was a scrubbed kitchen table which he built himself at the cost of five shillings. Today a 325 bed modern hospital plant bearing his name stands in the city of Durban as a memorial to this American M. D. It has a staff of White, Indian and African doctors and nurses.

Dr. McCord not only established in 1909 the first hospital for black people in Natal, but later introduced the training of African nurses, midwives and medical aids. For years he studied the witch doctor and medicine man and urged upon the medical profession of South Africa the need to train native young men in medicine and license them to practice among their own people. Deep seated prejudice kept him from making much progress for a long time, but in 1935 the South African Government adopted a Medical Native Service for the Union almost identical to what Dr. McCord had urged 20 years earlier.

In 1937, in accordance with American Board policy to make the work it founds autonomous as soon as possible, McCord Zulu Hospital was turned over to a local Board of Directors made up of prominent Durban business and professional men. The present head of the hospital is another American Board missionary doctor, Alan B. Taylor, M. D. of New York State.

Born in Toulon, Illinois, Dr. McCord was a graduate of Oberlin College (1891) and Northwestern University (M.D. 1894). He retired from active service in 1940.

Dr. McCord affectionately known as "Dr. Jim" began his Christian medical work among the Zulus in 1899, amid an atmosphere of criticism and racial antagonism. "Your father is nothing but a 'kaffir' doctor," cried a small white boy to Dr. McCord's equally small white son when the doctor began relieving suffering among the Zulus. "He may be a kaffir doctor but he is a jolly good doctor, and you should be lucky if you could have him to take care of you," was the spirited reply.

Dr. McCord often said that some of his success in bucking opposition in those early days came from his "fighting Irish blood." The philosophy of this kindly American missionary doctor was illustrated in a comment made after a difficult trip into the bush. "It was a hard night's work, but very satisfactory. It always is, you know, when you save a life and relieve suffering."

Dr. McCord answered many calls from the kraals often driving in the middle of the night by wagon and later by auto over rough trails to operate often on a mud floor by the light of an electric torch while dozens of pairs of eyes stared at him from

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE MEETS.

The North Carolina Woman's Conference met on October 5, at Liberty Vance Church, near Henderson, N. C. About 300 women represented different churches. According to registration cards, 42 churches out of 70 were represented, leaving 28 not represented. Representatives according to Districts and Churches were:

Asheboro District—Albemarle, 7; Asheboro 12; Pleasant Ridge, 4; Pleasant Hill, 4; No church, 1. Total 28.

Burlington District—Burlington, First, 6; Bethel, 5; Concord, 3; Elon, 3; Haw River, 5; Long's Chapel, 5; Mt. Zion, 2; Shallow Ford, 3; Union, 8. Total 40.

Greensboro District—Apple's Chapel, 7; Greensboro, First, 13; Happy Home, 5; Hines Chapel, 6; Palm Street, 9; Reidsville, 11; Salem Chapel, 6; Winston-Salem, 2. Total 59.

Halifax District—Hebron, 4; Ingram, 6; Pleasant Grove, 3; Union, 7. Total 20

Henderson District—Franklin Parish, 1; Fuller's Chapel, 8; Henderson, 16; Liberty (Vance), 26; Mt. Auburn, 12; New Hope, 2; Union Chapel, 1; Youngsville, 4; No church, 1. Total 71

Raleigh District—No Registration cards were turned in by the District Superintendent. I know of 8 people there from Raleigh and Durham.

Sanford District—Hank's Chapel, 6; Sanford, 8; Shallow Well, 5; Southern Pines, 5; Turner's Chapel, 1. Total 25.

This was a very good attendance and good representation, but a number of churches will not have all their material for this year and will not know what to do because they were not represented and did not get the mimeographed information sheets provided for each church. The following churches should write to the Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., and ask for a copy of the mimeographed reports prepared for the N. C. Woman's Conference:

Flint Hill, Liberty, Pleasant Grove, Randleman, Smithwood, Spoon's Chapel in the Asheboro District.

Berea, Bethlehem, Carolina, Hope-dale, Mebane, Pleasant Hill, Providence Memorial in the Burlington District.

Asheville, Belew Creek, Monticello, Mt. Bethel, Pleasant Ridge, Tryon in the Greensboro District.

Liberty and Lynchburg in the Halifax District.

Beulah, Mt. Gilead in the Henderson District.

Amelia, Chapel Hill in the Raleigh District.

Hope Mills, Mt. Pleasant in the Sanford District.

(Hint to District Superintendents: Check on this when you have your President's meetings or contact your local presidents.)

Getting back to the Conference, the highlight of the day was Miss Ruth Isabel Seabury, who gave her impressions of the Japanese people after spending a year and a half there. In her forceful and most interesting manner she described the great opportunity in Japan for the Christian church—the greatest opportunity we have ever had in the Orient. She also expressed through touching stories the appreciation of the Japanese people for boxes sent them from church people. She climaxed her talk with a presentation of the plan for the International Christian University in Japan and the need for American Christians to support it. The offering for the morning was designated for this purpose and Miss Seabury closed with a prayer of dedication for the offering.

Throughout the day the packet, Thank Offering, Friendly Service,

Study Books, and the work of different Departments were presented by those responsible for those departments. An interesting report on the Agape Work Camp was given by Max Vestal.

The Conference will meet next year in the Ingram Church.

REPORT OF RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE.

Resolved:

1. That our 1950 Thank Offering be used for the renovating and re-decorating of Whitley Auditorium at Elon College.

2. That our Friendly Service gifts be sent to Franklinton Center, to Migrant Centers, and to the Near East. We particularly recommend that we help our North Carolina migrants this year.

3. That each church woman's group re-study its financial goal and increase it as much as possible. This is to help in the expansion of our work and the increasing need for funds for mission work.

4. That we adopt the new "Guides to Progress" as prepared by the Convention Committee, and use these in the place of our "Achievement Goals." A copy of these Guides has been mailed to each local woman's president.

5. That we pay the expense of the North Carolina Woman's Conference President to the Biennial Session of (Continued on page 13.)

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

For Boys and Girls . . .

October makes us think of trees with their falling leaves, pumpkins to hollow and to eat, and wise old owls. Do you know a song that sometimes appears in Song books that goes like this:

When beneath the oaks I prowled
Who—Who, ask the owl.
Pleasantly I call my name—but
He says Who—just the same.

I don't know who wrote the song but it is a for-fun and the author knew the language of old owls!

For Teachers . . .

Mrs. Carl Key of Durham writes about a worthwhile activity in church life for children.

DO YOU HAVE CHILDREN'S CHURCH?

One question which arises among parents of young children is that of the wisdom and desirability of making children attend the Sunday morning church service. Most conscientious mothers and fathers are anxious to have their children establish habits of church loyalty which they hope will be lifelong. One can only commend such an attitude. However, there is grave doubt in the minds of some that we are accomplishing the desired results. Many feel we are going about the problem the wrong way.

How many adults remember their own childhood and recall with what boredom they sat or squirmed through the church hour? The pew was uncomfortable for small bodies, the vocabulary foreign, and the sermon far beyond the understanding of young minds. Children of elementary age are not accustomed to sit still for a whole hour or more, especially when there is nothing to interest their minds and bodies. Consequently they swing their feet and kick the pew or lean up against the nearest adult and take a nap. Perhaps some adults do not realize or care to admit what undesirable habits they acquired under such conditions; habits of daydreaming, of planning the next week's activities, or of thinking about the dinner soon to be prepared. Feelings of utter rebellion and infrequent attendance or complete absence may have resulted.

We do not send kindergarten, primary and junior boys and girls to college or theological seminaries. Most churches have a graded church school, but apparently we still expect children to attend and comprehend a worship service which is almost without exception on the adult level.

Some ministers do make an attempt to consider the needs of the younger members of the congregation by delivering a junior sermon or telling a story. In some cases, the children's choir is given an occasional opportunity to sing, thereby giving them a share in the worship service. This is a step in the right direction but when leadership and equipment are available, we should go further.

When we make a garment for a child who wears a size 8, we do not use a size 18 pattern. Why, then, do we not use spiritual patterns to fit the spiritual understanding of our children?

Because of their concern over this problem, many churches are promoting special, separate services of worship, study, music and creative activities during the Sunday worship hour. Here children learn appropriate worship materials selected from the Scriptures, sing songs, listen to stories they can understand, and write prayers and litanies which are an expression of their own religious experiences. They may study for a few weeks some phase of our missionary program. Perhaps here we have our greatest opportunity to plant the seeds of world friendship and international understanding. It may be a small beginning but Jesus did not underestimate the power of the tiny mustard seed and used that idea to illustrate how the kingdom of God can grow if we but plant and cultivate.

Church which is really for children then becomes a happy experience which is likely to result in more wholesome attitudes when they begin to "put away childish things."

THE TWINS TAKE A TRIP.

By EDNA ATKIN PEPPER.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Mom," called Jack Robbins, "do you know where my leather jacket is? the one that zips?"

"Why yes. But isn't that wool plaid heavy enough for this weather?"

"The wind blows right through it. I'd like to have the other one handy in case I should need it. Bill would like his, too."

A few minutes later the boys, who were twins, followed their mother to the storeroom and watched her unpack their jackets. Seeing their helmets, they decided to take those, also.

"Where is the heavy underwear and that kind of stuff?" inquired Bill.

"It's deeper in the box, in moth crystals," replied his mother. "But you don't need those garments yet."

"Now, why do those boys want their heavy jackets and helmets so early? It isn't that cold," protested Mrs. Robbins to her husband when they were alone.

The family were living in the dry West, and the twins, who were thirteen, were dreadfully homesick for their old home surroundings—the wooded hills and the creek, with water in it, that flowed through the green meadows.

After his wife's remark, Mr. Robbins watched his boys more closely. He was accustomed to seeing them with their heads together, but not as often as they were now. When he found Bill stuffing his pockets with extra socks and handkerchiefs, one afternoon after school, and Jack overhauling his bicycle, the light of understanding suddenly dawned on him.

"How would you boys like to go on a camping trip before it gets any colder?" he proposed at the supper table, his eyes fixed on the piece of bread he was buttering with special care. "You both worked hard all summer; perhaps you'd like to go to the big dam for a little fishing."

Jack and Bill exchanged glances.

"When?" asked Jack.

"There won't be any school this coming Monday and Tuesday because of the Teachers' Institute," explained Father. "That would give you a nice, long week end, wouldn't it?"

"Yes, it would," agreed Bill thoughtfully.

It was midnight on the following Tuesday, when Mr. Robbins went hastily downstairs to answer the doorbell. He sighed with relief as the sudden glare of the porch light revealed the dirty faces and bedraggled persons of his wandering offspring.

"Hello, there!" he greeted hospitably as he flung the door wide open.

Youth at Work in the Church

MAX VESTAL, Elon College, N. C.

MISS ANN TRUITT, Associate

A LETTER TO THE YOUTH.

Dear Friends:

"Never mind, grandmother," said the preacher who had just finished his farewell sermon, "the conference will send you a better preacher." "That's what they promised last time, but they didn't do it," the old lady sobbed. I don't suppose anyone has promised you a better editor for the Youth Page this year, and perhaps that is fortunate for me. The officers and I do, however, hope to make this page an interesting and helpful one for you. We would welcome your suggestions and your news. An editor with nothing to edit is pretty helpless. Just send your news to: Max Vestal, Box 792, Elon College, N. C.

An old mother elephant was walking down a road and spied a nest of young partridges, whose mother had gone for food. Pitying the poor little partridges, apparently abandoned, her great mother heart prompted her to go to the nest—and sit on it. This is the way lots of oldsters treat youngsters in the church. We can be very thankful that we aren't treated in this fashion. Since we aren't being set upon, it is time for us to flap our wings and get into action. We can let everyone know that we're alive through this page. First of all, make news; then send it to us. Okay?

Yours,

MAX VESTAL.

TO ALL WHO HELPED WITH SUMMER CAMPS AND CONFERENCES.

Dear Friends:

At this late date I should like to write a word of appreciation to you all for your good help this summer. The conferences and camps were all fine, I thought, and I am very greatly pleased.

There was hardly any overlapping of faculty and students, which means we reached a large number of people. There were an even hundred at the new Junior High Camp in Eastern Virginia, held at the Y. M. C. A. camp at Bayside; 106 at the Senior High and Older Young People's Conference at Elon College; 25 at the Officers and Counselors Camp at Crabtree; 38 at the new camp for Junior Boys and Girls at Crabtree Camp; 42 at the grand new Family Camp at Crabtree; 74 at the North Carolina Junior High Camp also held at Crabtree, and 94 in the Valley of Virginia Camp held at Powell's Fort, Virginia. This makes a total of 479. We should also include the large attendance of women at the Elon College School of Missions (Mrs. J. G. Truitt, chairman) to complete the picture of summer conferences and camps in the Southern Convention this year.

You will all be interested to know that we had a fine representation at the National Pilgrim Fellowship Council at Downer College, Milwaukee, in June, and at the National Student Conference at Elmhurst College in Illinois.

It is impossible to estimate the value of this kind of experience. I am sure it meant more than we know to all the young people, and I hope it will mean renewed interest on their part in the local churches.

Thank you again for your help and interest. A good year to you as the fall's work begins. I hope you had a good vacation!

Sincerely,

PATTIE LEE COGHILL.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

GROWING THROUGH PRAYER.

LESSON IV—OCTOBER 22, 1950

MEMORY SELECTION: I tell you, Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and you shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.—Luke 11:9.

LESSON: Matthew 6:9-13; Luke 11:9-13; Philippians 1:3-11.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 6:5-15.

A Required Subject.

Prayer is a "required subject" in the Christian life. One just cannot grow if he does not pray. Indeed, one cannot live a Christian life if he does not pray. Prayer is the vital breath of the Christian. There are some things that are "electives" in the great school of Christian living, but prayer is not one of them. The main reason why there are so many weak and stumbling and defeated Christians is because so many of them have never learned to pray, have never practiced prayer, have never mastered the technique and the art of prayer. This series of lessons on Growing in the Christian Life would be incomplete indeed if the Lesson Committee had not included this lesson on Prayer.

"After This Manner Therefore Pray Ye."

Jesus never argued about prayer. He accepted it as a basic habit of the Christian life, and personally he practiced it as naturally as he ate and breathed. He invited and urged his disciples to pray. And he gave them a pattern of prayer, which we often mistakenly call "The Lord's Prayer," but which is really "The Model Prayer." Practically every Christian "knows it by heart," and even small children early learn it as a part of their Christian heritage.

"After this manner therefore pray ye." Not in these words, not always in this order, not always in this style; but basically after this pattern and in keeping with these principles: Reverence for God's name, and in recognition of God's Fatherhood of all men, as well as in recognition of his spiritual nature; eagerness and earnestness concerning the coming of the Kingdom, and the willingness to subordinate our desires and our wills to the coming of that Kingdom; faith in the fact that God is concerned about our needs and his willingness to supply them day by day; a sense of sin and the spirit of penitence, and also the willingness to forgive others; a desire to avoid evil unnecessarily and a desire for help when it must be encountered; and a spirit of humility and adoration that ascribes to God the glory. The Model Prayer emphasizes sincerity, social-mindedness, secrecy, supplication, shortness, sanctity and submission. Above all it emphasizes simplicity. Most of its words are words of one syllable. Real eloquence in prayer comes from sincerity and simplicity, and not from high-sounding words and phrases.

Incentives to Prayer.

Jesus gave men a great incentive to prayer. He boldly stated that the heavenly Father was more eager to give to his children than they were willing to receive. In homely language he told his hearers that as fathers they would not give their children a stone for a loaf of bread, a serpent for a fish, or a scorpion for an egg. If they, with all their ignorance and limitations were so concerned about their children, how much more was their heavenly Father concerned about his children, and able to give good gifts to them. To be sure he did not always give what his children wanted, but he could be counted upon to give them what they needed. Furthermore prayer was not a spasmodic thing, that is not at its best. "Ask and it shall be given you, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened" takes on new meaning and new significance when we learn that the verbs should be translated, "keep on asking, keep on seeking, keep on knocking." The man who simply asked God for some specific thing and did not get it and then stopped praying, is not a very good guide to the prayer life. Prayer to be effective must be constant, consistent, continuing.

"A Praying Man."

Paul was a praying man, a man of prayer. The story of his life, and the letters which he wrote reveal what a large place prayer had in his life. In the section of his letter to the Philippians which is a part of today's lesson, we get an insight into the prayer life of the man. Philippians is a delightful bit of spiritual literature. Paul loved the people of this Church and he writes to them in an intimate, personal way. And as he writes his heart overflows with affection and emotion. He tells them how he thanked God upon every remembrance of them—thanksgiving had a prominent place in the prayers of Paul as in the prayers of the Master. There was a note of joy in his prayer—"making my application with joy" he says. He tells them he has them in his heart, and that he yearned for them in a tender way. And then he tells them about some of the things which he was praying for in their behalf: that their "love might abound yet more and more in knowledge and all discernment"—love can sometimes be so unintelligent, both as concerning our fellowmen and as concerning God. He prays that they "approve the things that are excellent," that they might cultivate a taste for the best things of life. He prays that they may be "sincere and void of offence until the day of Christ," that they might lead genuine, sincere Christian lives, worthy of the high calling wherewith they had been called. He prays that they "being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are through Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God"—he wants their profession to find expression in performance, he prays that they may bring forth the fruits of righteousness, and in so doing to glorify God.

All the objectives and objects of prayer are not listed here, not by a long way. There were times when Paul prayed for material things for his friends. But the chief emphasis in his prayers was upon thanksgiving to God, and supplication for the things that would enable his friends to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. Like his Master, Paul did not spin out a long argument in behalf of prayer. In fact he did not spin out any argument. He simply took prayer for granted, and prayed. And his faith in prayer was confirmed by the wonderful way in which God ministered unto him and to his friends in the things of the Spirit.

VALUES.

In these days of rising cost it's hard to judge the value of things in relation to our present dollar. We seem to have no standard to anchor to any more. I hope someone doesn't get hold of the Bureau of Standards pound by which we judge the weight of everything and start cutting chunks off of it or hack the standard one foot rule the Bureau of Standards guards so carefully and whittle it down so it will only take two or three inches to make a foot, because if they do I'll have an awful hard time knowing what measurement to put on my machine blue prints like the trouble I'm having now trying to keep the sales price right.

Two days ago, we took an order for a couple of hundred thousand dollars worth of machinery and today they tell me the most expensive item used in the order will go up twelve per cent inside of ten days and there's no chance to get delivery until after the price rise, so we're stuck.

This country was started by God-fearing men and I believe that is what has made it what it is today, but I'm wondering if our standard of morals hasn't been shrinking a little too. I think there is a connection between our spiritual standards and our material standards. One thing sure, material values are not realistic, they are imaginary. They are as unstable as the stock market, which when men think it's worth more it goes up, or if they think it's worth less it goes down. The physical assets do not change so much but men's thinking changes and that changes the value.

What is needed today is to work a little harder for spiritual values. They will stand the test of time. It's nice to have a few ten dollar bills in your pocket, but their value can fade out. I want values that will last. The ten dollar bill has an imaginary value. It's only worth what you think it's worth. Whenever people think it's not worth ten dollars, it won't be. That's why I say it has an imaginary value. We hope the time will never come when you have to carry a whole bag full of money to buy a meal in this country like it has in other countries. Of course gold has stood the test of time better than any other material but what is gold really worth. I know the value of chromium, vanadium, molybdenum, and nickel because a small amount can double the strength of my steel, but I don't find that gold would help any. We dig it out of the ground and then bury it back in a vault in the ground again. What good does it do there. Suppose we stretch our imagination a little and presume that this great gob of gold at Fort Knox, on account of the weight of its mass should suddenly sink to the center of the earth, but the guards still stood outside and everybody still thought it was there. I expect we'd do business just the same. And if just thinking it's there is all that's needed, then I say it has an imaginary value, too. I want to work harder for the values that are real and will stand the test of time and of eternity, namely spiritual values.—R. G. LeTourneau.

When the McCords came home to retire the whole city of Durban, South Africa, paid them tribute. Said the Durban Natal Daily: "... it is not often that a single individual even after 40 years of effort can lay aside his work and know that his name has become a byword among a foreign race a byword signifying serve to humanity. Dr. McCord ... has contributed perhaps more than anyone else to the health and uplift of the Bantu people. ... "

Dr. McCord leaves his wife, the former Margaret Mellen, born of missionary parents in Africa, and four children: Mrs. J. W. Parsons, Oakham, Mass.; Robert L. McCord, Baraboo, Wisconsin; Dr. William M. McCord, Charleston, South Carolina, and Mrs. Charles Nixon, Los Angeles, California.

Private funeral services for family and close friends were held Sunday afternoon, October 8, at 2:00 o'clock in the Snyder and Britton Funeral Parlors, Barre, Mass.

NEWS FROM SOCIETES.MT. CARMEL.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Christian Church has finished its year's work with all requirements met, and hoping to make the honor roll.

We met with all other churches of the field for "World Day of Prayer," and had a joint meeting with Franklin Society for foreign mission study, which was reviewed by Pattie Lee Coghill.

Our home mission study was taught by our pastor's wife, Mrs. Clark, at which time we enjoyed a fellowship dinner, each member bringing a covered dish.

There have been flowers and cards sent to sick members, a box of clothing to the Orphanage at Easter time, also, a box of miscellaneous articles to the Indians, which was our friendly service project.

The society has taken a life membership in honor of our pastor, Ellis Clark.

With a society as small as ours, although we have enrolled a few new members, we feel that our work this year in the mission field has not been in vain, and may God help us to do even greater work next year than we have this.

Then, "Oh, Mom!" calling up the stairway. "The boys are home."

Mother came down in her best, flowersprigged housecoat, and Father went down to the basement to put a little coal in the furnace. He could smell hot chocolate and buttered toast when he came up again.

"Where are the boys?" he asked, looking around.

"Taking a shower," returned his wife contentedly. "They were rained out. Imagine! That makes twice it's rained this year, and to think it had to rain on their trip! They were miserably uncomfortable, hungry, and very dirty; I think they're cured of the wanderlust, for a while at least!"

"Bicycles in the garage?"

"One of them. Bill left his at a gas station up the highway somewhere. He had a flat tire. They had to ride double for the last ten miles!"

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

It was a pleasure to preach nights a week or so ago in the Winston-Salem Church and to enjoy the good fellowship and lovely home of the Billy Andes. A most excellent piece of work is being done there. While there I made several contacts which I believe will be a blessing to the Orphanage. Many people live in Winston-Salem whom I knew as a boy.

First Sunday in October I preached at our Chapel Hill Church and conducted the Lord's Supper. Had dinner, Mrs. Truitt and I, with the Earl Danieleys—Mr. Danieley is on leave of absence from the faculty of Elon for a year of additional study. After dinner the Danieleys accompanied us to the lovely new home of Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Basnight, where we had a delightful visit. There are many really great church folk in our Chapel Hill church. For instance, Mrs. O. D. Neville, and the Woman's Fellowship through her help presented us with a large carton of new clothing for the children here. From the Basnight's we drove to Asheboro, where I made an address at a Western North Carolina stewardship institute.

Speaking of clothing, L. S. Burton, a good Suffolk friend and clothier, sent us a large box of new clothes, too.

Wednesday, I spoke, by request of the college, at the morning chapel. My talk was about the Orphanage.

What an inspiration it was to see the chapel filled with bright, vivacious youth! So many new students did not know about the Orphanage, since they are, many of them, from other denominations and are here for their first time. They were all so easy to speak to, and seemed very appreciative. We are proud of our good neighbor—Elon College—and our children are benefitted by being so near. By the way, this Sunday I am to preach the installation sermon for our new pastor—Rev. Howard P. Bozarth. He is making us a good minister.

Our children are thrilled with the television set which Mr. Glenn A. Huffman of Burlington, has installed as a gift from the Huffman Oil Co. It is a nineteen-inch set and as the boys here say, "has everything." It has been installed in one of the large study and recreation rooms, just inside a storage closet. When time is up, it is slipped right back into the closet and the closet door is locked. The children are so pleased with it, and are quite willing for us to see that they do not abuse it, nor misuse their own time in seeing it. I still maintain that

Ring the bells in Heaven's street.

Please, everybody, won't you help raise sufficient funds to run this institution. Your income tax is going to be higher from now on. Give something more on your "deductible" to the Orphanage. Thank you for everything—kind words everywhere, good letters of appreciation, and your help.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

work of the children's division during the first quarter.

The pastor's assistant, Mr. Charles Barnett, in addition to rendering the usual pastoral assistance will be a "pinch hitter" on the teaching staff in the adult department of the church school and will participate in the regular Sunday worship services of the church. He will also make a systematic survey of the area in which the church is located, for six blocks in each direction, to ascertain the number of unchurched families with Protestant leaning and the number of children between the ages of 4 and 15 in the community, who are not enrolled in a Richmond Sunday school.

Both pastor and congregation are delighted with the enthusiasm and efficiency of these two young servants of the Lord. Each of these alert Christian leaders will also assist in the young people's work. Mr. Barnett accompanied a group of the Richmond church young people on their trip to Suffolk on October 1, to attend the Eastern Virginia Youth Rally.

The church has recently employed the services of Mrs. Mildred Blanton as choir director, her responsibilities having been assumed the first Sunday in September.

Beginning on October 1, the church has operated under its new constitution, which was unanimously adopted at the June quarterly meeting. The new constitution was formulated by a special committee of five, representing the various departments of the church life. The committee worked faithfully and laboriously, holding some fifteen meetings in order to effect "the best church constitution to date." The results of the committee's efforts promise to be a great help promoting the activities of the church.

Several improvements have been made on the church property within recent weeks which add much to the attractiveness of the prominent setting the church has in the community.

the Junior Department by Mrs. Stella Morgan; and the Junior High Department by the pastor.

Shady Grove Christian Church concluded their Vacation School with a picnic and closing program on June 30. The attendance was 16 with 15 having perfect attendance.

The highlight of the school was the excellent way in which the Junior High's expressed in their own words how they found God and also the different ways in which the prophets of the Old Testament worshipped God.

The Beginner Department was taught by Mrs. T. D. Sutton and Miss Nancy Shankle; the Primary Department by the director; and the Junior High Department by the pastor. Miss Nancy Shankle served as pianist.

Refreshments were enjoyed in all three schools and were generously given by the parents and friends of the children.

Miss Ruth Dunn was director of the schools, and Rev. T. D. Sutton is pastor of the three churches.

What laymen in the other churches of the Southern Convention will follow this fine example and make the same offer to their churches?

Sustaining Fund Sunday.

Our ministers are reminded that the month of October is already here—a month in which the Sustaining Fund should receive large emphasis. If at all possible, please observe Sustaining-Fund Sunday in October. We realize that some of our churches have planned rather definitely to make their local efforts for the Sustaining Fund in January or February. These are in the minority, however. October is preferable and we urge your preparations toward that end.

"One dollar per member for Elon."

"One scholarship student from each church for Elon."

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

There is nothing mandatory about the payment of apportionments to conferences and to churches. These apportionments do express the judgement and the wish of the Southern Convention with respect to the support of its institutions and cause. However, our conferences and churches have always regarded these apportionments as obligatory. They realize that they express the best judgement of the combined interest of the Convention, and as a rule put forth every possible effort to raise the apportionments in full.

I am sure that we all realize that the apportionment for Elon College is reasonable and far less than will be necessary for the support of the college. Every effort possible should be, and I am sure will be, made to raise every dollar asked for the college.

There are but a few more weeks in this conference year, but if every church that is in arrears will do its best, we shall reach our goal and every church will be in the clear so far as conference requirements are concerned.

MEMORIAL FOR ALBERT PEEL.

The late Dr. Albert Peel of London, England, had many friends on both sides of the Atlantic, and when it was considered fitting that a memorial should be erected, it was also felt that many people would be glad of the opportunity to pay their tribute to one whose ministry meant so much to so many.

A memorial tablet will be erected in the Clopton Park Congregational Church, London, E. 5, where Dr. Peel ministered for twelve years and of which he was a member until the time of his death. In addition to this, it has been decided to raise a capital sum, the interest of which it will be possible to send, annually, historical books to younger ministers.

Thus, the memory of Dr. Peel will be perpetuated in two ways very dear to his heart—a desire to spread abroad an accurate knowledge of the history of the Christian Church and a desire to help younger men in the ministry.

May I appeal, through the medium of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, to all who wish to share in this memorial to send their gifts to the treasurer, Mr. W. C. Ingham, 25 The Vale, Southgate, London, N. 14, England.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By ALICE M. HARRISON, B. R. E.

When Robert Raikes founded the "Sunday School" in England in the seventeenth century, his only purpose was to keep children off the streets. It was a school on Sunday, hence its name.

Through the years, it has grown to mean more. The church now provides a school of religious education. It is a school of the church, hence its name, "Church School."

Such was the beginning of religious education. As we know it today, it includes much more than church school. Its purpose is to operate all church work with children, young people and adults on the same basis psychologically and educationally as all secular education, and at the same time provide the quality of spiritual motivation to life.

The growth of its technique is interesting. First it was thought we must teach only the Bible, so memorization of "Golden Texts" became the primary function of the church school. Then experts decided that simply being able to quote the Bible did not guarantee right living. So curriculum became child-centered, courses were written around the child's needs, with the Bible "tacked" on and made to apply. This did not bring desired results, so today we have experience-centered teaching—we learn by doing. We teach Bible and learn Bible passages; we consider the child's needs, but we also work together in learning.

It was once thought that the teacher need have no special training, only a pleasing personality. Yet who would think of a child studying algebra under someone who had a pleasing personality but knew nothing about algebra? So the epoch of teacher-training began. Volunteer teachers began taking courses in religious education; psychology of the pupil, methods of teaching, background of the Bible, history of the Christian Church, Teacher meetings became "workers' Conferences." Our staff does all these things, and in addition gives up church attendance. Why? Because they believe in religious education.

"Church School" is the foundation of religious education, then, and not the end. A church that is awake to its responsibilities, provides step-by-step experiences in growth from babyhood to the adult life of the church. It sees religious education in terms of the total church program.

In short, religious education is concerned with people. It says, we care about you. We cherish every fine thing you do, every urge that lifts you Godward. We have a place for you from your earliest days to your oldest years, a place where you may grow in wisdom, in stature and in favor with God and with man.

Religious education is a challenge. Let us face it as such, and with prayerful steps bring it to its noblest fulfillment.

Stewardship Secretary Appointed

Rev. Frank Lincoln Edwards of New York City, has recently been appointed associate executive secretary of the Missions Council of Congregational Christian Church with special responsibility for Christian Stewardship and for the direction of its Midwest Regional Office in Chicago, Illinois. Mr. Edwards has been serving since 1948 as minister of Stewardship for the New York State Congregational Christian Conference. He will assume his new national duties on November 16, with headquarters at 19 South LaSalle Street, Chicago, and will make his home in Oak Park, Illinois.

REV. MR. EDWARDS.

Mr. Edwards was inducted into office this week with a special ceremony during the Midwest Regional Meeting in St. Louis, Missouri. In addition to his national responsibilities under the Missions Council, he will act as executive secretary of the Commission on Stewardship of the General Council.

Mr. Edwards came to the New York State Conference staff from twenty-three years of practical experience in the Congregational parish ministry, during which he served churches in Illinois, Connecticut and New York. His most recent parish was in Buffalo, New York, from which he came to his work with the New York State Conference in 1948.

Mr. Edwards' special interest in the field of Christian Stewardship has found unique expression in his work in New York State and has involved the successful training of Christian laymen in church work. "The return of laymen to leadership in the Protestant church is one of the most hopeful signs of our times," he says. "Protestantism is rediscovering its laymen. Laymen are rediscovering the Church."

Laymen's Sunday is now history for the year 1950, but there should be no slackening of effort on the part of the laymen of the Southern Convention in their efforts to promote the work of Christian Stewardship.

News Flashes

James F. Darden, Elon College alumni secretary, is serving as colonel of the Elon College Division of the 1950 Alamance County Community Chest Campaign.

Philip J. Weaver, superintendent of Southern Pines City Schools, was the guest speaker on Laymen's Sunday at Albemarle. Rev. Walter Hall is the pastor.

Rev. Roy D. Coulter of the Virginia Valley Conference assisted the pastor of the Carolina Church, Rev. Bland Leebrick, in a revival meeting from September 18 through September 24.

The choir of the Bay View Church presented a musical program, "Christ in Nature," at the Second Church, Norfolk, on Sunday night, October 1. The attendance was good and the program excellent.

Laymen's Sunday was observed at the Holy Neck Church Sunday morning. John Henry Powell, Nansemond County Court Clerk, was the guest speaker. Laymen of the church participated in the service.

A revival was held at Hines Chapel, October 1-6. There was increased attendance throughout the week, with one addition to the church membership. The new pastor, Rev. Julius Rice, conducted the services.

Rev. James B. Allen writes: "I have received orders from the Army to report for extended active duty at Fort Lee, Va., with the 2154 ASU, Station Compliment, effective October 22. My permanent mailing address will be: 80 Westview Drive, Lynchburg, Va.

The pastors of all Congregational Christian Churches in the Southern Convention are earnestly requested to inform the Richmond Church pastor, Roy C. Helfenstein, 3206 Grove Avenue, of any of their members moving to Richmond, so that he may be able to contact them immediately. He sincerely promises to reciprocate the courtesy.

Jesse D. McClenny, secretary of the Suffolk Christian Church for the past 33 years, retired at the October business meeting of the church, and Leonard Byrd was elected to fill the vacancy. Other officers were re-elected, with Marvin Whitley as assistant secretary, and E. H. Rawles, treasurer. Floyd A. Turner was reelected superintendent of the Sunday school.

Dr. H. Shelton Smith, professor of American Religious Thought at Duke University Divinity School, is the author of a 14-page article appearing in the current issue of The New England Quarterly. Entitled "Was Theodore Parker a Transcendentalist?" Dr. Smith's article is a scholarly analysis of the intellectual climate of Parker's time, with special emphasis on Parker's own thought and its relationship with the transcendentalists.

Second Church, Norfolk, had as their guests the congregation of Zion Methodist Church for the showing of the film, "Second Chance," on Sunday evening, October 8. The film was highly praised by everyone. Monday night, Dr. John R. Scotford met with the Building Committee of the church and went with them over the plans for its relocation. Dr. Scotford's suggestions were most timely. The church expects to begin work in the new area very soon.

A Leadership Training School was conducted at The Christian Temple for our churches in the Norfolk area, October 15-19. The first session was at 2:30 Sunday afternoon, and other sessions followed at 7:30 p. m., Monday through Thursday. Three credit courses and one non-credit course were offered: "Teaching Beginners," Miss Josephine Hayes; "Outline of the Old Testament," Rev. J. Griffin; "Teaching in the Church School," Rev. C. C. Thomas, and "Congregational Christian Church History," Rev. J. Everette Neese.

FRANKLIN SUPPER CONFERENCE.

The Franklin, Virginia, Church closed its fiscal year on the evening of September 27, with a business conference and fellowship supper, held in the Fellowship Hall of the nearly completed church annex.

Two hundred and thirty church and Sunday school members were present.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected and reports from the various departments of service were received.

The supper was prepared and served by the women of the church and was greatly enjoyed. An enjoyable feature program was rendered during the supper hour. The setting for the evening's program in the new hall, with food, flowers and fun in abundance and keen spiritual interest prominent, was a credit to those responsible for the occasion.

PLEASANT HILL (ALAMANCE).

At the time for calling a pastor last year, Pleasant Hill Church called Rev. M. A. Pollard, who had been holding services on two Sundays a month, for full time service.

Since then church services have been well attended, prayer services have been conducted each Saturday evening, and the attendance at Sunday school has also been good.

The young people have a very active group which holds meetings on each Sunday evening, with Robert Hinshaw as president. The Junior Choir also takes an active part in the song service.

What the Church has to Offer

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, Chairman

Committee on Evangelism of the Southern Convention

Every institution and every agency has something specific to offer the members of society. The importance and value of what any institution has to offer should determine the response expected.

The Church of Jesus Christ offers the highest values within the power of man to comprehend. Because of this fact, the spirit and program of Evangelism in every church should keep pastor and people constantly on their tip-toes of expectancy. Moreover, because of the fact that the church has so much to offer and because the church is the only institution concerned about what it offers—the only institution qualified and able to make these offers, no minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ need ever feel apologetic for having dedicated his life to the work of the Church.

It is to be sincerely hoped that in the weeks ahead every pastor in The Southern Convention will re-appraise the vital importance of "What His Church Has to Offer" to the unchurched people of his community, and will bestir himself in an evangelistic effort surpassing any experience he has ever had up until the present time.

No man who appreciates "What the Church Has to Offer" can be indifferent or half-hearted in the work of Evangelism.

The following are a few of the many benefits and values which only the Church has to offer. Let us consider them one by one:

1. The Challenge to stand up and be counted on the Lord's side.
2. The Opportunity to satisfy that mysterious yearning of the soul to have and experience the presence and approval of the Divine within one's own life—the possession of "the peace of God which passeth all understanding."
3. The Privilege of worshipping God in a place made sacred by dedication to the service of the God of heaven and of earth.
4. The Challenge to "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy" by attending divine worship each Lord's Day.
5. The Opportunity publicly to declare one's allegiance to the Christ of America and of the world, and to make one's commitment to the Christian Way of life.

6. The Opportunity of being personally identified with people who call Christ Lord and whose highest concern is the doing of God's divine will.
7. The Opportunity to dedicate one's life and talents to the task of helping to build the Kingdom of Love and Good-will upon the earth.
8. The Opportunity of helping to support the only institution, inspired by God and established by man, which seeks through prayer and consecrated effort to promote the highest moral and spiritual interests of the home, the school, the state and every worthy agency of society.
9. The Opportunity of personally helping to make possible, in this generation and in the generations to come, the service which the Church of our fathers and mothers has faithfully rendered society by lovingly and prayerfully holding before mankind the high ideals and standards of Christian living.
10. The Opportunity for parents to express their concern for the moral and spiritual welfare of their children and their sincere hope that their children may always live a good life.
11. The Opportunity of paying tribute to the institution which meant so much to our parents and to the Christian training received in our early childhood.
12. The Fellowship of men and women and boys and girls who are sincerely seeking to do God's will.
13. Fellowship with people in one's

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE WOMEN'S PAGE

Editor of the Women's Page. Her arrangement of material, points of emphasis and faithfulness in reporting have provided excellent orientation for the women of our Convention. It is no small achievement to carry such a responsibility in addition to those which devolve upon the wife of a minister.

This same fine record will be maintained by the new Editor, Mrs. Lester. She is by no means a novice in this capacity. It would be difficult, if not impossible to find a person with a better comprehension of our women's work on both state and national levels. Follow this page regularly for pleasure and profit.

NEW CHURCHES

Make no mistake about it: Churches are being built, and built according to Hoyle (Mr. Hoyle is the architect). Mr. Hoyle has spent years studying the problems of the design and construction of buildings. He knows the dangers or pitfalls to avoid. He has studied the problems from many angles, consulted authorities and disciplined his judgment. Increasingly, churches are calling on Mr. Hoyle for his invaluable assistance. Some have made the irreparable mistake of failing to do so.

The Institute on Architecture held in Burlington last week reflected the upward trend in church building. Attractive, worshipful small churches are being built in North Carolina, churches that give a touch of beauty to the entire community. Large churches are being built, some of which will cost as much as $500,000. Worship and Christian education will have a better opportunity in the next generation because of the carefully planned and well constructed churches of today.

SUSTAINING FUND SUNDAY

More power to those churches which observe Elon Sustaining Fund Sunday in October. They are fully in line with Convention recommendations. They are helping to build a solid foundation for the total program of the Church.

The perennial enemies: selfishness, intolerance, fear and ignorance must be fought by every generation. Bound together by a strong and seasoned faith, we will be better able to resist the enemies of mankind and enter into the promised land of our ordered society. Unless we have informed membership we can hardly hope to Christianize the world. The problems of our generation call for a more realistic teaching of the principles of Jesus Christ and a more courageous exemplifying of his teachings in all areas of life. It is becoming increasingly obvious that in order to avoid shipwreck we must turn back to the life-giving, yeasty fundamentals taught by Jesus and make them more regnant in our daily rounds.

Here in the United States our traditional and abiding freedoms give us a unique opportunity to utilize all available educational techniques for religious teaching. We can be thankful that yonder at Elon and elsewhere there are trained, disciplined and consecrated teachers. They are our representatives, our colleagues, our ambassadors to the royal court of higher learning.

The last one of us can give a lift to Christian education in America. We can deny ourselves some frivolous privilege and make a greater investment in the realm of character education. This is the privilege of every public spirited citizen. Who would be content to do less?

Consider the testimony of William Green: "To look on our life merely from the point of its utility is to ignore the requirements it makes on self-sacrifice and loyalty. A man conscious of the spirituality of the human soul is a man conscious of his obligations to his country and to his fellow men and he willingly gives the loyalty and makes the sacrifices his citizenship demands. He accepts his responsibilities along with his rights and in accepting responsibility he knows he is strengthening the moral fibre of the society in which he lives. Our forefathers saw dangers ahead for democracy if freedom were divorced from morality. The experiences of our own time drive this truth home with dreadful urgency."

In this spirit and realization, therefore, let us observe and implement the Elon Sustaining Fund.

ELON PLANS GREAT "HOME COMING"

Elon is planning for a great "Home Coming" celebration this week-end. To quote Mr. Luther N. Byrd, the director of Elon's news bureau, it will be "the greatest 'Home Coming' celebration in the history of Elon College, with," he adds, "the annual Elon-Catawba football classic as the climactic feature of a two-day program."

Mr. Byrd continues: "Plans for the event have been laid by the Student Entertainment Committee, which is making an effort to bring a huge gathering of former students back to the Elon campus."

"Invitations and programs have been mailed to hundreds of Elon alumni, with a special request to three of Elon's great football teams of the past to stage reunions for the occasion. The Fighting Christian teams of former sessions asked to attend in a body include the team of 1909, first football team in Elon's history; the 1922 squad, one of the most powerful combinations of the 1920's; and the 1941 Conference Champions, the last team to represent Elon before World War II.

"Miss Christine Toumaras of Burlington, North Carolina, has just been chosen by a vote of the student body to reign as 'Home Coming' Queen over the two-day festivities. She will be attended by Miss Martha Ellen Johnson of Graham, North Carolina, who has been named Maid-of-Honor by her fellow students. Other members of the Queen's court will be sponsors for various fraternities and other campus organizations.

"The 'Home Coming' program will get underway with a huge pep rally on Friday evening at 6:30 o'clock, to be followed by the annual 'Home Coming' dance in Alumni Memorial Gym from 8 until 11:15 o'clock Friday night. The Women's Athletic Association will sponsor an open-air square dance on the campus at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon, followed by a huge parade at 4 o'clock.

"The Elon-Catawba football game on Saturday night, another in a long series of thrilling contests, will be marked by brilliant half-time ceremonies for the crowning of the 'Home Coming' Queen. A special feature for the entire weekend will be a contest for the best decorated dormitory on the campus, judging to be done by an alumni committee."

DIAGNOSING TARHEELIA

Gordon Gray is worth quoting. After a brilliant scholastic record, success in private enterprise and top-flight government assignment, he returns to his native state to assume the presidency of the greater University of North Carolina.

What does he think of North Carolina? What was his inaugural diagnosis? He had some sane words concerning the South, then added stern words concerning higher education in the state:

"The worth of our university clearly is to be measured in part by the multitude of services it renders to the people of the state and region. But it is also measured in terms of the young people we give back to the state. Are they good home-makers, teachers, professional and business women? Are they well trained lawyers and doctors, business men and workers? Are they masters of machines and the land? Are they—in short—good citizens, willing and able to exercise the leadership we have sought to prepare them for? Can they relate what they have been taught of the past to the demands and challenges of the present and future, and thus adjust themselves in a world in which human adjustment has become one of the difficult tasks of men?

"As we measure our obligations to the common weal, we must understand the limitations of the commonwealth.

"Our ambitions for education cannot be met by theory or hope, but must take into account the facts.

"We must recognize our own limitations, not in order to explain our weaknesses, but more for the purpose of exposing our problems, the nature of their solution, and charting the course that lies ahead of us.

"This is an arresting fact, but we must understand it: In 1949 North Carolina ranked 44th among the states of the Union in per capita income. That statistic, of course, speaks volumes.

"It would not be fair, however, to fail to point out our progress in this respect in the past two decades. Our 1949 per capita income payments were 276 per cent of the 1929 level. Only two states in the Union had a greater increase than North Carolina.

"Many of our citizens have, in the past, I fear, sought refuge in and taken comfort from a description given us a few years ago by a famous American: 'The best balanced state in the Union.' It should be apparent to us that the level at which we balance is the important thing, and a few humble statistics may serve to indicate how serious our internal imbalances are.

"While North Carolina ranks fourth among the states in total farm crop income, it stands 29th in total income from livestock. This situation is perhaps better dramatized by pointing out that 80 per cent of income to the farmer is derived from crops and only 20 per cent from livestock and its products. This is the lowest percentage of any state in the Union. Unprecedented progress, happily, is being made in this area, but it must be intensified through better marketing facilities, processing plants and the like. Another appalling fact is that all food processed in North Carolina does not equal 5 per cent of the retail food sales in the state.

"In industry, 75 per cent of the productivity of the state is in tobacco and textiles. Twelve per cent is represented by furniture, leaving, of course, only 13 per cent from all other type of manufacturing.

"Add to these figures the fact that this is a state with considerable underemployment among our 1,000,000 employable population.

"The answer and the challenge clearly emerge: Diversification in both agriculture and industry must be our watchword."

The implications of these remarks are inescapable. A diagnosis may not be favorable, but it is indispensable for complete recovery and health. Now there are a host of intelligent public servants working to improve the picture of our state. Churches and schools are powerful factors in charting the course of a state. Neither can reach the maximum usefulness while based on a sickly economy.

At the four-day meeting of the Conference on Science, Philosophy and Religion, held recently at Columbia University, one hundred scholars representing almost every branch of learning explored the philosophical, religious and social forces which could provide a foundation for world organization. Said Louis Finkelstein, president of the conference: "At a time when the world is delicately balanced between peace and war, when unrest and uncertainty mark our international relations, it is appropriate that scholars and men of affairs make every effort to find ways and means of promoting international cooperation." The conference sought to mobilize the intellectual power of scholars in defense of the values of democratic civilization and against the threatening inroads of totalitarianism—The Christian Century.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

HIGHER EDUCATION AND NATIONAL DEFENSE.

The American Council on Education, with headquarters in Washington, D. C., called a conference on October 6-7 to provide an opportunity for the representatives of higher education and of the government to consider a plan for the most effective utilization of institutions of higher learning in our country, both for immediate and future needs. The meeting was held in the United States Chamber of Commerce building.

The Friday morning session was addressed by President Raymond Walters of the University of Cincinnati on the "Relationships of Federal Government and Higher Education." President Emeritus Edmund E. Day of Cornell University, addressed the conference on the "Long-Range Roll of Higher Education." The following persons addressed the conference on the "Emergency Services of Higher Education": J. Thomas Schneider, Robert L. Clark, Eric A. Walker, Earl J. McGrath, and Major General Lewis B. Hershey. The college and university representatives were perhaps as much interested in General Hershey's address as any other. As Director of Selective Service, he has much to do with conditions for drafting college students.

The greater part of our private or church-related colleges depend quite largely on student tuition and fees for financial support. Their faculties and budgets are determined on the expected student enrollment. When students are taken from the campus short of graduation, the whole economic system of these colleges is most seriously affected. General Hershey announced the following basic rules:

1. That no student now enrolled in college who was making the grades that would place him in the upper half of his class would be drafted during the current year.
2. That beginning in September, the upper half of the freshman class might be deferred if requested; the upper third of the sophomore class might be deferred if requested; and the upper quarter of the junior class might be deferred if requested. This would automatically mean that those who have remained in college until the senior year would be permitted to complete requirements for graduation before being subject to the draft.

He announced that the aim of the government was to have 3,000,000 men under arms before 1952, and that these men would be taken from the pool of manpower of the nation between the ages of 19 and 26, which means, of course, that the proposed army will be made up out of men of college age. True, many young people graduate from high school at the age of 17, and many enter college at that age. Few, if any, however, will graduate from college at 19. The government proposes to follow its announced plans whether there be a World War III or not.

These young men, when drafted, will require additional training to fit them for their respective positions in the armed forces of America, and for their specific duties. It is the purpose of the government to see that every man is prepared to render his maximum service to his country. The plan calls for the use of our universities and colleges in the government's training program. It was made clear, however, that since this is a long-range program of training instead of training to meet a pending emergency, the training would necessarily be more selective and more technical, and that fewer institutions of higher learning would be used in the government's training program. Just what type of training and the character of the institution required were not determined. The facts before us, and they are severe, are that within the next two years, at least 50% of the students now enrolled in college or to be enrolled within the next two years, will be drafted and trained for military service.

Those of you who are familiar with Elon College and its facilities and have a fair understanding of the government's requirements for training military personnel, will be able to judge the needs of Elon College and approximate its position in the government's training program. We shall need to be considerate, diligent, and persistent, if we are to have a part in this gigantic program of training for national defense and for the preservation of world peace.

THE ELON COLLEGE SUSTAINING FUND.

In authorizing the Sustaining Fund for the college, the Convention designated September and October as a proposed period in which to instruct the membership of the Convention and receive funds for sustaining the college. We have passed through September and more than half of October.

This is to express the wish that most of our churches have made announcements and have given further instructions concerning the college, its needs, and the Convention's plan for its support; and that many of our churches at least will secure amounts equal to $1.00 per member for the Sustaining Fund during the month of October.

A number of our churches have reported that it will not be convenient for them to effect the Sustaining Fund plans until the regular college period, which is January and February, 1951. It is fortunate that we have these two periods which give churches of the Convention an opportunity of choice. Either will be acceptable and significantly beneficial to the college. It would be encouraging if the churches would inform the Convention just when their respective church would observe the Sustaining Fund Program.

The following excerpts are from a sermon on the Sustaining Fund preached by the Reverend Robert T. Woodruff, and are presented for your careful and prayerful attention:

"Many of us today are deeply convinced that Christian Higher Education has something vital and worthwhile to offer to the leadership of tomorrow that secular institutions can not give, at least in any appreciable measure. We are convinced that our church-related colleges have a valuable and indispensable service to render in bringing Christian principles to bear on the forces of our business world, our political world, our social world, as well as in religious work. We are convinced that the families and homes of tomorrow will need the undergirding of Christian love and idealism and other Christian principles in order to successfully adjust family living to our rapidly-changing social picture. We are convinced that there is at present no better way of assuring these things than vigorous enterprise in promoting and developing our Christian institutions of higher learning.

"Although I am in no way directly connected with one of these institutions, I have had the privilege of attending a secular institution and a church-related college, not Elon. Without in any way belittling the fine work that is being done in our secular schools, I can say from personal experience, that the church-related school experience has given me an insight on life which the secular school did not give. It has helped me to become a different person with a keen ability to analyze all kinds of situations and deal more effectively with people not only in my professional church capacity, but in all the contacts of life. These qualities, separate and apart from the fund of knowledge I have gained from college, I deem to be extremely valuable to any man engaged in any responsible work.

"Both secular and church-supported schools give good training of comparable quality, except in some technical fields. Some of the larger institutions, because of larger resources, have been able to specialize in these fields and develop the specialized facilities required to teach them. Where our Christian schools have been able to secure the needed finances they have usually done as well.

"However, when a Christian approach is added to the basic studies, and you add the intangible spirit of a Christian institution, the church-related college has more to offer, and the qualities of leadership resulting from such a college experience are better fitted to work in the struggle to build a better world, and work successfully with the complex forces that flow through modern life.

"It is high time we began thinking of what our investment in a Christian institution of higher learning like Elon is producing, and can produce. Too long has the college been thought of largely in terms of providing professional church leadership, necessary and worthwhile function though this is. We are living in an age that is beginning to realize that Christianity is something bigger than a church organization, that its influence must penetrate into every nook and cranny of our civilization, and that leadership in all walks of life need the Christian touch. It is to Christian colleges such as Elon that we must look to give our leaders of tomorrow the equipment to build the Christian emphasis into all the walks of life. The college must not only produce ministers and church leaders, it must produce definitely Christian men and women to fill the ranks of leadership throughout the wide, complex pattern of our civilization. We need teachers with Christian training. We need businessmen with Christian training. We need men in government with Christian training. We need everywhere men and women with Christian training.

"As an individual member of the Southern Convention who believes very deeply in the vital worth of education with a Christian emphasis, I want to commend to you the excellent investment opportunities you have in Elon College. I want to point out to you the extremely high rates of return you can have from your investment. The greater the investment, the more efficiently the college can do its job, the lower the cost to the student, and the greater the returns in the form of better-equipped young people to take their places in our communities and our nation, as well as in our churches, and place the stamp of Christ firmly throughout life in a world of confusion that is trying to find its bearings, and the opportunity for peace and happiness in living.

"Let us all join together in a mighty effort to help make our college a vital factor in the building of Christ's kingdom through its ministry to youth and leadership. Let us renew our faith. Let us rebuild our faith. Let us strengthen our faith to the point of enthusiastic effort. May God fill us to overflowing with zeal for the building of his kingdom in triumph over all kinds of adversity and sacrifice. May it never be said that our business enthusiasm or our political enthusiasm transcend our Christian enthusiasm.

"As leaders in the cause of Jesus Christ it is ours to utilize to the utmost every possible means in the building of his kingdom. Let us show our faith by our works. Show our faith in our young people. Show our faith in education with a Christian emphasis. Show our faith in our college. Show our faith in its leaders and the work they are doing. Show our faith in a Christian world order. Show our faith in Jesus Christ and his cause and kingdom.

"As a part of that faith, let every one of us join together to build Elon College to the place it ought to have in the work of the kingdom of God."

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

As we approach the end of the conference year for all of our conferences for the Southern Convention other than the Valley of Virginia Conference, whose annual meeting has already been held, contributions from the Eastern North Carolina Conference and Eastern Virginia Conference on apportionments continue to increase. We have a very excellent report from these two conference, but no contribution either from the North Carolina and Virginia Conference or the Virginia Valley Conference, and but one contribution, from Needham's Grove, from the Western North Carolina Conference. We are certain, however, that these conferences will be right up at the front in due time.

Our report this week is encouraging. It also puts the total contributions for 1950-51 ahead of the contributions for 1949-50. We trust that this is indicative of the fact that the college shall receive the entire apportionment of $15,000.00 for this year. If this goal is realized, however, it will be necessary to receive more than $6,000.00 on apportionments before January 1, 1951. This can be done early if every church will pay its full apportionment.

The fact that a church has been apportioned a certain amount does not mean that it is not permitted to make an additional contribution to the college. In fact, this is greatly desired in the face of present emergencies. A number of churches should go beyond their apportionment to make sure that the total amount will be raised.

All the wild ideas of unbalanced agitators the world over in their ignorant quest for happiness through revolution, confiscation of property, cannot overthrow that eternal truth that the one route to happiness . . . is over the broad and open highway of service. And service always means industry, thrift, respect for authority and the recognition of the rights of others. —William G. Sibley.

Christian Missions

At Home and Abroad

MISSION NEWS FLASHES!

Dr. and Mrs. Edward Riggs, with their little daughter, Louise, will be going from China to Madura, India, soon.

* * *

Miss Leona Burr, formerly of Shaowu, China, is going to Kobe College, Japan, where she will teach for the balance of her term.

A DOCTOR WRITES FROM CHIKORE, SOUTHERN RHODESIA.

During the year a completely new side line to the Chikore visits has developed. I call it the "Wayside Clinic," but it is not any one place, but all along the route. Every trip I am stopped many times by little clusters of women for ante-natal checks, with babies suffering from various complaints, or by boys with a message for me to visit a nearby kraal where someone is too sick to walk. A great many new contacts have been made in this way with kraals too far from Silinda or Chikore to be reached easily by sick people. Many I've taken by car to the hospital for special medical treatment or surgery or abnormal labors. Some have become Christians while in the hospital and now once a week I stop and Tom and I walk through the mealie fields to a clearing under the shade of a tall umbrella tree by the side of headman Munoriwa's kraal. Here the ground is swept and mats are laid down in readiness. Men and women and children from all 'round are gathered; and in simple basic English translated skillfully by Tom into the Chindau idiom, the great wonders of God's plan of Redemption are explained. Simple hymns are learned by heart, and the young Christians, perhaps old in years, stutter out their first prayers to the Living God. Then the sick are seen in a hut, and with farewells and smiles and laughter, the little 10 horsepower medical car groans and totters onwards with its load of 8 or 10 adults to Chikore only 12 miles distant. It takes more than an hour to reach it as a rule.

The need for Christian medical expansion is enormous. As I write, there is a letter before me from a progressive African Christian living at Zamchiya, 35 miles from Chikore, along a "road" passable to strong cars most of the year. Here there is a flourishing outschool and a very much alive church. Everyone is riddled with malaria there and the only water supply is heavily infected with snails. The death rate from cerebral malaria is very high, as also from many other curable diseases. As Joal Hlala says in this letter, "How can Christian Africans at Zamchiya not go to witchdoctors when there is no alternative?" He does not ask for a clinic there, he has asked so many times before. The mission can hardly cover its present commitments; the Government is too short of funds to start a clinic there. And so the people die.

VICTOR MASTERS.

MODERN MIRACLES ON THE MISSION FIELD.

The days of miracles are not past. Many doctors realize that fact today, and especially Christian doctors.

Witness two scenes in McCord Zulu Hospital in Durban, South Africa, of which American Board missionary Dr. Alan Taylor is superintendent.

A Zulu woman, past youth, who has not been able to have children, finally, with aid of medical skill, gives birth to a child. The woman, in spite of discomfort, bursts into a hymn of exultation and praise. The nurses at the operating table join in, and finally the doctor, so that the whole room praises the Lord.

A native man has sustained serious injuries in an accident. When at McCord's in his plaster casts, he never complains in spite of pains. His solicitation is for his family that some money be sent them for living. After weeks of care, his casts are removed. The first physical effort for him is to climb slowly and persistently up the many flights of stairs to the very top of McCord Hospital, probably not to see the beautiful view of the city, the harbor and out to the Indian Ocean. He wished to feel physically that he was able to again conquer infirmities and provide for his family.

When a doctor feels the moods of his patients and is able to inspire them to surmount what seem physical impossibilities, he is inspiring them with that spirit which said, "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me."

Do we still believe that God has the power "to convert lives, to change enemies, and overcome injustice in society"? If we do not, we should inquire more closely into the effect of our missions in South Africa. The press does not usually make head-lines of intangible, spiritual power, but we can see the results. You remember Christian Chief Albert Luthuli who lectured on church platforms in the United States and who for a great many years has been associated with American Board work in South Africa. There are others like him—real products of our mission. In them God has shown his power.

Dr. Basil Sampson, the Durban pathologist, writing in the South Africa Medical Journal, says, "It is wishful thinking to assume that the provision of better accommodation and sanitation will cause the greater part of the evil of shack settlements to disappear over night. This is because alcoholism is causing the Bantu people to go down into a state of demoralization, through frustration and the loss of the steadying effect of tribal law. A fine race, a race that is almost the life blood of the country is being subjected to a circle of forces that is rotting them physically and morally. They see no hope for themselves and growing numbers are finding solace in strong drink. A greater part of the crime sheet comes from alcohol, and venereal disease thrives in an alcoholic environment—a great cause of the burden which the hospitals are carrying for treatment of native illness today."

This is a dark view, but one can also catch bright gleams in lives that have been changed in the mission churches of South Africa. Scattered over the territories there is the leaven of Christianity. And we are responsible for keeping this leaven alive.

Lately a letter from a native pastor told of his work in one of our older stations, a steady pull against strong drink on the Reserves. A letter from one of our Christian young women day school teachers tells how she and the head teacher try to bring pupils into the Sunday school.

Are we denying the power of religion by not supporting sufficiently mission endeavors to convert lives? Is God less able to work wonders in this day? Are you praying for laborers?

AGAIN YOUR EDITOR.

It is often considered unwise for a minister to serve a field which he has served before. By the same token, it may be that I am doing the wrong thing by again attempting to be the editor of this page.

Mrs. W. J. Andes has done a good job during the almost four years she has been the editor of this page. Now she has been elected as president of the North Carolina women and has therefore resigned as Convention editor. The president of the Southern Convention women, Mrs. O. H. Paris, has asked me to serve out the term. I shall do my best, but cannot succeed without your cooperation.

Mrs. Andes has sent me about twenty articles from local societies and conference officers which had accumulated during recent weeks. Don't become too upset if your report does not appear in this week's issue—or the next—but must resolve that this year you will write up interesting events in your society as they happen and not wait until the end of the year when many, many societies report.

Articles for this page should be sent to me at 840 Sunset Avenue, Asheboro, North Carolina. Thank you!

MRS. F. C. LESTER.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

According to the report from Mrs. Ray Gordon, as printed in the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, along with a picture of the guest speakers and the newly elected officers, the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference, held on October 3 at the Suffolk Christian Church was a great session.

There were 415 present, which was reported to be the largest attendance since 1913. The offering of $118.13 went for mission causes.

In addition to the fine address by Dr. Ruth I. Seabury, in which Japan was presented as the most fertile field for Christian missionaries in the world today, Mrs. O. H. Paris, Convention president, spoke on "Thy Will to Do with a Christ-Like Spirit." Miss Pattie Lee Coghill presented the literature. Mrs. L. W. Stagg gave the report of the recommendations committee, and the Memorial Service was conducted by Mrs. Roy Brinkley. The newly elected officers were installed by Mrs. Paris.

WORLD COMMUNITY DAY.

This is just a last minute reminder that the date of World Community Day is November 3.

The theme is "Love Thy Neighbor." The information quiz and the skit, "Trusteeship with God," included in the program packet, are excellent. The program, planned by Dr. Edith Lawton, is worshipful and inspiring.

It is hoped that every woman's society of our Convention will observe World Community Day, either with other denominations in your community or in your local society.

Chairman, Interdenominational Cooperation.

FOR NORTH CAROLINA ONLY!

If you attended the North Carolina Woman's Conference at Liberty and took home with you a book of the reports, and if you do not especially need that report book, please send it to the Southern Convention Office. The office was so generous in furnishing the books that they did not keep one for themselves, and there were a number of societies which were not represented at this meeting which will need report books. Your help in this matter will be greatly appreciated. Thanks!

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

For Boys and Girls and Their Teachers . . .

Have some of you heard about boys and girls around our world who do not have much to eat or many things to wear? When Dr. Ruth Isabel Seabury spoke to the Women's Convention, she told about a little boy in Japan who came looking for a pair of shoes that would fit three little boys. He didn't ask her to give him three pairs, but asked to find a pair that each of his brothers and he could take turns wearing. She also told of a little girl receiving a brand new pair of shiny red slippers and she loved them so much she wore them to bed the first three nights she had them.

Primary and Junior classes or departments can give a Christmas gift to some boy or girl who needs clothing. It is called "Share Your Friendship Package." Here's what you put in it:

Wool scarf, cap and mittens; Polo shirt; shorts or panties (choose suitable for boy or girl); three handkerchiefs; a towel and a cake of soap; a comb; hard candy, like Lifesavers, and a greeting card with your name and address.

You can mark your package for one of these countries: England, Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, France, Italy, Germany, Greece, Israel, India, Japan, Switzerland.

Wrap your box carefully and send it to:

World Friendship Among Children,
214 E. 21st Street,
New York 10, N. Y.

Don't delay if you want yours to arrive for Christmas.

I have been reading of some boys and girls in Warsaw, Poland, who had no food to eat except grass and leaves for many days. They were lost from their mothers and fathers. They felt lonely and afraid. Let us remember how fortunate we are with our parents, teachers, ministers, doctors and all our toys, amusements, clothing and food.

Men learn to talk in a few months and then spend the rest of their lives learning to keep still.—Exchange.

For Parents . . .

FOLLOW THE LEADER.

By JANICE A. McDONALD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Hey! It's my turn, Bobby! You were the leader last time!"

"Yes! And then mine!"

All the children are shouting as if they were blocks away from each other. Happy, normal children at play!

Billy is the leader now, and as the game proceeds, he plays the clown. Wagging his head and stepping high he marches forward, gesticulating according to his own fancy, occasionally glancing back to see if the boys and girls are following him.

You happened to be passing by when the argument about who should be the leader was taking place. Your Tommy seemed to be having fully as much fun as the other children, you noticed, but he made no claim or effort to be the leader himself. This troubled you.

Leadership qualities! They seem to you to be the qualities of strong men and women—those of character—and your little Tommy hasn't, as far as you can see, exhibited any of those qualities as yet. You feel that you must do something about it. Let us consider this.

The game that the children were playing, Follow the Leader, is one that young children often play; a harmless, jolly game that gives them the opportunity to exhibit their ability to lead—OR, to follow.

When Bobby, and Billy, and Tommy go to school, they will all be expected to follow the directions given by the teacher. A teacher likes, also, to have leaders in her class; every classroom has several. But far more important at their stage of development is the ability to follow. And often it is the Bobbys and Billys who find following directions very difficult. Tommy is likely to adjust to school requirements much more easily.

But this is not the only consideration. You know Bobby and Billy; you know that they are nice boys, and you are glad that they are friends of your nice Tommy. Merely being a leader is not especially desirable. If Bobby and Billy were rough children, playing Follow the Leader with them would doubtless be different from the simple antics that this game implies when played in your neighborhood.

Tommy just now is a follower. The important thing is that he and you know what and whom he is following. The qualities of leadership often go with good character. But they can, if misdirected, become nothing but an arrogant desire to sway a group—the country—perhaps the world.

Followers may have as excellent qualities as those possessed by leaders. Among those we find earnest, dependable people with good judgment. Besides, to become a good leader, one must first prove that he can be a good follower.

It is the way of the world that the larger portion of a group of people must remain followers. If everyone were a leader, little would get done, and, coupled with confusion, there would be continuous fighting.

The Great Leader needed his followers, his disciples. So, instead of "I wish my son were a leader!" think, "Let my son be either a leader of the right and good things, or let him be a follower of the right kind of leader!"

PLEASANT HILL.

During the spring months, the pulpit furniture of the church was refinished and a carpet was placed on the entire floor of the church auditorium. The floors of the Sunday school rooms were sanded and refinished.

The last week in August, the church and Sunday school banded together and bought Rev. and Mrs. Pollard a new car, which was given to them near Mr. Pollard's birthday. They say that they are enjoying it immensely.

Rev. Mack V. Welsh of Greensboro, did the preaching during the week for our revival, which was held the first week in September. Mr. Pollard did the preaching each Sunday morning. There were two confessions of faith made, and we trust the church was greatly revived.

Nine new members were received into the church during the year.

We hope that we may have many more prosperous years under the leadership of Rev. and Mrs. Pollard, and that the church will continue to grow in spirit and abound in the works of the Lord.

Youth at Work in the Church

MAX VESTAL, Elon College, N. C.
MISS ANN TRUITT, Associate

LET'S GO!

First of all, let's go to the rally in our conference this month. Next Sunday, you are invited to bring your supper and your friends to the Pleasant Union Church for the rally of the Western North Carolina Youth Fellowship. If you belong to another conference, come anyway. There is an excellent program planned. Bill Simmons sends you his invitation to join in the fun, food and fellowship.

Secondly, let's go to work. Send the news of your group to Max Vestal, Box 792, Elon College, N. C., and be sure to send it as soon as it is available. Stale news is next to no news, and it takes time to prepare it for the printer.

Don't hide your light under a bushel. Judging from my letters, there are no youth groups making news. Can this be true? I don't think so. Perhaps each group should elect a publicity man.

We are also interested in original compositions if they are appropriate and not too long.

Thirdly, let's get to work. Each group is urged to have the new Youth Packet, which is especially prepared for you. It is your privilege and duty to keep up with what is going on among the youth of the world. This packet contains programs for special occasions, Bible study suggestions, and a wealth of other interesting and useful material.

Let's raise enough money to enable our Southern Convention Youth organization to serve efficiently. The Council Budget is approximately $150.00 each year, which is used as follows:

UCYM (national)	$ 5.00
Travel of Council (includes overseas worker)	75.00
Publications	50.00
Miscellaneous	20.00
	$ 150.00

Apportionments for each of the conferences are:

Eastern Virginia	$ 30.00
Valley of Virginia	20.00
North Carolina and Virginia	30.00
Eastern North Carolina	20.00
Western North Carolina	20.00
Board of Christian Education	30.00
	$ 150.00

There are our goals. Let's all work to reach them. Your Council makes these suggestions for raising money:

1. Offerings at rallies, etc.
2. Apportionments. Ask each of the churches of your conference for a stated amount.
3. Registrations at rallies.
4. Conference help for the working fund.

MAX VESTAL.

A Month of Sundays for Youth

There will be Young People's Rallies covering every Conference of the Convention in October. Every church (no matter whether it has an organized young people's group, or whatever its young people's group may be called) should plan NOW to be represented at the Rally in their area. Below are listed the places, the dates and the presidents of the Conference organization.

October 21-22. Liberty, Vance. The Eastern North Carolina Young People's Week-end Conference. E. C. Haywood, president.

October 29. Pleasant Union Church. Western North Carolina Fifth Sunday Rally. Bill Simmons, president.

If there is an further information that you or your local organization may desire, please write to—

THE VIRGINIA VALLEY RALLY.

The mid-year Rally of the Virginia Valley Pilgrim Fellowship met on October 8 at the Bethel Church in Elkton with twelve churches represented. The opening devotion was conducted by the young people of Timber Ridge, followed with special music by the Bethel choir.

After the business session and the presentation of program materials by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, the group then heard Evelyn Allen and Warren Matthews review their week at Milwaukee as delegates to the National Pilgrim Fellowship Convention. The latter also gave a summary of the activities conducted by the Southern Convention Young People during the past summer as well as breaking the news about our new project for this year. We were delighted over the idea of bringing a Philippino boy to the United States, and pledged our loyal support to this project.

The fellowship hour which followed was enjoyed by all. The supper was served buffet style by the ladies of the host church.

The highlight of the evening was a very interesting address by Max Vestal on his summer work in Agape, Italy. This made us truly appreciate our comfortable homes and good food.

We were dismissed by Rev. R. E. Newton. Our next rally will be held on January 7, 1951, at the Linville Church, near Harrisonburg, Virginia.

REPORTER.

BAXTER TWIDDY ENTERS CHICAGO UNIVERSITY.

C. Baxter Twiddy, Jr., member of The Christian Temple, Norfolk, has entered the University of Chicago to continue his studies for the ministry.

He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Twiddy. His father is a veteran store manager for Colonial Stores, Inc.

Baxter has been active in the Temple for some years, both in Sunday school and young people's work.

Only recently he went to Germany to study conditions there.

He graduated from Maury High School and from there went to Elon College, where he served as president of four of the leading student organizations and was given a place in the national students' "Who's Who."

Rev. W. Millard Stevens, pastor of the Temple, said recently that he was following Baxter's progress towards the ministry with a deep interest. Baxter is well known in Pilgrim Fellowship circles, and his many friends will wish him Godspeed in Chicago.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

GROWING THROUGH READING AND MEDITATION.

LESSON V—OCTOBER 29, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Whatever is true, whatever is honorable, whatever is just, whatever is pure, whatever is lovely, whatever is gracious, if there be any excellence, if there is anything worthy of praise, think about these things.—Philippians 4: 8.

LESSON: Acts 17: 10-12; Philippians 4: 8, 9; I Timothy 4: 12-16; II Timothy 2: 15; 4: 13.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 19.

Growth Through Feeding.

Life grows by what it feeds upon. The body cannot maintain physical strength and vigor, repair worn-out tissues, and grow and develop without food. Neither can the mind grow unless it has mental food and exercise. Nor the spirit of man, unless it feeds upon every word that proceedeth out of the mind and heart of God. Reading and meditation ought to have a place in every well-rounded life. And the right kind of reading. One does not develop a strong mind by reading the comics—they have a place to be sure by way of recreation and contrast. Nor is it enough to read cheap magazines and only the daily and Sunday newspapers. Most of this reading material is skimmed milk and worse. As the body needs good, solid food, so does the mind need good, solid reading matter. And the fact is that most people have more time for reading than they realize, that is if they really want to read. And in this day of printing, the best literature is available at low cost.

This is true of the world's best literature or Book. The Bible can be purchased for a paltry sum. It is the world's indispensable and inexhaustible book. One can form no better habit, conducive to growth, than to read the Bible regularly and thoughtfully. Even a few minutes a day spent in reading God's Word will help one to grow in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ our Lord. One should not only read the Word, he should meditate over the Word. One's mind and soul will grow if he feeds them on the Word of God. Emphasis was laid upon the habit of reading the Bible in the lesson for October 15.

There are, of course, many, many other books that will help one to grow. And this does not mean that one must read only the Bible or devotional books. Of the making of books there is no end. Many of them are not worth reading. But there are hundreds and hundreds of good books, covering all fields of life and action that will enrich life and enlarge knowledge. A famous Harvard President edited a "Five Foot Shelf of Books" that he said a person could master by reading only fifteen minutes a day!

Folks with Open Minds.

"Now these were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, examining the Scriptures daily, whether these things were so." These folks at Berea had open minds. They were not gullible and credulous, they did not swallow things wholesale. But they were not prejudiced. They heard the words of Paul and Silas, checked up on them, and received them insofar as they become convinced that they were speaking the truth. Prejudice means to "pre-judge." A person who is prejudiced renders a decision before all the evidence is in, indeed even before the trial starts. Prejudice is one of the curses of our modern world. Race prejudice and religious prejudice have slain their thousands and their tens of thousands. All of us are more or less guilty of harboring prejudice.

As a Man Thinketh.

"As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he,"—thus asserts the Good Book. How careful then we ought to be of our thoughts. Paul knew this long ago. In his letter to his friends, he enjoins them to think about things that are true, honorable, just, pure, lovely, gracious. Modern medicine emphasizes the relation between healthy thinking and health of body. Modern psychiatry knows how devastating is wrong thinking. This is no hokus pocus. Life can be renewed and enriched and strengthened by right thinking. Indeed, Paul also wrote that we are to be "transformed by the renewing of our minds." Guard your thoughts, my friends, for "as a man thinketh . . . so is he."

Giving Heed to Reading.

"Until I come, give heed to reading," writes the old man to his young understudy in the ministry. Mention has already been made as to the importance of reading, and of the rewards of right reading. One should give heed to reading. Ruskin once said something to this effect, "Do you not know that if you read this book you will not have time to read that book." Life is so short, time goes so rapidly, that one should give heed to reading, should give thought to what he reads and how much he reads. The habit can be cultivated and an appreciation can be developed.

Especially the Parchments.

Paul was in prison. The winter was coming. He would need extra clothing to keep him warm. So he asks Timothy to bring along the cloak which he had left at Carpus. He was even more concerned about his books and the parchments. He could make out after a fashion without the coat, but he just had to have the reading material. Here is a parable of folks who have made almost any sacrifice in order to have good reading material for themselves and their families. Parents who lavish gifts on their children would do well to spend more money on good books. And Bible Story books ought to have a place in the library of young children. The writer of these Notes often wonders if one of the deciding factors in his final decision to enter the ministry was not the unconscious effect of Hurlburt's Story of the Bible, which his father gave him when he was a lad, and which he read again and again to his great delight. Even to this day, he can recall some of the illustrations in the book and remember the fascinating stories which filled its pages.

A Plug for the Church Paper.

And why not subscribe to, and read THE CHRISTIAN SUN, your Church Paper. Here is a weekly magazine, or paper, ably edited and full of articles and information that will make you better informed about what is going on in your denomination and in the larger fellowship of believers, and a paper that will help you to grow through reading. And all for the paltry sum of about six cents a week!

REPORTS FROM SOCIETIES.

UNION GROVE.

Mrs. E. P. Boroughs, superintendent of the Asheboro District, met with a small group of ladies at Union Grove Christian Church in the Western Conference on April 2, 1950, to organize a missionary society. The first meeting was held at the church with seven members present. We now have 25 members.

We have had good attendance and much interest has been shown in the work. Miss Betty Jean Cagle was our delegate to the School of Missions at Elon College in June.

At the June meeting all brought boxes filled with different articles, with no name attached to the box. All the members then took a box and paid any amount they desired. The money was placed in the treasury.

The missionary society served the noon meal for the Sunday School Convention meeting at Union Grove in July. The offering for the meal was turned over to the building fund of the church. Our society plans to do more for the church and missions during this year.

MRS. PAUL WILSON,
President.

ROSEMONT.

The ladies of the Woman's Missionary Society of Rosemont have had interesting and inspiring meetings under the very able leadership of Mrs. J. A. Herrington.

They held their picnic meeting recently at the State Park near Cape Henry. We met under the trees for a brief business session. We were fortunate in having a young ministerial student, Sam Tatem, with us as our guest. He led the devotionals, using as his subject, "Prayer—Its Power."

The ladies and their guests enjoyed a picnic lunch and later those who desired to went in bathing.

RUTH HASSELL,
Secretary.

HINES CHAPEL.

The Woman's Society of Hines' Chapel met in September at the home of Mrs. Taylor Forbes, thus concluding a successful year.

Mrs. J. R. Carter had charge of the installation service, and Mrs. R. W. Iseley gave the devotional.

Our attendance has been very good throughout the year. We lost a few members because they moved away, but we also gained some new members. Maintaining a membership small in number (21), we are happy to report that our society achieved the goal of a Superior Society.

We were very fortunate to get Mrs. W. L. Parker, wife of the pastor of Elm Street Christian Church (Disciples) in Greensboro, to give our foreign book review. Mrs. Parker, having studied for missionary work in Japan and being quite an authority on the subject, gave an outstanding report.

Our home book review, "Missions at the Grass Roots," was given by one of the members of our society.

The World Community Day, May Fellowship Day, and World Day of Prayer services were held jointly with one of our sister societies—Monticello. We had Timothy Chang from Duke University for our Thank Offering service.

In addition to the year's work given in "The Plan Book," the members of our society and other ladies of our church have been working together on a project, raising money to build a hut for our church. We have given a number of suppers and have well over $1,000 on this building fund.

We, as a society and a church, request the prayers of the Christian people that we may do greater things for God's Kingdom in the coming year.

MRS. B. S. CARTER,
Reporter.

MT. AUBURN.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Mt. Auburn reports a good year of work and fellowship, not only among the members of our local society, but fellowship with others at our Spring Rally and the North Carolina Woman's Conference. Such meetings are truly inspirational in many ways. We feel grateful for leaders and societies that make these fine gatherings of missionary minded women and men possible.

We have also enjoyed community programs and book reviews with other societies.

Our society has tried to respond to increased regular dues, contributions to other requests of our conference, help for an orphan at the Elon Orphanage, flowers and fruit for the sick and bereaved in our midst. All of these efforts, we hope and pray, will help in building the Kingdom of Heaven in the hearts of men.

We would not close this writing without mentioning the passing of Mrs. Lillian Ricks Read, long time member of our society, faithful in attendance and interest until prevented by poor health. May her faithfulness throughout many years in the Master's service inspire us with more loyalty and devotion to his Kingdom. We are grateful for her life among us.

We elected all new officers in our society for the coming year. With faith in their ability for leadership, we follow on to sustain them, knowing our Lord promises to give wisdom liberally to all who ask of him.

MRS. J. A. KIMBALL.

WAVERLY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Waverly Christian Church has completed another year in the mission work of the church. We have done all of the things we are supposed to do. We contributed to the Conference Apportionment and to the Thank Offering. We observed World Day of Prayer, uniting with the other churches of our town.

We have lost two members by death and have given memorials for both. These will be presented to the families at a public service in the church.

MRS. O. C. OSBORNE,

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thanks to Mr. Samuel Earman of Harrisonburg, Virginia, our report goes over the ten thousand dollar mark this week! Brother Earman had us credit his $500.00 to the Linville Church. This was a most generous gift from a devout and loyal layman of our Virginia Valley. We appreciate it, as we are still behind with summer bills. Many friends have remembered us with commodities which we need and also greatly appreciate. We need now to average two thousand dollars a week until January 1, to bring us to our goal of $55,000.00 for this year. Some of that figure we hope to realize from the farm.

Public school costs us now o'days. We have seventy children in grammar and high school; and I have just received a September bill for $180.00 for supplies, fees, and lunches, for the tiny tots. We talk about "free school," but those who send children to school know that the schools themselves cost the parents something.

We have a goodly sized dry-cleaning bill each week, and nice big grocery bills every week—oh! Well do you, too! But when these bills lapse over a few weeks, its enough to make you a little restless.

Since I wrote you last, we have received three children from Virgilina: George, 7; Dewey, 6, and Phyllis, 4. We did not have in all of our list a "George," nor a "Dewey," nor a "Phyllis"—so we added three first names to our list, and also a last name, "Morningstar." One little fellow said he didn't know that there was but one morning star, But now," he said, "we have three right here on our campus." What fine children they are! And Phyllis is as pretty as a picture. Her father died when she was a month old. Her mother moved into the humble home of their grandmother. In march she died, and as the home was being sold, the little folks had to have a home. And so you answered their need with your orphanage.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these . . . ye have done it unto me," says the Lord. They are sweet and bright, but still pathetic looking because it means something for a child to give up all the home and community it ever knew and come to a strange place.

Betty Jane had her tonsils taken out this week. I can't spell "tonsillectomy," nor "adenoidectomy"—but she had that, too! She is getting along fine. Two girls had their eyes examined and glasses fitted—Betty Leigh and Faye Watkins. "Corky" Williams, 14, fell at school across an iron handrail and had to be hurried to a doctor, but it turned out he was not seriously hurt. He could not speak to tell the teachers or pupils what was the matter with him, and we were for a few minutes quite excited.

There's never a dull moment, much less a whole day. But these children are a jolly, healthy, happy group.

Our November birthdays are:

- Nov. 1, Ella Jean Haith, 10.
- Nov. 4, Betty Jean Rowland, 6.
- Nov. 4, Betty Leigh, 13.
- Nov. 7, Hubert Cook, 11.

Nov. 8, Yvonne Hutchens, 16
Nov. 16, Frances Rowland, 9.
Nov. 20, Robert Rowland, 12.
Nov. 23, George Morningstar, 8.
Please send these children birthday cards. Thank you.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

15. The Help of Almighty God in managing one's personal life plus God's divine guidance in all the affairs of daily living. "In all thy ways acknowledge God, and he will direct thy paths."
16. The Inexpressible Joy of being numbered with those who are journeying to that "City" not made with man's hands, eternal in the heavens, and of which the Lord hath said, I will give it thee."
17. The Glorious Contemplation of hearing, at the close of life's earthly pilgrimage, the divine plaudit, "Well done thou good and faithful servant—enter ye into the eternal joys of thy Lord."

Only The Church—the church at the cross-roads, the church in the village or town, the church in the city—your church and my church, has these incalculable values to offer; only our churches are concerned about these values which in fact give every church its right to existence. What a tremendous responsibility is ours! What an opportunity and privilege every minister and every church has to make known to the world "What the Church Has to Offer"!

A MESSAGE FOR WORLD ORDER DAY.

The United Nations was instrumental in establishing the United States of Indonesia. It has achieved and maintained an armistice between Israel and her Arab neighbors. It has lessened the danger of war between India and Pakistan in the Kashmir dispute. It has laid the groundwork for a free and independent government in Libya and Somaliland. It paved the way for lifting the Berlin blockade. It has intervened on the side of peace in the Balkans and Iran.

In Korea, the United Nations was confronted with the severest challenge to its authority and usefulness. A people groping toward the light of freedom was plunged into bloodshed by an act of aggression. We are heartened by the swift action of the United Nations in resisting this aggression. We are gratified that the forces combatting invasion in South Korea serve under the flag and command of the United Nations. We are resolutely opposed to the idea of a 'preventive' war. We could not condone resort to arms for the aggrandizement of our own or any other nation. We can and do support the United Nations in mobilizing collective resources from its member states for the purpose of establishing the conditions of peace in Korea. At this moment in history, the United Nations offers promise that mankind, if it has the will to do so, can repel aggression and advance the cause of peace and justice through the cooperative endeavor of the world community. This will be the more true if, when the fighting is over in Korea, the United Nations can take steps which will vouchsafe to the entire Korean people the freedom to which they are entitled.*

In other areas the United Nations has achieved results which occasion deep thanksgiving throughout the churches. It has formulated and approved a Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It has negotiated and submitted to member states for their ratification a Convention on Crime and Punishment of Genocide. It has launched a program of technical assistance for the economic development of heretofore neglected peoples. Within the limits of its resources, it has combatted poverty, disease and ignorance, those ancient allies of war and tyranny. It has ministered to refugees and displaced persons. It has sought to advance the political, social and economic welfare of millions of inhabitants in Trust Territories. It has fed and clothed orphan children on both sides of the Iron Curtain.

*Of the 48 members of the Executive Committee present and voting, 5 members opposed, for reasons of conscience, that section of the statement which endorsed the police action of the United Nations in Korea.

In thus hailing the positive achievements of the United Nations, we do not close our eyes to the fact that many pressing issues are still unresolved. We do not accept as final the current impasse in the effort to place the atomic bomb and other weapons of mass destruction under strict international control. We will not cease our labors to achieve through the United Nations reduction and control of conventional armaments. Unless a way can be found to bring all military establishments under the discipline of law in the name and for the sake of world community, it is difficult to see how the peace envisaged in the Charter can be permanently achieved.

Events in Korea and elsewhere have led the United States to look to its military defenses. At such a time it is important for our people to see clearly the prior need of spiritual and moral defenses. Aggression and the pagan thrust of a God-denying ideology can never be wholly met by instruments of military power. Righteousness and justice weigh more heavily in the scales of history than bombs and battalions.

The peace for which we pray is not a peace precariously supported by bayonets. The peace for which we pray is a peace derived from obedience to God's holy will. The supreme need of this hour is for spiritual regeneration on a global scale. In the Gospel of Christ there is a sufficient answer to the pretensions of communism. To be strong in righteous faith is to prevail against iron curtains and the tyranny of the police state.

Let the voice of our nation be the voice of freedom for the down-trodden, of justice for the impoverished, of release for the oppressed. Let this voice be proclaimed in our own and other lands. Let this voice be heard in our pulpits, in the halls of Congress, in the council chambers of the United Nations.

Let the policies of our nation be such as will command the respect and goodwill of men everywhere. Where there is need for land reform, for emancipation of racial minorities, for the upholding of human rights and freedoms, for a more equitable distribution of the good things of the earth, for political institutions responsive to the free will of a free people, there let the influence of America be felt. As Christians, we are not committed to things as they are but to things as, in the sight of God, they should be.

The churches of Christ in America do not believe that another world war is inevitable. They steadfastly set themselves against hysteria and defeatism. This is God's world. He reigns supreme and will forever reign. The God whose we are and whom we serve will prevail no matter what wickedness is planned or wrought in the world of nations. We who have taken upon ourselves the name of Christ are called to bear witness in daily living to that peace which is ordained of God under whom all nations are held in judgment.

A MESSAGE FOR WORLD ORDER DAY

Sunday, October 22, 1950

On this World Order Day, October 22, 1950, peace hangs in the balance. Swords have been unsheathed, soldiers are dying, and in lands near and far, there is heard the ominous tramp of marching feet. As the temporary headquarters of the United Nations are moved from Lake Success to Manhattan, the space thus vacated is made ready for producing the tools of war. The material resources of the earth, intended by the Divine Creator for the enjoyment of his children, are forged into implements of destruction. Man gropes in the lengthening shadows of his own misconduct, disillusioned and stunned by fear.

In full recognition of the solemnity of this hour, the churches of Christ in America proclaim their allegiance to him who is the world's peace. It is God's will that all men shall dwell together in peace. In the pursuit of this peace we dedicate ourselves anew to the task of establishing a warless world. Nor will we be diverted from this purpose by the clash of arms, or the contriving of nations resorting to aggression.

As the tensions and perils of conflict mount, we bear witness to our faith in God who is the Sovereign Lord of history. In him we find deliverance from the fear and anxieties which weigh down the hearts of men. In the service of the Kingdom of God on earth we find the inspiration to live courageously when we might otherwise be afraid.

The crisis of our times is derived from disobedience to God and disregard of his righteous laws. All nations share in this turning away from the divine principles of love, justice and fraternity. Viewed from the perspective of God's purpose for the world, all nations in some measure are found wanting. It is not for our people, nor for any people, to climb into the seat of the scornful. All nations stand in need of God's redemption.

In their observance of World Order Day, the churches of Christ in America see in the aggressive imperialism of the police state the most virulent form of man's disobedience to God. Communist leaders, in seeking world domination, appear ready to risk the catastrophe of another general war to achieve their ends. In Eastern Europe and now in Asia, the expansive thrust of communism imperils the peace. In this conquest by infiltration and open aggression the moral law is flouted and human rights and freedoms are held in contempt. If world order is to be established, the mind set of the nations must be brought into conformity with the moral law and the conduct of the nations into harmony with the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations.

As Christians we rejoice in the vitality and growth of the United Nations. We commemorate the fifth anniversary of its establishment in the conviction that the United Nations provides this generation with an opportunity to build the foundations of a more durable peace. In focussing the spotlight of world concern upon areas of acute tension, the United Nations and its specialized agencies help to create a common moral judgment which is a major factor in restraining aggression.

Has Your Church Observed Elon Sustaining Fund Sunday?

News Flashes

New robes for the adult choir were dedicated last Sunday in the Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, North Carolina.

Mr. Paul L. Everett, the Commonwealth's Attorney for Nansemond County, was the guest speaker last Sunday at Holy Neck Church.

Dr. W. W. Sloan of Elon College was the guest speaker last week at the American Business Club in Burlington, N. C. Dr. Sloan traced the history of Korea's past and present relations with Japan, China and Russia.

Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, formerly of Charleston, is now residing at 316 West College Terrace, Frederick, Md.

The Executive Board and the Mission Board of the Southern Convention are in session this week in Suffolk, Virginia.

The Western North Carolina Conference will meet on Wednesday and Thursday, November 8 and 9, with Pleasant Grove Church, near Bennett, North Carolina. Each church in the Western Conference should be sure to have delegates at this session.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, pastor of our church in Winchester, Virginia, for the past fourteen years, was the guest minister for a week of services in our Asheboro Church, beginning on October 8. The pastor, Dr. F. C. Lester, reports that the Asheboro people were delighted with Mr. Whitten and his messages.

Rev. Henry E. Robinson, pastor of the First Christian Church of Burlington has been attending the plenary sessions of the Prudential Committee of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, in session at Framingham Center, Mass. The Prudential Committee is made up of 40 elected lay and clerical Congregational-Christian men and women from all parts of the nation and corresponds to the board of directors of a business concern. They are responsible for designating and approving the annual expenditure of funds in excess of $2,000,000, for Christian work in religious, educational, medical, social and industrial fields in eleven countries.

LAYMEN, STEWARDSHIP, "THE SUN."

At first glance it may not appear that the words in the above heading "go together." However, the three were very effectively combined in the morning worship service at the Asheboro Congregational Christian Church on October 15.

In the first place, it was Laymen's Sunday, which all our churches were asked to observe. Charles Cheek, J. Rankin Parks, E. P. Boroughs, Paul Shane, W. H. Hughes, Jr., A. B. Caviness, Jr., and Hubert L. Beane, were the laymen participating in the service.

In the second place, the Western North Carolina Conference churches were asked to use "Stewardship" for the theme of the church services each Sunday during the month of October. And so the worship service, in which three of the laymen participated, was centered around that theme.

And how did THE CHRISTIAN SUN come in? Fine articles in recent issues on the subject of "Stewardship" were read by three of the laymen. Thus the members of the congregation were reminded of the value of THE CHRISTIAN SUN—and at the time for announcements, were urged to subscribe to it.

The seventh layman, Hubert Beane, spoke on "Things Laymen Can Do in Our Church," making a very practical talk. A sermonette, "Planned Giving," was presented by the pastor, Rev. F. C. Lester.

SPECIAL SERVICES AT BEREA.

Berea Christian Church, Chuckatuck, Virginia, observed a Rally Day and a Home Coming Day service on Sunday morning, October 22, with great success. Children of the Sunday school presented an interesting and impressive program featuring recitations, memory drills, exercises and songs. Certificates of promotion were given to the boys and girls who were promoted from one division of the church school to another.

The Home Coming service was a very happy occasion. Invitations had been issued to former members, and a large number responded and were present. The attractive little church was filled to capacity for the service. Special features of the program were, an "Historical Sketch of Berea," by Dr. N. G. Newman, a former pastor of the church, and an address, "Some Memories of My Ministry at Berea," by Dr. I. W. Johnson, a former pastor and now pastor emeritus. The pastor, Dr. H. S. Hardcastle, preached a brief sermon on "The Enduring Church." Members of the Berea choir under the direction of Mrs. Russell T. Bradford, sang "The Lord's Prayer," and Mrs. J. R. Vick and Miss Jennie Lee Bradford sang, "I Waited for the Lord." A brief memorial service was held in honor of former members of the church who had passed away.

After the service was over, there were many happy greetings and reunions among relatives and friends who had attended the service. Instead of having "dinner on the grounds," members of the church opened their homes to the visitors for dinner, and anybody who knows the Berea community, knows that there was warm hospitality and an abundance of good food for these guests. Our lives were enriched by the experiences of the day, and our hearts will be warmed upon every remembrance of the occasion.

THE EASTERN CAROLINA CONFERENCE

Wake Chapel rolled up its sleeves and made extensive preparation for the annual conference. Food was brought and served by a large and efficient contingent of ladies. Just as certain words are remembered by a melody, just so Wake Chapel will be remembered by a flavor—the flavor of food prepared in taste and abundance.

Prior to this, extensive renovation and additions had been made. Wake Chapel has not changed its name (it may become the First Congregational Christian Church of Fuquay Springs if the town continues to grow in that direction), but it has changed its appearance. The sanctuary has acquired the “new look” which is attractive and worshipful. New pews, organ, carpet and baptismal setting give the proper atmosphere for worship. The new Sunday school building provides essential space for an enrollment of 250. Congratulations, Wake Chapel!

This Church, which ministers to and is sustained by the town and the farm, enjoys a strategic position in the community. This type of church, of which there are many in our Convention, has boundless potentialities. The fertile and productive countryside forms a rich base for an expanding program of stewardship. Steady employment in local business saves the community from the inevitable fluctuations of a farm economy. Few, if any, churches of this type know the limits of their strength. We look to them for new demonstrations of growth and stewardship.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference is one of the weaker conferences of the Convention, and it has been penalized by non-participation of some of its churches. There are healthy indications that this condition is changing. It is capable of doing much greater things with the full participation of all of its churches and ministers.

The spirit of the recent conference was good. Ministers and laymen participated on the conference program. The conference endorsed by resolution the Elon Sustaining Fund and voted to solicit the cooperation of the churches in making it possible for their pastors to participate in the Annuity Fund. Revs. Clay Farrell and Eugene Tally were given conference ordination. Rev. R. T. Grissom was reelected president. Rev. Fred Register is vice-president; Rev. E. M. Carter, secretary, and Mr. W. J. Ballentine, treasurer.

The next session of this conference will be held at Sanford. This should be our best. Let every church begin now to set a new record of cooperation and achievement within the conference.

“Our thanks go to Mrs. W. J. Andes who has served as” . . . This first line was lost off the leading editorial last week. Apologies to Mrs. Andes and the Editor.

FINANCIAL REPORT, AMERICAN BOARD

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, announced through its treasurer, Harold B. Belcher, an operating deficit of $16,818.81 at the close of its fiscal year. The deficit of the previous year amounted to $110,096.90, but has been reduced to $25,772, making a total indebtedness of $49,540.81.

Mr. Belcher states: “Earlier in the year it had been anticipated that the Board’s deficit would be much greater. The more favorable outcome has been due, to considerable extent, to the number and amount of gifts from individual friends of the Board received during the closing months of the fiscal year.” Approximately 500 more individual gifts were received this year than last, making a total amount in this category of $88,220.00 compared to $70,171.00 in 1949.

The total expenditures of the American Board for the past year amounted to $1,754,702.64 as compared to a total of $1,964,442.04 in the previous year.

The Southern Convention has channelled its missionary gifts through the American Board since 1931.

TOM KEEHN JOINS FOREIGN MISSIONS CONFERENCE

Rev. Thomas B. Keehn of Washington, D. C., has been appointed executive secretary of the Committee on Technical Assistance established this fall by the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

Mr. Keehn, for six years the legislative secretary in Washington of the Congregational Christian Council for Social Action, for the next six months will serve half-time as liason between the Protestant mission boards and the national and international government agencies administering the technical assistance program for undeveloped areas.

According to officials of the Foreign Missions Conference, he will be responsible for channelling factual information to foreign mission boards on the work of both the United Nations and the State Department in respect to the technical assistance and Point IV programs.

He will assist the committee, under the chairmanship of Rev. James K. Mathews, associate secretary for India and Pakistan of the Division of Foreign Missions, Methodist Church, to define and clarify conditions under which mission institutions and personnel might make their experience available to government agencies on specific technical assistance projects.

Missions Conference officials pointed out that for more than a century, Protestant foreign missions have been concerned with improving living conditions as well as the spiritual welfare of the peoples in undeveloped areas.

Mr. Keehn will arrange conferences between government officials and foreign mission board representatives, and will give assistance in tabulating available skills among missionary personnel here and abroad.

Finally, through a critical and constructive appraisal of the program, conference officials said, Mr. Keehn will serve the Foreign Missions Conference and its constituent agencies and mission boards in developing public education and support of wise governmental policies that will help promote maximum effectiveness and steady growth of the technical assistance program.

Technical assistance, according to Mr. Keehan, is related directly to the foreign missions work of the churches, and also affects their concern for social action, "which has been coming of age in the last generation."

The Gospel for Men at Work . . . An Ecumenical Inquiry

"To make the message of the Gospel real for men at their work," the World Council's Study Department has asked lay groups in the forty-four countries where there are member churches of the Council to begin study of the relationship of Christianity to modern industrial society.

In an inquiry published by the Study Department, it is pointed out that "in modern society the divine purpose of work is distorted and the dignity of work is not respected." The inquiry further declared that many Christians today "are themselves uncertain whether the Church has anything relevant to say about the meaning of work."

American participation in the inquiry is to be entrusted to a 25-man committee composed of clergy and representatives of labor and personnel management, under the leadership of Dr. John Oliver Nelson, professor of Christian Vocations and the director of Religious Field Work at Yale University Divinity School. Organizing meeting of the committee will be held in New York City, October 30.

The Nelson Committee's research in the United States will be reported not only to the Study Department of the council but also to a meeting of laymen devoted to the "Meaning of Work" which is scheduled to be held in the United States in 1952 as a part of a worldwide series of laymen's meetings called for by the Amsterdam Assembly. The 1952 meeting will be sponsored jointly by the Federal Council of Churches, the Canadian Council of Churches, in cooperation with the Conference of USA member churches of the World Council.

The study, largely limited at present to industrial labor, will stress "a thorough knowledge of the realities of industrial life" which it is contended makes "a mockery of preaching an individual ethic of work."

"To the average factory worker who knows the real frustrations in his daily work, all the fine phrases of the Church . . . about the meaning of work and the rewards of honesty and diligence are but sanctimonious hypocrisy . . . if his work does not receive the recognition it deserves from his employer and from society. Is it possible to find God in work which is regarded primarily as a bitter fate?"

Pointing out the biblical significance of work, the study suggests that work "is not something we have willed to do, but something which God has ordained." Every man must, not simply as a means of livelihood but as a "Christian duty," work at a specific job which entails "the full sharing of the total needs of the community by conscientious use of individual talents.

"Work which is not performed with this sense of community service, but as a means to accumulate wealth and to serve primarily our own pleasure has lost its meaning from the Christian point of view." Further, it was pointed out that many of the present-day evils of work were "complicently regarded as the working of inexorable economic and commercial laws." Such fatalism, the report said, was "an intolerable affront to man's true nature."

The inquiry emphasizes the need of increasing "the sense of fairness and justice of the worker by giving him a real voice in the organization and direction of the work of the shop," and points out the need for study of industrial councils, labor-management committees, and joint consultation in industry.

The inquiry makes particular reference to the volume, "Work in Modern Society," by the former director of the Christian frontier Movement, Dr. J. H. Oldham. The British author's book is published by Morehouse Gorham. Copies of the World Council's inquiry, titled "The Meaning of Work," are available from the New York office of the World Council at 10c each.

DR. POTTER HONORED.

Rockwell Harmon Potter preached his first sermon as pastor of Center Congregational Church in Hartford, Conn., the first October Sunday in 1900. The texts were from Job 23:3 and John 1:14, and the subject was, "Earth's Cry and Heaven's Answer." Dr. Potter returned to that pulpit on his fiftieth anniversary and preached, the first Sunday in this month on the same theme.

Dr. Potter's influence has spread far beyond Hartford. He helped to train a generation of ministers while serving as dean of Hartford Seminary. As moderator of the National Council, as president of the American Board, and in rich and varied services, he has had a helpful finger in many ecclesiastical pies. He is one of the most popular guest speakers at Elon College.

In a reception held on Monday night following, Supt. James English of Connecticut said, "There is hardly a man in our fellowship who has carried so many portfolios, and with such valor, insight and courage." Dr. Potter occupied the Center Church pulpit for 28 years. The present minister is Dr. Russell J. Clinchy.

NOTICE TO LAYMEN OF EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

A fall rally of all laymen of the Congregational Christian Churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference will be held at the Franklin Congregational Christian Church, Franklin, Virginia, on Sunday, November 5, 1950, beginning at 3:30 p. m. There will be an afternoon session, a short intermission, then a banquet at 6:00 p. m., and the entire program should be over not later than 7:30 or 8:00, thereby affording everyone that attends ample time to get home that evening at an early hour.

This rally is being sponsored by the Laymen's Fellowship of the Eastern Virginia Conference and, according to Mills E. Godwin, Jr., of the Oakland Christian Church, president of the group, a large crowd of men is expected. He believes that it will be the largest group of men ever to assemble from our conference at one time to jointly consider the work of the laymen in our denomination. Mr. Godwin said that while the rally was primarily for laymen, that all ministers and the public were also cordially invited to attend. He promised an interesting and inspiring program.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

A NEW VISION.

During the biennial session of the Southern Christian Convention at Portsmouth, Virginia, in May, 1936, it was voted to dissolve the Board of Education and the Board of Christian Education and to authorize a new board under the title of "The Board of Christian Education," the new board to undertake the duties and responsibilities of the two boards dissolved.

The Board of Education was charged with the responsibility of ascertaining the needs of the college and bringing those needs to the attention of the church. This board did not report to the annual conferences, but made its report to the Convention.

The Board of Christian Education was charged with the responsibility of promoting Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor, youth fellowship and other young people's organizations. This board usually reported to the conferences of the Convention in annual session.

It was proposed that the new Board of Christian Education would assume responsibilities for both boards being dissolved. By these actions, the Convention proposed to inaugurate a uniform plan of education for the Convention. The plan of education thus authorized was to begin with the kindergarten in the Sunday schools and move on through all departments of the Sunday school, culminating in a program of Christian Higher Education in Elon College. By this plan, the Convention hoped to make the college a more definite part of the church's program and to make it more convenient and more appealing to our own young people to move out of Sunday school at the proper age and into college on the church's own college campus.

Everything looked lovely, the new program was ideal, and we were all looking for satisfying results. The new Board of Christian Education was formed quite largely out of the old Board of Christian Education. Unfortunately, it would seem, this board continued its interest in a program in what it termed Christian education within the church, but it did not include the college. For a certain period the college seemed to be forgotten. The Board of Christian Education did not seem to realize that its responsibilities included the college. This was most unfortunate. In recent years, however, the Convention seems to have had a new vision, and to include, definitely, the college in its program. Particularly does the present vision of the church include the college. The good women of the church have designated the decorating of the auditorium at the college as its project for its annual thanksgiving offering. They are hoping to raise through their societies a total of $3,666.00, which is the cost of decorating the auditorium, blinds for the windows, and the refinishing of the pews. This is certainly a wonderful thing for the good women of the church to do for the college, and the entire church constituency is indebted to them for this generous effort.

The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches in session at Oakland Church, Chuckatuck, Virginia, took a very definite look at Elon College, its present and future needs, and devised a plan calculated to bring partial relief to the college. The plan calls for a contribution of $1.00 for the college by every individual member of the church. The fund so raised is to be known as the Elon College Sustaining Fund. The plan also requests that each individual church in the Convention observe Sustaining-Fund Sunday, preferably in October, but leaves the date entirely to the local church. Dr. William Moseley Brown, executive director of the Elon College Foundation, has been tireless in his efforts to introduce the Elon College Sustaining Fund to the churches of the Convention and to induce any and all churches to observe Sustaining-Fund Sunday.

Through these two plans and other agencies, the church is undertaking to join hands with the alumni and the college administration in a determined effort to see that present and future financial needs of the college are met, and met promptly. In all probability, there will be a number of churches that will not observe Sustaining-Fund Sunday in October. Some will, but others will defer this important service until the College Period, January and February, 1951. Perhaps more churches will observe Sustaining-Fund Sunday during the College Period rather than in early fall. There may be some few of our churches that will not follow the plan promoted by the Convention, but it is hoped that by far a greater majority of our churches will observe Sustaining-Fund Sunday during the approaching church year. If they become better acquainted with the college, its program, its purpose, its contributions, and its needs, I am sure their contributions will be larger and more frequent.

ELON COLLEGE SUSTAINING FUND A CHALLENGE.

A Statement by

HON MILLS E. GODWIN, JR.,
General Chairman.

The Elon College Sustaining Fund is a challenge to everyone interested in the future of Elon College. The wholesome influence of Elon has been outstanding and the people of the Southern Convention have been her chief beneficiaries. The college stands as a monument of real devoted service to our people. The past has written its record, and little we can do will change it, but the present and the future of Elon College is within our hands to help shape and direct. To those of us that have received her blessings and have been the principal recipients of her services, the opportunity now presents itself for us to do our part.

I cannot personally claim the honor and distinction of being an alumnus of Elon College as I attended another institution of higher learning. However, I would be proud to be counted among her sons. The older I become and the more I see of our church, its people, its possibilities and potentialities, the more I am convinced that Elon has made a truly remarkable contribution. The real strength of our church in the Southern Convention is found in the hearts of those who have been trained at Elon College and have gone out from there inspired to render a greater service. I see an ever greater opportunity for genuine service that the college can offer in the years ahead. The Sustaining Fund affords a practical approach to help Elon College that is within the ability and reach of all of our people. An investment so small is large indeed when channeled into such a course. Designated or undesignated, your contribution will help our college at a time when she needs our support.

As chairman of the General Committee of the Elon College Sustaining Fund, I earnestly ask your sympathetic understanding and wholehearted support.

SUSTAINING FUND REMITTANCES.

Some of our churches have already sent in remittances to be applied on their respective Sustaining Fund goals. Such remittances should not be sent direct to the Sustaining Fund office but rather to the Southern Convention office. They will there be handled in the usual manner, each church receiving proper credit on the books of the Southern Convention. Sustaining Fund remittances will then be turned over to Mr. Clyde W. Gordon, secretary-treasurer of the Elon College Foundation, to be distributed in accordance with the wishes of the individuals and churches contributing them. It is not necessary to wait until the entire amount of your objective is reached. Remittances of any amount are acceptable at any time.

WM. MOSELEY BROWN.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Another one of our conferences held its annual session. The Eastern North Carolina Conference met at Wake Chapel Church, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 17 and 18. They had a very good conference, and it was well-attended.

In tabulating the amounts paid to Elon College, including contributions sent to the conference, we have a total of $1,274, which is $53 less than the churches of this conference contributed a year ago—this in face of the increased needs of our college and the continuing increases in the expense of college administration.

The following churches, according to the Convention Office's records, have paid their college apportionments in full: Amelia, Bethlehem, Chapel Hill, Liberty Vance, Morrisville, Mt. Auburn, Mt. Carmel, New Hope, Oak Level, Plymouth, O'Kelley's Chapel, Sanford, Shallow Well, Southern Pines, Turner's Chapel, Wake Chapel and Youngsville. This leaves a total of 31 churches that have not paid their apportionments in full. Of course these churches have from now until January 1 in which to raise their apportionments. It is the hope and prayer of all who are interested in Elon College that each of these churches will secure their full apportionments for the college and forward the same to the Convention Office.

NEWS FROM THE VALLEY CONFERENCE.

Laymen's Sunday was observed in the following churches in the Virginia Valley Conference, Rev. R. E. Newton, pastor, on Sunday, October 8. Mr. Ray Rothgeb and Mr. B. F. McDaniel of the Leakesville Church supplied the pulpits of the Joppa and Dry Run churches in the Fort Valley. Mr. Ralph Rothgeb spoke at Mt. Lebanon, and Mr. K. T. Rothgeb was the speaker at Newport. All four guest speakers are members of the Leakesville Church. The guest speaker at Leakesville on Laymen's Sunday was Mr. J. Lynn Lucas, an attorney of Luray, and teacher of the Men's Bible Class of Luray Lutheran Church. Good reports have been received of the excellent work done by these lay-preachers.

It is a sign of growth and development in a church where laymen assume responsibility and take an active part in Kingdom service. May other laymen follow this fine example set by those who are willing to be used to proclaim the Gospel truth. Brother Newton and the people of his group of churches are doing constructive work in his parish.

The Senior Young People's Class of the Leakesville Sunday School purchased and installed a beautiful bulletin board on the church lawn. This attractive bulletin board, illuminated with electric lights, calling attention to the passer-by of the services of the Leakesville Church will not only prove a means of calling attention to the church in the community, but will doubtless induce people to come to the services. Congratulations to the Leakesville Sunday School for such an active class, always finding something important to do for the school and church. We have learned that this same class has done a number of other important improvements recently for the church. Mr. Ray Rothgeb is the teacher.

Pilgrim Hymnals were used for the first time and dedicated on Sunday morning at Winchester.

LAYMAN'S SERVICE AT WAVERLY.

The Waverly Congregational Christian Church held its annual Laymen's service on the second Sunday in October, under the auspices of the Women's Club. The occasion, with the Sunday school rally at ten o'clock and a Fellowship supper at 6:30 connected with the regular evening service, was a Red Letter Day on the church's calendar.

At the 11:15 service, the laymen of the local church presided, read the Scripture, and read the objectives of the Laymen of the Southern Convention. The morning message was delivered by Mr. W. A. Walton, principal of the Disputanta High School and a representative to the State Legislature from Prince George County. The choir was composed of men, who rendered a special number for the day.

At the evening service a bountiful supper was served in the educational building of the church. The service was conducted at the table, with the young people in charge. They presided, furnished the music, and did the ushering. The pastor delivered the evening message.

The Laymen have fulfilled the following objectives as set forth by the objectives committee of the Southern Convention, namely:

1. A working organization of men in every local church. "We-Men's Club" organized during Dick Jackson's ministry here. It meets monthly.
2. It has held a father and son banquet and outing.
3. The Laymen have put on several visitation campaigns.
4. For several years, we have held the Laymen's Sunday service.
5. They have been looking after the upkeep of the church property and its improvements for several years.

Parts of the other objectives are being worked on, but have not been carried out in full.

At Home and Abroad

DICK AND DOROTHY JACKSON ARE STILL IN CHINA.

Foochow, Fukien, China.

October 4, 1950.

Dear Friends:

Yes, we are still in China!! You will perhaps remember from an earlier letter that on July 4 we applied to the government for an exit visa. At that time we thought it would be only a matter of days before we would get out. Because Dorothy was expecting a baby in October, we requested that our pass be granted as quickly as possible.

After every kind of delay, and what seemed to us to be much unnecessary red tape, we were told on September 6 that our pass was granted and that we would be permitted to leave, but only by going through Canton or Shanghai, which meant a long journey overland by truck on one of the roughest roads in China, or in the world for that matter.

In the meantime Dorothy had developed a complication which required that she remain in bed for two months before the baby arrived. Going overland for her was just out of the question at that late date.

Just then a small British ship managed to slip into port past the watchful eye of the blockading Nationalist Navy. The captain agreed to take us to Hongkong if the government would permit us to go. I pleaded with the police to grant us this permission. It might save Dorothy's life and it would save us the long overland trip with a tiny baby. My pleas fell on deaf ears. "What's the hurry? You can wait," they told me.

So there was nothing else to do but to settle back and wait until after the baby came. We moved into the city next door to the hospital, so Dorothy could get the proper care. (It took a week's time to get permission from the police to move those three miles.)

Gradually, the government has been permitting foreigners to leave. It has been quite hard to see our friends going and leaving us behind.

On October 1, at 1:15 a. m., David Van was born in Union Hospital. He weighed seven pounds and seems to be quite a fine boy. Lewis is delighted. Dorothy got along very well —much better than the doctors expected. Now, only three days later, she gets up and walks around the room. We hope she will be home in a few more days. Then, after several weeks, when she and the baby are strong enough, we will make the trip overland to Hongkong, via Central China. From Hongkong, we hope to return by ship or plane to our native land.

I have heard it said that the hardest thing in the world for us humans to do is to wait. I believe it. The tense international situation and China's proximity to Korea is an area of concern. Nor does the intense propaganda campaign sponsored by the Chinese Communist government against American imperialism in Asia comfort us. There is no question in our minds that China is now a Russian satellite and is not likely to change within the foreseeable future.

The Chinese Churches see the handwriting on the wall and are seeking to make their peace with the government. They are thinking in terms of self-direction and self-support. The sixty-odd foreign missionaries in Foochow all expect to have left by the end of 1950. This will end over 100 years of foreign missionary activity in the city. The finest schools and hospitals in Foochow are all maintained by the Christian Churches. It is expected that within a few years all educational and medical institutions will have been taken over by the government. The future of the church is in the hands of God and the Chinese Christians. Those of us who are here believe that it will continue, but that it has hard days of testing ahead. The Chinese Christians will continue to need our prayers for a long time to come and still need our financial aid for a few years longer as they go through this period of transition.

In spite of the personal difficulties we have encountered, we are very fortunate in many ways. We are safe and well and overjoyed to welcome the new member into our family. We treasure the fellowship we enjoy with our Chinese and our missionary colleagues. Above all, we have faith that God will lead us beyond the present hour to paths which are above all that we may ask or think.

We look forward with great joy to seeing our family and friends again.

Cordially,
DICK & DOROTHY JACKSON.

ALICE GWINN WRITES FROM KYOTO, JAPAN.

One day in July, we went to the station to meet some of the Korean missionaries who had been evacuated from Korea. When we got there, we found that the United States Army planned to take care of them temporarily as they had been doing during the evacuation, and that later they would go as a group to a dormitory at Kobe College, until further plans could be made. Quite unexpectedly, as they were getting off the train, I became choked with emotion. Suddenly they became to me the symbol of the many refugees—the millions of them—who have had to leave their homes and go out to uncertainty. How difficult it is to visualize until it is before our eyes.

Some of this group will work with Koreans in Japan, some will teach in our Japanese mission schools, and a language school is being set up for the younger ones. Some have also returned to the United States. We are also getting some missionaries from China these days who will help with the work here. We feel rather close to this situation, of course, but most of our actual news comes from American sources, so we do not know much more about it than you do. In some of the army buildings are placards reading, "Zip your lip," a warning not to indulge in spreading rumors.

MIRIAM BROWN REPORTS FROM MADURA, SOUTH INDIA.

Imagine living in a village where no fruit, vegetables, or grain can grow because of drought, the village well is nearly dry (or you can't use it because you are an out-caste). You are completely dependent on the local ration shop for your food, which is rice and millet. Then there is half a ration (total ration 12 ounces per day), then half a ration for three days a week, then nothing. Some villagers are eating seeds of trees, some the pith of the aloe plant. Some are selling their children's labor for the next two or three years for a little grain hoarded by profiteers. Our girls are from those villages and will return to them for ten days' holiday in September. It's home, you know.

DEVOTIONAL THOUGHT.

"EVERY LIFE A PLAN OF GOD"*

By MRS. HENRY ROBINSON.

"And who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord."—I Chron. 29:5.

Bernard of Clairvaux had written on the wall of his cell in the monastery the words: "Bernard, why are you here?" Every time he entered his cell, he was confronted with the questions of his life's purpose. Too many people today have no clear idea why they are here, where they are going, how best to use the gift of life. The result is futility and boredom.

The answer to such futility, obviously is to find and to give one's self to a great purpose. It is obvious that not just any purpose will do. The good life is the matter of giving and not getting. It is a matter of contributing to life and not a matter of receiving. Look over the course of history and you will discover that the men and women who found the secret of real living were contributors to life. Whether you have five talents or one, the church needs your contribution. And the need is now, today. Don't let this day pass without contributing something good to life.

He was going to be all that mortal could be—tomorrow.

No one should be kinder or braver than he—tomorrow.

A friend who was troubled and weary he knew,
Who'd be glad of a lift,
and who needed it, too;

On him he would call,
and see what he could do—
tomorrow.

YEAR BOOKS.

Some societies placed orders for a quantity of Year Books at the time of the School of Missions. In at least two instances, Year Books have been sent to societies when those societies had already received said Year Books at the School of Missions. If by any chance this happened to your society, too, please return the extras to the Convention Office and they will refund your money. The supply is exhausted, and many, many societies want them. Your cooperation will be appreciated.

AN IMPORTANT PINK SHEET.

In the packet for women's societies there is a little pink sheet headed "Vital Statistics." One copy of this from each society is to be filled in and mailed to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C. She reports that the response thus far has not been very good, but she needs this information from every society.

It will be helpful to her and to your society if you will consider carefully the last item on the sheet, concerning missionary speakers, and will write her in detail about this. Instead of just answering "Yes" to the question, "Would you like a missionary speaker next March or April, or some other time?" you might be specific as to just when you would like a speaker. Then she can make out the schedules and fit them in with your plans, if at all possible.

THANK OFFERING PROGRAM.

A Thank Offering and a letter concerning the program has been mailed to each society. The program is excellent and may be used in a local circle meeting or for a public program. Varied suggestions for presenting it are given.

It appears that the program was mailed to the president of the society for last year, rather than to the president. If you are the president of your society and have not received a copy, please check with the preceding president. If a copy cannot be located, please write to the Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., for one. It is important that each society have this material available, and that each society make good use of it.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

PORTSMOUTH, FIRST.

The Woman's Fellowship of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., brings their year to a close with a most successful year. This year we merged our two societies, the Ladies' Aid and the Missionary, into the Woman's Fellowship.

We added to the kitchen equipment an electric coffee urn, gas stove, electric ice box (a gift from one of our church members, Mr. L. E. Parker), new dishes and other kitchen items.

Easter lilies were sent to our sick and shut-ins. A Mother-Daughter Banquet was held in May. A box was sent to Japan and a bag of clothing was shipped overseas. In July, Mrs. W. H. Harrell reviewed our study book, "Missions at the Grass Roots." This was a wonderful experience for each one who attended.

The highlight of the year was to have Timothy Chang visit with us and bring us a very fine message. A delightful evening was enjoyed by all.

During the year we have remembered our shut-ins with sunshine gifts and boxes; and cards and flowers have been sent to the sick. We have served the Endeavorers a light Sunday night supper one Sunday night a month.

Our budget has been met this year and all bills paid. All money taken in this year was from voluntary contributions. This being the first year of our new organization, we hope to do bigger and better things in the future.

APPLE'S CHAPEL.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Apple's Chapel, under the leadership of Mrs. R. M. Murrell, has closed a very interesting and instructive year. The programs have been a delight to all. Through the study of the home and foreign books, which were reviewed by Mrs. Lettie Riley and Mrs. R. E. Apple, we have learned many new things concerning our mission work and the people of other lands. The Bible study, conducted by Mrs. J. C. Hogan, was given with a sacredness typical of the Master, himself. World Community Day was observed with an appropriate program and the dedicating of our "Pieces for Peace."

The Thank Offering program was a public service held at the church with Mrs. Homer Andrews and Mrs. R. E. Apple as leaders. World Day of Prayer was also a public service with three denominations cooperating. May Fellowship Day and Family Life Week events were attended by a number of invited guests. Mrs. P. L. FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Little Friends:

As I write to you, I am about to start on a train trip. I am going to Richmond to attend the dedication service for an organ. When we dedicate things, we are saying that they are for God's use. This organ is in the State penitentiary at Richmond. For a long time the men had a piano in their chapel, and their Chaplain, George Ostergren, thought that they should have an organ. The Richmond Council of Church Women decided to make it their project and they raised $3,500 to buy a Baldwin electric organ. The prisoners themselves gave $120.00 and did the electrical wiring for the installation.

All this happened when I was living in Richmond, and the Council asked me to come back for the service. I hope that none of you will ever hear the music of that organ, but there are grown-ups, as well as boys and girls, who do bad things. Then they must be punished, and the state sends them to prison. In Virginia, the churches of every denomination cooperate and pay for religious work in prisons and other state homes. Rev. Emmet Frazer heads the whole thing, and he has a wonderful way with prisoners. be they young or old. He shows movies to the boys and girls at Bon Air and Peaks Industrial Schools sometimes.

Perhaps the sweet music from the organ will touch some heart and remind the prisoners of God and his love. It is bad to be kept inside, as you know from rainy day experiences, but perhaps a little joy will come from sacred music and religion.

All praise to the church women of Richmond. Their gift will last for many years and bring harmony and beauty into sad hearts. Think of all the good things church women are doing.

WHAT KIND OF CHILDREN?

By MARY STARCH KEER.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Children will be children," said a father whose son had been driving a stolen car at seventy miles an hour on a busy Hollywood boulevard. Police cars had raced to stop the speeding driver, but when they tried to come up beside him he swerved the car in an endeavor to hit them. After this had happened twice the officers fired some warning shots at the car, and killed him. The police of course, one of the shots struck the boy and when firing the shots, did not know the age of the person who was driving.

"The father violently decried the verdict of the coroner's jury, which absolved the officers from blame—calling the shooting 'justifiable homicide,' " said a woman to her friend when relating the incident. "He said, 'If officers are allowed to shoot children, children are not safe on our streets.' "

"Are other children safe with a boy behaving like that—driving seventy miles an hour, ignoring signals, and trying to run down the officers who are trying to protect the public from him?" demanded the friend indignantly. "I agree that 'children will be children,' but what kind of children they are depends upon the kind of upbringing they have been given. It is easy to see what kind of education that boy had been receiving from his father."

"Yes," said the first woman. "No doubt, not only by example but by his words many times, he had been setting a pattern of disregard for the rights of others as well as for the law and those who enforce it. I have seen examples of both the right and the wrong way of influencing children as I ride on the bus, which I often must do. On one crowded bus there were several passengers standing who, it was plain to see, should not have been subjected to this ordeal. A woman with two little boys told the children to keep their seats, saying that they had paid for them and did not have to give them up to anyone. She did not stop to think that these people were standing had also paid their fares and that some of them were much less able to stand than her boys."

"Most likely she will reap unhappy result from that lesson on indifference to the discomfort of others when those boys are older," said her friend. And then she continued, "It is not often that parents behave as that mother did, I think, but many mothers make the mistake of having their children sit while they themselves stand. If a child—either boy or girl—is well and is too old to be held on the lap, that child is old enough and able to stand. He can be influenced to enjoy standing in order that his mother may sit. It can be managed so as to give him a grown-up feeling that he will delight in. Children learn to be thoughtful and considerate by being thoughtful and considerate."

"That is true," said the first woman, "especially, if they enjoy each experience. The feeling of satisfaction in any course of action carries over into all repetitions of that action when once it has been acquired. And it makes me happy to observe that many mothers do teach their boys and girls to rise and offer a seat to older persons on a bus, for I know that—if the mothers see that the children get real pleasure from doing this—those children are learning right attitudes, which will make them pleasant to live with, wherever they go, and will help them to be successful in school and at work, as well as at home, all through their lives."

SELF-DENYING LOVE.

He might have reared a palace at a word,
He who sometimes had not where to lay his head;
Time was when he who nourished crowds with bread
Would not one meal unto himself afford.
Twelve legions girded with angelic sword
Were at his beck, the scorned and buffeted;
He healed another's scratch, his own side bled—
Side, feet and hands with cruel piercings gored.
Oh, wonderful the wonders left undone!
And scarce less wonderful than those he wrought;
Oh, self-restraint, passing all human thought,
To have all power, and be as having none!
Oh, self-denying love, which felt alone
For needs of others, never for its own!
Selected.

Self-reliance can turn a salesman into a merchant; a politician into a statesman; an attorney into a jurist; an unknown youth into a great leader. All are apt to be tomorrow's big leaders—those who sit in solitude sit above the clang and dust of time, with the world's secret trembling on their lips.

MISS ANN TRUITT, Associate

WESTERN N. C. RALLY.

Don't forget the Western North Carolina Youth Fellowship Rally which is to be held on Sunday afternoon, October 29, at the Pleasant Union Church, located off Highway 49, Southwest of Asheboro.

WHO ENJOYED MACK'S CAKE?

It seems that Rev Mack Welch of Palm Street Church, Greensboro, lost his cake at the North Carolina-Virginia Fellowship Rally. It happened this way: Volunteers went out to the cars to pick up the picnic suppers that the visitors had brought. From the Welch car, they procured six pieces of chocolate cake. The Welches had to leave early, and the cake was to have been eaten on the way home. "It's more blessed to give than to receive." Hey, Mack?

VIRGINIA VALLEY NEWS.

The young people of Antioch Pilgrim Fellowship in the Valley of Virginia, recently presented a beautiful picture of "Christ Knocking at the Door" to the church. This project was started some time ago in a Sunday school class and was then taken over by the Pilgrim Fellowship. The presentation was made for the group by Jackie Showalter.

* * *

A recommendation was made at the Valley Young People's Rally, that each young people's group (Pilgrim Fellowship, Missionary society, Sunday school class, or other group) set as its goal a generous contribution to the Youth Fellowship Missionary Project of the Southern Convention. It was further suggested that a special offering be made on the Sunday nearest Thanksgiving, or at a time most convenient, and that the offerings be brought to the next Young People's Rally on January 7 and dedicated in a special service at that meeting.

FIRST, NORFOLK TEEN AGERS. HAVE DINNER.

On Wednesday, September 20, the members of the Teen Age Fellowship of the First Church, Norfolk, Virginia, held a dinner meeting at the parsonage. Twelve young people attended, bringing with them the ingredients for a fried chicken dinner. The meal was served buffet style from the dining room table. Following the dinner, group singing was lead by the minister, and a business meeting was conducted by the president, Joyce Fulcher.

INTERDENOMINATIONAL DANCE!

The young people of Salem Chapel and Fulp Moravian Church held a "Square Dance" at the Belew Creek Community Club House on October 7.

There were 48 present for the fun and fellowship. Mr. James S. Rayburn, a teacher at the Traphill High School, Elkin, N. C., called the dances, and Mr. James Fulp, superintendent of the Fulp Moravian Sunday school, with three others, furnished the string band music. The decoration committee, the game committee and refreshment committee, composed of young people from the two churches, did an excellent job of planning for the social. There were eight adults and parents present for the evening. Everyone enjoyed it and is looking forward to similar evenings of activities together. This is a good example of what can be done by churches working together in a community.

The following officers have been elected by the Salem Chapel young people for a period of six months: Darlene Marshall, president; Clela Marshall, vice-president; Hazel Morgan, secretary and Betty Marshall, treasurer. The installation service was held on the first Sunday in October at the 11 o'clock worship service.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA YOUTH FELLOWSHIP RALLY.

The Fall Rally of the North Carolina-Virginia Youth Fellowship Conference was held at the Happy Home Church on Sunday afternoon, October 15. Dorothy Ballinger, president, presided at one of the best rallies ever held in the conference.

The main feature of the program was a panel discussion led by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, who presented the Youth Packet. Interesting talks were given by Helen King from the Burlington Junior High Camp, Curtis Young from Durham on the Elon Camp, and Lois Scott from Elon College on the Officers Camp. John Truitt, Jr., reported on the National Student Conference, which was held at Elmhurst College, Elmhurst, Ill. Timothy Chang gave a humorous, yet inspiring account of his summer's travels, which led to several states and several conferences. William Tolley then gave a report on S. S. S. work, in which he took part last summer. Warren Mathews, president of the Southern Convention Youth Fellowship, reported on his visit to the National Pilgrim Fellowship Convention, which was held in Milwaukee. In addition, he outlined plans for the future, which include bringing a Philippino student to the United States. Here he will study and then return to his native people to minister to them.

A Month of Sundays for Youth

There will be Young People's Rallies covering every Conference, of the Convention in October. OVERCOMING TEMPTATION. (TEMPERANCE LESSON.)

LESSON VI—NOVEMBER 5, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Blessed is the man who endures trial, for when he has stood the test he will receive the crown of life which God has promised those who love him.—James 1:12.

LESSON: Matthew 4:8-11; John 6:15; Romans 13:12-14; I Corinthians 10:12-13.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 25:4-14.

He Was Tempted.

Our Lord Jesus Christ was tempted—not only once, but again and again. He was tempted in all points like as we are. He was like us in that respect. Therefore he knows how to sympathize with, and how to help those who are tempted. We do not have a High Priest who cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, but one who was tempted in all points like as we are. Let us, therefore, come boldly to the throne of grace that we may obtain mercy and find help and grace when we are tempted.

Matthew and Luke give an account of what we call The Temptation, but in different order. It was a subtle thing, the devil did it in a clever way. But Jesus saw through the subtle scheme and repelled the advance of the Tempter and resisted the temptation. It is worthy of note that he did it by using the Word of God. He had hid the Word of God in his heart and he did not sin against God. What a difference it would make if those who study the Sunday school lesson would "learn by heart" the "Memory Selection." Or if they would store in their hearts many verses of Scripture, and then use them in the hour of temptation.

At the close of the story of The Temptation, it is reported that "the devil leaveth him for a season." The devil withdrew to lick his wounds and to make plans for another assault on our Lord. And again and again, throughout his ministry, Jesus was tempted. We need to keep this fact in mind—Jesus was tempted—but without sin. He was the only man who ever lived who did not yield to temptation, who did not sin. He was the sinless Son of God.

We Are Tempted.

Every man is tempted. Temptation is a universal fact in life. No matter who we are, or where we are, we have to deal with temptation. And strangely enough, the better we are, the more we are tempted. The more sensitive the nature or spirit of man, the more subtle and strong the temptation. We are not all tempted alike. The devil is shrewd—he attacks us at our weakest point. He often works through his "Fifth Column." Sometimes the devil uses those of our own household and our best friends to tempt us. Sometimes the temptation comes through the flesh, sometimes through the spirit. But always it comes.

Let it be said that temptation does not come from God. The Scripture itself says that God tempts no man. God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man. But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed (James 1:13,14). Only a dead man is immune from temptation. Indeed, it is a sign of moral and spiritual life that one is tempted and is conscious of his temptation.

Dealing with Temptation.

Facing Temptation. Perhaps the first factor in dealing with temptation is to face it, to accept it as a fact of life, to recognize it as something that must be dealt with all through life. It is a mistake to deny the fact of temptation. Nothing is gained thereby, and much is lost. Let a man first face the fact that as long as he is alive, no matter who he is or where he is, he will have to deal with temptation, and he has taken an essential step in dealing with temptation. One might wish that he would not be tempted, but it is wishful thinking. And it would be colorless living if there were no temptation, indeed, it would be meaningless living if there were no temptation. Face the fact that you are going to be tempted all through your life, and make your plans accordingly for a long campaign ending only in death itself, for only dead men are not tempted.

Fleeing Temptation. The wise man avoids temptation whenever and wherever possible. Only a fool deliberately puts himself in the presence of temptation. Our Lord taught his followers to pray, "Lead us not into temptation." It is not cowardice to keep away from temptation; it is the highest wisdom. Life has enough hazards from temptation under ordinary circumstances. Why make it more difficult and dangerous by deliberately seeking temptation? If a young person finds that to go with a certain crowd means that he is going to yield to the temptation to drink, he had better keep away from that crowd and seek other company. A man who had stopped drinking would be foolish to spend his evenings sitting in a tavern or beer joint or what have you, when he would be tempted again and again. Many people court disaster because they court temptation. Flee temptation whenever possible. Reduce temptation to a minimum.

Fighting Temptation. It is well to avoid temptation as much as possible. But, as it is written, every man is tempted, and is tempted all through his life. And if he is a man, he will have to face and fight temptation in one form or another. We are to resist the devil. We are to fight the good fight of faith. We must engage the enemy on the field of battle. Here are two suggestions. We can fight indirectly. One of the best ways, for instance, to overcome a bad habit is to form a good habit. We can overcome evil with good. We can drive out bad thoughts by thinking good thoughts. We can soon develop a distaste for bad reading by reading good literature. We can break down the power of bad habits by forming good habits. A great preacher once preached a sermon on "The Expulsive Power of a Great Affection." Substitution is a sound strategy in dealing with temptation.

But ultimately we must also fight directly. Sooner or later we have our backs to the wall and we must stand and face and fight temptation. It is a grim fight. It takes grit and gumption. It also takes grace, the grace of God. No man is strong enough or smart enough to lick temptation in his own strength or wisdom. But we have the word of God that he will not suffer us to be tempted above that which we are able to bear, but with the temptation will also provide a means or a way of escape, that we may be able to endure it (I Cor. 10:13). Here is good news for hard-pressed men and women. We do not have to go through life taking a licking every time we face and fight the devil. If we have the Word of

The sick and shut-ins were remembered with gifts and cards. A gift was sent to Timothy and one to Silas Chang. Sewing kits and materials were sent to the home mission station in Florida.

Mrs. Mary Whitsell, eldest member of the society, was honored by the gift of a Life Membership.

Delegates attended the fall conference at Long's Chapel, the Spring Rally and the School of Missions at Elon.

Material for the new year is in the hands of the program committee, and we are looking forward to another good year as we go forth "Thy Will To Do."

MT. ZION, ECLIPSE, VA.

We began our new year with the World Wide Communion Sunday. World Community Day program and the Thank Offering program were combined meetings with the youth and junior societies.

Our Thanksgiving offering went to our Orphanage. There was a beautiful sermon given by our pastor, Rev. S. W. Carne, on Christmas Day. Also our Family Life Committee gave us a wonderful Christmas program. We watched after the needy and shut-ins by sending fruit or flowers with cards to the sick. World Day of Prayer was combined with our neighboring church. We had a wonderful service.

We had a large group to attend our Spring Rally. During Holy Week, through Easter, we had prayer meetings, with a sunrise service on Easter Sunday. Family Week, we were very proud to have Rev. Mr. Pool to carry on our revival service, making us feel closer to our Lord, that we might be his witnesses. On Mother's Day, gifts were given to the oldest and youngest mother.

In June we had the pleasure of having with us Mrs. Wm. T. Harrell, the president of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference, who most interestingly reviewed our home mission book, "Missions at the Grass Roots." Our husbands were with us and we really enjoyed every moment of it.

We also were proud to have the privilege of the service of dedication of the new Wurlitzer Organ, with

Rev. W. Stanley Carne giving the address, "Did Jesus Sing?" The music was under the direction of our organist, Mrs. Margaret Dixon. Our society was very glad to have had a share in helping pay for the organ.

We have given a life membership and have studied our books. Our president, Mrs. Scott, gave us a very interesting review on Japan, and our study in John was given in such a way by Mrs. Margaret Dixon that it gave us a much better view of Jesus' life and his every thought of what we should understand. We hope, in the coming year, to do better toward our fellow men.

MRS. J. L. GRAY,
Incoming President.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

The Thanksgiving Program which has been prepared for the Sunday schools and churches will be presented for the first time at Monticello on the fifth Sunday in October. This group of 25 children have a good program. They will give it on the first Sunday in November at Zion, Shiloh and New Elam; on the second Sunday at Burlington, Antioch and Ramseur; November 8, at the Western North Carolina Conference; third Sunday at Wake Chapel, Wentworth and Auburn; and on November 20, at the Burlington Rotary Club. We have no engagements, as yet, for the first two Sundays in December. The third Sunday in December we will be at Ebenezer and Amelia. Without a bus, it is quite a problem to transport twenty-five children and two or three helpers, therefore we try to do morning, afternoon and night when we go to a section.

Since I finished my interim preaching at the College Chapel, I have preached and presented the Orphanage at: Belew Creek, Albemarle, Salem Chapel, Newport, First Burlington, Danville, Winston-Salem, Chapel Hill, Plymouth, Berea, Carolina, and Wake Chapel.

The fourth Sunday in this month I am to be at Calvary in Greensboro. Let me say right here how much I appreciate the kind invitations of the pastors, and to regret that several have asked for Sundays already tied up. This institution belongs to the churches and conferences, and the Convention, and it is good to know that it is upon the hearts of us all. Several Sunday schools and churches have visited us this summer and fall, and others are planning to come. Whether you have written us or not, please come ahead as we are always ready to extend you a welcome. If I am away, there are plenty of people here to show you around — although that is something I greatly like to do.

Dr. Charles D. Johnston, Jr., has sent us our first 1950 Thanksgiving donation. This is doubly appreciated, I can assure you. I hope the Thanksgiving Offering will be coming in steadily now. Since we made our deposit yesterday, we have received two other Thanksgiving Offerings. They will show in the next report. Every church and Sunday school is urged to take time to develop an enthusiastic offering for the Orphanage.

The first issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN in November will carry many new and interesting pictures of children at the Orphanage. Also, it will contain much valuable information. Please look for your copy, and keep it for future reference. It will answer many questions you will want to know. You can do the Orphanage a favor by getting your friends to subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. And not only the Orphanage will be helped by the subscriber, but all the other institutions and work of our church.

Our eighty boys and girls send greetings and very best wishes to you all.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

RUSSIAN PATRIARCH BLASTS
LAYMEN'S "VANITY."

Charging that laymen "who could not satisfy their vanity in the sphere of the state" have "transferred their intrigues to the realm of the church," Patriarch Alexeij, head of the Russian Orthodox Church, has called attention to "two phenomena in church life which are distressing bishops and doing notable damage to the church."

These phenomena, "the tendency of numerous laity to assume power which does not belong to them in the church" and "efforts of individuals to set themselves up, quite unrequested, as judges of their own pastoral shepherds," were pointed up in the Patriarch's speech at the ordination of the new Bishop of Tallinn (Esthonia). The speech was published in Journal of the Patriarchate, No. 5, 1950.

"The bishop," said Patriarch Alexeij, "who cannot tolerate such monstrosities in the church, has the duty to expel from the Temple these crafty elements." —E.P.S.

THE MOVIE—"SECOND CHANCE."

Has your church shown "Second Chance," the feature movie provided by the denomination for free use this year? It is a sound movie. There are three sets of film available in the Convention. One copy is in the Valley of Virginia, one copy may be scheduled by the Eastern Virginia churches through Rev. Duane N. Vore, Suffolk Christian Church, and the North Carolina churches should secure it from the Convention Office at Elon College.

The film is based on an original story by Faith Baldwin. The stars are Ruth Warrick as Emily Dean, John Hubbard as Ed Dean, and Hugh Beaumont as Dr. Emory, the minister.

It was produced by the Protestant Film Commission for three cooperating denominations: the Congregational Christian, the Presbyterian U.S.A., and the Evangelical and Reformed. It was filmed in Hollywood. The picture requires eighty minutes for showing and has been acclaimed by previewing groups as the best religious film released to date.

"Second Chance" is a love story, a tale of how a home was founded with close ties in the church, and how slowly social and business ambition, domestic monotony and indifference, not only swept Ed and Emily Dean away from their spiritual moorings but nearly wrecked their marriage.

It is a true to life story introducing complications cause by the war, the loss of an elder son, the resented marriage of the younger son, the forgetting of all the wonderful things which made the first days of marriage a time of loveliness tied up to church and to service for others.

"Second Chance" will prove highly entertaining, deeply moving and intensely interesting. It causes each one in the audience to think, to realize that appearing on the screen are symbols of their own life and dreams.

"Second Chance" is the first of a series of films sponsored by the three cooperating denominations. A new release is to be issued yearly as a part of the total program to strengthen personal religious living and deepen devotion to the church and its program.

God in our hearts and his grace in our lives, we can resist the devil, and if we do that he will flee from us. That old fellow, with all his strutting and braggadocio, is a coward at heart. He is afraid of the child of God armed with the Sword of the Spirit.

Bridges Named American Board President

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, internationally known Congregational Christian overseas service arm since 1810, has formally installed Ronald Bridges, L.H.D., Litt.D., of Sanford, Maine, as the twelfth president of this 141-year old organization.

Dr. Bridges, who was elected at the recent General Council meeting held in Cleveland, is well known as a Christian lay leader, writer, educator and radio commentator. He becomes the fifth layman to head this historic society. He succeeds Dr. Russell Henry Stafford, president of Hartford Theological Seminary Foundation, former pastor of Old South Church, Boston, who has served as president for the past ten years.

Both Dr. Bridges and Dr. Stafford were honored at a fellowship dinner on Monday evening, October 23, at the plenary sessions of the American Board Prudential Committee meeting at Framington Center, Massachusetts.

Dr. Bridges, who is a layman noted for his exceptionally clear understanding of religion and its practical application to daily living, has done nation-wide broadcasting for years from both East and West coasts, and last year was commentator on NBC's weekly "Religion in the News" program. He also has done considerable work through local stations, including special programs and regular news commentaries.

Two unique events in Dr. Bridges' career include his unanimous election in 1944 as Moderator of the General Council, being the youngest man ever elected to this post; and his call to service from 1945 to 1950 as president of the Pacific School of Religion in Berkeley, California, although an unordained man with no theological training.

A Christian lay leader, Dr. Bridges has practiced what he preached along the lines of lay participation in church life. He has served as a deacon in his local church. He was a member of the Board of Directors of The Board of Home Missions, and for four years was chairman of the Missions Council. He is a member of the National Committee of the Laymen's Fellowship.

From college days, Dr. Bridges has been a student of politics. He once ran for Congress from his home State of Maine; served as moderator of his home Town Meeting, and as state chairman of the Young Republicans.

He was lay delegate for the Congregational Christian Churches to the first assembly of the World Council of Churches in 1948, and will serve in the same capacity at the constituting assembly of the new National Council of Churches of Christ, at Cleveland, November 28 - December 1.

Dr. Bridges was born 44 years ago in a small Maine village on Passamaquoddy Bay. His education began in Maine and extended to California. His degrees include an honorary Litt. D. from Elon College.

Observe Orphanage Period During November

Above, reading from left to right, are Dewey, Phyllis and George Morningstar. Their father died when Phyllis was one month old. Their mother lived with their grandmother until her death this past March. The little home was then sold. Through the recommendations of Dr. Charles E. Newman and Rev. Mark W. Andes, these little folks were received by the Orphanage. If you knew these children as I do you would love them—so ready and obedient, so grateful and attentive. Little Phyllis is not yet accustomed to the stranger who is making the picture, but she warms up—just a little—to her many friends here.

“ . . . MORE BLESSED TO GIVE . . . ”

That greater gift was yours, my friend,
From God's abundant store;
And to you may He ever send
Quite all you need and more.

For a little boy was fed tonight,
And snugly tucked in bed
Beneath his sheets so clean and white,
When pretty prayers were said.

News Flashes

Give liberally for the Orphanage
"Thanksgiving Offering."

We are glad to report that the Sustaining Fund Program continues to make progress.

A reception for Miss Dorothy Foltz, new director of religious education, was held Sunday afternoon at First Church, Burlington.

The Christian Herald Quardrangle was dedicated Sunday at the Memorial House Community, Penny Farms, Florida. Dr. Daniel A. Poling was the guest speaker. The Memorial Home Community was established in 1926 by Mr. T. C. Penny in memory of his preacher father and his mother. The Home is open to retired ministers, missionaries and other religious workers.

REVIVAL MEETINGS.

Revival meetings were held recently in group three of the Virginia Valley Conference, Rev. R. E. Newton, pastor: Guest speaker at Dry Run and Joppa was the Rev. Clyde O. Koon; at Leakesville, the Rev. Emerson J. Rohart did the preaching; At Mt. Lebanon, Rev. Walstein Snyder preached; and at Newport Church, Rev. Mark Andes was visiting evangelist. It is reported that all these meetings were well attended and inspirational messages were delivered by each speaker. Such periods of Christian fellowship, of prayer and praise to God, renew faith and provide courage to attempt greater things for Christ and the Church.

DRS. SMITH AND BROWN ATTEND COLLEGE COUNCIL.

President Smith, accompanied by Dr. William M. Brown, left last Thursday for Chicago where they attended the annual meeting of the College Council of Congregational Churches.

Dr. Smith has been president of this group for some years, and presided over the meetings, which were held Monday and Tuesday at the Council's headquarters in Chicago. This Council molds the education policies of all Congregational Christian colleges.

Upon completion of this meeting, Dr. Smith returned to the annual meeting of the Eastern Virginia Conference at Bethlehem. This meeting is in session, Wednesday and Thursday, November 1 and 2.

LEBANON CHURCH DEDICATES PICTURE.

Miss Rennie Taylor, a member of Lebanon Congregational Christian Church, Semora, N. C., gave an oil painting of "Christ in Gethsemane" to her church in memory of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Taylor. During their lifetime they were loyal members of Lebanon. Mrs. Strader of Reidsville, N. C., painted the picture.

At the regular worship service on Sunday, October 15, the painting was dedicated. Miss Taylor presented the memorial; on behalf of the church, the pastor, Rev. M. W. Andes, received and dedicated the picture. Mr. Walter L. Taylor, senior deacon of Lebanon, gave the didicatory prayer.

Lebanon Church is grateful to Miss Taylor for this beautiful gift.

ELON PRESIDENT HONORED TWICE ON BIRTHDAY.

Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon, was twice surprised and honored on his birthday on Wednesday afternoon and evening of last week, the first time at a picnic gathering of his freshman Sunday School Class in the late afternoon and again at a surprise gathering of a number of the faculty and friends at his home in the evening.

About 30 or 40 members of his freshman Sunday School group gathered at Burlington's City Park in the late afternoon for a picnic supper and weiner roast, at which a birthday cake was brought out to honor the Elon president.

A number of the faculty and friends then gathered at the president's home on the campus at 8 o'clock that night for an impromptu party, at which Dr. Smith was presented with a gift from the faculty. Mrs. Smith served coffee to the group, and delightful social hour followed.

SON OF MISSIONARY DIES IN KOREA.

Word has been received by the American Board of the death in action in Korea of Alan Chandler Taylor, 20-year-old son of Dr. and Mrs. Alan Boardman Taylor of the American Board in Durban, South Africa.

Chandler Taylor, who was born in South Africa, enlisted in the United States Marine Corps after completing his first year at the University of Vermont, Burlington, Vermont. He went into winter training at Paris Island and Camp LeJune, South Carolina, sailing from the East coast to the Orient early in May. Letters to his family stated that he landed in Japan in September, and his last communication came to them from Osaka, Japan.

While full details have not yet been received by either the family or the American Board, it is thought that Private Taylor was part of the landing force on the beaches in the recent attack on Seoul.

Alan Chandler Taylor leaves his parents, Dr. and Mrs. Alan Boardman Taylor of Durban, South Africa, where Dr. Taylor is medical head of the McCord Zulu Hospital; one brother, Richard Boardman Taylor, ex-pilot in the South African Air Force during World War II, and now studying medicine at the Witwatersrand University, South Africa, and two sisters, Mrs. James Elliott of El Paso, Texas, and Miss Eileen Taylor of Boston, a nurse in the Massachusetts General Hospital, who was a Lieutenant in the Nursing Corps in foreign service on the Lido Road campaign in World War II.

MEMORIAL SERVICE TO OSCAR F. SMITH.

On Sunday, October 22, the Sunday nearest the birthday of Oscar Frommel Smith, a memorial service was held in his memory by the Rosemont Church, Norfolk. Flowers were placed as part of the memorial service, and at the close of the evening service were given to Mr. Smith's first Sunday school teacher, Mrs. Alice Gibson Mills, still a faithful member of Rosemont and one of its most loyal attendants. The following tribute was read to the congregation by its author, Mary H. Booth:

Some men do a "heap of living"
As they travel life's highway,
And should their journey be a short one,
They've made landmarks that will stay.

So it was with our good friend,
Oscar Frommel Smith,
Many are the finer things
His name's connected with.

Christian leadership at church
Which never ended there,
But found its way into business
And each civic affair.

To these he gave himself so freely,
Along with his generous gift—
When his shoulder was at the wheel,
One really felt the lift.

Countless numbers he befriended
Regardless of race or creed,
He helped because he loved to
And not for praise for his deed.

Rosemont friends will long remember
What his leadership meant to us,
How it was his earnest wish
That all things be harmonious.

The special gifts he gave us
Are greatly cherished too,
Our air conditioning system
Makes pleasant every pew.

The sweet, full notes of our organ
Lead us in deeper praise,
And our carillon lifts our thoughts,
As we hear it on certain days.

Our Church History booklets
Are treasured by us all,
Because of pleasant memories
They help us to recall.

Then his generous remembrance
He left us in his will,
Will be on hand to help us,
Greater duties to fulfill.

We feel these things are a challenge
To higher aims for each one,
May we work a little harder
For the fine things he wanted done.

"IN THIS DAY OF VISITATION. . ." BRITISH CHURCHMEN URGE PRAYER.

Anglican and Congregational church leaders have asked their fellow Christians to forswear fatalism about a possible third World War and to pray for peace.

"We must not for a moment allow ourselves to regard war as inevitable," said the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, "but the fear of it broods over the face of the earth." The Anglicans called upon British Christians to set aside Sunday, October 29th, as a day of united prayer, "not only for the United Nations, but for the nations and peoples in this day of visitation, for the preservation of mankind from the horrors of another war, for the things which belong to our peace."

The call to prayer concluded by declaring that "Christians know that war and all that leads to it are contrary to the will of their Lord."

British Congregational leaders noted the "misgiving and horror" with which their fellow countrymen view "even the bare possibility of a third World War."

Declaring that the churches were active in the promotion of peace, the Congregationalists, including Rev. H. F. Lovell Cooks, chairman of the Congregational Union, and Rev. Leslie E. Cooke, its secretary, pointed out the work of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, a joint agency of the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council.

The Commission, they said, "is in closest possible touch with (international) affairs and is able to make representations at the highest political level both at home and abroad."

"Beyond that direct concern," the statement continued, "there are three things to which all Christians are called. We needs must pray; we needs must bear our witness to the faith that is in us; we must keep our Christian judgement; and the prayer, the witness and the judgement rest upon the same unshakeable foundation of faith. To be a Christian is to be sure that since this is God's world, he is the Lord of history; that the victory of God's redeeming love is certain. . . ." E.P.S.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE EXECUTIVE BOARD MEETS

Since the Southern Convention meets only once in two years, the interim work of the Executive Board assumes added importance. Problems arise and decisions must be made. It is necessary to check the pulse of Convention activities more than once in two years.

The semi-annual meeting of the Board was held Tuesday of last week in Suffolk, with the following present: M. W. Stevens, J. H. Dollar, S. C. Harrell, L. E. Smith, J. G. Truitt, Mills Godwin, H. S. Hardcastle, S. H. Basnight, R. E. Newton, F. C. Lester, Robert Walker, A. H. McIver, W. J. Andes, Duane Vore, K. T. Rothgeb, W. T. Scott, R. L. House, Mrs. O. H. Paris and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill. Mr. Stevens presided and Dr. Truitt served as secretary.

The resignation of Mrs. F. C. Lester from the Board of Christian Education was accepted with regret and Mr. Jack Shoffner was elected to fill the vacancy. Additional members elected to the Committee on Finance were S. H. Basnight, Robert Walker, R. E. Newton, J. H. Dollar and G. D. Colclough. A committee to investigate the possibilities of a home for the aged within the Convention was appointed, as follows: R. L. House, A. H. McIver, W. B. O'Neill, S. C. Harrell and Pattie Lee Coghill.

Interesting and revealing reports were given by Superintendent Scott, Secretary Coghill and Treasurer Colclough. Total receipts channelled through the Convention office—January through September—were $91,748.24.

Dr. Ross Sanderson appeared before the Board and offered his services in the effort to define our objectives, consolidate our strength, and relate our program to the total denominational mission. Convention officials were prodded at a number of points: plot our graph for the location of new churches; chart our distant as well as immediate goals; develop better churchmanship; study the relation of our rural churches to current agricultural trends; give more skillful and more generous aid to the parallel churches of our Negro constituency. A standing committee composed of conference presidents and the superintendent was officially designated to cooperate with Dr. Sanderson in his study of the Southeast.

CONVENTION MISSIONS

The Editor is not a member of the Mission Board, but is invited to the meetings of that body, one of which followed the meeting of the Executive Board last week. Dr. F. C. Lester presided, and Mrs. Russell Powell recorded the minutes. Receipts from January through September were $15,410 for Home Missions and $24,743 for Foreign Missions. Problems of our home and foreign missionary work were studied and acted upon with scrupulous care. Be assured of this, that more generous gifts to missions will be the only solution to the problems that plague the Board. There is a crying need at the moment for more adequate funds to meet our home missionary opportunities.

Rev. Ralph Shrader flew down from a meeting of the Prudential Committee of the American Board to counsel with us concerning our commitments on the foreign field. Gifts will follow our Shaowu mission personnel. Mr. Shrader pointed to the unshakable realities of our missionary efforts in China; a reservoir of good will, scattered but firmly entrenched churches, local ministers and devoted laymen, the indelible gifts of personality, and a united church which has weathered many storms.

Keep missions on your study, prayer and giving list.

HOW ONE CHURCH DID IT

Some of our churches observed Elon Sustaining-Fund Sunday during October. Others will do so in January or February. As the reports are coming in, it is interesting to see how the observance is held in different churches, and what provision is made to raise the dollar-per-member. The example of one church may help another.

Sustaining-Fund Sunday was observed at Rosemont Church on October 22. Dr. William Moseley Brown spoke at the morning service, and the Elon film was shown at the evening service.

The Rev. H. G. Councill writes: "The local committee on the Sustaining Fund is composed of: H. L. Bondurant, Sr., treasurer; H. R. Morrison, Sr., superintendent of the Sunday school; the pastor; Robert I. Evans, Jr., Ray Morrison, Mrs. Marie Hayman, Mrs. Eva Herrington, Miss Jackie Wentz. This committee set the goal of $600,000 for the Rosemont Church to be raised by March 1. The membership of the church now stands at 541. The money will be raised through the Sunday school. Superintendent Morrison has already assigned each class and department with a quota. I feel that it is very commendable and worthy of praise that this church, having raised about $2,500.00 a few years ago for the Atkinson-Staley-Newman Memorial Fund, is now launching out on this Sustaining Fund Drive, eager to do its part in the Dollar-per-Member endeavor."

Mr. Councill and the members of Rosemont are setting a very fine example for the other churches in the Convention.

There are many persons that smile on hearing talk of building a better world and say that the world cares nothing for that. These persons have lost faith in people and God because of their own mistakes.

—John S. Bonnell.

Our Laymen and the Christian Orphanage

The support the Southern Convention has given their Orphanage has been very gratifying to those who have been charged with the responsibility of caring for our orphans. In spite of all we have given in money, clothes and supplies, there has never been a time when there were not needs that could not be met for lack of funds. Our gifts have increased during the past few years, but not as rapidly as the demands and, thus, the question of ability to meet the needs of the children at our Orphanage is always present.

We lost a great and faithful servant due to the death of our beloved Mr. Charles D. Johnston. To the surprise of the most of us, the Board of Trustees of the Orphanage was able to persuade Dr. John G. Truitt, the pastor of Suffolk Christian Church, to accept the responsibility as superintendent of the Orphanage. Dr. Truitt has found the demands so great that he wonders how his predecessor carried on so long under so many difficult handicaps.

It is true that money will not solve all the problems of our Orphanage, for, when you have from 5 to 100 children from different homes and, often times unfortunate environment, the emotions and reactions are such that it is trying on any and all the personnel of an institution of this type. This statement doesn't mean that the boys and girls are bad; it simply means that they are without the love and care and attention that the normal child gets who has a father and mother and lives in a home with a few children. It is not easy for a child of this type to adjust himself to a new surrounding and become regimented as is necessary in an orphanage.

Not only is Dr. Truitt giving of his time (for which he is paid), but his wife, whose talents and interests naturally lead her to wish to help wherever there is a cause of need, is giving the most of her time to the guidance of the boys and girls at the Orphanage.

The laymen of the Southern Convention cannot neglect our Orphanage.

We cannot afford to let our superintendent worry as to how he is going to get the necessities for the comfort and happiness of the boys and girls who are dependent upon us for a chance in life. Dr. Truitt has turned his back upon the ministry insofar as being a regular pastor, and gone into a new field. We want him to be happy and successful. We can bring this about by contributing liberally to our Orphanage.

Looking at the above picture of Superintendent John G. Truitt, one of the boys was heard to remark, "You must have been hiding. I don't see any children around you." Probably he expected it to be something like the one below. The children of the Orphanage are so appreciative of any attention shown them. They would like you if you visited them, and you would see that money contributed to this institution was an investment in life made in time to do the largest possible amount of good to these little folks.

The people of the Southern Convention are extremely liberal. They have proven this over and over in providing for our Orphanage, our College, for Missions and in other ways.

As the chairman of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention, I am writing this note to remind you of your opportunity and your responsibility in connection with our Orphanage. I am confident that you will respond with a liberal gift during the month of November. It is necessary that these needs of our Orphanage be met.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE D. COLCLOUGH.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

ELON HOMECOMING, 1950.

Each year the faculty and students of the college plan a homecoming occasion. On these special days an appropriate program is arranged and the old grads and former students are invited to return to the campus and share in the program with us. Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, October 20, 21, and 22, was such an occasion at Elon College.

The program started with a rally Friday evening and a party for all in the gymnasium Friday night. The highlight of the party was the crowning of Miss Christine Toumaras of Burlington as Homecoming Queen. The queen's court was also recognized and presented. A large number of alumni were on hand for these occasions.

Saturday morning was observed more as a get-acquainted period, and in the afternoon the judges observed the dormitory decorations to determine the decorations that showed the most originality and presented the most attractive appearance. Mrs. L. E. Smith, Mrs. J. H. Rountree, Mr. Royall Spence, Jr., and Captain W. W. Elder were the judges. Coble Sporting Goods Company of Greensboro had presented a plaque to be awarded to the winner. The judges' decision was not unanimous. In fact, it was very difficult to determine the winner. The majority, however, gave first place to Oak Lodge, second place to East Dormitory, and third place to North Dormitory, all boys' dormitories, and the fourth prize went to West, which is a girls' dormitory.

The students staged a parade to Burlington and down the main street to highway 70, from there to where it connects to highway 100, and then back to Gibsonville. There were 57 automobiles in the parade, all decorated in maroon and gold. Forty of them were convertibles. They really presented a colorful and spectacular sight. The cars returned and the students joined with the visiting alumni in open house given by President and Mrs. Smith. This was really a joyful and inspirational occasion. A barbecue dinner was served to alumni and students at 6 o'clock.

At 8 o'clock, students, alumni, and friends journeyed to the high school stadium at Burlington for the homecoming game with Catawba College. A large attendance greeted the players. It was a most excellent game. The score was 13-12 in favor of Elon at the half. When the final whistle blew, the score was Elon 26, Catawba 12. This was the most successful program that the college has had in 20 years. Everybody seemed to be happy and full of expectancy. The spirit on the campus was at the highest pitch that we have yet had.

I would like to take this opportunity to express to the Alumni Association, Royall Spence, Jr., President, and Jimmy Darden, Secretary; the Student Government, Bob Wright, President; the Entertainment Committee, Worth Womble, Chairman; the Student Christian Association, Joe Stevens, President; the Cheerleaders with Patsy Milam, Chief Cheerleader; their associates, and the entire student body, my personal gratitude and the College's appreciation of their plans and cooperation in making Homecoming an outstanding day in the experience and the life of the college.

MRS. O. H. PARIS ENDORSES THE SUSTAINING FUND.

"I was one to vote for the Elon College Sustaining Fund Program at the Southern Convention last spring and I shall certainly be one to stand back of my vote. It appealed to me from the start as a unique, easy way to raise a sizable amount of money to help sustain our church college; it appealed to me because it was not beyond the reach of any church, even the church of small means could raise one dollar per member per year; it appealed to me because it was down on a level with the average church member—the rank and file would be able to have a part for once, in a financial program for the College.

"I shall be interested to know what church in the Convention will be first to reach its goal of one dollar per member."

PROGRESS OF THE SUSTAINING FUND PROGRAM.

On October 18 the Eastern North Carolina Conference adopted the Southern Convention's resolution on the Sustaining Fund and constituted the previously-appointed committee as its official Sustaining-Fund Committee "for the duration."

On October 22 a number of our churches observed Sustaining-Fund Sunday. Some of the churches have already sent in remittances toward their respective Sustaining-Fund goals.

Only a few of our churches are using the attractive 16 mm. film (mostly in color) of Elon College. This film is provided with ample titles of the various scenes which are shown so that no commentator is necessary for the showing of the film. It is yours for the asking, the only expense being the payment of the small amount of postage necessary to return the film to the Sustaining-Fund office. Any 16 mm. projector can be used for showing the film.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Three of the five conferences in the Convention have held their annual sessions. At these sessions, all churches within the conferences have been urged to pay their conference apportionments in full. I have no way of knowing what amounts the other institutions and boards that share in apportionments have received on their quotas. I do know, however, that Elon College has received only about three-fifths of its full apportionment.

The churches that have not raised their apportionments in full have the remaining days of the present year in which to raise the full amount asked and see that their churches are placed on the honor roll. Every church has a pride in meeting its full responsibilities. Aside from this, however, each church should desire to do its full share by our college in the face of existing circumstances and present needs. The churches are the friends of the college and the college finds a great deal of encouragement in looking to the churches for assistance and assurance. Now is the time for everyone to put forth special efforts and make special contributions that our church with her institutions may receive the support promised and that our local churches may have perfect records.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

BURLINGTON.

The Woman's Auxiliary of First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., met on Monday, September 5, in the church auditorium for the installation of the new officers.

Never has a more impressive service been held, for every officer and member felt that, as someone has said, "The only real gift is thyself."

During these difficult times, the Auxiliary realizes that understanding is based on love and to that end we must strive to do our duty.

Printed programs were given to each one present. Mrs. R. W. Brannock played an organ prelude, "Medley of Hymns." Mrs. R. W. Sellars gave a very beautiful devotional on "This is God's World."

The minutes were read and approved, and all reports given and adopted. Mrs. M. Z. Rhodes, our most efficient president for several years, gave her annual report. It was an inspiration to hear what had been accomplished, for the Auxiliary met all Achievement Goals as designated by the Woman's Convention of the Southern Convention.

Rev. Henry Robinson held an impressive installation service for the new officers for the year.

Mrs. C. C. Fonville presented the Mite Box Offering. Her theme was "Take My Life, and Let It Be."

Memorials were given in memory of our beloved members, Mrs. D. R. Fonville and Mr. H. Russell Clem. Mrs. M. P. Baldwin and Mrs. J. A. Campbell were honored with Life Memberships.

The business session was then held. New circle leaders read the lists of their members. All committees were announced. Rev. Mr. Robinson then offered a prayer for the Mite Box Offering and a blessing for the luncheon which followed in the church diningroom.

A warm feeling of fellowship pervaded the whole meeting, as friends greeted each other after a vacation, each offering in their hearts a prayer for a better year and a will to do his work.

May God bless each one as this new auxiliary year begins.

MRS. J. E. KING,

Corresponding Secretary.

EVANGELISM IN JAPAN.

Japan where an upsurge of interest in Christianity followed in the wake of the war, soon will carry on an evangelistic advance along lines that have been most effective in the United States in winning commitments for Christ and Christian living.

Dr. H. H. McConnell, field secretary of the Department of Evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches for the past five years, will go to Japan to direct a program of visitation evangelism and train hundreds of laymen and ministers to carry their witness for Christ into the homes of their fellow countrymen. The visitation evangelism program, that has been winning thousands to Christ in cities and towns across the United States during the United Evangelistic Advance, will be conducted from January 15 to March 1. Following the visitation evangelism program, Dr. E. Stanley Jones, famous Methodist evangelist soon to conclude his annual visit to America, has been invited by the Japanese to conduct a preaching mission.

Dr. Jesse M. Bader, executive secretary of the Federal Council Department of Evangelism, announced that Dr. McConnell had been invited to Japan by the National Christian Council of Japan. Dr. McConnell, United Presbyterian minister, has been granted a three-months leave on salary by the Department of Evangelism, and accompanied by Mrs. McConnell, also an active church worker, will leave in December. They will fly from San Francisco December 11 to Japan, and will return March 1.

The formal request came from the Inter-Board Committee for Christian Work in Japan.

The National Christian Council, sponsoring the Evangelistic mission, will set up eight centers in the islands. In the month prior to the mission, Dr. McConnell will visit the eight centers, briefing clergy and lay leaders on the methods and spiritual objective of the visitation program. In the campaign, January 15 to March 1, ministers from surrounding towns will participate at these centers in workshops on evangelism. At night the ministers, each accompanied by a layman, will make house-to-house calls, so that they may return home prepared to conduct visitation evangelism programs in their own parishes.

"There is every indication," says Dr. McConnell, "that the doors are open wide for evangelism in Japan. The war left a spiritual vacuum. The emperor's renunciation of divinity had a profoundly disturbing effect upon the religious life of the Japanese people. It shook their faith in Shintoism and Buddhism. As the religion of the occupation, Christianity gained tremendous prestige. Oversight the Christian cause enjoyed government sanction, instead of government opposition.

"The effect of the sympathetic cooperation and support of the whole Christian movement by General MacArthur, who has tremendous popularity with the Japanese people, is beyond measurement. Japan, all those close to the situation agree, offers the Christian church one of its greatest evangelistic opportunities."

The growth of the laymen's movement, Dr. McConnell adds, offer one of the most encouraging aspects of the Christian picture in Japan. Christian laymen, since the war, have come forward to assume aggressive leadership in the life of the church.

"The Laymen's Movement has developed into a national organization with branches in 18 districts of the united Church of Christ. More than 2,000 laymen attended the national convention last April. Much stress Shown above are some of our eighty children attending a Christmas Party given by students of Elon College. The students invited them over to Student Union which was beautifully decorated and "packaged" for all of the children. Students generously gave them bicycles and boxes of toys and other gifts. How thrilled and happy they made them. And the students got great joy out of it for themselves.

The Christian Orphanage Then and Now--1906-1950

It was on a cold and dreary December day in 1906, that the first Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage and his family landed in Elon. The dream of many people for years was about to be realized, the Orphanage was in sight. Our good friend Dr. Watson, met the train and took us to his home till the sun should shine and give us a more cherry greeting.

There were no paved sidewalks, and the rain had turned the streets into mud, and mud, and more mud! But as "the sun shines out the brightest when the storm tempest clears," we were soon settled in our new home getting ready for the children the first of the year.

We were told to take our choice of rooms for living quarters, so we chose the big room at the east end of the building, which remained our home for the six years we were there. The furniture we owned looked small when scattered in living room, dining room and kitchen, but it was all the furnishings for some time; one small wood range in the kitchen sufficed for several years.

Gradually we overcame loneliness and work began. Debris was cleared away from the entrances, furniture for bedrooms was purchased, and on January 1, 1907, in spite of many things badly needed, our first little girl entered the Orphanage. She was married years later to one of our boys.

This picture shows Helen Hughes away at a summer camp for one week. Many "classes" or friends who sponsor a child, send the price of a week's vacation at one or the other of our own Church camps for youth, or to some other appropriate camp. The children return from such an experience with reports that please us a great deal. Helen was sent by Miss Celeste Penny, a public school teacher in Raleigh. It was a deepening religious experience, and she greatly appreciates it.

There was no water, no lights save lamps and candles, and no plumbing. The halls of the one building were empty and bare, and it seemed miles from one end to the other.

Soon there were eighteen children in our care. The older boys and girls helped with the younger ones, and somehow we were happy. Later, a deep well supplied water. Basins and pitchers were utensils for ablutions. The Saturday bathing took place in the big dining room, and tubs came in handy then. This room was also used as a sitting room and when school started, as a study hall. Many group gatherings also came here, for we had but the one stove.

Every Sunday morning, we would get lined up and go the Sunday school at the College. In the afternoon there was a get-together around the square piano for a sing and the Christian Endeavor meeting which was organized early in the year.

I do not remember much sickness among the group; they were a healthy group of children. Alcohol to clean dirty, splintered feet, a sterilized needle for the splinters, and peroxide, were all the first aid we needed. Once, someone's foot was badly cut on some glass scattered around the yard. We decided it was necessary to get it picked up as soon as possible. A reward of five cents for so many pieces was offered, and some of the children were caught slyly breaking the larger pieces to get the required number for the reward.

Once we had an epidemic of measles—twenty-one cases at the same time. We felt that we would always recognize this disease after that, even though we met it "coming down the road" at blackest midnight.

During these six years of pioneer work, a barn was built, also a milk house. Some cows, two horses, pigs, chickens, a dog and some cats, composed our animal population.

Friends were very kind, or the heavy gales could not have been weathered. Mills gave the cloth for overalls and dresses; fruit and canned goods were donated. The girls learned to cook and sew, and the boys cared for the farm chores. They combined quite a bit of fun with the chores, and work became play when they paused in the milking to teach one of our cats the art of drinking milk as it was milked warm, into her mouth; when the flow stopped, she'd ask for more by clawing the one who was milking.

When we left, after living with the children six years, our regrets were sincere as we said "Good-bye" to fifty. The had started to the Elon public school by now, and the Orphanage was a real home.

With the increasing years, under the capable guidance of interested

Elon College—both the school and the community—means much to the Orphanage. Several of our children have made excellent students at the college. Some have been outstanding. It is possible for a boy or girl to graduate at Elon, if they take to it. They are ensured in our high school to become college-education minded, for this is a college town. They attend the regular college church school and morning worship. The Orphanage, in turn, helps to pay the expenses of the church school and church. In other words, we seek to be a regular part of the community. We want our boys and girls to be prepared for life wherever they may later go, and we believe in them taking their part now.

leaders, two new buildings have been erected and the old one redecorated. Electric lights, running water, and a central heating plant, give comfort and make work easier. No more muddy sidewalks to interfere with getting to school, church and Sunday school. A large up-to-date barn and a modern A-grade dairy furnish needed supplies for the table. The buildings have wonderful accommodations for all necessary comforts, and homelife is seen everywhere. Children have the educational and religious privileges of our college town.

Oh, one would hardly recognize the "Then" "Now"!

Some of the boys and girls of forty and more years have passed on, some are grandpas and grandmas, but when they return for Home Coming Sunday, the first week in September, and gather for a social get-to-gether around a bountiful table prepared just for that occasion, gray hairs seem to make little difference. They renew their childhood relations and wonder at the changes time has wrought.

Friends have only to continue the good work to see even greater results. Our orphan children are growing up in a home-like, educational, religious and social atmosphere second to none, which will make them good citizens in any community.

MRS. J. L. FOSTER,

The above picture is that of Faye Watkins all dressed up and ready to go to Newport News, where she had a two weeks' vacation. A large number of our girls and boys were away for two weeks during the summer, sponsored by a family, a Sunday school, or some other organization. This is a blessing to the child, and it is greatly appreciated.

THE ORPHANAGE NEEDS AND DESERVES OUR SUPPORT

By SUPT. WM. T. SCOTT.

The Christian Orphanage needs and deserves the support of our churches, conferences, and convention. High tribute should go to Dr. John G. Truitt, our genial and efficient Orphanage Superintendent, for the statesmanlike job he is doing in providing for the care of eighty children of the Orphanage family. He is giving of himself unsparingly for the wise administration of our institution. The buildings have been cleaned and repaired, the dairy and farm are productive and well taken care of by his associates. Every care is being taken by Dr. Truitt and his splendid staff of matrons and other associates that the children are given wholesome food, adequate clothing and Christian care. Their job isn't easy. They are but our servants. They need our support.

This institution of our church and our servants who are so well representing Christian interest there are our hearts, hands and wills in Christ's name. They cannot do the work assigned to them without our support. November and December are months of special opportunity to give financially to this needed institution of our church. The Thanksgiving and Christmas seasons afford us a chance to say "our thanks" by investing in the training of our children at the Orphanage. Let us give generously. Here is our chance to invest in the lives of growing children who, because of our concern will have an opportunity to grow into good men and women.

LONG RANGE SUPPORT FOR OUR ORPHANAGE.

In spite of lowered interest rates, endowment should play an important part in the future support of the Christian Orphanage. This can be accumulated by outright gifts, upon which tax credit can be taken. But for those who cannot afford a large outright gift, there is another way in which nearly all who wish can help make provision for the future welfare of the Orphanage. It is through life insurance. A number of small policies would eventually provide a large endowment, and at an annual cost that many can well afford. Or if you have a larger policy taken out to cover a specific obligation, why not make the Orphanage the secondary or residuary beneficiary. Then when your need is passed, it will serve others.

For Children . . .

One of the best songs in the Bible is the one David wrote about the Shepherd. The music was lost long ago, but we have the words: "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside still waters."

Do you know which song (or Psalm) it is?

A Prayer.

Dear God,

As the good shepherd leads his sheep through green fields and quiet places and watches them to keep them safe from harm; so will thou, dear God, lead me and my friends. Bless the children everywhere under thy care. Help me to be strong and good. Amen.

STEVIE NAMES HIS PETS.

By MRS. J. S. BAKER.

When Stevie Mears, three-and-a-half years old, received his first live pet, a beautiful cocker spaniel, he at once called him Towser. To him dog and Towser were synonymous—Towser being the name of the dog next door, the only other dog he really knew.

But Towser was hardly a fitting name for a cocker spaniel! Mrs. Mears saw that Stevie needed education regarding the naming of animals, and it was easy to point out, and for Stevie to see, the confusion that would result from having two Towsers living so close together.

"Where do people find good names for their pets?" she asked.

Stevie didn't know; but he was eager to have a better name for his adored pup.

His mother called attention to the names of the animals in the stories she had read to him. "Do you think Frisky a good name for the terrier in the book?"

"Yes!" He laughed; he was beginning to understand.

"Why?"

He thought a little. "He jumps around a lot."

"That's right," his mother answered. "People sometimes give names that tell how their pets look, or names that make them think of them in some way. Beauty, Spot, Rags, Blue-Ball are names like—"

"Ink!" put in Stevie excitedly, pointing at his pup. "You said he is as black as ink."

Mrs. Mears' suggestions had certainly taken quick effect. "Why not Inky?" she countered.

"Inky! Sit up, Inky!" He set the cocker back on his heels. "You've got to learn your name, Inky."

But a month later it seemed to Mrs. Mears that Stevie had forgotten all he had learned in connection with the choice of a name. A friend of the family had given him a snow-white kitten and right away he had named it Smuts.

"Why do you call that lovely white kitten Smuts," expostulated his mother.

"Because," he answered slowly, "I want her to grow up a good cat—like Aunt Mary's Smuts. Her Smuts is beau-ti-ful. And the best cat!"—National Kindergarten Association.

WHAT WE DO IN CHILDREN'S CHURCH.

By BARBARA C. KEY.

This will be a story of what we are doing and hope to do in the Durham Children's Church.

First of all, we have a director who plans the program, selects materials, does much of the teaching, and tries to find herself some help. She does have two good pianists who take turns at playing, and at times she does the playing herself. There are two other helpers who keep things going smoothly. We also have an art teacher who has consented to act as an art consultant. She will help with any art projects the regular teachers are not able to do. For instance, she might be asked to design the background for a flannelgraph. A person skilled in story telling would be a valuable addition to such a staff.

Girls and boys who are in the first six grades of school are welcome to attend the Children's Church. We meet during the Sunday morning worship hour in the Junior department of the Church School.

The hour is divided into four periods which we call:

1. Music and Memory, 10 minutes;
2. Study and Story, 20 minutes;

3. Creative Activities, 15 minutes;
4. Worship, 15 minutes.

The time spent for each of these varies, but I have given the approximate divisions.

During the first period, we learn Psalms, other Scripture selections, prayers, worship poems, litanies and songs which we will be using in our worship for perhaps several Sundays. It is really a practice or rehearsal period.

For our study and story period, we are learning about boys and girls in Lebanon, with the help of the primary mission study book for this year, "Thirsty Village." There are other courses and books available, but we thought this a good opportunity to promote our Missionary Education program.

For the next fifteen minutes the children are busy with various creative activities. Some are making crayon drawings to illustrate our Call to Worship, which is a poem about autumn. One is drawing a field of corn shocks and pumpkins, another a flock of wild geese flying high, and another a beautiful tree with autumn colors and a field of goldenrod. Still others are making illustrations for a prayer of thanks for flowers, birds, trees, the land and sea, for sunshine and rain, and for snow and ice. For a few Sundays, the older boys and girls will be constructing a picture map of "Bible Lands Today," for that is the theme of our mission study, while the primary youngsters will cut, fold and color a stand-up paper doll family of Lebanon. Later, there will be a flannelgraph or two to illustrate an old Christmas carol about the friendly beasts and the Christmas story from Luke, which we hope to memorize. Sometime in the future we may try our hand at dramatizing some Bible stories.

At the close of the session, we come together for a few minutes of worship. Here, we use in a more formal way many of the things we have practiced and learned during the first part of the hour. Since we have a combined age group, I am using the stories from the Junior Study Book on the Near East, "They Live in Bible Lands," as part of the worship service.

The experience for both children and leaders has been most rewarding. The children are happy and wide awake. The director is usually exhausted when the hour closes, but she has, nevertheless, a feeling of utter satisfaction and content, and a strong conviction that the Children's Church is exceedingly worthwhile.

Youth at Work in the Church

MAX VESTAL, Elon College, N. C.
MISS ANN TRUITT, Associate

Julius Rice, the new parson at Hines Chapel and Monticello, is evidently making quite an impression. He's a young fellow and a student at Elon College. Since he is interested in his work, he was very happy when one of his congregation commented to him: "Rev. Mr. Rice, you're preaching the truth. I believe everything you say."

Julius thanked the good brother; and, anxious to continue this pleasant conversation, asked, "What then, Sir, do you believe?"

The good brother thought a moment, then replied, "Nothing."

Must'a missed your revival, Hey, Julius?

Q. What do you have when you have ducks and cows in the same field?

BURLINGTON OFFICERS HOLD RETREAT.

The newly-elected officers of the Burlington Pilgrim Fellowship met at Moon-Elon, Sunday, October 22, to plan the programs for the coming year.

Suggestions were put before the group and those discussions which would be the most interesting and beneficial were chosen. It was decided to make special plans for the state-wide rally in April and also for the Christmas pageant and Easter sunrise service. A social was planned for each month and allowances were made for the summer months.

After the meeting, the regular Pilgrim Fellowship group met for a picnic supper and heard the report of the officers.

The officers of the Burlington Pilgrim Fellowship for this year are: Joan Foster, president; Jean Foster, vice-president; Mona Hoffman, secretary, and Joe Morris, treasurer. The committee chairmen include: Joanne Newman, Social Action; Bernard Jones, Missionary Action; Lois Robinson, Personal Action; Ann Brannock, Interdenominational Action.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE.

On October 21 and 22, the Eastern North Carolina Young People's Conference held its annual week-end rally at Liberty Vance, near Epsom, N. C. There were 120 representatives from twelve churches present.

Registration began at 10:30, Saturday, and the opening worship was at 11:20, being conducted by the young people of Beulah. After the worship, the roll was called. Then Rev. Fred P. Register introduced the "dignitaries."

A short business session was held. An announcement was made of the state-wide meeting of young people to be held in Burlington. Mr. Register then introduced Timothy Chang, a student at Duke from our Shaowu, China, mission. Timothy gave his experiences working during the summer with camps.

Time was taken out for lunch.

The afternoon session began with the singing of the hymn, "Have Thine Own Way, Lord," followed by a prayer led by J. Lee Lassiter, Jr., of Henderson. Then followed the reports on camps held during the summer: Charles Hagwood reported on the Junior High Camp at Crabtree; Betty Rawls, on the Senior High at Elon. Ruina Winn and E. C. Hagwood gave reports on their "Summer Student" work.

A business session followed these reports. Then Miss Pattie Lee Coghill presented the Youth Packet.

Emily Eaves presented the objectives for another year: bringing a Philippino girl to the United States to study for the next two years is the main one. The goal for the Eastern North Carolina young people for this project is $200.

After a closing hymn, Mr. Wright pronounced the benediction, and everyone went to the school ball field for a softball game. Wake Chapel had challenged the rest of the conference. The score was Wake Chapel 18, the Conference 8.

The highlight of the evening was a weiner roast followed by music by the Liberty Vance Girls, Billy Stephenson, and Charles Hagwood.

On Sunday morning all the young people met in the recreational building of Liberty Vance Church. The Church of Wide Fellowship young people from Southern Pines, conducted the opening worship.

Mrs. Carl Wallace taught the Sunday school lesson and gave pointers on how to pray and what to pray for.

After Sunday school, the group went into the church for the church service. Here Max Vestal told of his experiences during the summer in the work camp at Agape, Italy. This report was of real interest to the young people.

After lunch, everyone returned to the church for the installation of the following new officers:

President, E. C. Hagwood, New Hope; vice-president, Betty Burt Hight, Mt. Gilead; secretary-treasurer, Hilda Gray Johnson, Amelia; assistant secy.-treas., Edna Mae Briggs, Beulah; Interdenominational Action chairman, Betty Rawls, Henderson; Social Action chairman, K. G. Weldon, Jr., Liberty Vance; Missionary Action chairman, Peggy Smith, Liberty Vance; Personal Action chairman, Joan Powel, Wake Chapel; Song Leader, Billy Stephenson, Wake Chapel; Counselors: J. Lee Lassiter, Jr., Henderson; Fred P. Register, Wake Chapel; E. J. Austin, Southern Pines.

After installing the officers and giving them the right hand of fellowship, Rev. T. Fred Wright pronounced the benediction.

All had a wonderful time.

WINCHESTER GOES TO WORK.

The newly organized Winchester Senior Young People's group began its fall and winter program on October 8, with an installation service conducted by our pastor, Rev. Robert A. Whitten. The following officers and counselors were installed for the 1950-'51 term: Howard N. Carper, Jr., president; Freda Seldon, vice-president; Connie Spaid, secretary and treasurer. Mr. and Mrs. Halford H. Baker and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Newman are the counselors.

The Central Diningroom has proved a great success. The family is more united, the meals are more efficiently prepared and served, and with a few more adjustments, everyone will be much happier. The above picture gives you an idea of how happy our children are.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

People can do the nicest things! One lady put a $10.00 bill in one of the Orphanage's "Monthly Callen-

Above are pictured two of our boys—Jeff Simmons and Bob Kinch—seniors in our Elon High School. They are two fine, dependable fellows. In the years they have been here, they have learned the work about this place so that whether it be a big tractor or an electric milker, they know how to handle it. We are proud of our children in the public school of our community. Not all of them make their grade, but the large majority of them does. They enter heartily into the spirit of the school, taking part in many of its activities. We have several outstanding students who make the honor roll regularly.

dars" and mailed it back to me. This week I received one so folded and mailed with it was a check for $50.00. One pastor, much beloved by his people, received the "Monthly Calendar" and wrote a line of commendation, goodwill and congratulations. Kind words help and rejoice the heart.

One of the Orphanage's best contributors and friends, says, "I like to give to my church, for I get the good feeling of making a contribution to the Kingdom of God, and at the same time I expect to get value received for it by having a lovely place in which to worship, a good minister, and a fine Sunday school for my children. You know what I mean, John, I get something for my money, and that is all right, but," continued my friend, "I like to give to the Orphanage because I can give it and forget it. I do not expect anything in return. I know it will bless a child, and I let it be at that."

People can do the nicest things!

That word, "I can give it and forget it," stuck in my mind. That is what the righteous said in the judgment, in Jesus' story, in Matthew, chapter 25: "When saw we thee an hungered and fed thee?" They did it and forgot it. Or rather, they followed through on this command of the Lord: "But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."

In this letter, I wish to appeal to every church to receive a liberal offering—Thanksgiving Offering—for the Orphanage. We are not just "marking time" here, but we are going forward. However, if we were only "marking time," it would take about twice as much money as was received a few years ago. We simply cannot serve as you wish us to, without your kind and gracious generosity. Do not let November go by without your church receiving the Thanksgiving Offering for the Orphanage. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." And may the Lord love you!

The Thanksgiving envelopes, a donation to the Orphanage from Mr. John T. Kernodle, Richmond, Va., are being sent to every church. I do hope many, many people will help me prove the proposition of this letter: People can do the nicest things!

Jo Ann Black is standing on the platform of the Holy Neck Church, after the furniture had all been removed for the presentation of the children's program. Twenty-two children had memorized and practiced parts and songs worth being a part of their childhood training. They presented this program in many places. Pastors and churches did all they could to make this work a success. The children and matrons were thrilled with the trips. We need very much a bus for carrying our boys and girls on such trips. We should like to nominate some individual, or church, or Sunday school to give the Orphanage a bus which is so badly needed on rainy, stormy days for conveying the children to school, and also needed for our programs away.

Sunday School Lesson

FELLOWSHIP WITH OTHER CHRISTIANS.

LESSON VII—NOVEMBER 12, 1950

MEMORY SELECTION: Let each of you look not only to his own interests, but also to the interests of others.

Have this mind among yourselves which you have in Christ Jesus, who, though he was in the form of God, did not count equality with God a thing to be grasped.—Philippians 2:4-6.

LESSON: Acts 11:11-18; Philippians 2:1-5.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Colossians 3:12-17.

Fellowship means "companionship with persons on equal or friendly terms." It involves more than physical associations; it involves spiritual relationships. It is an important word in the New Testament, and an important factor in the Christian life. The lesson for today deals with "Fellowship with Other Christians." And the Scripture passages furnish a background for discussing fellowship with people of other races, and fellowship within the Christian community.

Fellowship with Believers Elsewhere.

Strange as it may seem, or perhaps not so strange after all, considering the fact that human nature is what it is, the idea of Christian fellowship, and especially the practice of Christian fellowship, came to fruition very slowly. In fact, there are many quarters in which Christian fellowship still has a limited acceptance and a limited practice.

Take, for instance, the situation in the Early Church. Jesus had emphasized the fact that God was the Father of all men, and that his gospel was for every man. He had emphasized the fact throughout his ministry. And yet only gradually, and even painfully did this principle find expression in the lives of the early Christians. They were the prisoners of their time, in a sense, and with the Jewish community of which they were a product and a part, they were very exclusive in spirit. The Jews looked upon the Gentiles as inferior people, and were not supposed to have fellowship with them. At first, Christianity was a kind of glorified Judaism, and was considered the special privilege and prerogative of the Jews.

It was only gradually and very slowly that the Jewish Christians came to recognize the place which the Gentiles had in the process and the grace of God. Peter's experience was a milestone in this process.

Many readers of these Notes will readily recall Peter's experience with Cornelius and his household. Impressed by a dream or a vision he had while waiting for dinner, a vision which took on new meaning when three men appearing at his door as he came down from the housetop where he had had his vision, told him of the strange experience which their master, a centurion, had had at his home some distance away, Peter went with these Gentiles to the home of Cornelius. Even as he spoke to the centurion and his friends he had invited to his house, the Holy Spirit came upon the group.

God thus gave striking and convincing evidence that his grace was available for the Gentiles, and that through his Spirit the middle wall of partition was broken down, and that there was common ground of fellowship between believers everywhere. Called upon to explain and to defend his actions and his position, Peter simply told of this experience to the leaders of the Jerusalem Church, who were astounded that such a thing should happen, and especially that Peter should have gone into the home of one who was a Gentile.

The fact is that in Christ Jesus all believers are one. Color, class, culture, creed, custom, are no barriers to fellowship between Christians. By one Spirit have we all been baptized into one body—the Body of Christ. A common belief in Christ is a basis of fellowship that makes it possible for people of every race to have fellowship one with another. Alas that there are too many Christians today who do not have any sense of fellowship with the peoples of other races and nations.

Fellowship with Believers in the Church.

The second passage of Scripture deals with fellowship within the local church. Here again one would expect to find no problem as concerning fellowship with believers. Even though members of a local church might have no sense of fellowship with fellow-believers elsewhere, one would expect them to have fellowship with the members of the local church. But this is not always true. In perhaps every church there are people "who do not fellowship" with some other members of the church. They are not on "speaking terms" with one another. There have been instances where members of the church would not receive the Communion at the hands of members of the Board of Deacons. In his letter to his beloved church at Philippi, the aged apostle, then in prison, urged his friends to practice and to perfect the spirit of Christian fellowship. He did not ask them to think alike, but he did ask them to love together. They could agree to differ but they were to resolve to love. They were to have a care, one for another, they were to do nothing from vain-glory or faction, but in lowliness of mind, they were to honor and to help each other. Their supreme example was the Lord Jesus Christ, who although he was the Son of God, became the servant of men.

One can hardly estimate the power and value of fellowship among believers in the local church. This is one of the many values of the public worship of God. The spiritual life of many a Christian would be stronger if he availed himself of the opportunities for Christian fellowship which the agencies and the activities of the local church provide. This is especially true as concerning young Christians and new converts. They should not forsake the assembling of themselves together with other Christians, both those of their own age and adults, for this fellowship with other Christians is a means of grace and of growth in the Christian life.

Fellowship Between the Families of Churches.

One of the factors in the growing emphasis upon Church Union is the increasing number of contacts which the people of the various denominations have with one another through inter-denominational, and inter-church movements and activities. Through such contacts and such activities Christians have found a common denominator. They have discovered that there are more things on which they can agree than on which they differ, or what is more important, that the things on which they agree are far more vital and basic than the things on which they differ. If members of the denominations will honestly take counsel of their personal loyalty to Christ instead of their prejudices, there will be a finer spirit of fellowship between the families of the churches.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Fellowship Between Individual Believers.

Jesus emphasized this very strongly. Indeed he said that if a man came to worship and remembered that his brother had anything against him, he should go at once and set things right, at least so far as he was able—and then come and offer his gift at the altar. Open communications perpendicularly depend upon right relationships horizontally. Fellowship with God depends upon fellowship with men. Men cannot get right with God as long as they are not right with their fellowmen.

Fellowship with God and with One Another.

Christian fellowship involves fellowship with one another, and also fellowship with God. We are one in him. And our fellowship with one another is sweetened and strengthened by fellowship with him in Christ Jesus.

our counselors this year. They are helping us spiritually with their presence at our worship services and suggestions for better programs, and morally by helping us to plan more interesting and successful socials and to enter into the City Church League sports activities.

Our Sunday evening programs are devoted entirely to worship services. A social will be held on a weekday evening once a month with a business session every third month. For our October social, we are having a hayride and weiner roast at a near-by park. For November, a supper meeting is planned. We are hoping to have a softball team entered in the Church League this coming spring.

We are looking forward to a year of spiritual development and friendly fellowship in our own church and the churches throughout our city and the Valley.

ATROCITIES IN KOREA.

More than thirty Korean Christian leaders are believed to have been killed by the Communists prior to their retreat from Seoul, according to reports received by the Foreign Missions Conference.

A letter to the Missions Conference written by Rev. Harold Voelkel, Presbyterian missionary, now a civilian chaplain with Korean troops, says that the Korean Christian leaders were summoned to a meeting on July 23 by Communists authorities and "haven't been heard from since."

Voelkel reported that a check with Christian survivors convinced him that what was considered "a terrible rumor" now seemed to be confirmed as "a dreadful fact, namely that 30 or more of the outstanding men of various denominations have been martyred."

A similar report was received from Miss Helen Kim, president of Ewha Woman's University, who earlier had been reported killed by the Communist but was later found to have fled south.

The letter from Rev. Voelkel lists three bishops, the secretary of the National Christian Council of Korea, the president of Chosen Theological Seminary, members of the Y.W.C.A. staff and other leaders as among the missing since the Communist "meeting."

Among those listed were the Rev. Yu Soon Kim, Bishop of the Korean Methodist Church; the Rev. J. S. Ryang, former Bishop of the Korean Methodist Church; Hunter Lee and Pong Chin Choi of the Ewha University faculty, and Mrs. Yeasoon Choi of the Seoul Y.W.C.A.

Others were the Rev. Kim Yung Ju, pastor of the West Gate Presbyterian Church; Dr. Hyuk Namkung, secretary of the National Christian Council; Dr. Song Chan Jun, president of Chosen Theological Seminary and Bishop Choi of the Holiness Church.

The chaplain's letter reported the complete destruction of Christian literature as well as several Christian printing establishments in Seoul.

"The situation this time is much more serious than it was in 1945 after the Japanese surrender," he wrote, "for at that time it was the paper shortage that held us up whereas at the present time the presses as well as the paper are practically non-existent."

Both the letter from the chaplain and that from Miss Kim reported extensive damage to Christian institutions in Seoul.

The three institutions most severely damaged were the Christian Literature Society Building, described as "completely burned out;" the Bible House, which was said to be "even a worse sight, with only parts of the walls remaining," and the Y.M.C.A. building.

Chosen Theological Seminary, Ewha Women's University, largely built through contributions from America, and Severance Hospital were all reported damaged, but not beyond repair.

These latter institutions are maintained by the The Methodist Church, the Presbyterian Church and the United Church of Canada, according to officials of the interdenominational Missions Conference.

In an appeal for help from this country to restore the Christian Church in Korea, the chaplain concluded his letter by saying:

"I trust the Christians of America are driven to their knees as they receive reports of the misery and sorrow of their Korean brethren."

BRITISH CHURCHES TO LAUNCH REFUGEE AID APPEAL.

A nationwide appeal to church people in Britain to aid refugees will be inaugurated on November 17 according to plans submitted to the British Council of Churches. The campaign will last through December 4.

In recommending the campaign to the British churches, the Anglican Bishop of Sheffield pointed out that beside the ten million refugees in Europe at the present time, "the refugee legacy following the war in Korea is at the moment incalculable."

He described the refugee problem as "sinister, deadly, and tragic, and emphasized the "real peril of growing despair."

The Anglican Bishop noted that the British Council had spent 11,000 pounds sterling during 1950, "despite the grave needs" of the British churches themselves. Since more funds are needed, however, members of all churches will be urged to support the British Churches Refugee Appeal as generously as possible "and thus show the world their sense of Christian responsibility and fraternal concern for this most devastating human catastrophe."

The Bishop stressed that schemes of emigration are in operation to Australia and the United States, but these are wholly inadequate at their rate of about 700 refugees a week to balance the 1,000 a week new arrivals from behind the Iron Curtain. E.P.S.

GERMAN THEOLOGIAN'S DENOUNCE "ASSUMPTION."

A statement renouncing the new Roman Catholic doctrine of the assumption of the Virgin Mary has been drawn up by five professors of theology of the University of Heidelberg. The group was headed by Professor Edmund Schlink, founder of the Ecumenical Institute there. The professors acted as members of an ecumenical group.

Pointing out that there is no evidence of Mary's assumption to be found in the New Testament or in the records of the early church, the document concludes: "A Church which makes the belief in the bodily resurrection and ascension of Mary a dogma would be defining on its own authority what men must believe if they are to be saved. It would by its own authority be providing basic facts of salvation, whereas in reality it can only base itself upon such facts and bear further witness to them. It would be exalting itself above the Apostles."

That acceptance of the new dogma would lead directly to Mary's becoming "liege lady and queen" and indeed mediator and co-savior with Christ is claimed in the theologians document, and in this respect the document closely parallels statements by the Archbishop of Canterbury and by Pastor Pierre Mawry, head of the National Council of the Reformed Church of France, and Pastor Etienne Meyer, Inspector of the French Lutheran Church. (E.P.S. No. 32).

Also echoing other pronouncements on the assumption dogma, the Heidelberg statement claims that the dogma widens the division between Roman Catholic and other Christian Churches. "Amid the efforts for church unity being made in our time," it says, the proclamation of this dogma must be understood as "an emphatic negative from the Church of Rome." E.P.S.

EVANGELISM IN JAPAN.

has been placed on vocational evangelism and there is an organized movement for each Christian to seek to win those in his own vocation for Christ and the Church. The Laymen's Movement joined with the National Christian Council in planning the program of visitation evangelism."

The Church of Christ in Japan was formed by the union of most of the Protestant communions and has 1,307 congregations and 133,057 members. The latest statistics on Christianity in Japan show there are 2,374 congregations and 324,734 members. They are primarily Protestant: 2,000 churches and 213,000 members.

"If the Laymen's Movement, already organized and eager to serve, can be trained in the methods of visitation evangelism," concludes Dr. McConnell, "the program can become the most effective force, at it has proved in the United States, to meet the evangelistic opportunity now offered in Japan."

Mayor of Elon College Praises Orphanage

The Christian Orphanage is an institution that has been ministering to orphan and dependent children for forty-three years. Geographically, a good portion of the buildings and farm land lies within the boundaries of the Town of Elon College, on the southeast corner.

We are proud of the Orphanage, and it is a great asset to the town in many, many ways. Every member of the Orphanage family fits into town and community activities and stands ready at all times to render whatever services the occasion might require. This community spirit of altruism gained momentum under former superintendents of the Orphanage, and especially under the leadership of the late Mr. Charles D. Johnston, whom the writer had the good fortune to know and work with for more than ten years. This fine community spirit of cooperation continues on the up-grade under the able leadership and guidance of Dr. John G. Truitt and his entire staff and family.

The matrons stand ready at all times to render such services as supervising playground, church and civic activities and projects.

It has been through the whole hearted cooperation of the entire Orphanage staff that the town with its limited resources carries on in many ways. Mr. L. W. Wagoner stands ready to render many helpful services. He has done a splendid job as water superintendent, peace officer, councilor, and as a general bureau of information on many matters concerning the town that some of us younger citizens are not acquainted with. Many are the times that "Les" has gone for one of the tractors to pull some car out of a muddy ditch on some unpaved street within the town, at two o'clock in the morning. Just this fall, he took two tractors and several of his fine workers from the Orphanage family of boys, prepared, fertilized and sowed grass seed on newly graded school grounds, that will grow into a good playground turf for our local school children. This grass is now out of the ground and is getting greener every day.

The writer has in his possession at this time a letter from Dr. Truitt to the effect that he will contribute to the town the estimated cost of a new well and pump for the new Superintendent's Home to supply town water to the new home site, which is to be located within the town limits, on the southeast corner of the town. It is hoped that the necessary pipe will be available for this project in time to take advantage of this fine offer.

While the Town of Elon College derives no direct tax benefits from the farm land and dormitories that are within the town limits, the Orphanage does come forth and say: "Mr. Mayor, we are paying you taxes on rental property, it is our good fortune to own, that falls within the town boundaries."

What could be a finer asset to any town or city than an institution of this kind rendering such a splendid service to humanity? We are proud of you and your family, Dr. Truitt, for your influence, service and community fellowship.

Let Every Church Unite in The Observance of Men and Missions Sunday

A CALL FOR MEN

By President A. VICTOR MURRAY

Cheshunt College (Congregational), Cambridge, England

The missionary task of the Christian Church is the greatest voluntary enterprise in the world. It cannot compete financially with other large scale enterprises, for the salaries it offers are low, and it carries a larger amount of non-insurable risk. Yet its opportunities are greater and more varied than any political or industrial service, for it is concerned, and solely concerned, with the redemption of society and a new way of life for every person. In scriptural language, it exists for "the glory of God," and God is "glorified" through the lives of those who "have that mind which was also in Christ Jesus." Only thus does the kingdom of God come on earth and can his will be done.

The call, therefore, is to men of ability and courage who have also simplicity and humility and who are wholeheartedly devoted to this task. For such there is offered a career of constructive service in the remaking of human nature after the pattern which God intended it to have.

And in the final analysis, all who cannot go must send.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE HAS GOOD SESSION.

At 10 o'clock, Wednesday morning, November 1, Rev. R. E. Brittle, president, and also pastor of the host church, called to order the One Hundred Thirtieth Annual Session of the Eastern Virginia Conference. Every seat in Bethlehem Church was filled, and chairs were placed in the aisles.

After a hymn, led by Dr. Jesse H. Dollar and the invocation by Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, Jr., ministers and delegates were enrolled and several visitors recognized. Mrs. Paul Yates then welcomed those present on behalf of the host church, and Rev. A. Lanson Granger made brief response.

Rev. J. Everette Neese, conference secretary, reported for the Executive Committee. Rev. W. Millard Stevens reported for the Committee on Christian Education, and pending its adoption, President L. E. Smith of Elon College spoke on "The Future of the Church College." Dr. Smith flew to the conference from Chicago, where he had been attending a meeting of the presidents of the Congregational Christian church-related colleges.

Following Dr. H. S. Harcastle's report on Ministerial Education, Dr. Douglas Horton, Minister of the General Council, addressed the conference, stressing the need for recruits for the ministry. He said that our denomination needed 180 new ministers each year to supply its needs, while only approximately 100 were entering our colleges and seminaries to prepare for work in our church each year. Possibly 50 ministers of other denominations join our group each year, but even with these, there remains a decided shortage, leaving many churches unsupplied. He said that ministers and mothers together accounted for over 50 per cent of those who did enter the ministry. Directors of Vocational Guidance in our public schools stood at the other end of the scale with a record of 0.8 per cent. Sunday school teachers accounted for 5 per cent.

The address of Rev. R. E. Brittle, president, followed, and it was voted by the conference that he furnish it to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for publication.

Rev. Melvin Doller dismissed the conference, and its members gathered in the church dining hall for a most delightful noon-day meal.

The afternoon devotionals were conducted by Revs. O. D. Poythress and John Gallo. Rev. Johnson Griffin was to have reported for the C. M. A., but was absent because of the death of his father. Hon. Shirley T. Holland reported for the Committee on Apportionments, followed by the reports of the treasurer, Mr. G. Chapman White, and the historian, Dr. N. G. Newman.

Next were reports on Evangelism by Dr. I. W. Johnson; Foreign Missions by Rev. Earl T. Farrell, and Home Missions by Dr. N. G. Newman. Informative addresses were given by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill and Supt. W. T. Scott.

Rev. W. A. Grissom pronounced the benediction.

The evening service was at 7:30. The opening worship was by the minister and choir of the host church. A

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

WE ARE NOT ALONE

St. Paul wrote of the "great cloud of witnesses" with which we are surrounded. Presumably that referred to the eternal as well as the temporal realm. Elijah beheld "the chariots of heaven and the horsemen thereof."

One of the secrets of successful living comes from knowledge of our essential allies. Jesus said: "He that is not against me is for me;" that is to say, is my ally.

Churchmen of our generation fall heir to a great cloud of witnesses—witnesses through the spoken and written words, witnesses through practical demonstrations of Kingdom building, witnesses through the skillful use of technological devices. Those who are not against us are for us. Their findings help to light a taper in our darkness. We need to recognize and to become acquainted with our essential allies.

Books reviewed in this issue direct attention to those who would join hands with us in lifting the basic level of our community resources. They come to help us in the solution of our common problems. They bring the university to the farm and the church. They are our allies. Let us put our hands, our heads and our hearts together.

A LIBRARY AND THE PROMISED LAND.

It is significant that the Hebrew people came into possession of their first library at Mt. Sinai, for the Ten Commandments constituted their first real library, and this library was a necessary prelude for their progress toward and entrance into the Promised Land.

That seems to be the usual pattern of progress. The Christian movement and the Christian literature are inseparable. Progress must be forecast and documented. Who can understand our civilization without the recorded words of him who cried: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord?"

One of the watchwords for a better society are the words of Christ: "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." The universality and availability of God's truth bring hope to our world.

The modern disciples of Christ are seekers after truth. They are literate Christians who study diligently for new revelations of divine progress.

Many significant books are coming from the press today. Still God speaks and he has many prophets. Look, listen, study. The way to the promised land for your community or your church may be found in a library, a book. If so, what a pity not to read it!

SOCIOLOGY IN THE SOUTH.

Henry W. Grady was one of the greatest orators and prophets the South has produced. He said on one occasion: "I attended a funeral once over in Pickens County, in my native state (Georgia). He was a poor 'one gallus fellow.' . . . They buried him in the midst of a marble quarry, and yet the little tombstone they put over him was imported from Vermont. They buried him in the heart of the pine forest, and yet the pine coffin was imported from Cincinnati. They buried him within touch of an iron mine, and yet the nails in his coffin and the iron in the shovel that dug his grave were imported from Pittsburgh. . . . The South didn't furnish a thing for that funeral but the corpse and the hole in the ground."

Georgia failed to keep pace with her prophet. Other prophets have arisen. Charles A. Collier spoke to the Georgia Press Association in 1944 and gave this alarming diagnosis. "The migration of young people out of this state is simply shocking. Do you have any idea what it has amounted to in the last twenty years? Census figures show that more than a million of our native born have left Georgia—contributing their talents, their energies, their money to other states. Let's see why those young people left the state. We had everything that a good climate could offer—a long growing season, good rainfall, mild temperature. But what young people wanted most we could not offer. They left Georgia because we, in Georgia, failed to provide economic conditions which would give them opportunity to progress. We failed those boys and girls by not providing an economic opportunity that would allow them to go ahead, in keeping with their ambition and their courage. There was one other reason. We did not make their homes and their communities sufficiently attractive places in which to live, in comparison with the homes and the communities in other parts of the United States."

This condition prevails not only in Georgia but throughout the South. Many of our ministers are baffled by the constant exodus of young people from their communities. The progress of the church is thwarted by the exodus of leadership. In sheer desperation the church must begin to study sociology as well as theology; it must inaugurate planning meetings as well as revival meetings.

Some communities are making progress. There is a new setting for the church in Smyrna, Ga. Fifty thousand bulbs in the parks and along the streets, planted by a business men's club have made it the "jonquil city of the South." In 1944, the town of Cleveland, Ga., had a population of 471 and ten business places. It had no street or sidewalk paving except a narrow strip around the courthouse. Now, we are told, all of Cleveland's streets and sidewalks are paved, the town has a public water system, new street lights, and fifteen new business. Most of the store fronts are new, the post office has been moved to a new building, and the tax list raised from $80,000 to $175,000. The prize is a new junior college for which the community provided 438 acres of land. Consider the stewardship opportunity of the local church in 1944 as compared to the present.

As a newspaper editor in a small town, H. Clay Tate was aware that many small towns in America were slowing down from "a hardening of the civic arteries." The trend, he felt, was disturbing, and he began to put a great deal of thought on the small town's position. That interest becoming known, he was invited to make talks on the problems of small towns at community meetings. He met in time a good many persons who were dissatisfied with the static state of small-town affairs. His efforts established the fact that "communities do not advance without the stimulation of leadership and the force of organized effort. A community-minded newspaper can furnish the stimulation, and university extension can provide the guidance for effective self-analysis and improvement.

The Church as well as the newspaper must crusade for better communities, must help to sow the seeds of social redemption. The tempo of progress may be accelerated; the area of progress may be multiplied. How effective are the forces of redemption in your community?

Our review section calls attention to books which give the synopsis of countless experiments in the realm of community betterment. In America and in Africa men of rare skill and scientific training are co-laborers with God in the creation of a better world. Their achievements are an open book to us all, so even those who run may read. What has been done in one instance may be done in another.

The Church must not only preach faith; it must have faith. It must exercise faith. It must have faith to remove the mountains of outmoded customs. It must dare to pioneer in the vast adventures of Kingdom building. It must blaze new trails, set new patterns, win new victories; and there is no better place for this grand venture of faith than here in the South.

our local churches. In 1949, this involved the raising of money in the amounts of more than $114,000 for work within our Convention, more than $38,000 for work through our National Boards, and more than $38,000 for other enterprises aside from our local church programs, also more than $638,000 for the work of our local churches. When all of these sums are added together, they total almost one million dollars contributed by our 35,000 members.

This is a stupendous job, but it is not more than we can do, but the bigness of it oftentimes causes us to throw up our hands and say that it is impossible. The size of our task should be a challenge to us and as a challenge it would cease to be a handicap and become a great asset.

The second handicap, or difficulty, which we have to overcome is an over-size inferiority complex. We do not give ourselves credit for being able to do as much as we really can do. We have told ourselves so often that we are poor and that we are just a minority group until we are beginning to believe it. This is always a handicap to an individual or to a group of people, because when we feel that we can't do a thing, we just will not try to do it.

The job is not too big, and we are not too poor. It is true that we are a minority group in the Southern Convention area, but it is also true that we have much to offer in the Kingdom of God in this area that no other group can give. We need to overcome our inferiority complex, and we can do it by putting ourselves to the task before us, believing that if we will do our best that God will not let us fail.

Now for the second consideration, which involves the two ways in which we can make a success of the task that is ours. These revolve around the two matters of evangelism and stewardship.

First, the matter of evangelism. In 1949, our churches received 1,600 new members. We should recognize that this is not a bad record, and at the same time we must recognize that it is not too good. If we could create within our hearts and minds a desire to win more people to Christ in the Church, the results would be more people to help us do the job which is ours within the Convention.

I think it is always true that there is no problem within the local church that cannot be solved by the bringing in of a large and consecrated group of new members. This can be done

The President of the Southern Convention Reports to Eastern Virginia Conference

By REV. W. MILLARD STEVENS.*

One of the privileges one has as president of the Convention is to appear from time to time before the annual sessions of the various conferences for the purpose of giving to the conference something of the goals which the Convention is trying to achieve. This is almost an impossible task, however, as the Convention is somewhat like the old woman who lived in a shoe and had so many children she didn't know what to do. The Convention has quite a collection of children in form of institutions, agencies and boards, and each of these is working very hard at their assigned tasks. Yet, as president of the Convention, it is all but impossible for me to report what they all are doing or endeavoring to do; but we can be assured that each of them is trying to the very best of their ability to fulfill the task assigned to them.

For the purposes of this report to this conference, I would like to confine my remarks to two things. First, I would like to point out two difficulties that constantly face the Convention, and then in the second place, I would like to point out two ways that are open to us for achieving the fullest measure of success in our Convention.

Let us look first at the two difficulties which we are constantly confronted with. The first of these is the stupendousness of the task which we of the Southern Convention have assigned to ourselves. When we look at the job that we are undertaking and realize the bigness of that job, it almost overwhelms us. We as a Convention are composed of 195 churches. Of these churches no more than a handful are a very great size. Most of these churches are small in membership and are, by and large, churches located in the open country. We have a little less than 35,000 members. Yet we have assumed for ourselves the responsibility of operating a standard 4-year college which at the present time has an enrollment of around 600 students. We are seeking to maintain an orphanage, which at present is caring for approximately 80 children. We are seeking to maintain a missionary program which involves home mission work within the boundaries of our Convention, and also reaches out around the world. We are trying to carry the work of our Convention through the Convention office, involving field work and promotional relationship with all of our churches, in addition to maintaining the work of

Some of My Impressions of the American Youth and Churches

By PRAKASH S. BHONSLE, India.*

It was my privilege to visit and participate in a few Summer Conferences in connection with the Congregational Christian Churches of the Eastern States during the past summer. The conferences I attended varied in types and programmes and were a great source of inspiration and help to me.

Two of them were scheduled for the Senior Hi groups at Camp Claire, Hamburg, Conn., and the Hartman Center, Milroy, Pa., respectively; one was scheduled for a Junior Hi group at Milroy; yet another for the Young but little response and interest from the young people in me, my country India, and in anything that I said or did. But experience proved the contrary. Not only I discovered that my fear was baseless, but that the young folks made me feel at home from the very next minute I got anywhere near them. Later on I realized that they were not just being good to me and obliging me, because I was a foreigner and their guest, but that they were really very happy to have me with them; and before I was through with those conferences, I disfied them or not is altogether another question.

Another thing that impressed me was their eagerness to know and do more for the Missionary enterprise in foreign countries. Of course, I could not help them in this much except by telling them a little of what was happening in India, but this they heard with a pin-drop silence and much interest. The next thing I discovered was that they were not just satisfied in listening to the reports of what was happening in the Mission field, but wanted to do something concrete for that type of work. As for instance, at Deering, the Pilgrim Fellowship Officers' Conference set the goal of raising $110.00 toward the Missionary enterprise, and throughout that week they emphasized that goal and worked on it, using various ways and means, until they were able to collect not only the $110.00, but $227.00. The conferences at Camp Claire, Conn., and Hartman Center did about the same with success. Those who worked on the raising of funds were zealous and men of faith, and I am convinced that wherever that money may go, it will bring rich harvest.

Before I turn to the next section of this article, I want to note that the schedules and programmes of the above conferences were carefully worked out and provided able leadership. Many young people had come to these conferences to have a grand time, and they did have plenty of fun and recreation, but many went away challenged and inspired because of what was offered them on the serious side of the programme. I know of at least four cases wherein young boys and girls have made decisions to go into the ministry and missionary work as a response to the challenge they received during those conferences. May God bless them and may they stick to these decisions in the years to come.

What I experienced with the young folks at the conferences, I experienced with the church groups, the ministers of churches and officers of the State church organizations. Everywhere I went I was treated with extreme courtesy and cordiality. It was my privilege to live in ministers' homes as their guests in places such as Milroy, Everett and Columbus, Penna., Springfield and Northampton, Mass., and Greensboro, N. C., and all my hosts and hostesses received and treated me beautifully. The hospitality they offered was superb, and many of my hosts even went beyond that, Adult group at the same place, and the last one, for the officers of the Pilgrim Fellowship Organization of the Massachusetts State, at Deering, New Hampshire.

In the following paragraphs, I wish to express a few of my experiences and impressions about the conferences. At the outset, I must make a confession that I went to those conferences with a feeling of fear and a suspicion that I was not going to feel "at home" with the young folks of America. I went there because I was assigned to go there. I had expected covered that I had not just made acquaintances with them but friends. Today, my correspondence has increased more than I had ever anticipated because of these new contacts and friendships I made during the past three or four months.

One of the things that impressed me very much at the above conferences was the keen interest that the young people of America showed in India. They were full of questions on political, social, economic and religious life of India. They wanted to know what progress India has made in education since she received her freedom, whether the caste-system was fading away, whether Communism is spreading in India, and so on. Many wanted to know more about Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Nehru, and about India's present stand in the U. N. General Assembly. It was thrilling to answer their numerous queries, whether the answers satis-

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN COLLEGE COUNCIL MEETS.

The Congregational Christian College Council consists of 17 colleges with Congregational Christian Church background and affiliation. This council was organized six years ago for the purpose of acquaintance, fellowship, mutual assistance, and with the hope of being of more effective service to the church that we represent.

The Council met in Chicago, October 30 and 31. The meeting was held in our denominational headquarters, 19 S. LaSalle Street, Chicago. The agenda consisted of addresses on vital topics and a general discussion of problems confronting our colleges today. All 17 institutions were represented except one. It was discovered by an informal poll that all of these colleges represented had a decline in enrollment this year, the decline ranging from 2% to 50%. Our problems are further complicated by the government's program that calls for total mobilization, which will further reduce our enrollment drastically, presenting to us all greater and more serious problems.

Contributions by the colleges to the church and contributions by the church to the colleges were conscientiously considered. After considerable discussion, the following recommendations were unanimously adopted. These recommendations were placed in the hands of the Executive Committee of the Council, to be edited and presented to the proper denominational agency.

"Because the CCCC desires to serve the churches, its young people, and the national program of the fellowship in an increasingly effective manner, it is recommended:

"First, that official recognition be given the Council as an arm of the churches, by:

- (1) The enthusiastic concern of the national officers through supporting statements to state officers, and
- (2) Increasing and defining the CCCC status specifically in the national organization of the Congregational fellowship, and
- (3) Active support by the denominational promotional organization of a program of cultivation of the churches on a national scale; (this to be beyond the work now being done under their own efforts by the various colleges in their separate states).

"Second, that a program of cultivation and information be authorized from the CCCC to the various churches, by:

- (1) Pointing out that the colleges are a continuation of the churches in carrying the responsibility for the Christian nurture of their young people after high school has been completed.
- (2) Detailing the important and significant difference in educational philosophy as between the CCCC and public higher education.
- (3) Emphasizing that the future of the churches and their leadership lies in the maintenance of these colleges, and
- (4) Describing the realities of the solid education achievements of these colleges, visible in our national and international life.

"Third, that this program of cultivation and information be carried on by mail to the churches and their strategic members, through regular releases carefully edited by the CCCC and paid for from the treasury of the Council.

"Fourth, that after this program of cultivation and information has been carried on for a reasonable period of time, a financial asking be authorized, seeking $1.00 per member from our Congregational-Christian fellowship, not as a part of the regular apportionment but in addition to it, and also simultaneously, organize a strong student recruitment program for these colleges.

"Fifth, that each of the presidents of the CCCC agree to give two weeks of his time during a specified month of the year in order that direct approaches can be made to the churches and their governing boards in the states or areas not possessing a Congregational-Christian college within their boundaries."

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Fifteen years ago the greater part of the money apportioned by the churches to the college was paid during the annual session of the conferences. In recent years, partial payments of these amounts are made weekly. Each church is supposed to pay weekly, monthly, or quarterly. This plan is preferable. The expenses of the college are incurred day after day. Regular payments mean a great deal more; that is, they make it easier for the college to meet its obligations. It would be tremendously helpful if these apportionments could be paid in full by the quarter. This, I presume, is the aim, but the aim is not realized. We are now within weeks of the close of the conference year for all of our churches; in fact, three of our conferences have already met. The total amount received to date is $10,146.37, which means that we are still 33 1-3% below the amount apportioned.

It is the hope of those who are interested in the college that our churches will come to the rescue and see that the entire amount apportioned is raised and paid over to the college on or before January 1, 1951. If the churches realized how much their contributions mean to the college, they would see that these contributions are made regularly and in full.

THE RIGGS PLAN TO LEAVE CHINA.

Foochow, Fukien, China
October 8, 1950.

Dear Friends:

This will definitely be the last letter I will write you from China. I think I may have said this same thing two months ago when I last wrote; if so I will have to apologize for being too rash in my predictions. At that time we had just decided to leave China, in conformance with the request made by the Government to the Chinese Church, and had just made our applications to the local police for exit permits. Unfortunately the Fukien coast is under a rather effective blockade, and there was difficulty in figuring out a route by which all the missionaries who were applying to leave could safely get out of the country. A way has finally been worked out, and the permits are starting to come through, three groups having already left, and arrived safely at Hongkong. The procedure is to go by motor launch up the Min River to Nanping, a twenty-four-hour trip, then overland over very rough roads by truck to the railroad, straight north to the Kiangsi border. This can be made in two or three days. From then on it is a relatively easy two-day ride by train around to the west (to Nanchang), south, and then to the coast again at Canton; and then a short train ride across the border to Hongkong. The whole trip takes six to ten days, depending on connections. This is by far the best time of the year to travel and the route is well-travelled, so that so far there have been no hold-ups due to washed-out bridges, lack of vehicles, etc., which usually plague the overland traveller. On the map it looks like a long way around, but actually it is a surprisingly easy, comfortable, and inexpensive way to get out, considering everything, and we feel that we are very lucky. We got our permits ten days ago, but have been delaying so that the Jacksons, whose family was just increased by the arrival of a new baby boy a week ago, can go with us. We expect to get underway in another ten days, taking it as slowly and easily as possible for the sake of the new mother and baby; and hope to be in Hongkong by the end of this month.

From there we are slated to go to the Madura Mission in South India, to finish up the last two years of our first term. There is an opening in general medical work in Madura itself, and a leprosarium nearby, where I can be useful temporarily. (Those of you who are running for your maps, look down the east coast of the Indian peninsula, south of Madras, near the southern tip.) Yes, it is fairly near the Equator, but we have learned to prefer warm weather. Little Louis, especially, thinks life is quite miserable the past two or three weeks because the temperature has dropped below 80 and his Mother makes him wear clothes!

Seriously, though, we are looking forward to this experience with great eagerness. Of course it will mean another language or two to master; but it will be a great chance to compare life, medical conditions, and Mission methods in another overpopulated oriental country, which is also experiencing a rising surge of nationalism and is embarked on the new experiment of nation-building, but without having yet alienated itself from the West. I have never "pointed toward" that country in my reading and studying, as I have toward China, so I don't know a thing about it yet, but as long as it is the country of Gandhi I know I shall like it. It will be an entirely new experience to Fran, and the first time for her, because actually China was almost as natural to her as America. In two years we may not make much headway with the language and probably won't be able to do much good; but it will give us just the right length of time to get acquainted a little with the country and the people and the problems.

Whether this two years will be an interlude or the beginning of a new and more permanent field, we dare not say now. At this stage of the game it would not hurt us to start over fresh; and although there is plenty that we would have to learn from the beginning, still I cannot believe that the experience we have had here during the past four years will not be of great help, both medically and in understanding and dealing with the Mission and social problems in general. And certainly nobody would question the fact that India has as much promise of interest and worthwhileness for a lifetime as China. We will let you know after another few months how the prospects look by then.

On the other hand, every single missionary here who is leaving is secretly hoping that he or she will be one of the lucky few to rate an invitation to come back to China later after the Chinese Church has purged itself and proven its ability to survive and support itself without American aid. Whether anyone can come back or not will depend partly on the course in the near future of international developments, whether ways can be found to break through the iron curtain and soften its implications. We hope that after the two years in India and the one year of furlough in the States it will be possible to decide whether there will be such a hope. Naturally, at the moment, all our interests are here, and it would be a thrill to be able to come back, on a new basis of equality, and find some new worthwhile way of making a contribution. So it is our secret wish that the experience in India will be the interlude, which will help make us wiser for work again in China, rather than the other way around.

One of the things we will be looking forward to when we get out of China is easier communication with the outside world. The blockade is having an increasingly severe effect on the morale here. I don't mean that we lack the comforts of life personally; since living in Foochow we have been very comfortable—too comfortable in fact, in contrast to the Chinese around us. But the inability to import medical supplies, health materials, etc., so that as each month goes by, one sees more aspects of useful work closed off by lack of materials, is very depressing, especially when one cannot tell when it will all end. In India we hope to be able to have access to the "tools of the trade" so that effective medical work can be done. Also, we hope to be able to write letters freely and send them directly to you without being deterred by excessive postage and the fear that they may never arrive. We have lost touch with too many because of slow and uncertain mails, and the feeling on both sides that it is perhaps not worth the effort to write. The Board will know our address in India and be able to forward your letters to us;

THANK OFFERING PROJECT.

The Thank Offering program is an excellent one, and it may be used in many ways. Just be sure you use it in some well-planned way in your society.

Some of you will want to have a public service, at which time the entire membership of your church is invited to attend the program and share in the offering. Some of you will have the program at a special meeting of your society, with the program parts given out long enough ahead of time for the service to run smoothly. Some of you will want to get from Elon College a special movie of college buildings and activities to use in connection with this program. Some of you will feel that extra meetings are all too plentiful in November and you will use it as your regular November program for your circle or society. However it is used, it should be done well, with your group informed ahead of time as to the object for which the offering is to go.

If some of you have an unusually fine program, or if some of you do something different from the ordinary in the presentation of this Thank Offering program, please send a write-up of it to the editor of this page. And send it immediately after the program—if not sooner! Please do not wait until the end of the year to report it.

The job of redecorating Whitley Memorial Auditorium at Elon College has already been done. Now it is up to the women of our churches in Virginia and North Carolina to show their interest in our college by paying for the beautification and renewal of this building where many of our meetings are held, where students from our churches worship, and where the Elon Community Church holds its services.

YOU CAN STILL HELP REFUGEES.

Last Friday was World Community Day. It is observed the first Friday in November of each year, by church women, under the sponsorship of the United Council of Church Women. The theme was, "Love Thy Neighbor."

If the time for this observance

"slipped up on you," and you were not ready in your church group for its observance, please try to do something about it at a later date. It is never too late to dedicate ourselves anew to the bonds of Christian brotherhood and the cause of world peace. In Jane Addams' words, "Nothing could be worse than the fear that one had stopped too soon, and had left one effort unexpended which might have saved the world."

The special gift project for the day was knitted garments for refugees. Word has come that used knitted garments are really of more value than new ones, as a heavy duty is required in many countries on new materials. Try your best to find some used sweaters, shawls, or other warm garments, and dedicate them at a special service. Packages should be accompanied by 15c per pound for mailing.

Friday, November 10, 7:30 p. m., Linville Church (Valley).

Sunday, November 12, 3:30 p. m., Greensboro, First (N. C.).

Tuesday, November 14, 10:30 a. m., Wakefield (E. Va.).

Wednesday, November 15, 10:30 a. m., Franklin (E. Va.).

Wednesday, November 15, 8:00 p. m., Newport News (E. Va.).

Thursday, November 16, 10:30 a. m., Christian Temple, Norfolk (E. Va.).

Friday, November 17, 8:00 p. m., Liberty Spring (E. Va.), for Young People.

Sunday, November 19, 11:00 a. m., Union, Virgilina (N. C.).

Sunday, November 19, 7:30 p. m., Henderson (N. C.).

See that a carload—or more—goes from your church to the nearest place where she will speak.

These meetings are not intended only for the churches listed above, but they are area meetings, so please consider this as an invitation for your society to attend whichever meeting is nearest or most convenient for your group.

May I remind you to read "Assignment Near East" or "Near East Panorama" between now and the time Margaret Blemker comes—also the brochure, "Out Where the East Begins," which you will find in the packet.

I hope all societies will take advantage of this wonderful opportunity of hearing Margaret Blemker and getting a first hand study of the Near East.

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S BOARD.

The officers of the North Carolina Woman's Conference met for their first session of the year at the First Church, Greensboro, on Friday, October 27. Ten of the twelve officers and three district superintendents were present. Guests included Mr. O. H. Paris, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman and Mrs. F. C. Lester.

Mrs. W. J. Andes, the new president, made a fine beginning in her new job. Among other things considered were the opportunities and responsibilities of each officer. It was voted to increase the gift to the North Carolina Council of Church Women from $20 to $35 for this year.

At the lunch hour the women's auxiliary of the church entertained the group at a lovely buffet luncheon in the home of Mrs. W. E. Wisseman. The newly organized Morning Circle, with Mrs. Hinton Rountree as leader, served the luncheon and was responsible for the beautiful flower arrangements. Mrs. Ballinger, auxiliary president, was a special guest, as was Rev. W. E. Wisseman.

These newly elected officers of our North Carolina Conference are planning to do great things in their various departments. We are sure that the societies will back them up in whatever they may suggest.

There are not too many weeks before Christmas. Would you like to make a present for a small boy or girl? This is what you will need: pipe-stem cleaners, spools (with the thread off), and if you like to color them show-card colors and shellac. By using the spool as the body and running the cleaners through the holes, you can make any number of animals: horses, zebras, tigers, elephants and giraffes. For a giraffe use one piece for head and bend the end for a tail, two pieces to make the legs. Color the body, and when it is thoroughly dry shellac it for a long lasting finish. Be careful not to get shellac on the head and legs.

Another easy-to-make toy is a train of match boxes. For the engine stack two boxes: one long way, one tall way, then run a string through it and as many cars as you like. It too can be colored and shellacked, but it is just as much fun plain.

Nearly all little folk like to string things. If you have many left-over spools, paint them different colors and then buy a pair of shoestrings and put the strings and spools in a box you have colored or covered with pretty paper. Then the little folk can string "beads," mother can tie a bow for them, and they can dress up. One little pull, and the beads come apart until next time.

If you have any ideas for gifts, would you share them with us?

For Parents and Teachers . . .

VERY IMPORTANT PERSON.

By GEORGE M. DODSON.

"I suppose my children will eventually learn; and anyway they may be too young for me to need to worry about it at present," Mrs. Richman confided to her friend. "Even so, I do wish they would show a little more respect for the property of other children, and for their opinions, too."

Mrs. Stassie looked quite pleased as she said, "Now my visit here this morning can serve two purposes. First, I want to invite your children to Tim's birthday party. And, you have just reminded me of a game that can be played at the party which may open the way for a later talk with the children on this subject. I can assure you that we have the same trouble at our house. So I hope you will come over during our party to see how things turn out."

At the party each guest was handed a slip of paper with a jumble of letters written on it. Mrs. Stassie then told the players, "I can give you only one hint. When put into proper order, those letters spell the name of an important person who will be here during the party. Let us see who will solve the puzzle most quickly."

Listening from the next room, Mrs. Richman wondered who this very important person might be. Then Mrs. Stassie came and whispered, "Do you want to hear a secret? Each player has been given his or her own name, but with the letters thoroughly mixed up. Here's the slip I had made for Mary Jane Fuller; but she is visiting her aunt and so could not come to the party." On the paper she handed Mrs. Richman was the puzzle-name: yajlrnfearleum.

Just then one of the children called out, "I can spell my name from these letters! Look, everybody! I am an important person!"

With this hint, the others soon made a like discovery. Mrs. Stassie and Mrs. Richman exchanged smiles.

A little later Mrs. Stassie again came in to talk to her friend. "You may want to do exactly what I intend to do," she said. "After the party, while this game is still fresh in their minds, I am going to try to impress my children with the fact that every-one is a very important person whose property and ideas deserve respect. It won't seem like a lecture with this party background for our discussion."

"It is a wonderful party," answered Mrs. Richman fervently. "When you were with them, and I sat here listening to those children chanting 'I'm a very important person,' I thought how American the idea is—you know—respect for the individual. I'm going to help my children to understand those words with regard to themselves, each other, and their friends. They convey such a beautiful lesson in democracy. Oh, this is the most worth-while party my children have ever attended!"—National Kindergarten Association.

HIGH SCHOOL DRINKERS.

"A Yale test indicates that two out of every three alcoholics began drinking when of high school age. . . . In 20 to 30 per cent of all divorces in the United States, alcohol is a chief factor. Twenty thousand a year die of alcoholism—about the same number as die of cancer. This does not include the thousands that die in traffic accidents caused by drink. The mortality of children in alcoholic families is greater than that in temperance families.

"There are in the United States 4,000,000 problem drinkers, of whom 950,000 are chronic alcoholics. . . . Seventy per cent of court cases are now due to alcohol, directly or indirectly. It costs some $3,500 to take care of a habitual alcoholic until he or she dies in a penitentiary. It costs about $2,000 to put a child through grammar school and high school.

"Since alcoholism develops mostly in drinkers who begin during ages of 14 to 19, and about 6 per cent of those who drink regularly and excessively end as alcoholics, anything a hostess or parents can do to co-operate with young people to avoid the social drinking of alcoholic beverages will be of great value."—Dr. Edwin M. Fauver, noted physician on the staff of the University of Rochester, writing in the "Scientific Temperance Journal."

When business is not at all that it should be there is a temptation to sit back and say, "Well, what's the use! We've done everything possible to stir up a little business and there is nothing doing so what's the use of trying!" There is always a way. There was a way in and there is a way out. And success comes to the man who grits his teeth, squares his jaw, and says, "There is a way for me and by jingo, I'll find it." The stagnator gathers green scum, finally dries up and leaves an unsightly hollow.—Clifford Sloan.

Youth at Work in the Church

MISS ANN TRUITT, Associate

*We know to some that birthdays come
With parties and ado,
And if we could, we surely would
Do the same for you.
But since we can't, we surely ain't
Go'nna stop before
We've wished you "Happy Birthday"
And many, many more.*

This is a little poem wishing happy birthday to any of you young people who may have a birthday in the near future. December 22, there is a rebirth of light: the days begin to get longer; the darkness lessens, and the light increases. On December 25, we celebrate the birth of our Savior Jesus Christ, who came that we might have life and have it more abundantly. Are we going through this season without accepting the opportunities which it offers us? Some of our local groups need a "shot in the arm." Let us take advantage of this season to give rebirth to these groups. Perhaps your church doesn't have a Youth Fellowship organized. Now is the time to begin. Give birth to a new organization on Christ's birthday. Some of you may want to give rebirth to the Christmas story in the form of a play. Some of you may want to give birth to the Spirit of Christmas in your own lives. Whatever the case we should not let this season of births pass without showing our appreciation for the Way, the Truth and the Light.

MAX VESTAL.

One of the professors at Elon is very fond of hunting, especially bird hunting. From what I can hear, he has an outstanding bird dog called "Brutus." It seems that "Brutus," upon sighting a covey of birds, drives all of them into the nearest ground squirrel hole. Then he puts his foot over the hole, letting out one at a time while "Doc" picks them off. "Et tu, Brute."

"NOW MORE THAN EVER!"

(The following is printed as a suggested Worship Service. It was used in the Eastern Virginia Youth Rally.—MAX VESTAL.)

Prelude—"We've a Story to Tell to the Nations."

Call to Worship—Leader.

*"O Master of the waking world,
Who hast the nations in thy heart—
The heart that bled and broke to send God's love to earth's remotest parts
Show us anew in Calvary
The wondrous power that makes men free."*

Prayer—

Hymn—"O Master, Let Me Walk with Thee."

Theme Announced: "Now More Than Ever."

Leader—

"Many church members have the idea that they are like a college student, who is offered required courses and elective courses. They think of the missionary enterprise as one of the electives; they can choose it or not, according to their feelings or inclinations. They feel that it is a nice gesture to support missions—if they can conveniently do so after all their own needs and desires have been met. The very reverse is true. Missions are not optional! They are a "must" for every true follower of the Master! The missionary enterprise is a required course—now more than ever!"

Responsive Reading—

Choral Response—"We've a Story to Tell to the Nations."

Meditation—"Now More Than Ever."

"Let us bow our heads for a period of guided prayer (Pianist plays very softly, "In Christ There Is No East or West"):

- "1. Let us pray for vision—a vision of the tremendous needs and opportunities of our day.
- "2. Let us pray for the realization that a new missionary advance is an absolute imperative for our day.
- "3. Let us pray for guidance that each one of us may discover his part to play in this new missionary emphasis.
- "4. Let us pray for faith to invest our all—even our very lives, if God so directs—in the worldwide mission of the Church.
- "5. Let us pray for courage to follow the leadership of Jesus Christ wherever it takes us, cost what it may. Amen."

Hymn—"Lead On, O King Eternal."
Benediction—

WESTERN N. C. YOUTH RALLY.

On Sunday afternoon, October 29, over 250 young people of the Western North Carolina Conference filled the Pleasant Union Church to capacity for their annual Fall Rally. Everyone was in high spirits as they took advantage of the beautiful Indian Summer weather. The highlights of the afternoon were the reports made by Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Cobb and Max Vestal on their work overseas. The young people enjoyed these reports very much and now realize the importance of sending such workers.

The following officers were elected for the next year: Bill Simmons, Albemarle, president; Max Vestal, Asheboro, vice-president; Doris Owens, Seagrove, secretary, and Helen Farrow, Seagrove, treasurer. Bill, Max and Helen served in these same offices during the last year.

At each rally, an attendance trophy is presented to the church having the largest percentage present. The Hank's Chapel Youth carried the trophy home for the second time this year. They had 100 per cent present at the meeting. During the year, the attendance trophy has been captured by Hank's Chapel, Albemarle and Shady Grove.

After enjoying a fine outdoor supper the Youth returned to the church for the evening session. This was opened by a very beautiful and impressive worship service conducted by the Albemarle group. Dr. F. C. Lester of Asheboro, installed the new officers, reminding them as well as the group as a whole of their responsibilities and of their many opportunities to do a good and enjoyable work. Hank's Chapel gave a play entitled "Church Bells," emphasizing the importance of regular church attendance in the life of a family.

The meeting came to a close with a Communion Service conducted by Rev. W. W. Hall of Albemarle.

The next rally will be held on December 31, at the Asheboro Church. We would like to urge the youth of our churches to start making plans now to attend this rally. Many of our churches have never been represented at the rallies, and they cannot possibly realize what fun and fellowship they are missing.

At the December rally something new will begin, and no young person will want to miss it. Plan now to be there; we promise you a good time.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

CHRISTIAN WORSHIP.

LESSON VII—NOVEMBER 19, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: God is Spirit, and those who worship him, must worship in spirit and in truth.—John 4:24.

LESSON: Isaiah 1:11-17; John 4:19-24; Colossians 3:16.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 84.

Keep in mind the fact that the Sunday School Lessons for this Quarter are centered around the theme "Growing in Christian Living." It would have been a serious omission if the Lesson Committee had left out a lesson on Christian Worship. Christians cannot grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ if they do not worship in one way or another. Some form of private devotion is a means of grace and of growth. So also is the public worship of God. Even as we are not to neglect our private worship, neither are we to neglect our public worship. Worship is a divinely appointed means of growing in the Christian life.

Some years ago, a prominent layman missed several services of worship in his local church. After an evening service one Sunday night, his pastor made a friendly call on the man. Instead of chiding or scolding the man for staying away from the services, the minister chatted with his parishioner in a friendly way. Then taking a live coal from the fire burning brightly on the fireplace, he laid it on the hearth apart from everything. At first it continued to burn brightly. But soon it lost its glow and warmth and eventually became dull and dark and almost cold. Then the minister took up the piece of coal and put it back into the fire. It soon became a burning and bright ball of fire again. The lesson was not lost on the recreant church member. With a lump in his throat he said to his pastor, "Pastor I get the lesson; I will be at the service next Sunday morning." Would it be too much to say as Dr. Calkins says in one of his books "When a man's attendance at the services of the church stands at zero, it is not likely that his interest in the Kingdom registers at the boiling point." Jesus is reported to have said, "He that is near me is near the fire." Worship, private and public, helps to keep the fires of faith and hope and love burning brightly on the altars of the heart.

As aids to memory three or four simple words will be used as an outline for this lesson concerning Christian Worship as an Aid to Growth in Christian Living. They have their background in the Scripture passage for today's lesson.

Expectation.

The author of Hebrews wrote that "without faith it is impossible to please God, for when we come to him, we must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him." One should approach worship with the spirit of expectancy. He should not only believe that God is, that God exists, that God is real, but he should also believe that God responds to those who sincerely and honestly seek to worship him. Worship is not a dead end street, a blind alley. Worship is a thoroughfare that leads to the city of God and which brings the worshipper into the presence of the living, loving God. The fact is that a great many people never expect anything to happen when they worship. There is no spirit of expectancy, no sense of adventure, no hope of discovery. What a difference it would make if people came to the service of worship eagerly, expectantly, hopefully.

Preparation.

Worship would become more meaningful if some preparation were given to it. What a difference it would make if before going to a service of worship, for instance, one would take a few moments to prepare his mind and heart for that service of worship. How much easier it would be for the minister to lead his people into the presence of God if they came prepared to go with him into the presence. Even if this preparation were nothing more than a short and silent prayer as one took his seat it might make a difference. Somewhere in the Old Testament there is a message of scripture which says that a certain king did evil in that "he prepared not his heart to seek the Lord." Worship is one of life's highest enterprises. Like marriage it is not to be entered into lightly or unadvisedly, but reverently, discreetly, advisedly, soberly and in the fear of God.

Participation.

All too many people who attend services of worship are spectators instead of participants. They go with the idea of seeing how much they can get out of the service, instead of how much they can put into it. They think in terms of what the service will contribute to them instead of what they can contribute to the service of worship. They do not take part in the Responsive or Unison Readings, they do not even open the hymnal, they give no heed to the pastoral prayer, they never enter into the spirit of worship. And all too often because they bring nothing to the service of worship, they get nothing out of it. To be sure there are times when we should be still and know God is God. But the law of life operates here as elsewhere. There is no impression without expression. One reason why those who worship in private should also worship in public is the gains that come from participation and sharing in a public service of worship. Jesus, as his custom was, went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and he also stood up to read.

Translation.

Isaiah does not condemn worship as such. The words of today's lesson sound hard and harsh and would give the impression that he does condemn worship. What he was condemning, however, was formality in worship, worship that had no inner vitality, worship that was a substitute for right living. Long before the Master he insisted that God was a spirit, or that God is spirit, and that men must worship him in spirit and in truth. Furthermore Isaiah insisted that worship should find expression in service. At the end of his tirade against formal worship he says, "Cease to do evil, learn to do good (or well); seek justice, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow." At the entrance to one sanctuary in which the writer of these notes preached for several years was an attractive and durable stainless steel plate inscribed as follows, "Enter to worship. Depart to serve." In one sense the service of worship does not end at twelve o'clock on Sunday morning; it rather begins. For all that a man does through the week should be seasoned and sanctified by his experience of worship on Sunday morning. And he should be making his life and his service after the pattern that he had seen in the mount, in the sanctuary and in the vision of God and an experience of God.

SMALL TOWN RENAISSANCE. A Story of the Montana Study. Richard Waverly Poston. Harper, N. Y. $3.

"Montana had its beginnings in bloodshed, vigilante hangings, and corporate intrigue. It was exploited for its furs. Its gold was dissipated in an orgy of spending and riotous living. In less than thirty years its millions of buffalo were slaughtered, and open-range livestock had come and gone. There was a relentless fight for its silver, the war of the copper kings, and the rise of a dominant economic group. There was unrestricted logging in its forests, wasting of its soil, and exploitation of its plains. And on this thesis, a Western Empire was built."

The Montana Study was designed to correct this condition. Ernest O. Melby, chancellor of the University of Montana, fathered the idea. He was haunted by the ghost towns which spotted Montana, examples of social decay far too prevalent in America. The primary problem of the Montana Study was to "find ways to enrich the quality of living in Montana; the elimination of decadence, of dullness and monotony from the small town; to study ways to raise the appreciative and spiritual standard of living to the people of the state and thus keep a larger number of able young people in their home communities." Moreover: "Improvements might come in the form of new sources of income developed by local initiative, it might involve town beautification, projects in community recreation, adult hobby groups, efforts to solve specific local problems such as juvenile delinquency, a need for better medical facilities, or any form of community betterment." The Study was further designed to simply create a more pleasant community life, raising local pride, to enlighten attitudes and to give personal dignity a lift. It was begun by having a group study the local community by "home town people."

What was the result? The author describes the three year operation with fourteen Montana communities making detailed studies and about fifty related projects. From the stimulation of the study has come: home industries, incomes raised by hundreds of thousands of dollars, and real creative living has come to scores of citizens. There was a marked increase in their feeling for American democracy. He further points out that the study will continue as their community planning goes on.

What are the problems of your state, your home town, your community? Has any constructive effort been made to solve and remedy them? The Montana Study offers successful and readily adaptable methods by which the ordinary men and women of any community can solve their problems and initiate reforms.

PRESIDENT OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION REPORTS.

within every church within the Convention if we would be willing to work at the task. It can't be done through mass evangelism because the day of mass evangelism as the only means of winning new recruits has passed. We must now begin to practice more effectively personal evangelism through visitation groups within each local church. This is not a job for the ministers alone, but it is also a job in which the laymen in every church must have a share. A good many of our problems could be solved if only we would take the matter of evangelism seriously.

Now for the second consideration, which is stewardship. This is always a matter which involves money. It is in every forward step that we try to make, because it seems that we can't do this or that unless we have money, and we can't have money unless we do this or that. It is a vicious circle that always confronts us. We must admit that we have not done a very good job in this matter of stewardship, and in admitting our failure let us dedicate ourselves to undertaking the job more seriously.

Our Missions Council has prepared some of the best literature in the field of stewardship education this year that I have ever been privileged to read, but we have not taken advantage of this literature nor of the service of the Missions Council. I believe that every church within the bounds of the Convention should now seek to institute the program of education that the Missions Council has prepared around our Christian World Missions and if we would do this, that our people would become better informed and would be more fully dedicated to the task before us.

The goals of our Convention and our program are more or less set before us through our apportionments. Let us take these apportionments seriously and make an honest effort to achieve each and every one of them. If we do this we will have done enough to make us feel sure that we are doing God's will and work.

In conclusion I would like to say this. There is nothing to prevent the Congregational Christian Church in the South from going forward except the apathy of those of us who are its members. A vision for our church and a strong faith in God's power to use us for his glory will create within us an active enthusiasm which will destroy our apathy.

The South needs, and I believe desires, a church with a liberal mind, a strong faith and a Christian concern for people. This is what our church is in theory. We can make it such in practice if those of us who are its members will turn again to our Lord and give ourselves into his will and way. We should either be enthusiastic workers in our church or else be ashamed of ourselves.

Let every member of every church within the Southern Convention give themselves to the making of their own local church an effective and strong part of the body of Christ. Then our cups will be filled to overflowing and we will reach out unto all the world with Christ's redeeming grace. A strong church must begin in you. A strong and effective Convention program, working through all her institutions and boards, must begin in your church.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Hill know children because he is principal of the Elon Public School. They gave a check for $10.00 for the November Birthday table—decorations and special refreshments for all. This a most generous thing for them to do. I believe one of the happiest dinners of the month is that in which the seven or eight girls and boys whose birthdays come in the month sit at a center table and hear all the others sing "Happy Birthday to You." Birthday cake and ice-cream are served to the big family of 90 children and matrons. There is also some little special entertainment. May these birthdays be remembered in years to come as part of the joy of the Orphanage home. Birthday packages are sometimes held until that special occasion and placed on the table. Thanks to Dr. and Mrs. Hill for their voluntary contribution. Who will help with the December Birthday party?

Thanksgiving gifts boosted our good report this week by seventy dollars. This brings our Thanksgiving total to $135.00. Who will be next to boost the Thanksgiving Offerings? I hope I can have quite a goodly sum to add to the present total next week. I am asking all churches and Sunday schools to take a special Thanksgiving Offering and if possible let it be "over and above" that amount paid into conference apportionments. Many churches will be glad to do this I am sure.

If you are planning elaborate boxes of Christmas gifts for our children please remember that the essentials of home, food, clothing, and warm buildings, clean beds, buildings insured against fire hazard, etc., come first. We must have these things. Last Christmas each child had more than twenty-five gifts of some kind. They had about a dozen "Christmas Parties" for the whole group. We appreciate these parties and the more than a score of gifts per child. They need inexpensive but sturdy traveling bags, for trips they make and for vacation time. They need funds for vacations and for "dime shows" which are frequently given at the public school. They need money for movies which they attend occasionally. They need clothes, and pretty books and playground equipment. And they need toys and dolls and the things that make Christmas. A record player for each of the three buildings, and records to play would be most acceptable.

Please send all moneys which you wish accredited to your church or Sunday school to The Convention Office, Elon College, N. C. with a note saying it is for The Christian Orphanage. That office turns every cent of it over to us each week. Other money may be sent to that office or directly to the Orphanage.

The children had a big time Halloween night right on our own campus. Huge piles of leaves had been raked into the street in front of each of the three buildings. The children had fun in making preparation for the burning of leaves, and looked forward to the songs, dances, games, and refreshments.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

We are not to judge thrift solely by the test of saving or spending. If one spends what he should prudently save, that certainly is to be deplored. But if one saves what he should prudently spend, that is not necessarily to be commended. A wise balance between the two . . . is the desired end.—Owen D. Young.

In Memoriam

FREEMAN.

On August 17, 1950 Mrs. Nettie Grant Freeman, wife of Mr. Clifton A. Freeman of Wakefield, Va., passed away after a long illness.

Mrs. Freeman is survived by her husband; one son, Melvin A., and two grand children.

Funeral services conducted by Rev. R. E. Brittle were in Burton's Grove Congregational Christian Church, interment in the Ivor Cemetery on August 19.

We, the members of Burton's Grove Church realize that we have lost a devoted and loyal member, one with a strong and lasting faith in the will of her Heavenly Father.

We are resolved to honor her memory and consecrated life by carrying on the work so dear to her.

We wish to extend to her family our sincere sympathy and commend them to our Heavenly Father who can heal all our sorrows.

EASTERN VA. CONFERENCE.

memorial service was conducted by Dr. I. W. Johnson, and an ordaining presbytery conferred the order of conference elder upon Rev. H. M. George, recently elected minister of Elm Avenue Church.

Dr. Douglas Horton delivered the conference sermon, using as his background the miraculous draft of fishes as told in the twenty-first chapter of St. John. Isaac Walton was also drawn into the picture, as his rules for catching fish were enumerated as follows: Keep one's self out of sight, go where the fish are, have the proper bait, and be patient. One minister remarked after the sermon was over that he had enough preaching material to last him until Christmas, and another, who has probably heard Dr. Horton more often than most of us, volunteered that it was the best sermon he had ever heard him preach.

The service was concluded with the Communion conducted by Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein and the benediction by Rev. V. T. Crawford.

On Thursday morning at 9:30 the conference re-convened. Devotionals were conducted by Revs. C. C. Thomas and H. M. George. Dr. Jesse H. Dollar reported for the Committee on Stewardship. Laymen's work was reported upon by Hon. Mills Godwin. Rev. W. Millard Stevens made his report as president of the Southern Convention, which report is printed in this issue of THE SUN, and Mrs.

William T. Harrell made a most interesting report as president of the Eastern Virginia women.

Rev. Duane Vore reported for the Committee on Social Action, and his report was followed by an unusual and excellent address on "Alcohol and Christian Responsibility," by Rev. Wayne W. Womer of the Virginia Church Temperance Council. At the conclusion of his address, it was voted that the conference become affiliated with the council. Rev. Ellis Clark is the conference trustee.

Then followed the report on Supperannuation by J. T. Kernodl, that on the Christian Orphanage by Supt. J. G. Truitt, the Finance Committee by S. T. Holland, and the Nominating Committee by Dr. I. W. Johnson, when the present officers were reelected by unanimous vote.

Rev. H. G. Council pronounced the benediction.

After another excellent meal, the conference gathered at 1:30 for the final session. Revs. W. L. Wood and J. M. Roberts conducted the devotionals. President Mills E. Godwin reported for the Sunday schools, and President Jack Byrd for the Pilgrim Fellowship.

Dr. R. C. Helfenstein made the report on Religious Literature, followed by an address by Rev. Earl Farrell. Then followed miscellaneous business and the report on Resolutions.

Final adjournment followed the prayer and benediction by Rev. D. D. Nash. J. T. K.

SOME IMPRESSIONS.

much to my embarrassment, when they carried my baggage at the railway stations. I extend my grateful thanks to all of them for their kindness and service to me, and praise God for their humility and consecration to his service.

The church groups everywhere showed deep interest in Indian affairs, both political and ecclesiastical. They too seemed anxious to know more about the various missionary activities that are being carried on in India, and many had questions with regard to the future of the Christian church there.

I cannot help making mention of the Congregational Christian Church in Greensboro, N. C., and Dr. W. E. Wisseman, its minister, who made a donation of $3,000.00 to the American Board from the (Mrs.) Cora Anthony Trust Fund, the object of which was to enable foreign students to take up studies in the United States. A part of that donation, the American Board spent toward my travel between India and the United States, thus enabling me to take up my studies at the Chicago Theological Seminary in the year 1950-1951. I take this opportunity to express my gratitude to this church, Dr. Wesseman, and the American Board, for the gift and the privileges I am enjoying because of it.

As I close. I must say that my experiences with the American youth and church groups have been very educative, thrilling and uplifting. Not that I did not have any experiences to the contrary. There were few such, and I am not mentioning them at this stage. But as I recall only the good ones, I realize more than ever before that in Jesus Christ we can have and enjoy universal brotherhood of mankind and Christian fellowship, that in him there is no East or West, no differences of race and color and no distinction between the rich and the poor. We can love and serve whom we wish, and in turn give him all glory and honour through the Church which he redeemed through his precious blood.

THE RIGGS PLAN TO LEAVE CHINA.

and we will let you know directly as soon as we find out. So our hope is that we can re-establish friendly contact with some of you whom we have lost because of the circumstances here, and may do a better job of building bridges of friendship between you and the people of the Orient.

During the next two years our interest and letters will probably be full of new experiences of India. But I hope that we will not forget to keep thinking and talking and praying about China and the people and problems here; perhaps the bridges between Chinese and American friends can in one way be strengthened rather than weakened when we get out and can send and receive letters more frequently. The people here are very anxious that our leaving will not mean an abandoning or forgetting or a losing of the ties that count between us. I know that you all feel the same way.

Corlially yours,

The Missionary and Soil Conservation in Southern Rhodesia

By Frank T. Meacham, Chicore Mission, Southern Rhodesia

The work of the missionary of today is to endeavor to conserve those characteristics of African native life and customs which should not be lost and which can be integrated with Christianity and modern civilization. The rural missionary in Africa is confronted with the problem of the conservation of the natural resources of the country in which he lives, if the people with whom he is working are to develop a rural economy which will enable them to support their churches and to educate their children.

Chicore Station of the East Africa (Rhodesian) Mission of the American Board is situated on a farm of 18,000 acres. There are over 350 African families living on the farm. These families are allocated gardens of from 4 to 6 acres, depending on the size of the family. They may have up to 15 head of cattle and the same number of sheep. These farm tenants pay One Pound Sterling ($4.00) per year rent to the Mission, and this money is used to pay an African agricultural demonstrator, Bennie Dube, and his three assistants who supervise the agricultural work of the tenants. Each tenant signs an agreement before the native Commissioner of the District, saying that he will carry out the rotation of crops in his gardens making of compost manure, planting of trees, contour ridging and strip cropping to prevent soil erosion, and the protection of water supplies by no cultivating within 100 feet of streams and by fencing springs.

The African is by nature conservative and loth to deviate from the customary cultivation practices of his fathers, i. e., to cultivate a piece of land for a few years and then leave it and prepare a new garden by cutting down more trees. We are making progress, however, as may be seen on a trip over the farm. On every hand may be seen evidences of the carrying out of the improved farm practices.

Formerly the mealies (corn) were harvested in the field and the cattle allowed to graze and trample down the stalks. When the time came to plow for another crop the refuse was gathered into heaps and burned, which destroyed the humus which should have been returned to the soil. Now you will see that many of the African farmers have erected platforms near their cattle kraals and pile the mealie stalks there after harvesting, and feed them to the cattle so that the refuse is trampled down into compost manure.

The usual crop rotation scheme that is followed is: mealies on ground where manure has been applied; mealies on ground where manure was applied the year before; a legume (peanuts or beans), and millet. The following year the crops change from left to right and so on, so that in four years the whole garden has received an application of manure and has also grown a legume which gives nitrogen to the soil.

The next step is to introduce in the crop rotation scheme a legume crop which is to be plowed under as a green manure crop. It is difficult for the African to conceive of the usefulness of plowing under a crop which can be harvested for food.

It is for us patiently, by precept and example, to preach these gospels side by side—the gospel of Human Conservation and the gospel of Soil Conservation—that the African and Africa may be saved. These Gospels go hand in hand. One is of little use without the other.

CORNER STONE LAYING FOR NEW CHURCH BUILDING

Supt. W. T. Scott, Rev. M. V. Welch, Pastor, Mr. A. M. Moore, Contractor, and W. B. Allred

Palm Street Christian Church, Greensboro, North Carolina, was organized in 1905, with the following charter members: Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Simpson, Mr. C. A. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Ballard, Mr. E. A. Crawford, Miss Annie Rainey, Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Loman, Miss Lola Long, and Mr. James Long. A short while afterward, a building committee was appointed as follows: Rev. L. F. Johnson, chairman, H. S. Simpson, C. A. Taylor, S. H. Ballard and G. P. Stone; a lot was bought, and the first brick in the church was placed by Miss Margaret Simpson.

In July, 1915, two class rooms were added and the church auditorium was enlarged, and in August, 1929, the church was again remodeled, six Sunday school rooms being added. During 1939, the front door was moved so as to enter the belfrey.

In November, 1941, while Rev. M. A. Pollard was pastor, the church began a building fund, and the first dollar was given by Mrs. G. H. Hammer. On November 24, 1948, the house and lot adjoining the church property was bought and the house torn down and an educational building was begun. The building committee was composed of Rev. M. V. Welch, A. H. Hinshaw, P. R. Hall, Lois Brady and T. H. Hussey. On July 7, 1950, the church voted to accept the plans for the new church building. On Sunday, August 13, the last service was held in the old building. The educational building was nearly completed, and on Wednesday, August 16, prayer meeting services were held in the building with 65 present, and with the contractor, A. M. Moore, in charge. On the following Sunday, church services were held in this building.

The following pastors have served the church since it was founded: L. F. Johnson, E. M. Carter, W. L. Wells, W. C. Wicker, H. S. Smith, P. V. Harris, H. S. Hardcastle, J. W. Knight, G. C. Crutchfield, H. B. Hall, J. A. Ledbetter, M. T. Sorrell, J. L. Neese, B. J. Earp, C. E. Gerringer, M. A. Pollard, J. L. Neese, M. V. Welch.

DR. EDWIN C. GILLETTE PASSES AWAY. IN JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDIA.

Word came to me of the death of Dr. Edwin C. Gillette on Saturday, November 11th. Dr. Gillette was well known in the Southern Convention, being the Superintendent of the Southeast District of Congregational Christian Churches until his retirement 10 years ago. He attended several sessions of our Convention and was a trusted advisor in adjustments following the merger between the Christian and Congregational Churches.

It was my good fortune to succeed Dr. Gillette as Superintendent of the Southeast and of the Florida Conference, following a five year period as his associate. To have been his associate was one of the richest privileges of my life. He was one of the most kindly, gracious, Christian gentleman I ever knew. He did his work faithfully and efficiently, and he retired gracefully. In retirement I found him one of my most sympathetic counselors, and delightful companionship with him before and after his retirement brought to me a wonderful example of Christian grace. His understanding spirit and gracious manner made Dr. Gillette a much sought for counselor by those who knew him.

Following successful pastorates in Connecticut, Dr. Gillette went to Jacksonville, Florida, where he served as pastor of Union Congregational Church for 10 years. He then became Superintendent of the Florida Conference and then later Superintendent of the District of the Southeast, serving in these capacities for 17 years, until his retirement in 1940.

Dr. Gillette was a man of deep faith and peace. He has been in declining health for three years, and it is comforting to those of us who knew him intimately that in his 80th year he passed away in his sleep. May God give us grace to shed some of the light of this devoted life, lived in the faith and example of our Lord, Jesus Christ.

LAYMEN'S DAY OBSERVED IN BURLINGTON.

Laymen's Day was observed Sunday at First Church, Burlington. Eugene Gordon spoke on "The Laymen and Pastor Working Together," and William Struhs on "The Christian Layman and the Democratic State." "The Layman's Responsibility Towards Children and Youth" was discussed by Herman Truitt, and parts of the service were conducted by D. R. Fonville.

The Board of Deacons sponsored the service, and the following committees arranged details: Harold Sutton, Egbert Truitt, D. R. Fonville, and Rev. Henry E. Robinson.

In the former years a guest speaker has been invited to participate. The committee in charge of this year's service settled on the use of men from the local congregation.

O'KELLY FOUNDATION REPORTS PROGRESS.

The second meeting of the James O'Kelly Cemetery Foundation Trustees was held in the Congregational Christian Church, Durham, N. C., on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29, 1950. All members were present. C. E. Newman reported that a deed had been secured for the property of the James O'Kelly Cemetery in Chatham Co., N. C. made to The Southern Christian Convention and the same recorded in the office of Register of Deeds of Chatham Co.

Dr. S. C. Harrell reported that they were not able to secure a right-of-way to the cemetery, but there was prospect of getting the old road improved.

Miss Lillie Fowler was asked to catalogue the names of each person buried in the O'Kelly cemetery, so far as she should be able to do so.

The treasurer, S. H. Basnight reported $539.49 in the treasury. It was stated that on investigation that this was not half the amount needed to make the necessary improvements. The Executive Committee of the S. C. C. in session in Suffolk on the 24th authorized the campaign for money be continued until there was a sufficient amount in hand to rebuild the rock road and make other needed improvements.

To date nearly fifty organizations and individuals have sent in contributions from one to forty dollars. The instructions of the Executive Committee will be carried out. The campaign will be continued in the same quiet manner by S. H. Basnight and the writer, hoping that by January 1st, 1951 there will be a sufficient amount in the treasury to assure the completion of the work when it is begun in the spring of 1951.

We hope that one organization from each church, that has not sent in a contribution, will do so at earliest convenience. Send money to S. H. Basnight, Treasurer, Chapel Hill, N. C. and you will be promptly receipted.

An influential brother in the church sent in one of the most liberal contributions received with this remark: "It is a shame that the church has neglected this duty for so long."

C. E. NEWMAN,
Sec'y, Board of Trustees.

PIONEER ON AUTHORITY FAMILY RELATIONS TO RETIRE.

Dr. Leland Foster Wood, for 18 years secretary of the Commission on Marriage and the Home of the Federal Council of Churches, will retire at the end of 1950.

As secretary of the Council's commission, Dr. Wood has lectured on family life in all parts of the United States, and has published several well received books, including Harmony in Marriage, of which many ministers give a copy to the couples they marry.

The Commission has presented Dr. Wood a gift and adopted resolutions on behalf of the Federal Council in appreciation of his services, which read, in part:

"Leland Foster Wood has the qualities of mind and heart that assure leadership. . . . Out of his vital contacts with youth and as a man of vision, he saw the lack of character education and the need for sex education for adequate preparation of American boys and girls for courtship, marriage, parenthood, and for marital counseling. . . . Unpopular and often under attack as his work was bound to be in the early years, Dr. Wood's courage, courtesy and Christian co-operation brought remarkable results.

"As a lecturer and speaker he was effective, for in his public addresses to all types of groups and meetings he had a dignified frankness in presenting the facts of reproductive life, along with deep insights into their cosmic significance and spiritual sanctity.

" . . . To the members of the Commission he endeared himself. He expected and desired help and inspiration from each and every one.

" . . . Dr. Wood's years of service will stand the test of time, because he has furthered the Christian family life of the United States of America, on which foundation only does a nation endure.

"The Executive Committee joins with the Commission on Marriage and the Home in expressing its gratitude to Dr. and Mrs. Wood, and prays God's richest blessings upon them both as they enter upon new responsibilities and new duties in the near future."

COMMITTEE WILL EXPLORE CHRISTIAN UNITY.

An important "Committee on Free Church Polity and Unity" has just recently been appointed by the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches to study the whole question of the ways in which the free autonomous churches, with 18,000,000 constituents in the United States, can enter into the movement for church union in America which is part of the world-wide ecumenical movement.

This "Committee on Free Church Polity and Unity" implements a resolution adopted at the last biennial meeting of the General Council, meeting at Cleveland, Ohio, in June of this year. This resolution authorizes the appointment of a special committee "representing all points of view to make a careful study of the principles and polity of Congregationalism . . . with particular reference to the spiritual and legal methods for the participation of the free autonomous fellowships in the ecumenical movement."

The committee was chosen, as far as possible, to represent a diversity of opinions, vocations and geographical areas.

TRACT SOCIETY ANNOUNCES BIBLE-READING SCHEDULE.

"Through the Bible in a Year," a new tract just issued by the American Tract Society, 121 W. 46th St., New York City, suggests a chronological series of Scripture readings which, if followed, will take the reader through the entire Bible in a twelve-month period. The folder also gives an alternate plan whereby one selected chapter is read each day. A companion new tract is "God's Miracle Book," dealing with the inspiration of the Scriptures.

Of special interest to users of tracts is the society's folder on "Tracts and How to Use Them," giving suggestions on the most effective ways of carrying on leaflet evangelism.

Other new A T S tracts include "Welcome to Our Sunday School," designed to promote Sunday school attendance; "God's Country," a way of salvation tract dealing with heaven, and "The Glory of Old Age," an excellent folder for the aged.

4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

LEIS TO THE LAYMEN OF EASTERN VIRGINIA.

Verbal if not floral leis are due the laymen of Eastern Virginia. During the Laymen's Fellowship meeting in Franklin, November 5, the needs of The Sun were presented by President Mills E. Godwin, Jr., and Mr. Shirley Holland, secretary of the Board of Publication. Mr. Godwin reports $123.00 in cash and subscriptions secured for a total of 52 years. He writes: "We were well pleased with this result. While the number of subscriptions being sent in may not appear too large, I think the appeal we made for The Sun will be widely felt throughout the Conference. When a call for a show of hands of those present, which numbered 254, was asked for as to whether they or any member of their household subscribed to the paper, well over 60% of those in attendance held up their hands."

It is gratifying to realize that our laymen as well as our lay women have been organized throughout the conferences. Since "The Sun" has served all the agencies and institutions of the Church for more than a century, it is fitting that the Laymen's Fellowship of Eastern Virginia should give their church paper a hearty boost. And it may be that the laymen in other conferences will follow their fine example.

ADVANCE IN WESTERN CAROLINA.

The Western Carolina Conference met last week at Pleasant Grove Church, Bennett, N. C. President F. C. Lester and his assistants prepared a streamlined program which evidenced freshness and originality. The carefully mimeographed and neatly bound reports indicated that considerable preparation had been made for the Conference, not only by the President but by the Committees.

The first day was spent considering "Our Mid-Century Advance," with specific reference to our institutions and to the local church. Pastors and delegates discussed the implications of this theme for the local congregation. Some of the essential points emphasized were: Seek God's presence through prayer, Get more churches on a full-time schedule, Utilize available aids in Christian education in general and stewardship education in particular, wider use of denominational literature, amplify salaries for pastors, cultivate wider knowledge and appreciation of our denomination, and reach the unreached.

Is this the meaning of the Advance for your Conference, your Church? What would you add?

The editor was pleased to visit the Conference and meet many "Sun" subscribers. He suggested that the Advance could be realized by greatly enlarging the subscription list and by using the denominational publication as a more effective publicity medium. Members of the Conference were urged to report important news such as anniversaries, change of pastors, building programs, stewardship institutes, successful programs of evangelism, and other indications of growth and progress in the Church. Ministers and lay workers were invited to become more frequent contributors to their Church paper.

Although there are no very large churches in the Conference, there are healthy indications of expansion. The report of the Committee on Home Missions which appears in this issue reflects the upward trend.

The spirit of the Conference was good and the representation from the churches above average. We continue to look to the Western Conference for excellent demonstrations of churchmanship.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS GAIN.

For the first time in several years the rate of increase in Sunday school enrollment during 1947-49 surpasser the rate of increase of both church membership and of general population, says Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education.

During this period Sunday school enrollment increased 7.03 per cent. During the same time, church membership gained 5.8 per cent, according to figures compiled by Christian Herald. The United States population increased approximately 3.6 per cent, according to estimates of the U. S. Bureau of Census.

Dr. Ross released a report by the I. C. R. E. Department of Educational Program and Research in which the latest religious education statistics of 241 religious bodies—including Eastern Orthodox, Roman Catholic, Jewish, Protestant, and other religious groups—were tabulated.

"Sunday school enrollment grew rapidly from 1900 to about 1930," stated Dr. Ross. "Then during the thirties there came a slump. Enrollment slowed down, and some of the churches actually showed a loss. However, beginning in 1947 there were real signs of new advance. This report for 1947-49 confirms this upward trend.

"All persons concerned for the moral and religious welfare of the American people give thanks. They will redouble their efforts so that additional millions of children, youth and adults will receive religious instruction."

Total number of Sunday schools in the United States in 1949 was 243,454 with a total enrollment of 28,893,789, according to the most reliable figures furnished by the 241 denominational offices. The total enrollment is made up of 26,438,849 pupils and 2,454,940 officers and teachers.

Previous figures for 1947-48, released last year, showed a total of 232,672 Sunday schools, 2,406,505 officers and teachers, and 24,588,112 pupils of all faiths. There are 638,145 pupils enrolled in Congregational Christian Sunday schools.

Timothy Chang's Summer Experiences

Dear Friends:

I got to tell you something now. You see:

"Hello, Timothy, where have you been?" "Hello there, I have not seen you a long time, Timothy." "Timothy, I thought you were gone back to China this past summer. Did you?" "You had a nice summer, Timothy?" . . .

Many questions I have been asked during these three weeks. Yes, I should tell you where I have been and what I did this past summer; but I haven't told you because my new busy start in Seminary has kept me from doing it, and now I got to tell you.

Yes, my friend I am still here. I would tell you if I went back to China, and I can't forget that. Well, what did I do? Simply, I was a quarter of missionary from the Southern Convention (I was not good as a whole missionary, so I say a quarter) if Dr. Scott let me say this way.

Though the Mission Council of American Board and Speaker's Bureau, I had my assignment to attend our churches' young people's camps and conferences in different states.

I left Duke campus in the end of May, and started out my journey from Elon College. The School of Missions. I had an enjoyable time being with Southern Convention ladies. I learned a lot of things from the programs and their conventions. After that three big days meeting, I went to Eastern Virginia camp with Miss Coghill and three other girls. The camp was held at Y. M. C. A. camp—Bayside, near Norfolk. It was very nice for the Summer camp especially the lovely salt water for swimming. I am sure you have heard about that camp through some reports and really it was successfully done. The last day of the camp. Many girls sobbed: "Let us stay here one more week." "I don't want to go back." "I want to come back next summer." How nice that camp was you can imagine.

I have four days free after Eastern Virginia camp and I spent in New York City. It was my first time being to New York. I have met several young boys and girls as they were going to Europe as work campers. For most of them it was their first visit to New York also. Therefore we had a great time with them there.

The next camp was Medusa Conference, near Albany, N. Y. It was a small village but they held the conference there every year, about twenty years now. The interesting thing was that beside the water as we have here we had other choices of water for drink—the water contains sulphur or iron mineral water. The friendship circle every evening impressed me very much. Few students have been attending that conference for seven years continually. I appreciated that they gave me an honorable certificate of membership of Pilgrim Fellowship for remembrance of that conference.

From there I went up north to Watertown N. Y. The conference was held at the beautiful spot of St. Lawrence River, on the border line with Canada. We had a boat trip about five hours to visit Canada. Thousand Island and Alexandria Bay. It was lovely. The pictures are still in my mind twinkling once awhile. The emphasis of Vesper services facing the falling sun helped the young people to realize the work of God.

Then the Valley Virginia, our Southern Convention young people's conference was the next. It was a nice place to have camp there. Nice people, nice food, nice labelled trees and the place for natural study—plenty of deer, rabbits, turtles, etc., helped young people to learn much more than in the middle of town. Especially it was an ideal place for spiritual retreat.

I have another four days break after this camp and I spent that in New York City again because it was on the way to another camp in New Hampshire. The locomotives in me through Portsmouth, N. H. After few hours I left shore to get on the Isle of Shoals—an island ten miles off the coast. It was nice place for meditation because the ocean view shows the love, beauty power and strength of God. The atmosphere was entirely different from main land, so everyone enjoyed it. Candle light service was successfully done every evening and it was the climax for every day.

After the camp I had eighteen days stay with Mr. and Mrs. Stores, the former missionary to Shaowu. I had a nice rest here ready for another round from Chicago. Then the National Student Fellowship Assembly at Elmhurst for a week.

After another two conferences held on the side of Lake Michigan, I spent a week with my brother, Silas at E. Lansing. It meant a lot for me.

This past Summer, only four months I have learned much more than if I have stayed in Summer school. I also appreciate very much the arrangement for me made by Mrs. Medlicott, the secretary of Mission Councils and Dr. W. T. Scott of Southern Convention.

In conclusion I would like to tell you that my young sister who has been sick in the hospital and on whom you had sympathy, is back after a year's absence in Fukien Christian University for continuing her junior year this semester.

CONGREGATIONALIST IS NEW EDITOR FOR INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL.

Dr. Virgil E. Foster of Grinnell, Iowa, has been named editor of the International Journal of Religious Education, according to Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education.

He began his new work this month.

The International Journal has been the Number One Protestant publication in the field of Christian education since 1924. It serves tens of thousands of church leaders in many denominations.

Since 1946 Dr. Foster has been director of religious education for the Congregational Christian Conference of Iowa.

"Since Dr. Percy Hayward became in February the editor emeritus of the Journal, we have been looking earnestly for a person who would give promise of carrying on the distinguished work of Dr. Hayward, and who would make the Journal even more useful in the future," Dr. Ross stated.

"We are sure that Dr. Foster is that person. He has an intimate knowledge of the local church program of Christian education, for he directed with competence the educational work of three great churches: Bryn Mawr Community Church of Chicago from 1926 to 1936; the Pilgrim Congregational Church of St. Louis from 1936 to 1942; and the Second Church of Newton, Massachusetts, from 1943 to 1946."

He has also had teaching experience at Andover Newton Seminary.

"With this new appointment, we look forward with confidence, believing that new chapters of usefulness for the Journal will be written," Dr. Ross concluded.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is pleased to felicitate the International Journal under its new and distinguished editorship.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

EDUCATION FOR WHAT?

In recent years the government of the United States and all educational forces have become very much concerned about the number of young people of college age who have not had the advantages even of a public-school education. This concern is actuated largely by the fact that these uneducated citizens are not prepared to answer the call of their country in the time of conflict. Perhaps if these authorities had been aroused before the emergency, the emergency itself might have been averted. We do need a more inclusive system of education. Every citizen should be capable of rendering his greatest possible service to his country and to civilization as a whole. This is impossible without the discovery and development of the talents and abilities that have been given him. This does not mean that any kind of education is profitable to every individual. Indeed, there are certain types of education that are detrimental and make the individual a dangerous rather than a productive citizen.

At Elon College there should be no question about the kind and type of education given. Elon College was founded to afford ambitious young people an opportunity for education at college level under moral and religious influences. It was founded for the purpose of affording Christian education to all who would come. Buildings, a curriculum, and a faculty do not necessarily constitute a program of Christian education. The final result depends upon individual professors. Recently I was in company with a fine group of college representatives. We were discussing the merits of Christian education as compared with mere education. A high official of the church remarked, "I know something about mathematics, but I know nothing about Christian mathematics or Christian physics. You may, but I do not." In response I wanted to say, "I know nothing about a Christian gun. A gun is a gun so far as I am concerned, but a gun in the hands of a Christian is a vastly different thing to a gun in the hands of a highwayman." Consequently I should say that mathematics, physics, chemistry, or any science, is a vastly different thing in the hands of a Christian professor than either or all would be in the hands of an atheist. Buildings, equipment, faculties, may mean education, but they may not mean Christian education. The professor makes the difference. I contend that no institution is a Christian institution unless that institution has a Christian faculty—a faculty fully, adequately equipped from the standpoint of training and experience—a faculty that fears God and keeps his commandments.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The total amount reported this week is $708.57. The total reported last week was $10,146.37, making a total of $10,854.94 received from the Sunday schools and churches of the Convention on the total apportionment for the college of $15,000. The reader will observe that we are far, far from the total. Last year the amount received was $12,600. Interested individuals are made to wonder if the total amount contributed this year will reach that of last year. We all are reminded again and again of the greatly increased cost of everything this year as compared with last. We should be reminded of the decrease in amounts for the college received from other sources. These facts should impel our Sunday schools and churches to see that their full apportionments are raised and forwarded before the end of this calendar year. You still have an opportunity to give the college its deserved and necessary support.

ELON STUDENT CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION ACTIVE.

The Student Christian Association of Elon College, operating this year under the sponsorship and guidance of Rev. Howard P. Bozarth, minister of the Elon College Community Church, has been transformed for the 1950-51 session into one of the liveliest and most active groups on the campus.

The past several weeks have seen the SCA in a process of organization, which began with the "retreat" meeting at Quaker Lake Camp on September 22, and 23. This "retreat" followed a meeting of outstanding student leaders with Charles W. Whitworth, secretary for the Southern Area Regional Council of the National Student Christian Association, which is a functional part of the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A.

At that time, tentative plans for the year were drawn, and those attending the "retreat" served as a temporary cabinet, with Eugene Johnson as chairman until permanent officers could be named. That temporary cabinet laid the foundation for the year's program, and set a final organizational meeting on Sunday, October 8.

Following that gathering, an election was held, which resulted in the choice of Joe T. Stephens of Roanoke, Virginia, president; Bill Hopkins of Hampton, Virginia, vice-president; Charles Johnson of Suffolk, Virginia, treasurer; and Betty Long of Elon College, secretary.

The SCA is set up this year with three departments, called commissions, to channel the work of the organization on the Elon Campus. William Tolley heads the Commission on Christian Faith and Heritage, Emma Jean Clayton leads the Commission on Campus Affairs and Personal Relations, and Henry Hoppe heads the Commission on Social Relations.

The program for the months ahead has been outlined, with the religious activities group being responsible mainly for Sunday evening services, to be known as the Elon Student Fellowship.

As soon as practicable, these meetings will be held in the Student Union, but they have been held so far in the Society Hall at 7:15 each Sunday evening. The final Sunday of each month will be entirely social, with a supper at 5:30 o'clock.

These meetings feature a student-lead devotional and a song service, followed by a business session and a speaker or movie. Dean D. J. Bowden was the first speaker on Sunday, October 15, taking as his subject, "The Elon College I Dream About." Alumni Secretary James F. Darden spoke on the same subject at a recent Sunday evening meeting.

A special committee from the three commissions will plan the programs, with occasional week-night gatherings in cooperation with the IRC or similar groups.

The Commission on Campus Affairs and Personal Relations, led by Emma Jean Clayton, has been especially active, promoting the pep rallies, and it was also responsible for the beautiful decorations in Alumni Memorial Gym for the Home Coming program.

Membership in the SCA is open to all students, and Ned Jones is in charge of the membership solicitation. Those joining are asked to sign a pledge, which embodies the statement that the SCA "is a fellowship of students and faculty members who are seeking to unite the student body of our college in a program of Christian service." The membership card entitles the holder to transient privileges at all Y. M. C. A.'s and Y. W. C. A.'s.

LOCAL STUDENT IS AMONG ELON GROUP NAMED "WHO'S WHO."

William Kivett, of Burlington is one of 14 Elon College student leaders chosen for a place in the new 1951 edition of "Who's Who in American Colleges," according to an announcement issued from the headquarters of collegiate "Who's Who" in Tuscaloosa, Ala. Kivett, a member of the senior class, is treasurer of the Elon College student government.

Other Elon students honored with "Who's Who" selection, listed in alphabetical order are Sara Foster Dodson, of Greensboro; Joe Erickson, of Bay Shore, Long Island, N. Y.; Arthur Fowler, of Erwin; Billy Hopkins, of Hampton, Va.; Pete Marshburn, of Greensboro; Billy Mittelstadt, of Reidsville; Jeanne Pittman, of Smithfield, Va.; Laverne Russell, of Charleston, S. C.; William Tolley, of Lynchburg, Va.; Worth Womble, of Norfolk, Va.; and Robert Wright, of Springfield, Mass.

A brief glance at their major activities reveals that each of the 14 students has played a leading part in some phase of campus life at Elon. Sara Foster Dodson, a member of the Honor Council last year, has been a leader in religious work; Erickson and Marshburn are co-captains of the Elon football squad; Fowler was president of the student body last year and president of the senior class this year; Hopkins has been outstanding in intramural sports and class activities; Kivett is treasurer of the student government; and Mittelstadt is a varsity debator and outstanding student.

Parker won his honors for his outstanding work in dramatics; Jeanne Pittman is a varsity cheerleader of women's athletics; Laverne Russell is a member of the Honor Council; Sahlman has been outstanding in music; Tolley is editor-in-chief of the college annual; Womble is an intramural leader and chairman of the Student Entertainment Committee; and Wright, a former editor of the student newspaper, is now president of the student body.

ELON CHOIR IS PLANNING RADIO WORK.

The series of weekly radio appearances of the Elon College Choir will be resumed in the near future, according to plans made public last week, and work has already been started to make possible the broadcasts by transcription over a number of stations.

The Elon musical programs, which will once more be offered on Sunday, will be carried this year over Station WFNS in Burlington, rather than over WBBB, which has carried the broadcasts in previous years.

The choir started experimentation about two weeks ago with a recording set-up, which will enable the group to record several programs at one sitting, with the series to be spread out over several week-ends. This will relieve the choir members from the necessity of being on the campus each and every Sunday afternoon.

Transcription of the programs in advance will also make it possible for the choir to be heard over additional stations, and plans are virtually complete for the singers to be carried over stations in the home towns of individual members. The station in Mason City, Iowa, home of John Vance, will carry the programs, and 1950 CHRISTMAS SEAL SALE.

Thousands of Church members are due to receive letters bearing packages of the Christmas Seals sold each year to finance the control of tuberculosis, through local, State and national Tuberculosis Associations. The appeal to buy the seals is voiced by a large army of volunteer workers who work through their associations to help prevent and control tuberculosis on a year-round basis.

Help Fight TB

Buy Christmas Seals

They are confident that in 1950, as in every year since 1907, the recipients are going to respond generously and promptly with thousands of moderately-sized contributions, to continue the needed efforts to prevent and control tuberculosis.

Of the money received from the Christmas Seal sales, 94 per cent is retained by the city, county and state organizations for their local and direct activities. Only 6 per cent of the total received goes to the National Tuberculosis Association for its research and operations.

The sponsors of the Seal Sale campaign like to point out that tuberculosis is a disease which can be cured in almost all cases, and which can be prevented. Also, they say, the national death rate from tuberculosis has been cut by 85 per cent in the last 45 years. Yet we still have more than 40,000 deaths a year from it, and it causes more deaths than any other single infectious disease. And it kills more people between the ages of 15 and 34 than any other disease.

In the State of Virginia, as an example, there were 975 deaths from all forms of tuberculosis in 1949. Of these, 472 were whites and 503 were Negroes. In Richmond City alone, 107 persons died from all form of tuberculosis last year, of whom 48 were white and 59 Negro.

In the local and State tuberculosis control activities, emphasis is placed on prevention, through many forms of health education and through programs of early diagnosis. These are accomplished in co-operation with the governmental health authorities. In Richmond, a pioneer effort was carried on in the form of a multi-test screening of the public on a volunteer basis, in which tests were given for seven major diseases. The local Tuberculosis Association bore half the

RETIRED MISSIONARY HONORED.

The Chicago Alumni Association of Iowa State College has conferred on Miss Sarah M. Field of Burlington, Iowa, for twenty-eight years a Congregational Christian educator in Japan under the American Board, the alumnae merit award "in recognition of preeminent service in advancing human welfare."

Miss Field first went to Japan in 1917 and taught Home Economics at Kobe College. For one year, 1918-19, she served with the American Red Cross in Vladivostok, Russia. Returning to the U. S. A. in 1941, she spent two years working for the Japanese in Utah. In 1946 she went back to Japan for two more years service before retirement last September.

Miss Field holds both a B. Sc. and a M. Sc. degree from Iowa State College. When she was writing one of her theses she became interested in seaweed as a food because of the amount of iodine in it. On a subsequent furlough in America she spoke frequently over the air and before classes and seminars in schools and colleges on the relationship of seaweed to goiter.

For her research work along this line she was honored by membership in Sigma Delta Epsilon for Graduate Women in Science.

MIDCENTURY ADVANCE IN FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Present world conditions make foreign missions difficult and exciting. Most of our missionaries have left or will soon leave China where we have done an important service since 1830. The Philippine Islands are in the midst of upheaval. India is just assuming responsibility for its own government and is becoming conscious of its own nationality. So with other parts of the world in which we have sought to establish the Christian Church.

This may be the time for the Church to really move forward in its missionary program. People everywhere are trying to discover new life, new ways of doing things. This will give the Church an opportunity to present Christian ideals.

Your committee would suggest two ways in which we of the Western, N. C. Conference may advance:

1. In Education. We need to know what is happening in our mission fields. Why are our missionaries leaving China? What will be left to represent our years of service there? What are the problems we face in West Africa, South and East Africa? How can we keep contact with Christians in Czechoslovakia and Spain? What is the American Board doing at this time and what are its plans for the future? Why are missionaries returning home in larger numbers than they are going out to the fields? These are questions that need to be answered in the minds of all our church members. This calls for a forward movement in missionary education.

2. Increased Giving. A year ago the American Board reported a deficit of $110,000. During that year eleven of our thirty-eight churches gave nothing to our foreign missionary enterprise. The remaining twenty-seven gave $1,324. The churches reported 4,128 church members and 3,202 Sunday schools members. This means that approximately 5,000 people were available to give for foreign missions and that on the average they contributed 25c per year, or 1/2 of 1c per week. These figures indicate that in our Conference we need to move forward in contributing for the world-wide program of our Church.

Your committee suggests that during the coming year we seek to have missionaries speak in our churches; get our people to reading THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Missionary Herald; and reading missionary pamphlets and books. We further suggest that each church plan for larger giving to the foreign missionary enterprise.

HOME MISSIONS—W. N. C.

Your committee met on July 18 to make plans for the work. During this period of work it was decided to hold a joint meeting with the C. M. A. Executive Committee. Such a meeting was held on August 29 at Pleasant Ridge Church. Through the discussion of the joint committee plans were arranged for the joint committee of seven to visit the churches of the Western North Carolina Conference and get the value of the C. M. A. work before the people. This was done with some response to the great need of our home mission work, but not what your committee had hoped to see.

Although we wish to commend each church that has responded to the call of this great need, we also wish to commend the following churches for improvements they have made:

Pleasant Ridge Church for the splendid work it has done this year in clearing its parsonage and garage of its indebtedness, and in making plans to build some new Sunday school rooms.

Needham's Grove Church for the Sunday school plant which they are building, which consists of five rooms and a room to house a heating plant.

Hank's Chapel for their parsonage which is almost completed, ready for a fulltime pastor.

Pleasant Grove for renovating its interior and looking toward the building of a new church building.

Pleasant Cross for the steps it has taken in setting up a building fund, looking forward toward building a Sunday school plant.

Smithwood for purchasing a lot for their parsonage, looking forward toward building soon.

Liberty for planning to build a parsonage.

Pleasant Hill for beautifying its interior by placing carpet on the entire church floor.

Seagrove for the splendid work it has done this year in clearing its parsonage of its indebtedness and voting not to ask aid from the mission board on pastor's salary.

There are some churches which we have not heard from which perhaps have made improvements; if so we wish to commend you, also.

In our survey we find a large field of service to be rendered in the way of building new churches and improvement of existing churches. Siler City, for instance, has no Congregational Christian Church, but has members of the Congregational Christian denomination living in that city.

Therefore we, your committee, recommend the following:

1. That pastors and delegates of this Conference go back to their local churches with a desire in their hearts to arouse the members of their church to support the home mission cause.
2. That pastors and laymen become interested in building up a sus-

OUR WORTHY THANK OFFERING PROJECT.

It seems good and appropriate that our women of the Southern Christian Convention have chosen this year for their Thank Offering Project the renovating and redcorating of the Whitley Memorial Auditorium at Elon College. Each year at our Thanksgiving season some worth while and important project is selected on which we women may concentrate and give generous gifts as an expression by our love and gratitude for the many blessings we have received.

It has been the practice and custom to alternate our Thank Offering gifts, one year to a Foreign Mission need and another year to some worthy Home Mission Work. Last year our offering went for the improvement of a school in China, the Han Mei School in Shaowu. The year our loyal women desire to express to our own college through Thank Offering gifts appreciation for what the college means to our church.

Elon College was founded by the church for the church and the college has been such an important power in the history of our church. We are proud of its history and heritage. Through the years it has influenced many lives in so many ways. From Elon College comes a great number of our ministers, our Christian leaders and young people who have there acquired important training in Christian Education. The college this year is donating around $4,000 in scholarships for ministerial students and full time Christian workers.

May we feel this is one of our most important Thank Offering project ever undertaken. The whole gospel is missionary and the whole church is missionary whether the work be done in America or China. When our women and loyal friends of the college attend the school of missions and other meetings of importance which are held in the New beautiful Whitley Auditorium they will view with pride and satisfaction the good work they did through their glamerous Thank Offering gifts in 1950.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

ANTIOCH REPORTS.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Antioch Christian Church in the Eastern Virginia Conference has enjoyed a very successful year under the leadership of its president, Mrs. Dana B. Saunders. While the membership is small, the members are very interested and loyal.

The society meets each month, and we have a well prepared program from the plan book. Mrs. W. C. Wilkins was our Spiritual Life leader last year, and she always had a lovely worship service.

We held a Thank Offering service with a very inspiring program with a liberal offering. We met with the Windsor and Mt. Carmel societies at Windsor Church to observe the World Day of Prayer. Several of the members went to the Isle of Wight Christian Church to hear Mrs. W. T. Harrell review the home book. Our society was very fortunate to have one of its own members review the foreign book. We were very glad to have four members from the Windsor Church at this review.

The society packed a friendly service box and sent it to the migrants. During National Family Week, we observed a family night supper. After the supper, a fellowship hour was enjoyed by all, with a talk on "The Home" by our pastor Rev. Ellis Clark. The group then sang gospel hymns.

Our society purchased life memberships for its two oldest members. We had funds to meet our apportionment and to go over and above last year. We feel very thankful to God, knowing that it was through him that we were able to achieve these things. We now look forward to a more consecrated new year.

SOCIAL GOALS.

Hungry men are more aware of their stomachs than of God. Treated with injustice and contempt because of the color of their skins, many find it difficult to believe that we all have one Father. Children who have brutal, drunken fathers may even rebel against God portrayed as a Father. Millions who are victims of the sins of others have the tie of suffering to bind them to Christ; but, without the conviction their stripes heal someone, God is frequently lost in their suffering.

Jesus saw the necessity of frontal attacks on social as well as on personal evil. His thought dealt with such practical concerns of the Kingdom of God as hunger, shelter, clothing, prisons, money, labor relations, fear, race, justice, disease of body and mind. His goal in these matters was clear and positive: "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." He cautioned us that we should find him in stern judgment or loving comradeship in accordance with our daily ministry to him "in haunts of wretchedness and need, on shadowed thresholds dark with fears."

O thou, who art the giver of all great and perfect gifts, teach us to pray not only in our inner chamber, but in all our ministry to social need.

—Vere V. Loper.

There is too much feather-bed living in this world. There are too many hunting for soft jobs, soft seats, soft problems, and an all-around soft existence. Life is best when it is the most difficult. Then it is that a man is put to his metal, tried in the fire and all the alloy in his makeup burned up, so that he stands before the world in his completeness as a man. Then let everybody say what they will.—George Matthew Arnold.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Dear Boys and Girls:

No one has ever quite decided whether this page is to be devoted entirely to children or partly to children and partly to grown-ups! Then too, children may mean from 4 to 40 or older. So thus it goes a weekly problem. I try to arrange the page for all ages and from time to time concentrate on little folks and then juniors and so forth.

There have been numerous requests for the material for missionary study (all requests from grown-ups) and here it is. You may enjoy seeing about the books too.

Themes: "The Near East,"
"A Christian Community."

Home Study for Grades 4, 5, 6:

"The Busy Berrys" by Frances D. Heron, $1.00; Teacher's Guide, 35c.

Home Study for Grades 1, 2, 3:

"The Three Henrys and Mrs. Hornicle" by Edith J. Agnew, $1.00; Teacher's Guide, 35c; A picture map of the United States may be purchased for 75c.

Foreign Study for Grades 4, 5, 6:

"They Live in Bible Lands" by Grace McCavran, $1.00; Teacher's Guide, 35c.

Foreign Study for Grades 1, 2, 3:

"The Thirsty Village" by Dorothy Blatter, $1.00; Teacher's Guide, 35c; Picture Maps at 60c and 75c—"Bible Lands Today," "Bible in Many Lands."

These and other materials may be ordered from Pilgrim Press, or Friendship Press, N. Y.

The mission studies are arranged for every year by an interdenominational board—that means all of the churches. The books are written by people well acquainted with the countries and the people. The books are interesting and are nice to have for yourself. Cloth bound copies cost $1.75.

If you do not have a junior missionary society you may ask your teacher to help you plan for mission study in Sunday School. Even 5 year olds can enjoy mission studies.

Maybe the reason that older people are quiet is because they've got a lot more to be quiet about.

TO MAKE A FRIEND BE A FRIEND.

By ANNIE L. GAETZ.

I was calling on Mrs. Sloan, a new resident of our neighborhood, when her seven-year-old son came in from the street sobbing, "Mother, Mother, the boys are picking on me."

"Come here, dear," comforted his mother. Then turning to me, she said, "I don't know why all the children have to tease Jerry so much. One reason for our moving to this part of town was that the children where we lived before were so unkind to our boy. I just couldn't stand it. I was told that the children on this street were well-behaved, but I see they are just as bad as the others. I'm beginning to wonder if there are any good children any more."

After drying Jerry's tears and giving him a gentle pat together with a piece of candy, his mother again sent him out to play.

I was surprised to hear Mrs. Sloan say that these were unfriendly children. I taught most of them in Sunday school and considered them rather superior in conduct. As the window was open, I suggested that we listen and try to find out what the trouble was.

Jerry approached the little group with a belligerent air and shouted, "I told my mother about you and she said you were bad boys; so there!"

"Tattletale, tattletale," shouted one small boy, and the others took up the refrain, "tattletale, tattletale."

Once more Jerry came running in with complaints: "Mother, they're mean to me; they called me names."

"Never mind, dear," she answered. "I don't want you to play with those bad boys anyway. Here's a plate of cookies. You take them upstairs and play with your train."

"But I want someone to play with, and no one will play with me. They're all so mean to me," wailed Jerry as he went on his way.

When he was safely closeted in his room, the mother turned to me with a worried face. "I'm afraid," she said with a sigh, "we shall have to move again. What would you do, Mrs. Highet?"

"Well," I replied, "I would set to work helping Jerry to have friends in this neighborhood. It is very important that he should make the right start; as yet he has not learned how to do this. He may need careful advice from you. He must learn to take his knocks with a smile and not to run to you every time he feels aggrieved. He needs to be shown that you can't always be with him to help him over his difficulties; he must learn to straighten them out by himself."

"But how would I do that—help him to make friends?" asked his mother. "I'm sure I do everything I can for Jerry."

"You see," I remarked, "those children are playing together very agreeably, and I think you will find that their friendship is worth cultivating. You've just made a big batch of cookies. Let me call up the mothers of those children—there are only three families represented there—and I'll introduce you to them over the telephone. You can say Jerry would like to share some cookies you have just made with the other boys and inquire if her boy or boys are allowed to eat at this time. I'm sure mothers will all be willing; and they will appreciate your having consulted them. After Jerry has gained an entrance to the boys' good fellowship with the cookies, I would suggest that he ask them to play ball in his yard. I see he has a lovely ball."

Mrs. Sloan looked doubtful "Won't that look like trying to buy their good will?" she asked.

"No," I replied. "This would only be a friendly gesture, the first of many to follow. Jerry has made a bad start with the children, and you must help him to counteract the impression he has made. Neither children nor adults can be happy without friends, but in order to attract friends we must be friendly. When Jerry comes running to you with his troubles, I wouldn't take him too seriously. But," I added, smiling, "I didn't come here to preach a sermon. I came to make a brief call to welcome you to our neighborhood. I'm sure you will be happy here, for the people are most friendly."

"You've given me something to think about," said Mrs. Sloan. "If those children can get along with each other, there is no reason why they can't get along with Jerry. I see now that I have not been doing Jerry any good by always considering him the injured party. I'll be glad to accept your suggestions regarding the cookies, and together I think Jerry and I will work this out. We shall both be so happy if he learns to make friends."—National Kindergarten Association.

MISS ANN TRUITT, Associate

ADVANCING RETREAT.

The SCA (Student Christian Association) at Elon College is showing considerable life this year. November 3-4 found this group at Quaker Lake, enjoying a two-day retreat. Here they planned for a vigorous go-forward program on the Elon Campus for the coming year. Charles W. Whitworth, associate regional director, SCA, was guest for the week-end.

The Rev. Mr. Bozarth, pastor of the Elon Community Church, spoke, outlining the purpose of the whole workshop. He stated the need of more complete organization in the SCA, with active committees performing the separate functions which have been left largely, until now, to be done by a few, like the president, treasurer, and chairman of the separate commissions, and by Mr. Bozarth from his office. He stressed the need that students become responsible for all the work needing to be done, and develop a sense of responsibility for their departments, so they will operate on their own power and initiative.

To facilitate this, all attending the Workshop were asked to fill in the permanent Record Chart, which all members will fill in and sign. This will be kept on file. This chart provides needful information about each member, including his interest, the kind of work he prefers to do in SCA, the Commission he prefers to work in, and the National and Elon College Statement of Purpose.

On November 17, the Elon Campus will see evidence of this new life in the SCA. That day has been proclaimed by McGurgle, Mayor of Dogpatch, as Sadie Hawkins Day. That day will be highlighted by the most "hooman" race of all. Yes siree, this Elon SCA is sending a challenge to your youth group to get to work.

CHRISTIAN YOUTH RALLY.

The Christian Youth Rally of Central North Carolina was held at the West Market Street Methodist Church in Greensboro, N. C., November 5, 1950. This rally was sponsored by the N. C. Council of Churches—affiliated with the United Christian Youth Movement. Through the Christian Youth Council of N. C. denominations (1) share progress and new ideas, and (2) develop united strategy. The principle speakers were Rev. Maurice Kidder, Dept. of Religion, University of North Carolina, and Mr. Robert Teasdell, Secretary, United Christian Youth Movement, Chicago, Ill.

The officers of CYCNC are: President, Catherine Wike, New Bern; Vice-President, Zach Piophoff, Greensboro; Secretary, Caroline Broun, Roanoke Rapids; Treasurer, Bryant Gorge, Charlotte; and Chairman of Public Relations, Tom Sanders, Asheville.

We were represented at this meeting by Warren Matthews, Paul Varga, and David Crowell. All are students at Elon College. These interdenominational meetings are becoming more and more important. It is essential for our growth that we all give our interest and full support to projects of this nature.

SPOOKS AND 'POSSUMS.

The Seagrove, N. C. Youth Fellowship has some new and interesting ideas. More important is the fact that their ideas have been put into practice. The newest evidence of this was their recent Hallowe'en Party. Many groups have parties, but this one was interdenominational. The MYF of the local Methodist Church was invited. On Hallowe'en night 32 young people from both churches met for games and refreshments. Helen Farlow planned the party with Mrs. Sutton, the minister's wife, helping with the games. Jack Cox is president of this fine group.

After the party the group went 'possum hunting. They were chaperoned by Mrs. Sutton. The spirits of the hunters were not dampened by the fact that they lost the one 'possum they took along. In fact, this old-fashioned form of entertainment was so enjoyable that other hunts have been held and still others are planned. Other groups should take note and 'possums beware of this "new" form of entertainment and fellowship.

OFFICERS' RETREAT.

The officers and council of the Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship met Saturday afternoon and night, November 4, at Fireman's Clubhouse, near Suffolk. There were many visitors present, and a fine time was had by all. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill assisted in making fine plans for the coming year.

In Richmond it is estimated that more than 53,000 people received chest X-rays through these tests. THE STEWARDSHIP OF MONEY.

LESSON IX—NOVEMBER 26, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Each one must do as he has made up his mind, not reluctantly, or under compulsion, for God loves a cheerful giver.—II Corinthians 9:7.

LESSONS II Corinthians 9:6-8; Philippians 4:10-18.

DEVOTIONAL READING: James 2:14-24.

This Thing Called Stewardship.

A steward is, generally speaking, a man who handles something, or has charge of something, which belongs to another. He does not own that which he handles. He is supposed to use it to good advantage for his master or employer, and he must give an account of his stewardship. It is in this sense that the word stewardship is used in the Bible and in Christian teaching. We ought to understand this before we go any further in the study of this lesson on The Stewardship of Money.

The A. B. C's of Stewardship.

The first principle of stewardship is this: God is the owner of all things. In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. The silver and the gold are his. The cattle on a thousands hills belong to him. The earth is the Lord's and also the fullness thereof. It is the Lord God who giveth us power to get wealth. And more, even we are his, we are not our own, we have been bought with a price. Man really does not own anything, he simply possesses.

Man is a steward of all that he has. God did not give the garden of Eden to Adam and Eve; he simply put them in the garden to dress it and to keep it. God has put untold wealth in the ground and on the ground and above the ground, and he has put gifts and capacities within us, but all these things are sacred trusts for which we will be held responsible and for which we must give an account. Man is to use all these things, not for his own selfish purpose and pleasure, but for the best interest of God the owner.

Man must give an account of his stewardship. God does not collect every Saturday night even as he does not pay every Friday or Saturday. But in due time every man must give an account of himself unto God, and render an account of his stewardship. Perhaps one of the greatest surprises of Judgement Day will be the condemnation pronounced on many people because they have been guilty of embezzlement and theft and dishonesty and negligence in regard to their stewardship of all that God has entrusted to their care. Stewardship is stern and scared business. The Scriptures have a great deal to say about it. Too much emphasis cannot be laid upon it.

Some Principles of Stewardship.

To keep within the bounds of space assigned to those notes we will consider only the principles of stewardship as embodied in the Scripture passages for today's lesson, and only briefly at that.

a. The Law of the Harvest. "He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly, and he that soweth bountifully shall also reap bountifully." This is the law of the harvest, both as concerning the sowing of seed, and the sharing of substance. Many a man of limited means has developed a fine character and has reaped bountiful spiritual blessings because he has sown and shared bountifully. And many a man, rich in this world's good has poverty of soul because he has been selfish and sparing in giving and sharing.

b. Personal, purposeful, proportionate, joyful giving. "Let each man do according as he hath purposed in his heart, not grudgingly, or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver." Giving ought to be personal—every one who handles any money of his own, even if it is an allowance given by a parent, ought to give a part of that money unto God. Giving ought to be purposeful—as he purposeth in his heart. Giving should not be left to chance or mere emotion. A person should give thought to the matter of stewardship and determine in his heart as to what part of his income he will give unto God. Many people accept a tenth or tithe as the standard of giving. In any event he ought to have a plan of giving. Giving should be proportionate—the person who spends more in one week for tobacco than he gives to the Kingdom just is not giving proportionately.

The person who is giving the same amount to the church that he gave ten years ago, but whose income has increased substantially is not giving proportionately. Let a man be fair about this matter. Let him give God a fair proportion. And a man should give cheerfully—not grudgingly or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver. A man ought to "get a kick" out of giving. That word cheerful comes from the Greek word "hilaros" from which we get our word "hilarity." God loves a hilarious giver! When one thinks about what God has given to him, and about what his gifts can do for others, he will get joy out of giving.

c. Born of faith. "And our God is able to make all grace abound unto you, that ye having sufficiency in everything, may abound unto every good work." A man should give because of gratitude to God. He may give in confidence because of faith in God. A multitude of people have testified that as they have made a venture of faith by their gifts, that God has graciously and generously provided for them. Not always in material things, to be sure, but always by supplying all their need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus. Many have found that like the widow who shared what little she had with the prophet Elijah, the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail, "according to the word of the Lord."

Some Added Thoughts on the Lesson.

a. Learning two hard lessons. Paul wrote that he had learned how to be abased, and how to abound. They are two hard lessons. Many people who are poor, gripe and grumble about their lot. And many people who have an abundance do not know how to handle prosperity, which in a way is more difficult to handle than poverty. At least there is more danger in it, believe it or not.

b. The good of the givers rather than the desire for the gift. "Not that I seek a gift, but I seek for the fruit that increaseth to your account." There is perhaps nothing that dilights a pastor more than to see his people become good stewards and liberal givers, not because it means more money for him, but because it means greater spiritual blessings for his people. Liberal giving is an indication of growth in Christian Living. That is one reason why this lesson has a place in this series of lessons on Growing in the Christian Life.

THE SMALL COMMUNITY LOOKS AHEAD. Wayland J. Hayes, Harcourt, Brace & Co. N. Y. $3.00.

The author of this intensely practical volume is professor of sociology at Vanderbilt University. The nature of the book is indicated by the author in his Introduction: "There are numerous civic-minded citizens all over the United States who are striving to make their home communities a better place to live in. . . . One of the purpose of this book is to help such persons understand the nature of community life and the essential processes by which it may be developed in a balanced way."

Professor Hayes traces the steps necessary in an intelligent program of community planning and calls attention to techniques of proven worth. Conspicuous examples of success in this field are set forth as exhibits. Appropriate words of warning are found: "Errors, misconceptions, and ineffectual social, civic and other institutional procedures are carried along just as readily and firmly as those which have proved worthwhile." The central purpose of the author is to help people see that cultural and material good lies within their reach and offers helps toward their eventual attainment.

Help is available for people who honestly confront these basic questions: "How can we discover whether we are getting all that we should from our community? How well do we really know our community? Shall we take stock of ourselves? How shall we go about it?"

The function of religion in community betterment is given some space. The writer insists that "the institutional structure of religion must be examined as to whether it has become an end in itself, is an impediment to communal unity and integration, or fails to promote the common welfare." It is pointed out that the Church has done a better job in community improvement on the mission field than at home, for the reason that there has been the healthy tendency of dividing responsibility in missionary territory that avoids duplication of effort and competition. He further points to the broader education of foreign mission personnel than that of many workers in small American communities. While the treatment of this whole subject is inadequate the author does conclude that in recent years much improvement has been made in the total approach of the rural American community.

A topical Bibliography and Appendix should prove helpful to those interested in the subject. The Appendix includes a comprehensive Score Card for Self-Evaluation of Communities.

Let us hope that this stimulating book will come to the attention of many community leaders and that "optimum local development" will result from their study.

WATCHERS OF THE SPRING. A Collection of Rural Life Sermons and Addresses. The Virginia Council of Churches. 109 W. Grace Street. Richmond, Va. 65c postpaid.

This is a book of Rural Life Sermons which won prizes over a period of several years in the Rural Life Sermon Contest which was sponsored by the Rural Life Department of the Virginia Council of Churches. Prof. B. L. Hummel writes in the Foreward: "There were two major objectives in this contest. The first was to focus attention on the preaching of the gospel in terms of rural living. The Bible is full of the most beautiful rural literature in the world. The second objective was to publish a book of the best rural life sermons submitted. This book serves as an illustration of the way that the message of Christianity can be expressed in terms of day-by-day living in the countryside, and provides excellent material and suggestions for use by rural ministers everywhere."

The sermons and addresses cover a wide variety of subjects and are arranged under the following selections: I. The Church and Rural Life. II. The Church and the Rural Community. III. The Church and God's Good Earth. IV. Preaching From Rural Texts. V. A Successful Rural Minister.

Some of the more telling subjects are: "Life Can Be Beautiful—on the Farm," "Christ of the Countryside," "The Man With The Plow," "Back to the Soil," "The Secret of Fruit Bearing" and "A Rural Faith for Today."

This book should have wide circulation in the Southern Convention. Some people will want to give copies to their pastors at Christmas. We commend the Virginia Council on this bucolic publication and earnestly hope that it will not be their last.

OUT OF THE EARTH. Louis Bromfield. Harper. N. Y. $4.00.

Ordinarily this kind of book would not be reviewed in a church periodical. One would expect to find it reviewed in agricultural magazines.

All our churches get their sustenance and support, directly or indirectly, out of the earth. It would seem, therefore, that any book which helps us to be better stewards of the good earth merits a review in our paper.

Moreover, the majority of our churches are related directly to the soil; their budgets have a close relationship to the kind of farming prevalent in the community. The church is penalized by inefficient farming. Far too much of our traditional farming is "out of the dearth." Even tithing will not solve all our problems, for there is a great difference between the tithe of the efficient as compared with the inefficient farmer.

The editor is pleased to commend any book which helps the farmer to be a better farmer, for the farmer can become a better churchman and a better steward in proportion to the degree that he becomes a better farmer. Better farming and better churchmanship go hand in hand. We are going to have better churches, better paid ministers, larger budgets, more generous missionary giving when we have better farms and farmers.

This is not Mr. Bromfield's first bow as a rural writer. Many people have read his earlier books: Pleasant Valley and Malabar Farm. Since writing those books he has had time to carry our further experiments, amplify and even correct some of his earlier findings.

Out of The Earth gives the story of modern agriculture and the incredible worlds which have opened up with the scientific discoveries of recent years. "It is probable," says the author, "that we have learned more about agriculture and the soil in the past generation than in all the history of the world." Mr. Bromfield gives generous doses of this information to his readers and helps them visualize its relationship to every day life on the farm. He maintains that these discoveries have to do not only with

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Our twenty-two boys and girls had a good trip last Sunday. They gave their program at 11:00 o'clock at Zion Church, Rev. R. Eugene Tally, pastor, and received $261.00 in the offering. The church also gave us a most bountiful dinner. Long tables were laden with food and not only the Orphanage group but a large congregation had plenty and much to spare. At 3:00 o'clock we went to another of the Rev. Mr. Tally's churches, Lebanon, and there we received an offering in the amount of $48.88. This was a small church but with some mighty fine people and a very enthusiastic response. From there we went to a third one of of the Rev. Mr. Tally's churches where we were served a most delicious supper at 6:00 o'clock. After the supper while we waited for the hour of the program, 7:30, the large congregation joined the children in singing familiar songs. Then Mrs. Truitt responded to a request—since her husband was to have his "say" during the service—to talk to the large congregation. After her informal talk she answered a number of questions. The congregation seemed well pleased with this preliminary program. After the prepared program they gave us $186.65 as their offering. Everyone was so generous and gracious we came home tired but very happy.

This Sunday (November 12) we shall be at our Burlington Church which takes its special offering on the 4th Sunday. From there we go to Ramseur for a 3:00 o'clock meeting, and then to Shiloh where we are to be served supper. At 7:30 we shall give our program. The children get much fun out of these services, a nice trip, and the joy of meeting many people; besides it is good and wholesome training for them. If you would like for us to come to your church in December let us know. We try to arrange three churches on a Sunday as it costs time, money and extra care to get twenty-two children ready and transported, therefore it helps if we can make a full day of it when we go.

We wish to express our thanks to everyone who helped to make this week's report such a good one. I am sorry it could not have been more as we are so near Thanksgiving, and have not yet had enough to catch up our summer bills.

Will it hurt anything for your Sunday school and church to receive a special Thanksgiving Offering for these boys and girls? There are folks in each of our churches who would "spare" a donation for the Christian Orphanage if they were given an opportunity. Count it on your apportionment if you will and if you need it. Please send all moneys which you wish counted to your church's credit to Dr. W. T. Scott, the Convention Office, Elon College, N. C. Funds which you wish to come direct to the Orphanage may be so directed. Many friends cheer us by sending us a Thanksgiving check out of their own gratitude to God for his goodness to them.

Last night at supper our Gibsonville friends brought around 300 weiners and enough of all the "fixings" that go with them; 148 bottles of soft drinks; bars of candy for one and sundry; apples and bananas for all; and prizes, entertainment and an orchestra. We turned the kitchen and diningroom over to them and they did a good job. The children enjoyed it immensely. We have to furnish a lot of food three times every day. Food is one thing growing children must have. It is a big responsibility and therefore we are most grateful for every donation and offering sent us.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

increased food and fiber production, but with better quality as well. He substantiates this arresting thesis: Poor land makes poor people. Improperly used and consequently unproductive land annually causes Americans an incalculable loss in terms of bad health and bad living conditions. The science of the new agriculture offers a way to bring to millions of people new dignity, new prosperity, and a new meaning in their lives. To taxpayer and farmer alike, he insists, it offers new independence and freedom from costly, unnecessary and eventually ruinous government interference and subsidies.

What is this new agriculture? The Chapter headlines give an immediate clue: "The New World in Agriculture," "Farming From Three to Twenty Feet Down," "Water and the Farm," "Poor Land Makes Poor Hunting," "Notes to Those Who Make Farm Machinery," and "The World Can Feed Itself If It Wants To." He rolls an important ball down our alley when he adds a chapter on "Go South, Young Man." Thank you, Mr. Bromfield, for that chapter!

He quotes one Ed Babcock who said: "Too many of our farmers work twice as hard as they should to make half as much money as they should," then he goes on to outline a modern, streamlined farming program.

Money spent for this book, Mr. Farmer and Mr. Churchman, will be one of the best investments you ever made.

REBUILDING RURAL AMERICA. Earl Hitch. Harper & Bros. N. Y. $3.50.

Significantly, the author dedicates this book to "That minority laboring in obscurity—the Country Preachers, who are shaping the rural church for partnership in the task of community rescue."

This book was written to "counter an overreliance on city-centered occupations and to relieve the headache called 'urbanism'." The thesis is that "The sure way to minimize rural migration is to make it economically practical and, more than that, socially desirable for people to stay in the country." Then the author goes on to say that "The Christian Church, some branches of adult education, research foundations, co-operative societies, and alert men in the rural communities are lending support to the proposition. Civic leaders, sociologists, and country preachers have enlisted in the cause. The results of their common labors are too little known. Though the movement is young, as such moments go, it is already clear that benefits beyond estimation could be had from a wider adoption of the best examples that are emerging."

Here is a story of truth that is stranger than fiction—the story of an obsolete rural economy, diluted democracy and waning rural vigor; but also a story of sharecroppers who became landlords, rural homesteads that stood the shock of depression, successful experiments in decentralization, and multiplied examples of an expanding rural economy.

Here is the story of the Central Illinois Community Betterment Program. A questionnaire was circulated which called for answers to three basic questions: (1) What criticisms do you have of the facilities and services now in your community? (2) What do you think could be done to improve them? (3) What new facilities and services do you think are needed and would be supported?

What were the typical results? "Lexington reports that a band has been organized, a water system has been installed, streets have been paved, funds are being raised for a community center, adults classes and a kindergarten have been added to the public school system, tennis courts have been built, the football field has been lighted, a softball league has been organized, and new businesses have been attracted—a cabinet shop, an electric service shop, a cold-storage plant, a meat-packing plant, a bakery, a welding shop, and a seed-corn drying plant. Minonk set up a town parking lot, provided tennis courts and a baseball league, plans for a hospital got underway, a new factory and a new laundry have opened for business, new street signs have been erected and stores and residences were numbered, and the voters have authorized a new school in the district."

The author reiterates the fact that "rural communities need no longer be content with the wretchedness of obsolescence, that a better rural environment and a better rural economy are within reach."

Church groups will find particularly helpful chapters on "Rural Religion Faces a New Task," "The Ruralist Philosophies," "Training for Self-Sufficiency," and "A Public Responsibility." The final chapter, Sources of Further Information," lists the unabridged sources from which much of this study was taken.

This book is worthy of a place in the community, church or private library. Recommend it for study and discussion at your next group meeting.

USING AUDIO VISUALS IN THE CHURCH. International Council, Chicago 4. Price 75c.

A new basic manual in audio-visual education for churches was released August 1 by the International Council of Religious Education, according to Norman E. Tompkins, director of literature service.

The booklet, called Using Audio-Visuals in the Church, replaces an older, widely used publication, Visual Methods in the Church.

Attractively designed and succinctly written, the new bulletin will be popular with denominational boards, area workers, councils of churches, and local churches for use in institutes and conferences, and the standard leadership education course (No. 142.6b) on "The Use of Visual Aids in Christian Education."

Local church boards, committees, and church school officers and teachers will find the booklet helpful as an introduction to the field and a check list of progress made.

The manual was prepared by the Committee on Audio-Visual and Radio Education and approved by the International Council of Religious Education. Miss Pearl Rosser is director of audio-visual and radio education.

Chapter headings are "What Are Audio-Visuals?" "Why Should the Church Use Audio-Visuals?" "Do We Know Audio-Visual Methods and Materials Are Effective in Christian Education?" "Where May the Church Best Use Visuals?" "Equipment and Physical Facilities." "What Equipment To Buy," "Common Pitfalls To Be Avoided," "Lens, Projection Distance, and Screen Size," and "What Are the Resources?"

Every church should have a copy.

MID-CENTURY ADVANCE AND CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

The executive committee of the Western North Carolina Conference last fall voted to have one committee on the Ministry and one on Christian Education, rather than a joint committee as heretofore. This, then, is the first report to the Conference on just "Christian Education."

The committee has had one joint session with the Committee on Religious Literature, since the work of the two is closely allied. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill acted as adviser, and an institute for children's teachers was planned.

Progress in the Mid-Century Advance in the field of Christian Education needs to be made along these lines:

1. Support of Elon College through
 - a. Our gifts—apportionment, Sustaining Fund, personal.
 - b. Our young people—no use to have an institution if we do not use it.
 - c. Our words of good will—speak a good word for our college whenever possible and the first two items will come easier!
2. Support of our Convention Board of Christian Education through
 - a. Paying our apportionment—$310 out of $475 was paid last year.
 - b. Attending leadership training schools planned by this Board.
 - c. Taking advantage of the services of Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, educational secretary, part of whose salary comes from our payment of this fund.
3. Better Training of our Sunday School Teachers because
 - a. The teaching of the Christian religion is important enough to demand the best.
 - b. They must be able to stand up alongside public school teachers and their methods if Christian Education is to be a vital influence in the lives of their pupils.
4. Better Support of Summer Conferences, Training Schools, Etc., so that
 - a. We will develop leaders in all age groups in our local churches.
 - b. We will take advantage of all the opportunities offered to better inform ourselves in the field of Christian Education.
5. Vacation Bible Schools available for the children of every church,
 - a. Using local church leaders.
 - b. Utilizing joint leadership with other churches.
 - c. Using Student Summer Service leaders.
6. Use of Our Own Denominational Literature, because
 - a. It promotes our own denominational ideas.
 - b. It is comparable to the best in public school literature.
 - c. Its emphasis is upon church and home working together, so it fosters Christian Education in the home.

We urge every church to work for these things during the coming year.

Christian Orphanage . . . Thanksgiving Offering

The Christian Orphanage is caught in the increasing current of rising living costs. The same kind of giving will allow us to run much behind in actual needs. Every church and Sunday school in the Southern Convention is asked to receive a Thanksgiving Offering for the Christian Orphanage. The daily cost of maintaining the Orphanage has very greatly increased. Many past due accounts must be paid with the Thanksgiving funds..

The spirit of the Orphanage is good. The workers are devout and faithful. The children, although deprived of their normal home life, are bright and happy. Their little hands are laid in yours. Their only hope for a home is in you and your gifts to their substitute home—the Orphanage. The Convention has designated Thanksgiving for the Orphanage. The results rest upon your compassion, pity and gratitude.

God will bless those who help the homeless committed to their care. Your church and your home will be better for making a Thanksgiving Offering to the Orphanage. Let the remembrance of the children at the Christian Orphanage rise above self-pity and show your gratitude for God's blessings. Mail your Thank-Offering now for the Church's needy children. "For inasmuch as ye do it unto the least of these," says Jesus, "ye do it unto me."

News Flashes

Churches are receiving the Thanksgiving offering for the Christian Orphanage.

The Christian Orphanage program was presented on the third Sunday at Wake hapel, Wentworth, and Auburn in the Eastern N. C. Conference.

During the month of October sixty members of the Asheboro Congregational Christian Sunday School had perfect attendance. Paul Shane is superintendent.

The Laymen's Fellowship of Shallow Ford Church held a memorial service for Walter R. Routh on Sunday, November 12. An urn and flowers were given in his memory.

A city-wide youth choir festival was held at First Christian Church, Burlington last Sunday afternoon. Approximately 80 children participated in the festival which was sponsored by the Burlington Music Club.

Rev. Roy D. Coulter assisted Rev. S. E. Madren in a revival last week at the Mt. Olive (R) Church near Elkton, Va. The meeting was well attended, several members were received into the church.

The Templemen's Bible Class of the Congregational Christian Temple, Norfolk, Virginia, had its annual banquet on Tuesday evening, November 14 with 205 present. This is an annual affair of the Templemen's Class and is always a great occasion for the men of the class.

An institute for Sunday school teachers of children from kindergarten through juniors is planned for the Western North Carolina Conference on Sunday, December 10, at the Asheboro Church. The session will last from three until five o'clock. Guest leaders include Mr. W. E. Wisseman, Mrs. W. J. Andes, and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill.

The Virginia World Trade Conference conducted in Norfolk during the week of November 13 featured this year for the first time, one day dedicated to religion, and on Monday, November 13, religious displays were erected in the Norfolk Arena by the three major faiths, Protestant, Catholic and Jewish. These displays were visited by a large number of people and during the evening a United Religious Service was conducted in the Arena. W. Millard Stevens, pastor of the Congregational Christian Temple was chairman of the Protestant Committee for this observance.

The Fellowship Bible Class of the Congregational Christian Temple, Norfolk, Virginia, celebrated its tenth anniversary on Sunday morning, November 5 with a special service in the Sunday school and then on November 9 with a banquet in the Social Hall of the church with 128 present. This class is composed largely of young married couples and has an attendance of more than 60 every Sunday morning. As a part of its anniversary celebration, the class presented the church with an outside bulletin board to be erected on the 33rd Street side of the church lot.

JUST BACK FROM ENGLAND.

The Rev. and Mrs. Stanley Carne, of Portsmouth Va., have just returned from a visit to Mr. Carne's birthplace, in Cornwall, England.

They left New York on September 25th and landed in Liverpool, after visiting there, they went to London, to see relatives, and then went on to Plymouth, where Mrs. Carne's sisters make their homes.

Two weeks were spent in Newguay, Cornwall where many relatives and old friends were met and enjoyed.

Mr. Carne occupied the pulpit of the church, where he grew up and from which he went into the ministry.

Forty years had wrought great changes, but a multitude of friends still carry on, and it was particularly because of them, that the visit gave such pleasing and happy experiences.

The Carnes left Southampton on the Steam Ship "Washington" November 6th and arrived in New York November 13th.

During their absence the pulpits at First Church Portsmouth and at Eclipse have been filled by supplies.

TEACHER TRAINING AT ASHEBORO.

At the beginning of this quarter the officers and teachers of the Asheboro Church School met for as afternoon and evening session of study in preparation for their work. Guest leaders were Miss Pattie Lee Coghill and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman.

One fine feature of this institute was that every regular teacher was present for the entire session, in addition to the superintendent, assistant superintendent, pianist, adult department superintendent, and five assistant teachers.

The session began with worship led by Miss Coghill, which interpreted the theme of the quarter's work. Much of the time was spent in group meetings, where specific aims and plans for the quarter were discussed. Supper was served to the group by Mrs. F. C. Lester. The evening consisted of a general discussion by appropriate film strips and slides.

The teaching during this quarter in Asheboro has been very satisfactory, and the church school there recommends this plan to any local church wishing to increase the effectiveness of its school.

FORREST WEIR NAMED TO LOS ANGELES POST.

At the beginning of December, Dr. Forrest C. Weir will become secretary of the Southern California Council of Churches in Los Angeles.

Dr. Weir has been secretary of the Southeastern Inter-Council Office in Atlanta since June 1946. While in this position, he arranged for the holding of Southeastern regional church convocations in Atlanta in January 1948 and December 1949. Another significant development under his leadership was the establishment of a radio studio at Agnes Scott College, Atlanta, in cooperation with the communions associated with the Southeastern Radio Conference. During recent months Dr. Weir has given considerable time to the commissions of the Southeastern Regional Council of Congregational Christian Churches.

A native of Arkansas, son of a Methodist minister, Dr. Weir studied at Yale Divinity School and served Congregational churches in Connecticut before going to the Plymouth Congregational Church, Miami, Fla.

During his ten years in Connecticut, Dr. Weir was active in interdenominational work. In Miami he directed the Mission to Christian Teachers in 1945, which furnished to motivation for the Miami Council of Churches and the Florida Council of Churches the following year. He was also instrumental in organizing a council in Tennessee.

Dr. Weir succeeds Dr. E. C. Farnham, who has left Los Angeles to become secretary of the Councils of Churches of San Francisco and Oakland.

MID-CENTURY ADVANCE AT THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

Our Mid-Century Advance at the Christian Orphanage, Inc., will put the child in the center of all our planning and thinking. We have set for ourselves a seven-point program as we look forward to improving our work in the years ahead:

1. Better understanding of the child both as to background and to needs—physically, intellectually, socially and spiritually; and a determination on the part of each worker to help meet these needs in each child.

2. Cleaner, fresher and more home-like buildings by repairing, plastering painting and equipping the present building until they meet public approval.

3. Neater, trimmer and more beautiful campus with more adequate playgrounds and recreational equipment, teaching the children to love wellkept lawns, shrubs, flowers, and playgrounds as a growth in ordiliness both of mind and spirit.

4. Increasingly good records in public school learning how to study and make the grade, also to take a good and normal part in all school activities.

5. More adequate training in the common courtesies, manners, kindnesses and cooperation; as well as such ordinary arts as cooking, cleaning house, sewing, mending, and keeping clothes in good repair; also gardening, farming, cattle-raising, hog-raising, chicken-raising, dairying, handling machinery, firing furnaces, etc.

6. Implaning in each child a sense of belonging, showing him the real worth of friendship and loving care, teaching him to know how to receive such and also to learn to give such in return both presently and later in the home which he may establish for his own family.

7. Giving that for which through the years of their lives to come they may rightly say: I thank God for a Christian training, Sunday school and church, for lessons in personal devotions and prayers, and for faith in God and fellowman.

Our Mid-Century Advance includes a continous effort on the part of each matron and worker at the Orphanage to improve themselves with the thought of giving more helpful and efficient service. This program includes:

1. A growing faith in children and

SUPPORT THE ORPHANAGE

The Christian Orphanage is one of the major units in our Convention program. The Orphanage, like its sponsoring body, is not one of the largest or strongest in the State. It does not enjoy all the privileges and emoluments, just as the ministers and other servants of the Convention do not, that the servants and institutions of the larger religious bodies do. It, like the churches of which it is a part, receives support from within and without its membership.

Many worthy appeals come to our members and churches. Many of our people are generous and gladly support all the agencies and institutions of the denomination. We trust that no one institution will prosper at the expense of another, but that each will receive adequate support to carry on its appointed task. "No one (institution or individual) liveth to himself and no one dieth to himself." We have been hearing a great deal about our home missionary needs. Money is needed to establish new churches. New churches become new sources of income for the Christian Orphanage and other institutions. Money contributed to the Orphanage program helps develop Christian leadership in church and industry. So we are all in a great partnership.

See that your church meets all its Conference apportionments, then go "over the top" wherever possible. This is the time to raise the first major unit in the Conference year, the Orphanage apportionment. Unit by unit, the total apportionment can be raised and paid.

The Southern Convention, with limited membership and resources, has given liberally through the years to the Orphanage. We rejoice in its capable leadership, its progressive program and its Christian nurture. On behalf of the Orphanage, we solicit your continued prayers and liberal support.

ANOTHER CONFERENCE MEETS

The last of our series of fall conferences was held last week. The North Carolina and Virginia Conference met at Shallaw Ford Church. The usual fine attendance and spiritual exuberance was in evidence. The long line of fine automobiles parked around the church indicated that the delegates had financial as well as spiritual assets.

Shallow Ford may be taken as an index to the life of the Conference. A new hard-surfaced road, additional Sunday school rooms, landscaped grounds, a new and modern parsonage in a commanding view opposite the church building, the transformation of a part-time preaching station into a full-time program with a resident minister—these are the more obvious indications of progress in the local church. Much of this progress was achieved under the leadership of Dr.

W. W. Sloan. Rev. James Hailey has assumed the pastorate recently.

We can rejoice in the assurance that similar progress is being registered in other churches of the Conference. Added new emphasis on the principles of modern Christian education are bringing new life to the Conference.

Dr. Douglas Horton, having spoken at the conferences in Western Carolina and Eastern Virginia, concluded his Southern itinerary by addressing the Conference. After stressing the fact that the "Morals of a community do not rise higher than the church" and that the "life of the church does not rise higher than its leadership," the speaker quoted a recent survey which indicated the predominant factors in turning men towards the ministry. Wholesome home and church life, the influence of parents, pastors and Sunday school teachers, experience in the Armed Services, youth conferences and Bible study, were listed among the formative influences. The majority of decisions for the ministry, it was indicated, are made during high school. This is the malleable age, the opportunity for the most profound and formative spiritual experience.

No mention was made of the church paper. While the printed word is not as vivid and dramatic as the living word, it seems altogether reasonable to assume that it is a factor, at least, if not a dominant one. Perhaps it did not occur to the framers of the questionnaire to mention this item. The writer could testify to the influence of The Sun in his own decision for the ministry. The unfailing appearance of the church paper in a Christian home is by no means negligible as an agency for ministerial recruitment.

While we are grateful for the excellent men in our pulpits today, the ministerial shortage is acute. Since there are not enough ministers for all churches, many of them must divide their services among two or more churches. The difficulty of forming new churches is accentuated by the present dearth of Ministerial leadership. Happy are we if we know the determining factors which condition young men for the ministry and if we are adept in keeping those factors active in our midst.

Another central emphasis of the Conference was on missions, both home and foreign. Dr. F. C. Lester and Rev. Henry E. Robinson spoke of our inescapable responsibility for foreign missions, the paltry sum given in comparison with the crying needs, and the magnificent opportunities which come to us through the work of the American Board. Superintendent Scott and Dr. Ross Sanderson underscored the missionary opportunities within the Conference. If these eloquent messages and crying needs are carried to all the churches, surely there will be a response which will strengthen and extend the Missionary arms of the Church both at home and abroad. This great Conference, once aroused and committed, can set the missionary pace for all other conferences.

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, president, conducted a service of licenture for two Elon ministerial students, Rosser B. Clapp and Warren Matthews.

Time would fail to tell of Dr. William Moseley Brown, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Rev. Tucker G. Humphries and others who made the Conference memorable by their presence and messages.

LANDMARK IN CHURCH COOPERATION

President Harry S. Truman heads the list of prominent persons invited to address the constituting convention of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U. S. A., at Cleveland, Ohio, November 28-December 1, according to an announcement by Dr. Luther A. Weigle, chairman of the planning committee for the National Council. Mr. Truman has been invited to speak on Wednesday evening, November 29, in a meeting at the Cleveland auditorium. His decision is being deferred until international conditions are less critical.

Leaders of Christianity in America—both clerical and lay, representing the 28 communions—are expected to witness the creation of the National Council, together with several thousand visiting delegates.

Ceremonies of dedication are planned. It is announced that world-renowned Christian leaders from many parts of the world will extend greetings, by short-wave broadcasts, to the delegates.

Some 1,200 official representatives and alternates from the 29 Protestant and Eastern Orthodox communions which are forming the National Council will attend, plus 5,000 visiting delegates and many consultants.

The Editor finds it impossible to attend, since our meagre budget does not include a travel fund, but releases to the church press will be carefully studied and screened to give our readers a concise and up-to-date report on the program and developments. Some of the more important messages may be published.

Among the prominent persons scheduled to speak or lead in worship at the Cleveland convocation are: Dr. W. A. Visser 't Hooft, Geneva, Switzerland, general secretary of the World Council of Churches; Dr. Toyohiko Kagawa, world famous evangelist of Japan; Hon. Francis B. Sayre, representative of the United States in the United Nations Trusteeship Council; Mrs. Douglas Horton, former president of Wellesley College and former commander of the WAVES; Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, minister of Christ Church (Methodist) and famous radio preacher from New York City; Dr. Franklin Clark Fry, president, United Lutheran Church in America; and Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

The convention will begin on Tuesday evening, November 28, with a service of worship and thanksgiving. The act of constituting the National Council of Churches will be held at the first plenary business session on Wednesday morning, November 29.

Other general business sessions will be held on Thursday and Friday mornings. These will be open to visiting delegates.

The four divisions of the National Council will be organized on Wednesday afternoon, November 29. These are Christian education, Christian life and work, home missions and foreign missions.

The general departments of men's work and women's work and the several joint departments, such as evangelism, missionary education, stewardship, and Christian family life, will be set up on Thursday afternoon, November 30.

Initial meetings of the ten central departments and of the departments within divisions will be held Friday afternoon, December 1.

During these afternoon meetings special sessions will be held for visiting delegates. The general theme of educational responsibility of the churches will be considered Wednesday afternoon, or the missionary responsibility of the churches on Thursday afternoon, and of the Christian witness of the church in national life on Friday afternoon.

Final meetings of the eight interdenominational agencies which will merge their activities in the National Council will be held on Monday and Tuesday, November 27-29.

At least 569 European pastors and church workers were aided during the first nine months of 1950 by the health program of the World Council of Churches' department of Inter-Church Aid, according to the department's autumn report. This service involved an expenditure of over $35,000.00 during the period from January through August, 1950. Of the 569 who benefited from the program, 122 spent from four to six weeks at Casa Locarno, a rest home in Switzerland; 47 tubercular pastors and church workers were cared for at two Swiss sanatoria at Daves and Leysin; and 400 in Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Poland, Roumania and Yugoslavia, received medicines and food parcels. Parcels to church workers and pastors in the Iron Curtain countries contained over $5,000.00 worth of penicillin, streptomycin and other drugs for the treatment of tuberculosis. E.P.S.

We cannot define God or any of the real values of life. What is the vague thing called forth that is worth living and dying for. Beauty, truth, friendship, love, creation—these are the great values of life. We cannot prove them, or explain them, yet they are the most stable things in our lives.

North Carolina and Virginia Conference Churches Plan Mid-Century Advance

By W. J. ANDES, Conference Secretary.

Looking forward to two new churches in Burlington and to several other new churches in the Conference area, the North Carolina and Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches closed their annual conference at the Shallow Ford Church, near Elon College, N. C., this past Wednesday, November 15. The Conference voted to increase the support of the ministers by establishing the minimum salary of $2,600.00.

Rev. James Hailey is pastor of the Shallow Ford Church. This fine rural church has just completed a new parsonage and landscaping the church grounds. Entertaining the more than two hundred delegates and friends, the church is now a full-time job for the minister.

This past Conference year saw a marked increase in church members since the United Evangelistic Advance was emphasized throughout the churches and all forty-seven churches of the conference participated in this Advance. The Third Avenue Congregational Christian Church in Danville reported an increase of 203 members, passing the 1,000 mark in membership.

The following ministers were ordained to the full gospel ministry and are now serving churches: Rev. Carl Wallace, located at Franklinton, N. C.; Rev. R. Lackey, minister of the Apple's Chapel Church, near Gibsonville, N. C.; Rev. James Hailey, pastor of the host church. Warren Matthews of the First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro, and Rosser Lee Clapp of the Apple's Chapel Church were licensed to preach.

A new project is to be undertaken with the Methodist Church in the establishing of a "Federated Church" in Lynchburg, Va.

The Conference unanimously endorsed the "Sustaining Fund" of one dollar per member during the coming year for Elon College. This will be over and above the $4,818 already apportioned to the Churches in their regular giving.

Dr. S. C. Harrell, president of the Conference this past year and pastor of the Durham Congregational Christian Church, was re-elected president of the Conference for the coming year. Other officers elected were: Vice-president, Rev. Thurman Bowers, Greensboro; Secretary, Rev. W. J. Andes of Winston-Salem; Assistant Secretary, Rev. Robert T. Woodruff of Vernon Hills, Va.; Treasurer, Mr. Russell V. Powell of Greensboro; Members of the Home Mission Board: Mrs. J. D. Strader of Burlington, W. T. Dunn of Lynchburg, Mrs. O. H. Paris of Greensboro, Rev. K. D. Register of Burlington, Mrs. J. W. Long of Burlington, Rev. H. P. Bozarth of Elon College, Mrs. J. G. Truitt of Elon College.

The following representatives were chosen to represent the Conference on the North Carolina Council of Churches: Dr. W. E. Wisseman of Greensboro, Rev. T. G. Humphries of Reidsville, G. D. Colelough and W. J. Fonville of Burlington. Alternates were: Rev. K. D. Register, Rev. Mack V. Welch, A. H. Henshaw and D. L. Boone, Sr.

Representatives to the Virginia Council of Churches: W. T. Dunn of Lynchburg and Joe Landrum of Paces, Va.

Dr. Douglas Horton, minister of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in America, spoke twice before the Conference urging the Every Member Canvass and the securing of more ministerial students. Also present was Dr. Ross Sanderson of the Home Boards of the General Council. Dr. Sanderson is preparing a survey and study for Congregational Christian Churches in this area. Upon this study will depend the Mid-Century Advance for all Congregational Christian Churches in the South.

The Christian Orphanage located at Elon College presented a program of great interest by presenting the children of the Orphanage in song and speech.

W. J. ANDES,
Secretary.

THANKFUL FOR WHAT?

It is so easy to be flippant about the things for which we are thankful. To days chuckle was "we can be thankful that we don't get as much governing as we pay for government." While we may get a chuckle out of it it is a pretty negative attitude.

The danger we face is that we look only for big things for which to be thankful. We count our blessings by their permanence and their real value. At this season I would challenge you to think of offering thanks for little things; for friends we take for granted, for their daily gifts of joy, constructive criticism, sharing of their strength and just for being friends; for the right to walk out our front doors and go anywhere in these United States that we choose to without official interference; for the right to work or take time off from any job that we like; for the privilege of the opportunity to take the pieces of today and mold them into a tomorrow that will be good for ourselves and for men around us.

Above all we can be thankful for the right of thinking as we please and being able to be guided by our thought without fear of being challenged by an individual or a government. That freedom of thought affects our worship, our work, our recreation and study. We can be thankful for problems too, for concern keeps our minds sharp, our lives keen edged.

Let's look at this opportunity to give thanks with an eye to little things, as it is this collection of little things that gives lives greatness.

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

WHAT AM I?

I am a Christian. I am a member of the church. The church to which I belong is a part of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches. My affiliation with the church makes me a member of the denomination. I am proud of my church and of my denomination. The Convention of which I am part has formulated a program that calls for the support of the church, together with her boards, institutions, and Christian causes. The Convention has provided for the support of all these causes and has suggested a just share of my contributions for each cause that my denomination deems worthy of support. This program provides for the support of:

Missions, home and foreign. The church has elected a board to espouse the cause of missions and urge upon our people liberal support of its entire program.

Benevolence. The benevolent cause of the church are supported through the Christian orphanage and superannuation. The church has elected a board of trustees to promote the cause of the Christian orphanage and induce the membership of the church to contribute for its support. It has also elected a board of superannuation to keep before the church the need of ministers and their families who have spent themselves in the support of the church, and call upon the church to give the support of our superannuated ministers.

Christian education. The church realizes that complete program of education, beginning with the cradle roll in our homes and extending through its institutions of higher learning at Elon College is essential to the intelligent and convincing program of the church. Through the Board of Christian Education it offers information and direction for the program in the local church and endeavors in every way possible to improve our educational programs in the local church. The board elected for this purpose is charged with the responsibility of promoting the cause of Christian education in our local churches and also in our college. In addition to the program of education in the local church, it is the responsibility of this board to advance the cause of Elon College, to consider its needs in comparison with the needs of similar institutions of other denominations and to induce the church to give to its college adequate financial support. The Convention and conferences constituting the Convention have their responsibilities for which financial support must be provided. It becomes the responsibility of the executive boards of the Convention and the conferences through their committees on finance to bring to the attention of the church the needs of these over-all organizations and to provide for their adequate financial support. The Convention also provides for the partial support of ministerial students while in college and for the convention's share in state councils of churches.

As I think of the existing conditions at home and abroad, the emergencies that arise in almost every interest, I realize the fearful responsibilities that rest upon my church and ultimately upon me. I would not want my church to discontinue a single item on its program. I think they are all necessary and essential. At the same time, I realize that not one of these interests can render its anticipated service without adequate financial support. If this support is given, it is my responsibility to give for the support of all. I can not support them by myself, but I can help, and I am glad that I do have this privilege.

There are some who say, "I am not interested in this or I am not interested in that. I do not agree with the way things are done. I am not in sympathy with their program, consequently I shall not give to it myself." There are others who will single out two, three, or even four of the causes and eliminate the others from their program of support.

I am a Christian. One is my Father, even God. He is no respecter of persons. He sends the rain on the just and the unjust. The sun shines on the mountain-tops and at the same time brightens up the valleys. When he loved, he loved the whole world. When he gave a gift, he gave a gift sufficient to save all men. I am sure that he is not pleased with most of us, yet at the same time he does not withhold his blessing. Are we his children? Do we belong to him? What do the fruits of our lives prove?

Man is fearfully and wonderfully made. He has one body, but the body has many members. Paul calls attention to these various members, the hands, the eyes, the feet, etc. In the creation of the body, God provided for its nourishment. When you drink a glass of milk, you nourish the whole body. Suppose the mind should attempt to say, "I do not like the hands and I will withhold the nurture from the hands." How foolish! The church is the body of Christ. Its entire program must be supported. When you start to support the church, the body of Christ, should not your support go to all of its members? Is anything less than support of the entire church Christian? Our support should be given out of gratitude and with thanksgiving—should be given to the whole church. We can not move one part of the church and leave the other alone. The program, if victorious and triumphant, must move as a whole.

What am I, a professed Christian who has not lost his prejudices, or a Godly Christian who loves the whole church and makes his contribution, large or small, for the support of the whole church, desiring that according to the needs of each individual cause his gifts shall be pro-rated.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The five conferences constituting the Southern Convention have all held their annual sessions. I am not informed as to the support of other boards, institutions, and causes of the Convention, but I have kept track of the support given the college through conference apportionments. Notwithstanding the fact that the college's financial needs are greater this year than ever before, the church's contributions are about as they were a year ago. This is both unfortunate and difficult to understand. There isn't any question but that the college is the mainspring of our church program. It does not have the appeal that those representing missions are able to make. It does not have the appeal of the orphanage, of homeless and dependent children, but it does occupy the basic place in our entire church program.

All of our institutions, causes, boards, and local churches, are dependent upon leadership. In this advanced age we can not think of proceeding without a trained leadership. When I say trained leadership, I know that mere education given to an individual when completely accepted

VALLEY OFFICERS MEET.

The officers of the Virginia Valley Woman's Board of the Missionary Conference met for the first session of the year in the home of Rev. and Mrs. Clyde Koon, New Market, on Friday, November 10. Eight of the twelve officers were present, besides two district superintendents and three life members. Guests included Mrs. O. H. Paris, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Miss Margaret Blemker, and several society presidents.

There was a discussion on the Constitution and a few changes were made to suit our Conference.

Mrs. B. F. Frank was elected historian for Conference.

The morning session closed with the Lord's prayer, following which a buffet luncheon was served, with each member bringing lunch and the hostess serving dessert and coffee. Rev. R. E. Newton and Rev. Clyde Koon joined us for lunch. A nice social hour was enjoyed by all.

Miss Coghill had charge of the afternoon session. Mrs. Paris announced the Women's Convention to be held May 1 and 2 at the Christian Temple, Norfolk. The Virginia Valley Rallies are to be held April 8-9, 1951. Mrs. Paris highlighted the afternoon with a talk on "Thy Will To Do." "It is the Spirit that animates the workshop that matters. God's No. 1 plan is love and surely if we have the Spirit of Love in our workshop (our meetings) then we will render love. Then our whole workshop would be in the spirit of Christ, and if we have not that spirit we are not in his band." Paul says, "Stand fast in one spirit with one mind, striving together for the faith of the Gospel."

The duties of district superintendents and chairman of departments were discussed.

A WOMAN'S THANKSGIVING PRAYER.

I thank thee, God, for the husband with whom I share the joys of making a Christian home;

I thank thee, God, for our children, who have brought to us responsibilities and opportunities;

I thank thee, God, for neighbors and friends, who enrich my life through good deeds and kindly words;

I thank thee, God, for my church, where I may worship thee and through which I may serve thee;

I thank thee, God, for strength to work, for mind to think, and heart to love.
Amen.

It was suggested that when a society gives a Life Membership that there be a special meeting. Sometime in the near future there may be a pin for these honorees.

The meeting was closed with a prayer by Miss Coghill.

MRS. H. T. HENSLEY,
Secretary.

WHAT CAN YOU DO?

All of us have moments of thinking that we are not of much use in this world, that as just one person what we do cannot amount to much. Occupied with housework and looking after children, or occupied with office or millwork plus some housekeeping, how can we count for much in building God's Kingdom on earth?

Please read the article below entitled "One Determined Woman" and find out what just one woman of limited means, but with talent, time and friends did for her church, and for the missionary enterprise. Each of us can do something special for our church.

It may be that we can plan programs, or arrange flowers for use in the church, or give book reviews, or keep the nursery during church service, or telephone society members about that important meeting, or take our car full of friends to a church meeting, or bake a cake for a benefit sale, or clean the church, or sing in the choir, or teach a Sunday school class, or help with a Girl Scout troop, or wash dishes after a church supper, or help our minister with some typing, or make it a habit to tell him when members or friends of the church are sick or in trouble, or secure a library for our church, or conduct a worship service, or any one of a hundred other services which might be mentioned. Concentrate on at least one "big idea" for your church, as the woman described in the following article, and see what happens!

* * * * *

ONE DETERMINED WOMAN.

Our church was much the same as many churches—you know how it is, two societies of women, one flourishing with pleasant, simple afternoon entertainment, tea, a friendly "get together." The other was the missionary society, not many members, a few good women on the older side, planning how to help the work in the foreign field and sending missionaries into the far reaches of the earth to preach the gospel of Christ.

We differ somewhat from other churches in this area, inasmuch as we are a resort town, and many of those present at our meetings are winter visitors, who are a great help and some even serve as officers. I remember once that we had a president from another state who served us loyally for two seasons and as she was leaving for her northern home, she said to me: "I wish I could do something to make our women more interested in missions." This woman was a frail lady and before the time for her return visit, word came to us of her death. Shortly after that we were notified that she left us in her will the sum of $250 to used for mission work in China.

The gift was banked and we considered what to do with the money. Finally, it was decided to earn more and use the interest for the education of a young Chinese girl. We contacted the American Board in Boston and agreed that we would send a certain

AN AMERICAN BOARD MISSIONARY SIGNALLY HONORED.

A New England woman, born and bred, Dr. Olive Sawyer Hoyt, for over 40 years a Congregational Christian educational missionary in Japan under the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, Mass., has been decorated by Japan with the Fourth Order of the Sacred Treasure in recognition of her service to the people of that land.

In an audience with the Empress on United Nations Day, October 24, in Tokyo, Dr. Hoyt was told that she was to be decorated October 30. The ceremony was a simple one taking place in the Prefectural Office. The Fourth Order of the Sacred Treasure generally takes three forms: a medal, to be worn on formal occasions; a button, to be worn with informal dress; and a parchment bearing a citation.

Dr. Hoyt, who was born in Portland, Maine, and educated at Mt. Holyoke College, Class of 1897 Litt. D. first went to Japan under the American Board in 1902 and began her work by teaching science at Kobe College.

In 1913 Dr. Hoyt became the head of the Orlinda Childs Pierce School in Matsuyama, a fine Christian School for Girls conducted by the American Board. She retired from active service in 1942 and came back to the U. S. A. She was "reactivated" in 1947 and returned to Japan to aid her old school in the days of reconstruction following the war and to help it rearrange its academic structure to conform with the educational regulations laid down by the American Occupation authorities.

For a time, following her official retirement in 1942, Dr. Hoyt was Acting Secretary for Japan for the American Board with headquarters at the Congregational Christian International headquarters in Boston.

All through her years of service in Japan, Mt. Holyoke College, her alma mater, has kept a deep interest in their distinguished alumna. Before she went to Japan she taught for two years in America and then was Assistant in Chemistry at Mt. Holyoke for three years.

Although a high grade educationalist, Dr. Hoyt never lost sight of the Christian purpose for which she was in Japan and mothers and daughters flocked to her with their personal problems. In order to perfect her Japanese Miss Hoyt used to go out into the countryside and live for several months at a time in Japanese villages giving herself completely to the study of the language in which she became highly proficient.

Dr. Hoyt expects to sail from Yokohama, Japan, November 24, bound for the U. S. A. where she will retire in her home at 480 West 6th Street, Claremont, California.

amount to which we would add from time to time.

Interest in this plan spread and the other society in our church contributed. Young people, children and older folk contributed and the $250 began to grow, slowly, but it grew. About that time "the determined woman" came to life. She came to our meeting and she said emphatically, "Why, we must make that $250 grow until it is $1,000." She began her determined effort. She talked at our meetings, she talked with the women of the church, she discussed it with friends as she visited them, she talked about it as she met friends on the street.

More than that—she worked. She sold flowers raised in her garden and netted $60 in one summer. She placed a clothes horse in her living room displaying handmade pillow-slips, aprons, pot holders, etc. Callers soon came to shop as well as to chat. She crocheted a lace table cloth that sold for $65 and then energetically turned to the task of making a matching scarf for the sideboard.

Soon money began coming from friends in and out of town. Friends who spent a winter season in our town were so interested that they gave, and our $1,000 became $2,000. Some questioned going on, but not "the determined woman," for now she said, "We must make it $3,000." To shorten my story, let me say quickly that the $3,000 goal was reached and sent to the American Board. The Isabel Graves Fund came into being for the education of a Chinese student—largely through the efforts of one determined woman.

We now have our third girl and we have had letters from each (and photographs) expressing their gratitude. The pictures were framed and hang in the Church Parlor.

Not long ago we gathered to pay farewell tribute to our determined woman who had been released from great suffering. Her crown must hold a glittering jewel.

BEREA CELEBRATES THIRTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Berea Christian Church, Driver, Virginia, met at the home of Mrs. H. P. Harrell on the afternoon of June 8, 1950, with Mrs. L. Wilroy, president, presiding.

After devotionals, business, and study sessions, the president presented Mrs. W. B. Warrington. Since this was the celebration of the thirty-fifth anniversary, Mrs. Warrington, a charter member, gave us a vivid insight into the history of the organization. This indeed was a challenge to the future. The history and devotion of the society inspires us to greater goals and achievements and lifts our minds and hearts to the great task yet ahead. May we always strive to keep these ideals strong and true. What a great honor at this meeting to have three of the society's charter members present: Mrs. Warrington, Mrs. A. E. Ramsey and Mrs. I. W. Johnson.

Mrs. Warrington's brief history of our society was related thus:

"On February 18, 1915, the Woman's Society of Berea Christian Church, Driver, Virginia, was organized. This meeting was held at the Berea Church. Dr. I. W. Johnson called the meeting to order. The constitution was read.

"Each year since the society has been organized, it has sent delegates to the Woman's Missionary Conference.

"The society celebrated its first birthday party at the home of Mrs. W. B. Warrington on June 16, 1927. Each year since 1927 we have had our birthday party and free will offering for missions. Each year the society has observed the World Day of Prayer.

"The twenty-fifth anniversary of the organized work was celebrated on February 11, 1937, at the home of Mrs. H. P. Harrell.

"There has been an increased in-

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Today is the day for feasting and rejoicing. A long time ago before Jesus was born people celebrated a good harvest with feasting and celebrating but in addition to their feasting, they shared. It was their custom to take part of their first fruits to the temple as an offering for God. Next they chose fruits of good condition to take to those who had no one to work for them, or had lost their crops.

The Pilgrim forefathers who came to America gave thanks and we have our national day of Thanksgiving. But I feel that we would like to share as well as to rejoice over our gifts.

Here are some things that might be done by Junior age boys and girls in Virginia. The girls at Bon Air School near Richmond need evening clothes and evening shoes. Could you ask your mothers, sisters and neighbors for discarded evening wear and share it with these girls. Sometimes they use the things for costuming plays. Every month the girls are given a "Perfect Month Dinner" at which time they may wear evening dress. Many of them have never worn dress-up clothing and it means a lot to them. Miss Doris E. Foltz who is their director of religious education says that many girls with behavior problems discipline themselves to go a whole month without a demerit and to be permitted to wear a beautiful dress to the banquet. Some of these girls haven't known much love and they need to have us share. Don't throw away those old evening clothes, clean them, pack them and mail to Interdenominational Foundation for Religious Work, 1444 E. Main Street, Richmond 19, Va.

All may share in this project. There will be 2,513 stockings to fill for the boys and girls, men and women in Virginia's state institutions. Some of these people are no longer a part of their or don't have a family. There is no one to care about them or to wish them a "Merry Christmas." It costs about 50c to fill a stocking and you may fill one or more to make Christmas a day of Thanksgiving too. Write to Miss Erma J. Barker at the Richmond Main Street address given above for a list of items to go in (so all may be reasonably uniform) and for the stocking to fill. If you live in the Richmond area call Miss Barker at 7-5743. Eastern Virginia Conference supports the Foundation for State Work with a small annual sum. It is a part of our responsibility.

So far as I know North Carolina does not have a similar system for penal or hospital institutions. I am sure, however, that boys and girls in the old North State can find ways of sharing in the community or at some nearby point.

It was cold and bitter weather when the Congregationalists landed on the coast of New England. They had a long way to go in finding their peace and making their lives worthwhile, but they did! They helped to found a way of life of which we can be very proud. We have a name for it—we say it is our "heritage." That means that eating turkey and cranberry sauce, plus rich pumpkin pie, that free schools, and freer churches have come to us from them. Let us give thanks!

HAPPY DREAMS.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Through their open windows our nextdoor neighbors can be heard calling to each member of the family at bedtime, "Happy dreams!"

What a delightful preparation for sleep! Few of us realize that mental preparation for the sandman is of greater importance than the physical, especially for the young.

A few days ago my typist telephoned, "Please write about the need for establishing a relaxed, restful attitude before going to bed." Her nephew, she explained, spends nearly every evening playing exciting games with his two sons, aged four and six, telling Indian and Wild West stories, and encouraging pillow fights. "By the time Fred and Bobby should be ready for bed they're wide awake and extremely emotional," said Mary. It was evident that she was quite worried.

Such an evening is indeed a poor preparation for sleep, because of its overstimulating effects. Play, if indulged in just before bedtime because of Father's late home coming, should be quiet. If, occasionally, a game or a story is an exciting and noisy one, it should be followed by the type that is relaxing.

Questions at bedtime should be answered promptly, but all stimulating subjects should be avoided. A leisurely bedtime routine is to be desired. If your little daughter is at an age when she can get herself ready for bed, it is wise to forget the word "hurry." Unnecessary criticism of any kind is not conducive to restful, contented sleep. Dawdling should not be permitted, but it can be prevented without scolding.

One child psychologist suggests taking a youngster who finds sleep difficult to his sleeping room as quietly as possible and letting him put articles of clothing on a chair as if he were putting them to bed, thus suggesting the idea of sleep.

Many little folks make excuses to keep from going to bed or to avoid sleep after they are tucked in. Naturally, parents should discourage this habit. However, no exciting punishments or scoldings should occur. A father of my acquaintance often lightly "paddles" his cunning and altogether charming three-year-old when she calls downstairs requesting attention. He is a doctor, but he fails through his lack of understanding in this case. Even the desire to sleep vanishes when arguments and "forceful" discipline enter the picture.

A definite bedtime schedule—and we would stress the advisability of having it include a gradual slowing down of physical, mental, and emotional activity in preparation—should be a family rule. Lack of, or interruptions of a definite bedtime schedule, as well as too early a set hour for retiring—especially in the summer—will often make the child feel defrauded and resentful. Also, generally arbitrary behavior on the part of the parent is likely to cause it to be taken for granted that a going-to-bed time is an unreasonable privation.

The bedtime hour should be made enjoyable. All children love stories. Bedtime stories should always be free from fear-arousing episodes; they should be amusing but not overexciting. It is best in most cases to choose stories suited to the eldest child; the younger ones will understand enough to hold their attention.

The parent, not the children, must be the judge of the length of time to be devoted to stories and must guard against allowing the formation of the teasing habit—"Please, please, just one more story." Under no circumstances should the storyteller weakly

TWO NEW FELLOWSHIPS ARE BORN.

PLEASANT GROVE.

The Pleasant Grove Church, Bennett, N. C., is losing no time getting its "Mid-Century Advance" program underway. Again it is the young people who are leading the way. This program was proclaimed for all the churches of the W. N. C. Conference, which met November 8 and 9. November 12, twenty young people met and formed their organization, called, "Pleasant Grove Pilgrim Fellowship." This is their first organized Youth Fellowship since 1945.

The following were elected officers: Lloyd Wright, president; Shirley Brewer, vice-president; Gails Brady, secretary-treasurer; and Mary Lee Brown, assistant secretary-treasurer. Shirley Brewer is the program chairman. She will be assisted by Virginia Wright and Merldeen Baxter. The adult advisors are Rev. C. Fred Allred and Marvin Jones, Supt. of the Sunday school. Mettie Brady is the sponsor of this fine group. Their meetings will be twice monthly.

DURHAM.

The Church at Durham, North Carolina, not only has a new building; it has a newly organized Youth Fellowship. Past efforts to organize such a group have failed because of lack of interest. Clifton Walker, newly elected president, says, "Now I believe that we have stimulated enough interest and rallied sufficient support for a thriving Youth Fellowship. I am proud to say we have a considerable amount of talent in our fellowship and the scope of our accomplishment and achievements should be, and, I believe, will be, great."

Twenty members are now on roll with plans already made to increase this number. The following officers were elected: Clifton Walker, president; Curtis Young, vice-president and program chairman; Francis Smith, secretary; and Wade Penny, treasurer. Mrs. Stanley Harrell, the pastor's wife, and Mrs. L. L. Mauldin were elected adult advisors.

Clifton Walker has this to say concerning their worship program: "Our program begins at 7:30. First we have a regular worship program with as many members participating as we can possibly work in. We feel that if we allow our members to take part in the various programs and activities, they will realize their worth and indisplinsibility to the fellowship and will, therefore, take a stronger and more definite interest in the organization. After our worship program, we have recreation. We may either play ping pong, sing familiar songs, or play various musical games. I have observed that one of the most frequent forms of recreation is talking—or maybe I should say 'friendly chats.' After recreation we have refreshments, which are most graciously prepared by our advisors. They are always very good (the refreshments). Next we have adjournment, which consists of forming a friendship circle, singing 'Blest Be the Tie That Binds,' 'Taps,' and repeating our benediction. We are proud of our fellowship and we also realize that we have plenty of room for improvement. Most of all we need the moral support of others to help us along."

THEY'RE REVEREND NOW.

Warren Matthews, president of The Youth Fellowship of the Southern Convention, is now a licensed minister. Upon completion of two years of college work he was granted his license by the N. C. and Va. Conference, which met November 14 and 15. Warren is a Juinor at Elon College; he has worked hard to receive his license. He deserves the hearty congratulations of all the young people of the Southern Convention.

J. Lester Stanley, Gibsonville, and Rosser Lee Clapp, Apple's Chapel Church, were also awarded their licenses. Rosser Lee is a student at Elon College. Much fine work is expected from all these young men who have devoted their life to the greatest work in the world—the preaching of Christ's Gospel.

RETREAT PLANNED.

The officers of the W. N. C. Youth Fellowship have planned a retreat for the afternoon and night of December 2. This retreat, to be held at Albe-marle, is to be one of fun and serious planning for the next rally, which will be December 31, at Asheboro. The officers expect to make plans for the coming year also. The W. N. C. Youth Fellowship meets for a rally on every fifth Sunday.

LIVING IN THE FAMILY OF GOD.

Call to Worship; (Poem)—Lucy Rae Tedder.

Hymn—Christ For The World We Sing (Page 267).

Leader's Talk: Rebecca Smith.

Creed (in unison):

We believe that God is Spirit, and they that Worship him must worship him in Spirit and in truth.

We believe that God is Light, and that if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another.

We believe that God is Love, and that everyone that loveth is born of God and knoweth God.

We believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son.

We believe that he is the Resurrection and the Life, and that whoever believeth in him, though he were dead, yet shall he live.

We believe that we are children of God, and that he hath given us of his Spirit.

We believe that if we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all uncleanness.

We believe that the world passeth away, but he doeth the will of God abideth forever. AMEN.

give in to this plea. Failure on this point develops dissatisfied, disagreeable dispositions.

In closing, one more word about regularity: to make this a rule in going to bed and also in getting up is really important. It is, today, a well established opinion by experts that regularity with regard to sleep is of more importance, both for children and adults, than with regard to any other physical habit.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF LIFE.

LESSON X—DECEMBER 3, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTIONS I appeal to you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies as a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is your spiritual worship.—Romans 12:1.

LESSON: Romans 12:6-8; II Corinthians 8:3-5; Philippians 2:25-30.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Romans 13:1-10.

The Dedicated Body.

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies, a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable (or spiritual) service." Thus does the Apostle Paul draw a practical and practicable conclusion to his argument or reasoning in the great letter to the Romans. God in Christ had granted believers forgiveness of sins and newness of life. It was not by any merit on the part of man, or by any good works that man might do. It was by the grace of God by an act of faith by man. The reasonable response of man would be an act of total dedication. Instead of offering up a dead sacrifice, a man was to present his body, all his powers and capabilities, as a living sacrifice, holy, that is "set apart" and acceptable unto God. Here was the best sacrifice. What a difference it would make in the lives of all of us if we regarded our bodies as living sacrifices, wholly dedicated to God and his service. Here would be a restraining influence against abuse and dissipation. Here would be an incentive to develop our capacities and talents. Here would be the constraining influence that would lead us to do with our might whatsoever our hands and our heads and our hearts found to do in the Master's service and for his sake.

The Dedicated Talent.

In the Master's service there is a place for all. Let no man despise his talents, however few in number. Our gifts have been "according to the grace of God"—a loving heavenly Father gave us as he knew best. And if we use what we have in his name and for his sake, he will bless it beyond our imagination. The fact is that a man of few talents, who uses those talents for God, who is thoroughly consecrated, does more than the man of many talents who does not consecrate them to the Master. The story is told of an elderly woman who scrubbed the floors in a big office building in a certain city, who testified in an open meeting one night that she had reconsecrated her life to the Master, and that by his grace, she was going to be the best scrub-woman in the city. There you have it—giving your best to the Master.

The Dedicated Pocketbook.

"For according to their power, I bear witness, yea and beyond their power, they gave of their own accord, beseeching us with much entreaty in regard of this grace and the fellowship and the ministering to the saints." Here were people giving so liberally and prodigally that the apostle was reluctant to receive the gift—he thought they were really giving too much. But they "besought him with much entreaty" that they be allowed to have a part in the benevolent enterprise of the local church! A little unusual, to say the least. We do not often see it in this fashion in our local churches. It is difficult enough to get people to make gifts to current expenses—they usually have to be besought "with much entreaty" to do that. What a lift it would be to the members of the Finance Committee if the members of the church urged them to receive their gifts which seemed far beyond their ability to give! Quick, the spirits of ammonia! Here, indeed was a case of a dedicated pocketbook.

To get the explanation of this very strange phenomenon, one must read on: "And this they did, not as we had hoped, but first they gave their own selves to the Lord, and to us through the will of God." Because they first of all dedicated, thoroughly dedicated themselves, it was comparatively easy to dedicate their pocketbooks. Could it be that one reason why some folks do not want to be immersed is that they do not want their pocketbooks to be dedicated unto the Lord? Might be, come to think of it. The Kingdom of God will never come simply by money, but it will never come until the followers of Christ dedicate their pocketbooks and all that they stand for to Christ.

The Dedicated Life.

"Receive him therefore in the Lord with all joy; and hold such in honor: because for the work of Christ he came nigh unto death, hazarding his life to supply that which was lacking in your service toward me." It seems to me that the word translated "hazard" comes from a Greek word that means just about the same thing as "betting." Here was a man who had the gambling instinct. But he sublimated it to high and holy ends. He was willing to "bet his life," to hazard his life, in the service of Christ. Nothing could swerve him from his high purpose. He was only one, of course, of the followers of Christ, who at home and abroad, have hazarded their lives, not counting them dear unto themselves, in the name and in the service of the Lord Jesus Christ.

But there is glory and honor enough for all. It sometimes takes as much heroism to serve Christ at home as it does to go to the mission field. It sometimes takes as much courage to stand up for him among friends as it does to stand up for him against enemies. All the heroes of war are not decorated—many of them are unknown and unsung. But the Master knows those who are faithful unto the end. And he will give unto them a crown of life.

NOTE.—The writer of these Notes is indebted to the writer of Tarbell's Notes of the outline used in his comments on today's lesson. He claims no originality for this clear and clever summary of the lesson.

terest in missions by the members of this society since its organization and they stand ready to respond, to help, when needed.

"May we grow in faith, prayer, love, attendance, offerings, service and power for years to come."

A social hour followed. The table was beautifully decorated. The birthday cake was in the center surrounded with pure white blossoms and lustrous green leaves of magnolias. White candles in silver holders made the setting most attractive. Mrs. I. W. Johnson cut the first slice, followed by the other two charter members, then the other members. Our offering was taken and the meeting adjourned with the benediction.

FOR WORLDWIDE BIBLE READING. FROM THANKSGIVING TO CHRISTMAS.

Millions of people in America and throughout the world will be reading the same verses from the Bible in the period from Thanksgiving to Christmas. This program of Worldwide Bible Reading was started by the American Bible Society during World War II and has grown in the years since.

President Harry S. Truman has endorsed this program in a letter to the Bible Society in which he said:

"The founding date, 1816, on the seal of the American Bible Society, bears witness to the long story of that organization's work in spreading the Word of God to all nations. It gives the society itself a venerable quality in keeping with its high purpose.

"In this age of doubt, which sometimes gives way to cynicism and despair, it is of hopeful significance that the Bible remains the world's best seller. The immense contribution of the American Bible Society in making this happy result possible has placed untold millions in its debt. The society has thereby become in the fullest sense of the word an evangel of light, a messenger of good will to men.

"Our days are cast in an age that knows not God and when love, which the Apostle to the Gentiles exalted above faith and hope, does not rule the counsels or the hearts of men. In the spirit of humility, therefore, I call upon my countrymen once again in the sacred season from Thanksgiving to Christmastide to read and to ponder in their hearts the Book by which our fathers lived—the Book which vindicates the ways of God to man.

"Through others falter we doubt not through the ages one increasing purpose runs. In this faith we shall find God, if not in the whirlwind or the tempest, perhaps in a voice that is still and small—a voice bidding him who is athirst to come and whosoever will, to take the Water of Life freely."

The readings selected by poll for this year follow. The theme is "The Bible a Light and Guide." To find help in the reading a person is asked to read regularly, thoughtfully, without hurry, prayerfully and obediently, and to copy out a key verse daily and carry it for helpful reference throughout the day.

A CALL TO PRAYER. SUGGESTED FOR READING IN THE CHURCHES ON SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1950.

Today, Sunday, November 26, 1950, members of 130,000 Christian congregations representing 27 Protestant and Eastern Orthodox communions in the United States are at worship. The air of cities, towns, villages and the open country is filled with the melody of church bells. They are calling believers to pray, to hear Bible truths read and preached, to sing beloved hymns, to make their offerings and to enjoy the companionship of their fellow-members. It is another privileged American Lord's Day of the kind Christians in our land have thankfully accepted as their God-given heritage for over three centuries.

But today has a significance which goes beyond all this. Today ushers in the week in which eight useful interdenominational agencies, having served our communions for scores of years, will give up their separate lives to form in Cleveland, Ohio, a new Christian agency, the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America. The councils and conferences that have guided our interdenominational activities in missions, education, and social ministries, and have promoted Christian solidarity among us, will merge. The communions whose representatives started these eight service units want this to happen. So do the units themselves. Together they can command new resources of leadership, and new financial strength to match the great opportunities which lie ahead of them.

The consultations and testimonies made possible by the new National Council of Churches will strengthen every member church in its effort to exalt Christ in our land.

The sessions in Cleveland this week are of high significance to us all. Effective coverage by the press, by radio and television has been planned. Churchmen who manage or operate such facilities are encouraged to give the Constituting Convention fullest possible public notice. Let us be alert this week to the opportunities these means of communication give us at home to take part in this vital assembly of Christian leaders.

Our churches in their worship today, and during the next seven days, are called to sustain our representatives in the Convention with devout prayer. Next Lord's Day our congregation, along with others throughout the nation, is urgently asked to unite in a Service Rededication to the mission of exalting Christ in America and in the world, and of prayer for new spiritual power in the cooperative Christian forces of our generation. We will respond to this earnest call with glad and loyal willingness. LET US PRAY:

"O Lord, the only Source of all true Wisdom; We invoke Thy blessing upon the Constituting Convention of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America about to assemble in Thy Name, to deliberate upon those things which make for the maintenance, the well-being and the extension of Thy Holy Church among us and throughout all the world; and as Thou has promised to send Thy Holy Spirit to lead Thy people into all truth, so rule the hearts and guide the counsels of the representatives of all Churches, that, protected from the errors of human frailty, they may seek only Thy glory and the welfare of those whom Thou hast redeemed by the death of Thy Son; Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, ever One God, world without end. AMEN.

The fifth annual Norfolk Preaching Mission sponsored by the Norfolk Ministers Association will be conducted during the week of January 14. Dr. Walter Judd, Congressman from Minnesota will, for the fifth consecutive time, open the Preaching Mission on Sunday afternoon. Other speakers from all over the country will appear at both afternoon and evening services during the week.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

"Take me" are little words which mean "pick me up and hold me, be interested in me, love me." They are words that little Phyllis Morningstar, or little Clara Lee Arnold, and sometimes my stocky little chum, Garland Mecimore, often say. When they say "take me" it means that they trust you, and see in you a friend and some sweet fellowship for their impoverished little lives. That "take me" gave the Revs. Clay Farrell and Eugene Tally a thrill as—after they had conducted a song and devotional service—two or three little ones tugged at their coats and begged: "Take me." Have you ever had a motherless, pretty, little child pull at you and say "Take me?" You will remember it if you do!

The man who painted that picture of the Good Shepherd holding a little lamb in his arms had himself held a little child in his arms. Even I know much better what the meaning of that picture of Jesus holding that little lamb means. And when that little lamb was lost and helplessly bleating, "Take me," he didn't lean comfortably back in a swivel chair and say: "Why man, we have overpaid the budget" but; he left the "nintey and nine" and went hunting him till he "took him" and held him in his arms. There are eighty of them right here. Forty-two boys and thirty-eight girls.

You may not have to fight the elements, the darkness, the briars, cliffs and storms to "take one," or help one, of the little folks but you can sit down right now and send a check of gratitude to God that he in his mercy and love has given you the opportunity to help one of them. You can see to it that your church pays more than the budget for these little people. And I am not crying, "Wolf, wolf," when I tell you frankly we need it.

Three of four others of our ministers have come to visit us at our Wednesday night worship here on the Orphanage campus and have delighted the boys and girls. Other ministers are urged to do this same thing. You will get a thrill out of it. So come along. Come by pre-arrangement or no arrangement; any time you will be welcome. The services are in the first building to the left—Johnston Hall, and they are promptly at 7.00 o'clock. Laymen and women and young people are welcome to visit this worship service and join in the songs and worship.

Last night at supper we had the monthly Birthday Party, which was given us this time by the principal of the public school here—three big cakes and three gallons of strawberry ice-cream—by John W. Hill, Ph. D. He knows these children and is glad to do anything he can to help them. Several gifts for the eight honorees came to us from Mrs. Joe Kent's circle in Suffolk, and from Mrs. C. L. Richardson of Norfolk. December birthdays are: Marlene Greogory, Marie Procter, Jean West, Ben Black, Roy Black, Jimmy Burgess, Banks Watkins. Their birthdays are listed in the special edition of the THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Thanks so very, very much for the good report this week.

WILKERSON.

Mr. Arthur Wilkerson, son of John and Amanda Wilkerson, was born June 2, 1899 in Halifax County, Virginia, and passed away September 18, 1950 at his home in White Plains, New York. He married Miss Lillie Long in 1925.

Mr. Wilkerson continued as a member of Liberty Christian Church, Nathalie, Virginia, where he had joined about 1911 in one of the first meetings conducted following the organization of the church.

Besides his wife, he is survived by one daughter, Phyllis; by his mother, of Nathalie, Virginia; and by three sisters: Mrs. W. M. Yeaman, Mrs. C. B. Wilkins, and Mrs. Ed Tuck, all of Nathalie.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. M. W. Andes and Dr. C. E. Newman at Liberty Church, with burial in the Church cemetery.

We give thanks for the sacred memories which gather around his life.

TUCK.

Mrs. Ella Overbey Tuck, daughter of Ditron and Nancy Bowen Overbey, was born in Halifax County, Virginia, on September 26, 1871, and died on October 24, 1950. In 1891 she married W. W. Tuck, who preceded her by death in 1942.

Following her marriage to Mr. Tuck, she transferred her Church membership to Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Virginia, where she loyally maintained her affiliation. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. M. W. Andes, Dr. C. E. Newman, and Rev. R. E. Harris at Union, with burial in the town cemetery.

Mrs. Tuck is survived by four daughters: Mrs. F. D. Royster, Chase City, Va., Mrs. George R. Parkerson, Savannah, Ga., Mrs. Reams Long, and Miss Pearl Tuck, Virgilina, Va.; by four sons: E. A. Tuck, Elvin Tuck, and William Tuck, all of Virgilina, and Lawrence Tuck, Floyd, Va.; by one sister, Mrs. Mollie S. Tuck, Blackstone, and by fourteen grandchildren.

We give thanks for this servant, recalling all in her that made others love her.

"I'D CLIMB THE HIGHEST MOUNTAIN."

PICTURE OF THE MONTH.

In the history of America the "circuit-rider" has filled a large and important place. He is still going strong—though nowadays we refer to him as home missionary, colporteur, or pastor of a "larger parish."

But what of his wife? Some time ago, in her autobiographical novel "Circuit-Rider's Wife," Corra Harris gave us an enlightening look into that interesting area. Now Miss Harris' book has been turned into a film. "I'd Climb the Highest Mountain" introduces us to Mary, wife of William Asbury Thompson, as they begin their life together and he takes his first appointment on a Methodist circuit. Mary's hopes are high, "because she loved William," and her experiences absorbing. Her life is filled with fun at times, with pathos at others, but always it is keyed to the high adventure which comes to those whose lives are lived for the sake of the Gospel and in service to others.

A distinguished cast has been well employed in this 20th-Century production. Susan Hayward is "Mary" and William Lundigan takes the part of the circuit-rider. Gene Lockhart and Alexander Knox also have key roles. The film was made at the locale of the original story, deep in the red Georgian hills, and local people were drawn in as extras and actors for specialized parts. Dr. Wallace Rogers, of Atlanta, performs the marriage ceremony which starts the story.

We have here a warm, down-to-earth tale portraying a period in the life of a courageous and faithful couple who lost themselves in spiritual service to their people. There are one or two sequences we could wish were deleted; but on the whole, it is a film you and your family will thoroughly enjoy.

does not mean that he is trained for the work of the church and the kingdom. I know that he must be trained in biblical teachings and of Christian procedure, but I also know that the Spirit can do much more and do it much more quickly and thoroughly with an educated man than he can with one who is not educated. The college was conceived by the church for the high purpose of Christian education in our communion. When the college was founded, the church knew that it would always present to the church the high privilege of supporting it. Their knowledge was correct. This need for support is greater today than ever. The college is looking to the church for support. It can not do otherwise. It is profoundly grateful and earnestly prays that every individual in every church of the Convention will continue his or her support until the entire $15,000 apportioned is realized. The balance needed is $2,402.06.

in God through personal devotions and public worship.

2. Attendance upon child-caring institutes and conferences of orphanage superintendents and matrons.

3. A better division of time so that there is some time for rest, recreation and personal development.

4. Better wages and old age security for matrons who give such continuous daily, weekly, and yearly service. Matrons are substitute mothers of growing boys and girls. They need more than faint praise for in their hands rests much of the child's fate.

Our Mid-Century Advance includes improvement of the entire physical plant, the farm and dairy, with the thought of making an increasing contribution to the economic status of the entire enterprise.

And finally the building of better public relations both with the owners of the institution—namely the churches of the Southern Convention; and with the ministers, laymen, young people, and women of all our churches; and also to increase our friends and interested persons beyond the bounds of our denomination.

THANKSGIVING THOUGHTS

By CHARLES A. WELLS

There is a heart-warming reassurance in the realization that all of man's perverseness and destructive evil have not altered God's laws by which he governs the universe. The sun still shines with life-giving warmth; the cleansing rains still fall to freshen and restore the vigor of the earth; the earth itself still bursts with goodness for man's benefit and blessing. Man has failed terribly to master his world of human relations, but God has remained faithful to all who will work with him. This will be the silent, perhaps wordless, theme of this Thanksgiving in our distraught day—"How good and faithful is God for all of man's failure and waywardness." The consecration we will want to make as we give thanks at this season might well be, "Draw us away from our prejudices, our hatreds and our fears, that we may share in the strength, the resourcefulness, the faith and the fruitfulness of God."

Evangelistic Advance Continued

[Resolutions formulated at The Conference on Evangelism, in Atlanta, November 20, 1950, and approved by the Regional Council of the Southeast, November 21. See pages 4 and 5 for reports and comments.]

We, the representatives of the Congregational Christian Churches of the Southeast, confront anew our evangelistic task. We humbly confess the inadequacy of our past efforts, our failure to grasp and express the concern of Christ for a groping and stumbling humanity. We find ourselves confronted with the imperative need of a more positive and inclusive evangelism. Our mood of defeatism must be supplanted by the will to grow. We cannot, we dare not shift to others our own responsibility for evangelism. The conviction is upon us that the hour for an evangelistic advance is upon us. Unitedly, therefore, we give ourselves anew to the central task of the Church, that of making disciples for Christ.

We express herewith our expectation as revealed in the reports, presentations and discussions; these expectations being the pledge of our efforts and our recommendations to all who are concerned:

1. That the Southeast Regional Commission on Evangelism will take the initiative in setting up an immediate and comprehensive program of alerting, training and directing the committees of the various conferences, and that especial attention be given to zero churches.

2. That the conference committees on evangelism will take up the plan, reaching back into each association or smaller unit; that conference leaders will take steps to create these committees where they do not exist.

3. That the churches be requested to accept the program as set forth herein, including the national goal of 10% growth annually, and that for every church some contact be made toward this evangelistic objective.

4. It is also expected that all the agencies allied in the work of our common Christian task be urged to join in the fellowship of the concerned, that we may move concertedly toward the evangelization of this great and growing section of the nation.

Lester Stanley, who received local Conference Licensure. Mr. Stanley is from Gibsonville Church. He is supplying the pulpit during the absence of the Pastor, Rev. J. Harold Loman, who is recovering from an operation.

OAKLAND LOSES TWO VENERABLE MEMBERS.

Oakland Christian Church, Chuckatuck, Virginia, has recently lost by death two members, Mrs. Charles H. Pitt and Mrs. G. Curtis Griffin, each of whom had been members for over half a century. Mrs. Pitt had already celebrated with her husband, Mr. C. H. Pitt, their fifty-seventh wedding anniversary, and she had been a member of the church since before their marriage. Mrs. Griffin was already a member of the church when Dr. I. W. Johnson became its pastor more than fifty years ago. But their membership at Oakland was characterized by something more than mere length of years—it was characterized by a love and loyalty, and by faithfulness and fruitfulness, and by consistency and consecration. Neither of the women was large in physical stature, but they were big in faith and in Christian character. They were devoted wives and mothers, friendly neighbors, wise counselors, and true Christians. Their husbands praise them, and their children rise up to call them blessed. The Church on earth is richer because they lived and were members of it, and the Church in Heaven is richer because they have gone to it. Thanks be unto God for these Christian women.

ONE WEEK-END IN A SUPERINTENDENT'S LIFE.

Sunday, November 19, was a good day. I had the privilege of spending the day with Rev. R. Eugene Tally and Rev. Raymond T. Grissom. At 10 a. m. I went to New Elam with Mr. Tally, where I taught a very interested adult class in a good Sunday School. At the morning service I received a thoughtful and generous introduction from Pastor Tally at the church service. The service was well attended and I presented to the church the work the Convention is endeavoring to do through its conferences, boards, institutions, and churches. New Elam is one of our older churches, being served many years by Rev. J. W. Holt. Mr. Tally has a loyal interested people.

After a delicious dinner in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Holt of the New Elam community, Mr. Tally and I went to Shallow Well, near Sanford, where I delivered a sermon in connection with the dedication of a beautiful new building completed some months ago by Rev. R. T. Grissom, pastor, and his people. The dedication service took place at the morning service, when Dr. William Moseley Brown of Elon College delivered the sermon. At the afternoon service the theme was "The Dedicated Life." Pastor Grissom works upon the assumption that a new building calls upon his people for dedicated lives.

Following a bountiful supper at the home of Deacon and Mrs. Earl Johnson of Zion Christian Church, we went to the church for the evening service. Here we have another of our older churches. Zion and New Elam were among the churches which composed our North Carolina conferences when the Foreign Mission program, as well as Elon College, the Christian Orphanage, and others of our agencies were born. As at New Elam, I was greeted by an enthusiastic audience and there we talked about the work of our church. Congratulations and thanks to Pastors Tally and Grissom for a great day with them.

Following the service at Zion, I went to Sanford with Mr. and Mrs. Tally and their daughter Phylis, where I took the train for Atlanta. After a good night's rest I was ready for a busy day on Monday attending the Regional Evangelism Conference directed by Dr. W. C. Timmons of our New York office. This meeting was attended by representatives from all our conferences in the Southeast. On Tuesday, the Regional Council of the Southeast met in Atlanta, composed of most of the people attending the Conference on Evangelism. Among those from the Southern Convention were Dr. R. L. House, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, and Rev. W. J. Andes.

This week-end is not so unusual for a Superintendent. Difficult and energy-consuming as they are, visits to our churches and services with our good pastors, bring joy in fellowship.

W. T. SCOTT.

The 1949-50 Conference Year has closed, but there is still time for our churches to send apportionment contributions to the Convention Office. If directed, these may be credited for the 1949-50 Conference Year. Most of our churches have tried to reach all conference apportionments, many have paid in full, and all could reach these important goals if extra effort is made. The institutions, boards and agencies of our church are dependent upon our churches. If your church has not "paid in full" its 1949-50 apportionment, won't you make an effort to see that it does make every endeavor to do so?

Sympathy is extended to President and Mrs. L. E. Smith who are both patients at Alamance General Hospital, Burlington. Mrs. Smith was painfully injured by a fall in her home, and Dr. Smith is being treated for leg infection. Both are improving and their many friends hope for them an early and complete recovery.

Our Principles

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

ADVANCE FROM ATLANTA

The United Evangelistic Advance will be concluded in December. The Conference on Evangelism was held in Atlanta last week to plan for a continuing program of evangelism in the Congregational Christian Churches of the Southeast. A representative group met and endeavored to discover more clearly God's intention through the Gospel and our particular share in it.

Dr. Wofford C. Timmons was present, representing the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life. He called upon us all to "Register our response to the call of God's gracious spirit that has sounded anew in our hearts, moving us to seek more diligently the multitudes outside the fellowship of the Church." He voiced the conviction of the group in his conclusion: "Beginning with ourselves and reaching to every member, there is evident need of a spiritual renewal that will make us hear and answer the call, finding expression in clear, definite, warm-hearted Christian witness, sharing the saving faith and fellowship that the Church of Christ has to offer."

Many voices were heard and many testimonies were given during the Conference. The fact was reiterated that laymen can be persuaded to visit in the interest of the spiritual as well as the financial health of the church. Visitation has been demonstrably successful throughout the United Evangelistic Advance. Seasonal, fellowship and radio evangelism were advocated. Flying Squadrons, Circuit Riders, Ministerial Bands, as well as Preaching Missions have been used with marked success. Surveys were recommended.

"Evangelism must have ethical content," said one. "We must beware of lecturing when we should be preaching," said another. All agreed that major attention should be given by Conferences to zero churches, the 1740 churches in our fellowship which registered no gains in membership last year.

"Beware of making evangelism synonymous with Christian education," counseled one. "Evangelism makes spiritual demands upon us; we must straighten out morally," testified another.

It was the consensus of opinion that we are interested in conservation as well as reclamation. Members must be assimilated. That means that we must have churches worth joining, that our organizations must be amplified and improved. The identical criticism may be levelled against visitation evangelism as against mass evangelism when people are received, then neglected and lost. The evangelistic task is not completed when members are received.

Rev. Harold E. Martin, State Conference Committee Chairman on Evangelism for Connecticut, was present to discuss the question: "How is a vital, authentic evangelism started in the local church, and how does it inhere in the total Christian enterprise?"

Mr. Martin analyzed the statistics resulting from the United Evangelistic Advance in order to find what the Spirit is saying to the churches through these statistics. He was disturbed by the fact that our churches throughout the nation had a total gain of 90,340 members in 1949, but a total loss of 68,920. "These statistics," he insisted, "cry out to us that we must cut our losses by better churchmanship and we must increase the production of new members." How can these ends be accomplished?

So many of us think of evangelism only in terms of getting new members. "Plug the leaks in our membership," says Harold Martin. We must do a better job in our Sunday schools and pastor's classes. Schools of churchmanship should be instituted for adults. The cell method of religious nurture, in which small groups are called on to work on specific projects or studies, was advocated. A small group can "meet together for prayer, search the Scriptures, investigate social action projects, roam the world with our missionaries, or face ultimate questions of faith in the study of theology."

Another way to plug the leak in church membership is the Colony or Neighborhood system of parish organization. Mr. Martin recommends that each area or section of the parish be set up with captains or leaders who, by telephone, neighborly visits and personal contact make every individual member feel himself to be an object of church concern. Mr. Martin speaks out of a rich and fruitful pastoral experience when he says that "Every member, new and old; every resident of the parish, old or young, can be found, known, and fitted into the church life by personal introduction or sponsorship. Personal contact in small neighborly and friendly groups is the key that unlocks many a heart and lets love do its healing work."

Mr. Martin points to one of our besetting sins when he declares that, "Many churches do not know where their members move to when they leave town. Most pastors fail to warn their brethren that church members are moving to their parish. We seem to prefer to keep people on our rolls as non-resident members than to have them active in another church."

He has put his finger on problem No. 1 in our national fellowship. The suicidal practice of thinking in terms only of one's local church is undermining our evangelistic structure. Ministers across the country could help plug this appalling leak in our national membership by taking time to find where our churches are located and by so informing their members when they move. Our national membership will never rise to a commendable level until we unitedly and resolutely plug this leak.

The next step, according to Mr. Martin, is to devise ways to increase our production of new members. "We cannot share our faith," he insisted, "unless we have a method of discovering and hunting up new people in our community. And that cannot be done until some group of laymen—the deacons or a membership committee—is everlastingly on the job." The crux of our evangelistic problem, according to Mr. Martin, is this: "It is not enough to say that the Gospel spreads from person to person, as 'the wind bloweth where it listeth.' We must devise a method by means of which laymen may effectively share their faith: by means of which men and women whose lives are empty, and yet who know not what it is that is lacking, will be personally invited to hear The Word and to follow The Way."

Mr. Martin has a strong word in season for the churches of our fellowship. "We are holding back from fear and distaste of the strong emotional overtones and the sentimental pioucity of much that has gone by the name of evangelism or revivalism. Revivalism means far more than a week or two of special meetings—effective as that may be. Revival of spiritual power in the souls of men and the development of spiritual understanding and Christian character is the task and the opportunity of every Christian and of every church. The deep currents of emotion, the strong feeling and noble idealism of Christianity at its best are not limited to the preacher in the pulpit nor to the revivalist in special meetings. The steady flame of faith, the deep loyalties of the spirit, the inner voice of conscience, the continuing will to do good rather than evil, the indignation of the righteous against the wickedness of men—this is the Gospel of Christ which saves men's souls and redeems their lives. Our congregational way of worship—dignified, meaningful, beautiful—enables us to pray to the God of our salvation in sincerity and in truth. Our intellectual and reasonable approach to the things of the spirit enables us to worship God with our minds, as well as our hearts. We have this treasure, this heritage of faith, this knowledge of the Gospel, this fire shut up in our bones, this candle flame of faith by which we walk. Why don't we share the faith we have with this troubled world?"

A diligent study and application of these Atlanta findings and pronouncements will bring new life to each and every church in the Southeast.

EVANGELISM STRESSED BY JAPANESE CHRISTIANS

The National Christian Council of Japan, currently sponsoring a five-year evangelism campaign inaugurated in October, 1949, is stressing layman-to-layman evangelism within the various vocations, jobs, and professions.

The Council also plans to set up eight centers in the islands to aid in the campaign which is also including house-to-house visits made by minister-layman teams.

Departing from New York to join in the campaign on December 10, Dr. H. H. McConnell, the Federal Council's Field Secretary for Evangelism, claimed that "the growth of the laymen's movement offers one of the most encouraging aspects of the Christian picture in Japan. Probably at no other time in this nation's history has there been such a great opportunity for the spread of Christianity."

Meanwhile, a special commission of the National Christian Council, which represents an estimated 213,- 000 Japanese Protestants, has been holding meetings since the inception of the campaign "to discover the fundamental strategic policies to be applied in the field of evangelism." With study groups cooperating with the World Council of Churches study program on evangelism, particularly in industrial areas, the Japanese commission is exploring cooperative evangelism, evangelism in vocation and in the home. The commission has also recommended study of the objectives of evangelism, problems within the church, and the re-education of ministers.

To aid Japanese Christians in the task of evangelism, the Audio-Visual Activities Commission of the Japanese National Christian Council is encouraging the use of "paper theatres" (Kamishibai) for street and home evangelism. These "paper theatres," a series of hand-drawn illustrations, usually depicting the life of Christ, have been reported very successful in reaching the general public in Japan.

CHURCH EXTENSION IN ACTION

Burlington, North Carolina, becomes Exhibit A in Convention Church Extension. Two new projects have been initiated this year. Church extension has moved successfully beyond the stage of mere discussion; it has gone into action. As example becomes contagious and convincing, the tempo of church extension throughout the Convention may be accelerated.

The noteworthy and unique feature of the Brookwood project is its practical demonstration of the fruits of church-union in advance. We read that "The Word of God is not bound." Thank God, neither is the spirit of Church Union.

We rejoice in the fine demonstration of Congregational Christian and Evangelical-Reformed cooperation in Burlington. Please God, we shall witness other united efforts of this kind in our area in the near future. Blessings on Brookwood United Church. God-speed to the idea.

Launch Out Into the Deep

By REV. R. E. BRITTLE, President, Eastern Virginia Conference.

It is a fascinating and an unusually truth-revealing picture suggested by the setting, or context, of these words. The Master, who had been teaching the anxious multitude which followed him, turned his eyes and attention from the crowd to a few disciples who were professionally fishermen. They, who were among the best fishermen of that day, had toiled all night and had accomplished nothing. Now, they had taken in their nets, were washing them to put them away for future use, when suddenly there sounded a voice calm and clear, "Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught." Humanly, they had every reason to believe they had tried long and hard enough. They knew they had put their best knowledge and skill into their effort. Yet, in a spirit of ready obedience they said, "Master, we have toiled all night, and have taken nothing; nevertheless, at thy word we will let down the net." And when they had done this, they enclosed such a great multitude of fishes that their nets began to break.

According to my humble belief, this very sudden realization of success was not a mere turn of chance, or luck, but—"at thy word we will"—because they determined to do his will and his bidding in response to the command to "Launch out into the deep."

In many phases of human endeavor, the greatest degree of success has been realized only when those individuals involved had the courage and faith and zeal to launch out beyond the ordinary range, not necessarily directed by an audible voice, but led by the challenge of opportunity to do more and greater things than ever before.

Especially in these days and years of great physical progress, comfortable living, multiplied conveniences, has the Master called unto the Church which he calls, "My Church," to launch out into the deep where we have never been before and to accomplish that which is beyond what we have ever endeavored to do before. Is it not true that we have looked back upon the things that we have accomplished with ease and without much worry and used these as a basis for our future goals rather than looking at the greatness of the opportunities of service to the Kingdom which thrust themselves before our eyes?

Let us look searchingly at our own records as a church and a conference to see if the records which are now a part of our own history may reveal something which may spur us to a greater activity.

Our conference records show that our net growth or increase in membership for the past ten years has been shamefully slow; notwithstanding the fact that the population has increased so as to become crowded to the extent that in some places people sleep in automobiles and some families live in garages.

We must come to the realization now of one simple fact. The time has been when we depended largely or almost solely on the Revival Meeting or some period of services with evangelistic emphasis for the ingathering of souls to increase our church membership; but no longer is this true. In this day, in order to get new church members we have to launch out and find them one by one. At the beginning of a revival meeting in almost any one of our churches, the pastor of that church knows who and about how many to expect to unite with his church before the meeting begins.

Life is complex and competition is keen, so that we are going to have to work in-season and out-of season, and more diligently to grow numerically. Could it be true that we have been choice in inviting people into church membership to the neglect of many of a certain social order, seemingly prompted by the attitude that man is made for the good he can do the Church, rather than the Church to serve every class or strata of humanity?

As a conference, we have had one of the most fertile fields for growth of new and young churches, if we had only launched out. Picture back ten or twelve years ago and see the housing projects which have sprung up. Picture fields with growing corn or woods, or even waste land, which now now have busy streets, stores, shops, schools, homes and yards where children play. I ask you with all the sorrow of my heart, because I love the Church, into how many of these areas have we gone? Two of our pastors and their churches are leading now in this direction, but over how many of these gold mines have we looked and walked with seeming indifference? I do not—I must not—blame the Methodist and Baptist, and other churches for going in and establishing places of worship and beginning to minister to the spiritual needs of these, many of whom are estranged people. Rather, to my mind, the sight of each one of these little churches is a declaration of the greatness of these churches, because they are trying to serve—and of course the denomination to which each belongs is strengthened thereby. And our Church would be a stronger and a greater church if we had done likewise.

Someone, at this point, might ask if we do not have a Home Missions Committee. Yes, we have a Conference Home Missions Committee which has done a magnificent work as far as we supported it and allowed it to go and work, but we have afflicted this committee with partial paralysis by withholding that support without which it was utterly impossible to do what it desired so much to do. The same has been true to a certain extent in the case of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention.

I refuse to play the role of a pessimist even in the face of these facts. I am proud and grateful for the history and the accomplishments of this conference. I love the Christian Church. I love that Church which was organized, even though out of dissension, which declared that Christian was a sufficient name. I am grateful for what the Church has done for me—far more than I shall ever be able to do for the Church. I am proud of the Eastern Virginia Conference, never having been a member of another; this conference where the Christian Church was born and cradled, but with all of that pride and gratitude, I am not satisfied with what we have done and are doing.

We do not have a right to boast of our growth or increased activities as a result of mergers with other denominations, as indicative of a Christian spirit as that may be. Our growth should be of ourselves and within our own bounds.

Elon College has struggled for existence and at times almost grappled with death as a result of the negligence and indifference of a great portion of our Church. The time has now come when we have the opportunity to launch out into the deep with regard to our college. Our support of the Elon College Sustaining Fund is the opportunity and the deep into which we may launch. If we are truly sorry for our indifference and

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

WHY SHOULD I BE THANKFUL?

As a rule, the last Thursday in November is designated as a day of Thanksgiving. It is the custom for the President of the United States to proclaim the last Thursday in November as a day of Thanksgiving and prayer, and call upon the people of the United States, without reference to race or creed, to betake themselves to their accustomed places of worship and give thanks unto almighty God for his goodness and mercy. It is also the custom for the governors of the several states of the Union to join with the president in his Thanksgiving proclamation and urge upon their people the observance of the same. All have received blessings and all are requested to give thanks.

In the current issue of a nationally-known magazine, a writer raises the question as to why we should give thanks. The first reason he gives is that we are Americans and live in America. If we were Europeans, he wonders for which we could give thanks—for torn-up streets, burned out houses, smutty walls, for row after row of graves, for the privilege of doing whatever somebody else commands, for broken homes, a dark future, etc.? He draws a dismal picture. Life in such surroundings would doubtless be drab and wearisome, but even so the things most precious to a Christian are not of this world eternally, but of the world to come. A man should be thankful not only for what this world has to offer. The Lord never promised an easy life, but for those who take up their crosses and follow him, he would promise a life of peace and happiness that shall never end.

As for life in this country, there are many things for which we should be thankful—for life, health, a home, family, happiness, and hope. The things for which we are urged to give thanks on this day of Thanksgiving are usually material prosperity that through the providence of God has been given to our country and to our people. On this score there are abundant reasons to be thankful. We have enjoyed most productive seasons. Our lands have brought forth bountifully. Our industries have multiplied beyond expectation. Our wealth has increased as never before. Very few able-bodied men willing to work are denied the privilege of earning a living for themselves and their families. Unemployment has been reduced to the minimum. Our country is beautiful and prosperous.

We should be grateful that our cities and our lands have been spared the devastation of war such as has been visited and is being visited on other countries. Nothing has happened to disrupt our normal ways of life. We should be grateful. As we give thanks on this Thanksgiving Day, we should be reminded, however, of the hundreds and thousands of our men and boys who are today engaged in armed conflict on the other side of the world. Many of them are giving their lives now that we may have the peace and prosperity that we enjoy. We should remember them in our prayers and withhold nothing that would add to their comfort and safety. Their families who are in this country would appreciate a word of thoughtfulness and kindness from the ones of us who are here and are spared such anxiety and sorrow.

Then, too, there are yet those among us who are unfortunate—broken homes with helpless children, children who are without father, mother, or friend. On these Thanksgiving occasions we are expected to divide our living with those who are less fortunate than we. It is the spirit of Christ that prompts us to affectionate consideration and material assistance to the needy. "The poor ye shall have with you always." The poor provide an opportunity to express the gratitude in our hearts for the spiritual blessings and the eternal hope that has been given to us by our heavenly Father through Christ our Lord.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The support of Elon College becomes more and more the responsibility and the privilege of the church. This is as it should be. Elon College is a church institution. It is designed and committed to the service of the church. Through the years the church has given the college its support, and under the influence of the church the college has become an influential institution in the field of Christian higher education in the South. The present material value of the college will exceed the total amount given to the college by the church through all of its long years of service. Not a single dollar given to Elon College by the church has been lost. On the other hand, all contributions have proven good investments from a financial standpoint. The college has not only conserved and invested safely and profitably the contributions made by the church, but it has rendered invaluable service to the church in the matter of training its leadership. The majority of the pulpits in our Convention are occupied by men who were trained in part or in whole at Elon College. The majority of our churches in the Convention have influential members who were students at Elon College for a part or the whole of their college lives. The same is true of many of the pulpits and churches of other denominations. Elon College has made a notable contribution to the cause of Christian Higher Education and Christian leadership in many sections of our country.

It is somewhat disappointing to find that the total contributions by our churches and Sunday schools to Elon College have not amounted to the amount asked for by the Convention. We are encouraged to know that our churches have from now until January 1 in which to complete payments on their apportionments for the college. All contributions received from now until January 1, unless otherwise directed, will be credited to the 1950 apportionment.

At Home and Abroad

AT A WORK CAMP IN JAPAN.

Cynthia Smith, young missionary to Japan, describes the work camp held there during the summer under the World Council of Churches:

Of all the things I did this summer, the month at the International Work Camp wins all prizes as the one I shall remember longest. We were working on a cooperative farm about forty miles from Tokyo, run by forty-eight Japanese families who had had a cooperative farm in Manchuria until the end of the war, when they were sent back to Japan. The land they bought from the government here was once the pasture land for the Emperor's horses, so you can be sure it was rich and fertile. Although they owned horses and machinery in common, the farmers were discouraged because their standard of living was still unusually low, even for Japanese farmers. We found out about their worries and problems little by little, as we became better acquainted with them. Some of the younger farmers took us into their confidence and asked us for help in planning for the future of their farm. I was greatly interested in all that I learned from the farmers because I had often heard that in the present system of small farms in Japan about the only hope of progress for the farmers is just such cooperative farms as we were trying to help.

Most of the thirty work campers were Japanese students and American teachers like myself. Besides us we had an Australian, a boy from the Philippines, and two Chinese boys, to give the camp a real international flavor. We didn't realize that the farmers were internationally-minded, too, until one day when we were weeding sweet potatoes. We had what we called "Futaba Dai Gakko,"—the farm was Futaba farm, and Dai Gakko means university—and on that particular day we were holding sessions of the foreign language department. The Americans were teaching English phrases to the farmers, the Japanese campers were teaching Japanese to us, and pretty soon the farmers started teaching Manchurian, Korean and Russian to us. We were all on our knees in the sweet potato patch, singing Korean songs, saying "hello" in Chinese, and saying "good bye" in Russian.

In case you think that all we did was weed sweet potatoes, I assure you that that was only part of it. We were there to help the farmers do whatever work they most needed doing at the time, and as a result, our fields of endeavor were varied and diverse. You can best tell all we did from the song with which we regaled visitors to the camp:

If we'd a known you were coming,
we'd dug a ditch,
built a barn,
threshed some wheat,

If we'd a known you were coming,
we'd a pulled a weed—
how d'ya do,
how d'ya do,
how d'ya do?

If you didn't call us a work camp, you might call us a watermelon-consuming unit. At first, when the farmers brought us out huge slabs of watermelon, we were afraid we were depriving them, but we soon discovered that, fast as they got the watermelons to market, they still had more than they could handle. We were welcomed as one way of disposing of their surplus. With so much extra watermelon literally rotting on the ground, we were happy to give a couple of big ones to some children who came from a neighboring village to our vacation Bible school. They came back the next day with the hearty thanks of all their neighbors. Watermelon is so expensive, most of them had never eaten any; and they had divided the two watermelons we had given them into enough pieces so that fifty-two people had all had some.

"LIFT UP YOUR EYES."

If you are one of those who received and have been using the devotional booklet sent out as a present from the China Christian Colleges, you have found this quotation from I Corinthians 15:58: "Be sure that nothing you do for Him is ever lost or wasted."

It is good for us to remember this thought as we ponder happenings in China today. The missionaries, their Chinese colleagues, their friends in this land, can take fresh heart as they and we labor for the Church in China.

THE MANIFESTO

may well become the most important document in Chinese Church history. The intents of the Manifesto are two: (1) to establish an autonomous Christian Church in China, and (2) to make that Church self-supporting and self-propagating.

The president of Huachung College has this to say for continuing financial support for a season:

"At the Conference on Higher Education in Peking held early in June of this year, it was officially stated by representative heads of the Government that Christian colleges and universities might freely receive funds for educational purposes, so long as the funds are free of political strings. To refuse those funds would mean simply adding to the burden of the Government, because those institutions should continue to operate for the benefit of the Chinese people, which is our purpose.

"This does not mean that the Christian educational institutions are to continue to be supported by funds from abroad for an indefinite length of time. There ought to be, however, a definite program with a definite plan to see that those institutions are adequately supported in China before funds from abroad cease to come.

"It is quite clear to us here, not only in Huachung but in many of the Christian colleges and universities, that the moment funds from abroad should cease to come now, many of the thirteen Christian colleges and universities will have to close up immediately, or be handed over to the Government.

"As Chinese citizens and as educational institutions in China, we are definitely against imperialism, feudalism, and official capitalism; and as members of the churches in China, we ought to work towards self-propagation of the Gospel, self-government and self-support. Self-government is practically achieved; self-propagation of the Gospel is near to realization; but even for the churches, it will be some time before self-support can become effective. But it ought to be our ideal."

The Guy Thelins have reached this country, and their present address is R. F. D. No. 4, Box 14, Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

The latest news bulletin we have received still leaves Dick and Dorothy Jackson and their children, and Edward and Frances Riggs, in Foochow, with the notation that they expect to leave soon for Hongkong.

SUFFOLK DISTRICT MEETING.

The Suffolk District Mission Study Institute of Congregational Christian Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference, held Wednesday, November 15, in the Franklin, Virginia, church in morning and afternoon sessions, was well attended.

Devotional service was conducted by Mrs. B. V. Hargrave, with solo by Rev. W. A. Grissom accompanied by Mrs. J. A. Nichols. Mrs. T. Hayes Holland, Franklin, district superintendent, presided and later on the program outlined the year's work by local societies.

Miss Margret Blemker of Boston, secretary of Near East and Europe of the American Board for Foreign Missions, was principal speaker of the day. She reviewed the current mission study book, "The Near East and You."

Having for three years served on the faculty of American School for Girls in Izmir, Turkey—a focal point of Near East mission and educational activities—Miss Blemker with her firsthand knowledge of the work and overall conditions in this field sees its objectives as of major importance in matters of state as well as church. She charted the area under discussion on a map as visual aid to those present. The presentation was made more impressive by the speaker's personal charm.

Mrs. Wm. T. Harrell of Suffolk, president of the Conference, spoke on the importance of interdenominational efforts of church women as a great need in today's international crisis. She forcefully urged that every community, large or small, cooperate to this end. Hearty affirmation of Mrs. Harrell's message was expressed by Mrs. E. P. Jones of Franklin in an open forum response. Mrs. Raby of Windsor followed with a report on success achieved through the unified efforts of church women there.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING?

You can help the editor of this page tremendously, if you will do three things:

1. Send me a note—a postal card will do—telling about any special event the women are sponsoring in your church or community. People nearby might like to participate, if it is a public program, and people far away might be able to use the idea.

2. Send in copies of programs you have presented successfully, a devotional talk you have given, a skit you have used, a poem you have written, a prayer you have thought out. This kind of sharing we have not had to any great extent, and we need it.

3. Send in ideas of the kind of things you would like to see on this page, criticism of the present type of materials presented, suggestions for improvement.

I shall be interested to see who reads this page—some tell me that hardly any of our women do!—and responds to my requests. I hope I shall not be disappointed and have only "silence gives consent" as my answer!

Yours in hopes of a better page,

INTERDENOMINATIONAL PROGRAMS AT WOODS CHAPEL.

World Community Day was observed in the Woods Chapel Church in the Valley of Virginia Conference on November 5 at 7:30 p. m., under the direction of Mrs. Clyde Koon. Those taking part on the program were ladies from Emmanuel Lutheran Church of New Market, the Cedar Grove Brethren Church, Bethlehem and Mayland Christian Churches, as well as the young people and ladies of Woods Chapel. Each group rendered special music along with the program.

We had a very good attendance and many nice gifts were received and dedicated.

A Thank Offering service was also held in the church and we invited two young ladies from our Mayland Church to put on the skit about Elon.

We feel that much was gained through these programs, not only in material gifts, but in spiritual enlightenment as well.

YOUNG ADULTS FORM MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The young adult class of Smithwood Christian Church organized itself as a missionary society on Tuesday, November 7. There were eleven present, and it is hoped that the group will grow.

Officers are: President, Miss Gracie Coble, Rt. 2, Liberty, N. C.; Vice-President, Mrs. Raymond Jessup, Rt. 1, Liberty; Secretary-Treasurer, Miss Connie Mae Wright, Rt. 1, Liberty.

This is a pattern which Sunday school classes in other churches may wish to follow, meeting monthly and using the packet of material provided for the missionary societies of our churches.

BURLINGTON HAS THANKSGIVING SERVICE.

According to "This and That," bulletin of the Women's Auxiliary of the First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., fifty-five women met for the Thanksgiving service. Mrs. H. E. Robinson, the pastor's wife, spoke on "Christian Growth," emphasizing the importance of church-related colleges, and especially Elon.

Following Mrs. Robinson's talk, Mrs. J. D. Strader and Mrs. Ed King presented the skit given in the Thank Offering program to each society, portraying two women discussing the project of redecorating Whitley Auditorium at Elon.

The total amount of the Thank Offering received from all the circles was $245.35. This is about $50 more than the amount given by Burlington for the Thank Offering project last year.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF THE GOSPEL.

LESSON XI—DECEMBER 10, 1950

MEMORY SELECTION: Let a man so account of us, as of ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God. Here, moreover, it is required of stewards, that a man be found faithful.—I Corinthians 4:1-2.

LESSON: Acts 8:418; 18:1-7; I Cor. 9:16-17; II Cor. 5:17-20; Phil. 1:12-18; 2:12-18.

Much of this issue of THE SUN is taken up with the report on the Conference on Evangelism held the past week in Atlanta. Reading these reports raises the question in the writer's mind: "What, if any, is the difference between 'The Stewardship of the Gospel,' and Evangelism?" Dr. Hardcastle possibly explained this very question in his notes this week, but, for possibly for the third time in more than three times that many years, they have gone astray in the mails. We know he sent them!

"They therefore that were scattered abroad went preaching the word." Even before his conversion, Saul was helping to spread the Gospel, for it was due to persecution that the first "evangels" went out into the "foreign" field with the message of redemption. Persecution at home began to bring about marked changes in the thinking of the disciples. They ceased to be reformed Jews and became Christians; they recognized the fact that their message was for the whole world, and not just for their little nation; they were becoming daily more sure of themselves and the cause they represented.

When Philip went down to the city of Samaria to preach the good news, the response was immediate. The multitudes gave heed, and there "was much joy in that city." There always is much joy in a city when its people truly turn to God.

Paul tells us that "if a man is in Christ, he is a new creature"! And if any man should know this, Paul is the man. His whole life was an example of the power of Christ's gospel to change men. And let us make no mistake, that power is as great today as it was in the early days of the Church. Paul reminds us that this change is wrought by God, not by men, and he also reminds us that it brings us great privileges—and also the accompanying responsibilities, for we become "ambassadors on behalf of Christ"—we become "Stewards of the Gospel."

Not all of us can become Pauls, or Luthers, or Livingstons; but we can help the friend who is sorrowing or the neighbor who is in distress. Not all of us can become martyrs for the faith, but "our stewardship of the gospel may call for daily witnessing, weekly giving, hourly living that appears insignificant to us, but is all important to the kingdom."

Dr. Lauback has been most successful in his work for literacy among the more backward peoples of the world. One reason for this success has been his requirement that "each one teach one." In the stewardship of the gospel it is just as necessary that "each one win one," and two, and three—that each one, by his daily living and conduct set an example which will lead others into the pathway that leads toward God.

CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARY.

stituents as "The Church in the Wildwood."

It was here that Superintendent Bennett preached his first sermon forty years ago June 9th, 1910, when he was a licensed ministerial student at Old Union Christian College, at Merom, Indiana, now known as Merom Institute. In the fall of the same year, he was ordained to the Christian Ministry. He had been invited to come to Big Springs Church on that long ago date by Emerson Watson, member of the church, and son of the late Mr. Warren Watson, long time trustee of Merom College. These "boys" were students at that time at Union Christian College and good friends. They were pioneers in Christian service. The Big Springs Church needed the help of a minister, so after Simon's first sermon he was invited to become the pastor, and was to return in two weeks to preach again. Simon came, and helped and he has been "preaching and helping" throughout the denomination ever since.

It has been Superintendent Bennett's custom through the years to return, at rather regular intervals near this date, to celebrate his beginnings here. At least every five years he has taken time from a busy schedule elsewhere to return to this little church, and preach to its congregation in May.

It should be mentioned also, that the Thirty-fifth Anniversary was celebrated in May, 1945. This was a most significant and memorable event for members and friends of the church. Mr. V. Dewey Annakin, who is a lay minister and a Professor of Sociology at Indiana State Teachers College, Terre Haute, has come for several years as pastor of this church.

It was his desire that Superintendent Bennett take charge of the order of public services for the day. At this special service of Christian expression, three members were received into the church, nine children were baptized, and the Holy Communion was administered. A real surprise came as a climax to this service. The Big Springs Church clerk, Miss Irma Pound, had chosen this as her wedding day. The fact had been kept a closed secret to all the people of that community, until the consummation, as it was known only to the couple involved and the minister officiating.

Again five years passed to 1950. Forty years of Christian Ministry warranted another special observance, so the church members from Merom were invited to come to Big Springs to hear this anniversary sermon. It was fitting that Mr. and Mrs. Emerson Watson should have an active part in planning the program. Speakers participating included Mr. V. Dewey Annakin, Mr. Alan Jones and Mr. Shirley Green. Special music was contributed by the Watson's granddaughter, little Betty Dufer. Mrs. Alan Jones played for the children's trio. Mrs. Mary Wible has been the faithful and talented pianist of the Big Springs Church since she was a young girl.

At the close of the service, Mrs. Watson, with fitting words, presented him, from the church, an eight by ten framed picture of Big Springs Christian Church, carrying the dates 1910-1950, and the lines:

"Blest be the tie that binds,
Our hearts in Christian love."

The written inscription was beautifully hand painted in shades of delicate pink and black.—Indiana News.

We have just finished exams at Elon. I was just thinking. Wouldn't it be nice if we could have exams at the first of the quarter? Then we wouldn't have to spend the whole quarter worrying about how it will end. Guess that would cause too great a decrease in enrollment.

Don't forget to keep the news coming in. We need a little something besides jokes on this page. Sometimes there just ain't nothing for me to edit. I'll be getting a little pink slip in the mail one of these days. What would become of me if I lost this job? Please help me, won't you?

FIRST FROM EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

The Eastern North Carolina Youth Fellowship was the first to send their apportionment to John Truitt, Jr., treasurer for the Southern Convention Youth Fellowship. They also took an offering for our new project of bringing a Philippine student to the United States. We have received over thirty dollars for this purpose. This is a good start. Let us all make haste to increase this figure.

IS THANKSGIVING OVER?

The Thanksgiving has disappeared, and most of us are back to our usual course of food. We think it would be good for us to remember that these usual courses are much better than those had by many millions of people throughout the world. Many of us are worrying over gifts we are going to buy to give at Christmas. How many of us have stopped to be thankful that we have gifts to give at Christmas? We should be thankful, too, that we have friends with whom to share Christmas. We should be thankful for the Life that was given us on that first Christmas. We should be thankful for the fine homes and families that we have. We don't think Thanksgiving is over. Do you? Let us make Thanksgiving a continuous time of Thanksgiving—thinking of all the many blessings that are ours, and thanking God for them.

Let us pray.

Holy Father, Giver of all good and Fountain of all blessing, in whom are the springs of life—we give Thee thanks and praise Thee for Thy everlasting goodness. We praise Thee for our friends and our homes and our church and country. We thank Thee for the Gospel of Jesus Christ Through thy mercy we have reaped the fruits of the earth in due season and gathered them into our barns. Give us power, O Lord, to use thy gifts for Thy glory, to the relief of those who are needy, and to our own comfort. And we give Thee the praise through Jesus Christ, Our Lord. Amen.

LET'S PLAN.

There is a great deal of value in planning ahead. Many of us fail to plan our worship programs in advance. We should follow the lead of the Elon Community Church Youth Fellowship. Their services are planned through May, 1951. By looking ahead they have been able to secure good speakers, and to plan other interesting activities.

CONCORD YOUNG PEOPLE ORGANIZE.

In August of 1948 a group of six junior young people met at the parsonage of Concord Christian Church, in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference for the purpose of organizing a young people's group. For a number of years the church had not had a young peoples organization of any nature. Now two years later we have a junior group that has a membership of 25.

This group has already begun to have its effect upon the total work of the church. These boys and girls are being taught leadership by the holding of the various offices in the organization and the preparing of the worship programs for each session under the supervision of the advisors. There was a time when the church did not have any young people to call upon to accept various duties but that time is in the past, for these girls and boys are eager to do whatever they can for the welfare of their church.

This is only one of the many things the young people of this group have done for their church. In the fall of 1948 work was begun on our new church in which we are now worshiping. The young people wanted to have some small part in this new church. So they asked if they might buy one of the pieces of pulpit furniture. They were granted this privilege. Last fall when the furniture was delivered the young people paid for the pulpit. These boys and girls were very proud to have had a part in their new church.

The officers for this group for the coming year are:

President, Miss Pauline Tate; Vice-President, Master Douglas Simmons; Secretary, Miss Ruth Tate; Treasurer, Miss Agnes Tate; Advisor, Mrs. Nellie Durham and Mrs. W. W. Snyder.

ON A CERTAIN BOLDNESS IN DEALINGS WITH MEN.

Many of us ministers lose some of the richest opportunities of our calling because of a sense of inferiority. I do not refer to our personal self-appraisal—there is plenty of egotism in most of us! But we stand too much in awe of men and women, especially of prosperous, comfortable, influential and apparently self-contained men and women. We cannot quite believe that they deeply need and truly crave those goods of the spirit which we as God's prophets have to offer. Some need them, of course—the broken, the enslaved, the lonely, the poor, the unemployed, the invalided. But the successful, the affluent, the intellectual, the leaders of the community—such persons seem so

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

For the Children . . .

It smelled very good in the Tarbert's house. It smelled sugary and spicy.

Johanny and Ann were helping mother make cookies. Mother put in the flour, sugar, eggs and other things while Johnny stirred. That was because he was the biggest and the strongest. Ann rolled the dough, that had been chilled, on a big board sprinkled with flour. She was having trouble rolling with her little size rolling pin. Her tongue stuck out between her teeth and flour dusted across her nose. Then they began to cut the cookies. Johnny held the cooky sheets while Anne pushed the cutter into the dough and mother lifted them onto to baking sheets. Finally they had finished the last batch and put it in the oven. They were cleaning up and nibbling samples from the first batch.

"Yum," said Ann. "Yum," Yum," said Johnny.

Mother said, "Johnny, I think I'll call your teacher, Mrs. Edwards, and see if we may send cookies to your class."

"Momms, that would be fine," he replied.

So mother called and the teacher said, "Yes, indeed."

The next morning Johnny carried a big box with cookies shaped like dogs, flowers and butterflies. He walked carefully to keep from spilling the cookies or breaking them.

While he was in school mother and Ann cleaned the house. They started lunch. Soon it was after lunch and Johnny was swinging in the door calling, "Hi, Mom. Hi, Sis!" He handed mother a big thick envelope with many sheets of paper in it. Mother sat down and began to read. Each one said:

"Dear Mrs. Tarbert,

Thank you for the cookies. We liked them.

Love,

Patsy, Dickie, Jim, Alice, Donna, —and on and on.

But the last one said:

"Dear Mother,

Thank you very much for those good, good cookies.

Love,

Johnny."

CHRISTMAS IN THE CHILDREN'S CHURCH.

By BARBARA C. KEY.

The costumes and masks of Halloween have scarcely been put away before the bussiness world begins to commercialize Christmas for all it is worth. Should not we of the church put as much care and effort in planning for the birthday of Jesus?

The Children's Church in Durham has many ideas for a happy observance of this Christmas season. We hope some of these suggestions may help you in your planning.

Our first thought it not how we celebrate Christmas ourselves, but how other people celebrate an even older festival. It is perhaps one of the winter festivals that Jesus and his family observed in the long ago. Hanukkah is still celebrated by the Jewish people each year in December. With this in mind, we are inviting a Jewish lady to visit us just before or early in the Advent season to explain their custom of lighting the Hanukkah candles. She may include a brief explanation of some other Jewish festivals, such as the Feast of Booths, the Jewish New Year and the Passover, for these are all ancient Hebrew holy days that Jesus must have kept with his family when he was a boy.

This year we want to have a "birthday party for Jesus" which still will, in reality, be a worship service for the entire church school with the program led by the Children's Church.

One of the first things we will do in preparation for this event is to find out some of the things our Bible tells us about the birth of Jesus. We will learn the words of Isaiah 9:6 to use as a call to worship and sing the chorus of "O Come, All Ye Faithful" for a response. We will learn at least part of the beautiful story of the shepherds and angels in the second chapter of Luke. Perhaps we will make a flannelgraph to illustrate this story.

Some families set up the figures of the Christmas scene. This is a traditional ceremony with many people and one worth repeating each year. In the Children's Church we will have a creche in the form of a flannelgraph to illustrate an old French carol about the friendly beasts who were present in the stable. Following are the words sung to the tune Orientis Partibus. This can be found in some church hymnals. In the Pilgrim Hymnal it is No. 124, second tune. But look for it in the index of tunes in other hymnals. It is necessary to change the rythmn slightly in some places, making two quarter notes instead of a half note, to make the words fit.

Jesus, our Brother, strong and good
Was humbly born in a stable rude;
The friendly beasts around him stood
Jesus, our Brother, strong and good.

I, said the donkey, all shaggy and brown
I carried his mother to Bethlehem town;
I carried her safely uphill and down
I, said the donkey all shaggy brown.

I, said the cow, all white and red
I gave him my manger for a bed;
I gave him my hay to pillow his head
I, said the cow, all white and red.

I, said the sheep with the curly horn
I gave him my wool for a blanket warm;
He wore my coat the night he was born
I, said the sheep with the curly horn.

I, said the dove from the rafters high
Cooed him to sleep so he would not cry;
We cooed him to sleep, my mate and I,
I, said the dove from the rafters high.

Then all the beasts by some good spell
In the stable dark began to tell
Of the gifts they gave Immanuel
Of the gifts they gave Immanuel.

It would be fun to make up original verses about other animals and birds you think might have been there. I think we'll try that. Don't you suppose there might have been a rooster, a hen, or perhaps a dog? And we know that eventually there were camels.

Another song that is fun to sing is "While by My Sheep." This is in the Hymnal for Youth, (Westminster Press). This carol has an echo effect. It would make a nice Christmas anthem for a choir.

Several good Christmas poems, prayers, stories and songs are to be found in The Family Celebrates Christmas, price 50c from the Pilgrim Press. It also contains many suggestions for gifts and decorations to make. The Golden Christmas Book and both old and new copies of Children's Religion and Thoughts of God for Boys and Girls are rich in suggestions for family participation and church school group activities. We will select some of this material to incorporate in our Christmas program.

Christmas is a gift-giving time. Because we have been reading the Children's mission study book about the Near East, we hope all the guests at our "birthday party for Jesus" will bring gifts for the people of those lands. There is a need for Children's books in Turkey and clothing in Lebanon. And gifts of money are always acceptable.

Lets plan early and thoughtfully for our Christmas celebrations in the church and home. Above all, let us take time out from our hectic shopping, baking, card-addressing and gift wrapping to hear in our hearts the angels' song and once more come to the manger and adore him. Let us give thanks to God for his gift of Love.

FAMILY TELEPHONE—BANE OR BLESSING?

By J. S. BAKER.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Sharply the telephone rang just as the Blairs were sitting down to dinner. Janet, thirteen, jumped up. "It's for me Daddy!" she cried. Davey, nine and Susan, just seven, raced after her into the hall, insisting, "For me! For me!"

But Mr. Blair, remembering a conference last night with Mrs. Blair, had by a kitchen short cut arrived there first.

"I'm sorry, Polly," he was saying politely though firmly, "but Janet cannot talk to you now. If you care to do so, you may call for few minutes between seven and seven-thirty. Or if you would like me to give her a message—"

But Polly had hung up in confusion.

"Daddy!" Janet wailed. "You knew Polly just wanted to visit."

"Visit!" Mr. Blair chuckled. "You were together at school and walked home together." He shooed the Children toward the dining room. "Now we'll eat—the telephone willing."

However, it rang again during the meal, twice—for Davey, then for Janet.

When they were all settled in the living room shortly after seven, Mr. Blair asked gently, "Why do we have traffic regulations?"

"So people will use their cars right," said Davey.

"So we won't get hurt," added Susan.

"Exactly," agreed Mr. Blair. "And the telephone can hurt us if it isn't used properly."

"Polly wasn't being rude," said Janet hotly. "She just—just—"

"Of course dear." Mrs. Blair patted Janet's arm. "But if I were to call my friends several times a day and talk for half-an-hour or more, wouldn't you think me—"

The ringing of the telephone cut her short.

"May I, Daddy?" Janet asked quickly.

"Yes." Mr. Blair sighed as she dashed out.

But this time the call was for Mr. Blair. His employer, Mr. Wayne, had called to give him important news. "Glad I got you at once," Mr. Wayne concluded approvingly. "Evidently your children don't monopolize the 'phone the way some youngsters do."

Seated again, Mr. Blair repeated Mr. Wayne's compliment.

Davey and Susan grinned sheepishly. Janet said thoughtfully, "We could make some Blair telephone rules so we—" But the telephone stopped her. "You answer, Daddy."

It was Polly again. Janet's replies were brief, but Polly hung on. Finally Janet said, "Tell me about it tomorrow, won't you, Polly? I can't talk any longer now."

Grinning, she joined the others. "That Polly! She was wound up to talk for an hour. Why don't we—" She looked questioningly at her parents and Davey and Susan.

And so the Blairs did regulate their use of the telephone. The children gave their friends to understand that they were not available for telephone conversations at certain hours. The length of visits was shortened, too.

When Janet's evening study periods were no longer interrupted, she made the honor roll at school. Davey's and Susan's friends learned not to "chat happy" too long or too late. And the Blairs could spend entire evenings together without having the warm felling of family unity broken by a youthful friend with some plan for gallivanting.

friend, was our guest speaker. She emphasized courage and loyalty.

In August Mrs. W. T. Harrell, president of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference, spoke on the subject, "Thy Will To Do."

It was indeed a great privilege to have these three ladies with us.

Our pastor, Rev. W. A. Grissom, has used several films, "Japan," "And Now I See," during the year. At our September meeting he used "Second Chance." What could be more fitting to close the year's work!

In seeing this wonderful picture we realized that we, too, may have a "second chance."

Our society sponsored an orphan from the Christian Orphanage for our "Blue Bird" this year. We have also continued the work we have been doing in the past years.

SHALLOW FORD WOMEN MEET.

The Ladies Fellowship of the Shallow Ford Christian Church, near Elon College, met on Tuesday evening at 7:30 at the parsonage. The meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. Odessa Penley. The pastor, Rev. James R. Hailey, led the devotional service with a study of the Intercessory Prayer of Abraham.

The radio play, "We Build for Peace," was dramatized by four of the ladies. Mrs. Margaret Isley took the part of the Announcer; Mrs. Bessie Crawford represented the United Nations; Mrs. Beatrice Sparrow described the work of the World Health Organization; and Mrs. Nellie Hailey enacted the role of Food and Agriculture Organization. The play was a vivid dramatization of the work of the United Nations in its different phases.

Mrs. George Isley gave the secretary's report. Mrs. Kate Foster reported on the work of the conference committee. A discussion period was held in which Mrs. Louise Whitaker, Mrs. Jane Huffines, Miss Florence Cable and Mrs. Dewey Michael took part.

After a brief business session the joint hostesses, Mrs. Kiwana Whitaker and Mrs. Bessie Crawford, served delicious hot spiced apple juice and doughnuts. They were assisted by Miss Della Ree Foster.

A venerable minister once entered a meeting which was being held in behalf of foreign missions, just as the collectors were resuming their seats. The chairman of the meeting requested him to lead in prayer. The old gentleman stood, hesitatingly, as if he had not heard the request. It was repeated in a louder voice; but there was no response. It was observed, however that he was fumbling in his pockets, and presently he produced a piece of money, which he deposited in the contribution box. The chairman, thinking he had not been understood, said loudly, "Dear Sir, I didn't ask you to give; I asked you to pray." Oh, yes," the old man replied, "I heard you, but I can't pray till I have given something."

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

And I do mean friends! How you have helped us this week! We are truly grateful. Several weeks like this, and we can see the way out! It was pretty dark a few weeks ago, but you are a generous and kindhearted people, and you will not let us here down. Eighty mighty healthy, happy, fine children are counting on you, and if you could see their smiles, their gratitude, as I do, you would not begrudge a nickle that comes this way.

We have been working hard. Three churches every Sunday—morning, noon and night. And it means something to keep twenty-two little folks in line from eight o'clock in the morning to ten or eleven at night. But they know it means more shoes, more clothes and good food and warm shelter; and many kind friends. We teach them that friends should be appreciated whether they have anything to give or not. They are our friends, and they help us just by their being friends.

While one mischievous little fellow was actually on the stage performing, but behind the others where only I could see him, he upped his foot and showed me a hole all the way through the bottom of his shoe, and smiled just like any little rascal ten years old would! One little fellow, after I had told him that our trip had netted us a sizeable sum, replied: "Now, maybe, I can have some shoes." They are a bright and happy lot, and ready to do a good turn, ready to play fair, and they are not prone to complain.

They are appreciative. I pray that they make men and women of whom we can all be mighty proud. Your kindness and generosity will help greatly.

I wish to thank the Valley Sunday schools for a truck load of apples. As my son John says of such kindness, it was "real thoughty" of them!

Inasmuch as my report is long, I had better make my letter short. If you saw what I see, you would give us several reports just as good as this one.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

neglect of the past, this is the opportunity to express it, and to redeem ourselves.

The great work of our Orphanage in giving to unclaimed and unwanted children home and love and preparation for life, the divine task of sending the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ to a spiritually hungry world and the support we give to every other enterprise and institution of our church is multiplied in definite and exact proportion as we launch out into the deep.

Without pride we must admit that we have not done what we could. May this seemingly dark picture serve to arouse us from our places of failure and complacency to dedicate anew our lives of obedience to His voice, which through opportunity calls to launch out into the deep.

DEALINGS WITH MEN.

self-sufficient, so complacent, that we treat them as desirable contributors to the organization of religion, but not as themselves in need of salvation. So we seek to enlist their help rather than to help them. They become patrons of religion rather than religious men and women.

The fault is with us ministers. Most of us spring from modest social backgrounds, and the unruffled surface of the strong and competent takes on a glamour in our eyes, blinding us to the fact that below this apparent complacency there is conflict, craving, self-depreciation, just as intense as that which cries out to us from the disadvantaged and helpless. We must come out of this delusion. We would be amazed at the spiritual results if we pitched our ministry to a key of unflinching boldness and saw every man—the "strong" as well as those who are confessedly broken—standing in the need of prayed and repentance.—Charles Clayton Morrison.

United Church Project, Burlington, North Carolina

Rev. Henry E. Robinson, pastor of First Congregational Christian Church, left, and Dr. Harvey A. Fesperman, pastor of First Evangelical Reformed Church, are shown observing the sign that has been erected at the site of the proposed Brookwood United Church on Hermitage Road. (Times-News Photo by Metcalf.)

The First Evangelical and Reformed and the First Congregational Christian Churches of Burlington, North Carolina, are working together to establish a new church to be known as the Brookwood United Church and to be located on Hermitage Road, near Edgewood Avenue Extension.

Numerous planning sessions have been held between the churches concerning the project, and church officials have been in continuous consultation, as mission funds from both of the churches will be used in constructing the first units of the new church plant.

Present plans call for the acquiring of a parsonage and the erection of an educational building in which all meetings will be held until the church has need of additional facilities.

The establishment of this church points to a new and promising approach to church extension in this area, since it is the first project to be carried on jointly by two local churches.

A pastor will be supported jointly by the two participating churches till the new church is able to assume the cost, and mission gifts for the project will be given on an equal basis by the two churches.

Members of the Church Extension Committees of the two churches, who have been planning the establishment of the new church are as follows:

First Evangelical Reformed: Herbert W. Coble, Duncan C. Bryan, George H. Fowler, E. M. Cheek, Glenn Pickett.

First Congregational Christian: Jerry D. Strader, Garland Huffman, D. R. Fonville, E. N. Pearce, Mrs. Ed Foster, Mrs. M. Z. Rhodes.

Ray Morrison, right, president of the William Downing Memorial Class of the Rosemont Congregational Christian Church of Norfolk, Virginia, has just unveiled a memorial altar cross presented to his church by his class in ceremonies commemorating Armistice Day on Sunday, November 12. Mr. Charles L. Richardson, left, chairman of the church's official board, accepted the gift in behalf of the church. Rev. Herbert G. Councill, Jr., the pastor, center, conducted the rite of dedication. The cross is engraved: "To the Glory of God and in Honor of Members of the Rosemont Christian Church Who Served Their Country in World War II, 1941-1945."

PRE-CHRISTIAN MUSICAL PROGRAM AT WINSTON-SALEM.

The Winston-Salem Church enjoyed a special musical program last Sunday evening rendered by the church choir and visiting soloists. There were Instrumental solos and duets by Charles Fussell, Faydine Conklin, Mrs. Wilbur Houser, B. Y. Womack, Jimmie Reach and Jimmie Paff. Vocal solos were rendered by Miss Geraldine Mackie, "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked"; and Charles Drum, "Teach Me To Pray." A duet was sung by Jeanie and Diane Binkley. Other numbers included a cornet solo, "Liebestraume," by Roy Hayes; a violoncello solo, "Berceuse Slave," by Joe Clodfelter, and a bass horn solo by Robert Paff. Mr. John Ingram gave a reading, and there were several musical numbers by the choir and congregation. The church has planned special Pre-Christmas programs for the next three Sundays. The pastor, Rev. W. J. Andes, will speak on the topics: "The Candle of Faith," "The Candle of Hope," "The Candle of Love," at the morning services, and at 6 o'clock on Christmas Eve Sunday, he will speak, using as his subject "The Unnamed Candle."

CARE AID URGED FOR KOREA.

CARE is appealing for funds to send relief packages from Americans to war-devastated Korea, whose people are in desperate need of food and clothing.

Contributions in any amount sent to CARE for Korea, 20 Broad St., New York 5, N. Y., or any local CARE office in this country, will be used by the non-profit agency to deliver gift packages, in the name of the donors, to destitute Korean families chosen on the basis of greatest need.

Six types of CARE packages are available: Food, underwear and socks, or woolen suiting, at $10 each; knitting wool, $13; woolen blanket and cotton fabrics, $7 each. Contributions less than the cost of a complete package will be pooled. All donors will receive a CARE receipt.

The CARE campaign was undertaken at the request of the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid of the U. S. Department of State and has been endorsed by President Truman.

"This government," Truman declared in a statement, "is joining with other members of the United Nations to help Korean recovery, but the great need in a war-devastated country leaves much that our people, as individuals, can do. I strongly urge all Americans to contribute to the CARE for Korea Campaign. . . . Every CARE package delivered to a family in Korea, in the name of American donors, is proof of democracy in action to help its fellow man."

CHRISTIAN WORKER'S SCHOOL.

Plans are being made for a Christian Worker's School or a Leadership Training School for the churches in the larger Suffolk District to be held in the Suffolk Christian Church January 14-18, 1951. The School will begin on Sunday afternoon with classes on that day, and with classes every night during the following week through Thursday night. Dr. H. S. Harcastle will serve as Dean of the School. The following courses will be offered and will be taught by the following persons:

Planning for Children in the Local Church—Miss Ruthanna Foard.

Introduction to the Bible—Reverend James H. Lightbourne, Jr.

Planning and Leading Group Worship—Reverend Duane Vore.

Teaching in the Sunday school—Dr. Jesse H. Dollar.

Reverend W. A. Grissom will have charge of the Devotional Services during the School.

The School offers a splendid opportunity to all Church School workers to prepare themselves to do better work for Christ and his church. There will be no registration fee, but the cooperating churches will be asked to underwrite the cost of the School. It is hoped that there will be an unusually large representation from each church in the area.

This is one of the several Schools that is being planned by the Division of Christian Education under the leadership of Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Educational Director of the Convention.

Pastors and Sunday School Superintendents are asked to begin now to give publicity to the School and to secure large representations from their respective churches.

H. S. HARCASTLE.

In a day of world crisis and disorder, when men's hearts are failing them for fear, it is a cause of hope that the National Council has been established. It is a proclamation that God, as revealed in Jesus Christ, lives and reigns, that the primary issues of today are spiritual and that no part of the wide range of life is alien to the application of the Gospel. The Council marks a new and great determination that the American way will be increasingly the Christian way, for such is our heritage. . . . Together the churches can move forward to the goal—a Christian America in a Christian world.—Henry Knox Sherrill.

UNPAID 1949-50 CONVENTION APPORTIONMENT LIMITS THE WORK OF BOARDS, INSTITUTIONS, AGENCIES.

The 1949-50 Conference Year has closed. We have had a good year in each of our Conferences. Evidences of growth in membership are sources of encouragement. Many churches have made extensive building improvement. The record is good in gifts to worthy causes. However, several of our churches have not reached the apportionment goal suggested. The apportionment is set up so as to provide a regular income for the agencies of our church so as to enable the Mission Board, the Orphanage, Elon College, and the Boards of Christian Education and Superannuation to do their work. The Mission Board income is short $3,332.84 for Home Mission apportionment at a time when we need to build new churches and to aid existing churches to provide adequate facilities. Likewise, the Board faces a shortage of $3,840.63 in Foreign Mission contributions to the apportionment at a time when the Christian church throughout the world is facing its greatest problems and opportunities. Elon College's apportionment is $2,520.14 short at a time when our Convention's institution of Christian higher education needs desperately our maximum support. We are $500.73 short in our giving to our aged ministers, and the Convention Fund is over $1,200.00 short in its income from apportionment.

Perhaps your church is among those which have not "paid in full" the apportionment. Maybe you can and will do something about it. Won't you? Your Convention, its Boards, Institutions, and agencies are counting upon your help. Your church may still send payments on 1949-50 apportionment to the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C. Ask your pastor about the standing of your church. He is receiving a statement of receipts to date.

Take a look at the above table showing the unpaid apportionment for the 1949-50 Conference year just closed.

A MORNING RESOLVE.

I will this day try to live a simple, sincere, and serene life; repelling promptly every thought of discontent, anxiety, discouragement, impurity, and self-seeking; cultivating cheerfulness, magnanimity, charity, and the habit of holy silence; exercising economy in expenditure, carefulness in conversation, diligence in appointed service, fidelity to every trust, and a shieldlike trust in God.

PROTESTANTS, READ YOUR BIBLE!

These have been great days for those who are interested in the study of the Bible. Reformation Day, recently observed, is a spur to Bible study. One recalls that Martin Luther gave the Scriptures anew to the world. He gave unprecedented impetus to the reading, translation and exposition of the Scriptures. The observance of Reformation Day is meaningless unless it drives us again to the Bible, the foundation of Protestantism.

The Thanksgiving to Christmas Bible Readings not only renew our spirits by a fresh acquaintance with the prophets, apostles and Christ, but we are made aware of our worldwide fellowship in the love and study of the Scriptures. This should be a fresh and stimulating experience for each of us.

The romance of Bible reading was never more real and widespread than it is today. For instance, we are told that funds are being used by the American Bible Society to send paper, printing and binding materials to Japan and that the Scriptures are being printed there. The Japanese Society now employs 110 full-time workers to distribute the Scriptures. Fifty-two of these are now able to transport themselves by bicycles, a gift from the children in Sunday schools in the United States, and 49 additional bicycles soon will be furnished.

A NEW DAY IN PROTESTANTISM

Prophecy becomes history. The National Council of Churches is a reality. The movement toward Protestant unity has passed another milestone. After attending the Constituting Convention last week in Cleveland, Dr. Roy Helfenstein wrote: "Words cannot even begin to express the impression universally made upon the delegates by the colorful pageantry of the occasion and by the superb program presented. To the fanfare of trumpets, a procession of 500 clergy and lay delegates led the processional. Banner-bearers, massed at the back of the stage, formed a background for the Protestant leaders who participated in the constituting ceremony. Delegates from every state in the Union were seated at red, white and blue desks, set in the form of a mammoth cross, in the main body of the public hall. A second cross of gold was suspended above the stage."

Those of us who were unable to attend this historic Council can catch the tenor of the occasion from the many releases. Dr. Ralph Sockman made this memorable statement: "Never since the first century have conditions been so ripe for an apostolic age. If 1,000,000 out of the 31,000,000 church members represented in this council become fired with the passion of the apostles, a new book of Acts would be written."

Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill of the Episcopal Church is the first president of the National Council.

The gist of his message was a plea for a church "extended and applied to every aspect of life." He insisted that "There can be no artificial divisions between the sacred and the secular. The Gospel has to do with international relations, with peace or war, with the atom bomb, with economic conditions, with family life, for nothing human can be alien to the love of God in Christ. The churches, if they are expressions of the purpose and will of God, cannot be limited as some would desire, to special fields of worship. For, if worship is real, then action must follow—for all of life belongs to God. Once we have the conviction that there is a saving gospel, then that gospel must be extended and applied to every aspect of life."

This Council brings together an impressive array of leadership. The best minds of Protestantism are now federated. The council is not without its problems. There is a moral responsibility to keep peace and harmony within the family, steer clear of competition, and avoid the perils of a super church. Unprecedented opportunities inhere in this new and inclusive organization. A new day has dawned for Protestantism. It is a grand privilege to live in an era which has witnessed the formation of the National Council and the World Council of Churches.

"I WILL RETURN UNTO MY FATHER"

Every day is a call to repentance. Every day brings the opportunity of return to the Father's face, the Father's family and the Father's favor. Every day brings anew the Father's bounty, of which we have partaken thoughtlessly or greedily. Every day is a renewed invitation to know the Father's fellowship and to take our places as responsible members of the divine household.

"My Father worketh hither to," cried Jesus. Therefore we must work with him. Time must not be wasted. Great tasks await our doing. Today we not only lament our wasted days and years, our wasted opportunities, our neglected talents, our abandoned hopes, we return to God. We accept new tasks or return to old tasks with renewed spirit and purpose. We resolve as God's prodigal sons and daughters, to bring forth works meet for repentance.

We ask God to forgive us when we have been derelict in our duty, when our prayer account has been in arrears and when our policy of intercession has lapsed. So, the day of penitence becomes the day of promise and power. Our God is liberated anew in our world—through us. There is a fresh extension of the incarnation.

God can do great things—today. His hand is not shortened that he cannot save. He is a God of compassion. If we have blundered and failed in countless yesterdays, he comes today saying: "My child, accept this new day. Try again. You are not alone. I am with you, I am thy God. I will still give thee aid. I'll strengthen thee, help thee, and cause thee to stand, upheld by my righteous, omnipotent hand. My grace, all sufficient, shall be thy supply."

The Farmer's Vocation

By THOMAS ALFRED TRIPP.

The peasant farmer walks upon the clean bottom of the furrow which he makes in the firm earth and feels a close relationship to the sweating animals that pull the plow. The tremor of the crumbling soil, as it slides off the glistening mouldboard, gives him a sense of victory over nature and victory challenges to humility reminding the husbandman of the true quality of his vocation. To plow a field is to change the face of the earth; to turn it with a clean furrow is to achieve the satisfactions of an artist but the plowman fails to perceive the real nature of his vocation unless he recalls that it is God that maketh the harvest.

The farmer depends upon the microcosm of the clod which holds the precious fertility for man's food and he waits upon the macrocosm of the Universe which determines the round of seasons. He looks up into the face of the frowning cloud which threatens to turn his fields into swamps in the rainy season and gazes wistfully at the cloudless sky in time of drought. Extremes of nature, forces beyond his control, leave him in the hands of God. He bows in gratitude before the forces which bring rain or sun at the right times. He is frustrated, sometimes defiant, when drought or flood, heat or frost defy his calculations.

Finally, the peasant may be forced to drop his hands and tools in resignation, admitting defeat before drought, flood, blizzard or infestation. Then, with the coming of a new season, hope arises within him and he tries again, ever trusting that "this year will be better." The farm family, more than any other, is in touch with the rhythm of the Universe. The farmer may not be more devout than other men but he has more opportunity than most to feel and know the manifestations of God in the world.

What the machine does do to the farmer's vocation is yet to be seen. The farmer on the mechanized farm is no longer the man in the furrow who thrills to the tremor of the crumbling earth. Instead, his body surges to the rhythm of the vibrating machine. He is more remote from the soil than the peasant and often closer to the spirit of the city. Unless he recognizes his as a Christian vocation, land, to him, is a resource to be exploited for material gain. He is a capitalist in the field, self-seeking and gloating. More and more acres are demanded by his huge enterprise requiring a sense of stewardship to prevent disaster. If, once he has sapped the life out of a field, he casts it aside as he would a worn-out machine, he invites the judgement of God upon his wasteful enterprise.

The farmer on the machine has every chance to develop his work as Christian vocation. Because of his power of machine and property, his responsibility is great; his need of repentance terrible. Machines take the burden off the backs of the farmer and his family, leaving energy and time for spiritual pursuits. If they care to

DECEMBER 10 — UNIVERSAL BIBLE SUNDAY

Aiding the Japanese Bible drive, President Harry S. Truman affixes his signature to the "Good Will Book," which contains the signatures of 33,000 persons who contributed to a fund for the distribution of Japanese-language Bibles. The American Bible Society is sending the volume to the Japan Bible Society as a symbol of friendship. With Mr. Truman are Dr. Robert T. Taylor, left, and Dr. Francis C. Stifler, secretaries of the society. With signatures still coming in, a third book is currently in preparation. These signatures come from more than 14,000 cities, towns and villages, in every state, the District of Columbia, Hawaii and Alaska, as well as 15 foreign countries.

General Douglas MacArthur, at the inception of the drive, set a goal of 10,000,000 Scriptures to be printed and distributed in Japan by the end of 1951. However, it now appears likely that this goal will be exceeded by approximately 2,000,000.

Gifts represented by the signatures ranged in amount from one to one thousand dollars and totaled more than a quarter of a million dollars. This amount will enable the Japanese society to print and distribute 4,700,000 Scriptures and bring the total since V-J Day to 7,500,000. If gifts continue, the distribution of 12,000,000 Scriptures will be achieved by the end of next year.

"FREEDOM IS NEVER FREE"

A Sermon

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

"With a Great Price Attained I This Freedom."—Acts. 22:28.

Christian Salvation is the greatest thing in this world. It is heaven's richest blessing to mankind. American Freedom is the second greatest blessing in the world. We often speak of our Salvation being free, but the truth is that it was purchased at a terrific cost. The same is true of our American freedom—it too cost a terrific price—far beyond the reach of human power to calculate.

The Roman Freedom of St Paul's day was highly prized by every Roman citizen. "With a Great Price Attained I This Freedom," declared the Apostle Paul in tribute to the freedom he enjoyed as a Roman Citizen. But Roman freedom was as brass in comparison with the gold of American freedom. The more a thing costs the more it should be appreciated. With a great price our freedom was attained. Indeed it cost far too much for the way millions of Americans use it.

I sometimes wonder if we prize our American freedom as we should. I am sure none of us do. It includes the freedom to choose our own vocation or profession, the kind of work we want to do—the freedom to choose our life companion. There are millions of people throughout the world who know nothing of such freedom. We enjoy the freedom to live our lives in our own way. We have the freedom to come and go as we please. In certain totalitarianism countries a person cannot even leave town without a permit. We have the freedom to think our own thoughts and speak our own convictions. This is a freedom not even hoped for by millions of folk throughout the world.

Those of us who are native-born Americans when we reached our maturity simply had our citizenship handed to us on a silver platter. Those who were foreign-born, if deemed worthy, simply declared their desire to become citizens and, after certain instructions, were duly naturalized. Roman citizenship came at a much higher price—and no doubt was appreciated more by its holder—though that freedom was infinitely inferior to our American freedom.

Our American citizenship is all too easy in the light of what it cost. It ought to cost every American citizen, whether American or Foreign-born, the effort required to be worthy of that freedom, so that every American citizen could say in the words of the text—"With a great price secured I this freedom" that was purchased and paid for by the life blood of thousands of our Nation's sons and fathers.

The freedom we enjoy cost much—at a great price it was secured, not by us, but by others for us. Had it not been for the prayers and sacrifices of the early colonists; had it not been for the Christian idealism, the Christian convictions, the Christian sacrifices of our parents down through the years of the past; had it not been for the idealism and sacrifices of thousands (and "the Supreme Sacrifice" for many) of the men who gained our Nation's independence, we today would not be a free people. Indeed, with a great price our freedom was attained for us. We are disgracefully unworthy of our American freedom if we are not willing to pay the price of moral courage and religious idealism to our day and generation in appreciation of the heritage that is ours.

We enjoy freedom and liberty, not because we deserve it, but because others prized it dearly and paid the price that we might have it. Millions of people in Germany, Japan, China, India, France, England and in other foreign countries, in some of which countries freedom is but a word in the lingo of hope, millions of them by reason of their noble Christian lives and high ideals of service are just as much entitled to the freedom that we enjoy as are we. Many of the disfavored people without a country—hundreds of thousands of them—may, by reason of their closer walk with God, be more entitled to our freedom than are any of us—a freedom enjoyed by each of us, but denied to all of them. And hundreds of thousands of people in America who enjoy American freedom are absolutely unqualified and unworthy of even a shadow of such freedom. They repudiate our Nation's laws enacted for the protection of the citizenship which they enjoy—they devise and connive ways to evade the laws of the land, and for them life is but a mad scramble to get what the other fellow has.

They disdain the Holy Commandments of God, reverence for which constitutes the very foundation of our National life. They profane by word and by act the name of Deity whose guidance has secured for our Nation its place of advantage among the nations of the world. They blaspheme the Church of God by their indifference to its presence in their communities and by their repudiation of its Gospel of faith and love. Their lives are open denials of all that is sacred in our national life. Such Americans by their Godless lives imperil the freedom of us all.

Let the nations that have lost their freedom speak to America today—"O America, you who have been blessed above all other nations of the world, do not make the mistake which we made—don't neglect your churches, be faithful to the God of your Fathers. 'Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it Holy'—Walk in the light of the Word of your Lord. Keep the fires of religious faith burning upon the hearth-stones of your homes and upon the altars of your churches. We neglected ours, and the penalty is too great!" Not only did they have to pay the penalty, but the whole world had to pay the penalty along with them. Our American freedom too can be lost. There are politicians a plenty who would be willing to sell our freedom to the highest bidder. The National Emblem should remind every son and daughter of Fair Columbia that our American Freedom is at this hour not only being imperilled by foreign ideologies and foreign powers, but also by certain leaders in our own government who under solemn oath pledged themselves to protect our freedom. In their thirst for political power they have forgotten both their oath and the people. The power of government can either be a blessing or a curse to the people it was designed and created to serve. Whenever that power begins to crush and destroy the people's freedom of choice, possession and privilege, danger lies ahead. For the freedom of the American people to be maintained, the power of the American Government must of necessity be limited to its original purpose of service to the people instead of service to itself and "the people be damned." It is alarmingly dangerous to freedom for the people to look to the government to assume the people's responsibilities to pay their grocery and fuel bills and provide their monthly rent, at cetera, for the more free things a government hands out

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

THESE UNCERTAIN DAYS.

These are uncertain days for the young men and women of our country between the ages of 18 and 26. It is a question with them whether they will be permitted to continue in the normal affairs of life with the hope of building for themselves a future that will be satisfactory to them, helpful to their country, and beneficial to the society of which they are a part, or whether they shall be drafted for military service, placed in training camps, and then marched off to do battle. Present indications are that the latter will be their lot. War clouds are dark and lowering. They threaten destruction at almost any moment without warning. Whether we have war or not, it seems fairly certain that we shall have total mobilization, which will mean the disruption of the normal life of our youth and many adults.

The uncertainty of national and world events writes uncertainty in bold letters across the entrance to our college. It takes students to run a college. Those colleges that are dependent largely on student tuition and fees to meet current needs require students in larger numbers than in previous years. Current operations are far more expensive, and these expenses continue to mount. In event of either total mobilization or compulsory universal military training, the young men and women of college age will be drafted, meaning, of course, that our campuses shall be depleted and our treasuries jeopardized. In such unsettled conditions, no one knows how to plan or what obligations to assume.

World events are moving rapidly and in adverse directions. I presume that no one fancied that the threats of another world war would come so quickly on the heels of World War II. The echoes of the armies and machines of destruction have scarcely died away before we begin to stockpile for another war. President Truman, his associates, and the authorities of the free peoples of the world are working night and day to find a way to dissipate the threats of war and secure peace.

To read the statistics of previous wars, note the hardships, suffering, and staggering losses, it seems would be sufficient to deter all peoples or nations from engaging in another holocaust of destruction. It is the prayer and the hope of all that we shall not have war, but that we shall have peace for all. May the uncertainty of these days be replaced by the assurances of peace on the part of conflicting interests and the nations of the world.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

There are approximately 200 churches in the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches. The college belongs to all of these churches. The Convention has requested that they make certain contributions to the college. The college seeks in every way possible to make itself worthy of such support. It endeavors to give services in repayment of contributions made. These services are rendered to all, but particularly to our own local churches. These contributions are evident through trained leadership for pulpit and pews.

In this week's report it is noted that only three took advantage of the privilege of sending contributions to the college and thereby lending encouragement to their institutions. These three contributions, however, are of sufficient amounts to be encouraging. In all probability, it would not greatly inconvenience any church or occasion too great a strain on its treasury to send a reasonable contribution on its conference apportionment for the college. Such contributions would be of material assistance.

The Christian faith is not of cold intellect; rather it is full of love, grace and humanity. It has the strength and compassion with which Christ was able to change the course of human life from evil to good, from selfishness to service, from despair to faith in the highest.

"MY MOTHER HAS PASSED AWAY."

My mother passed away early Saturday morning, November 25. She had celebrated her eighty-fifth birthday anniversary on November 1. The old tired heart, which had beat so many, many times during those eighty-five years finally gave out, and stopped beating early on that Saturday morning. Reverend William F. Edge, pastor of People's Church, Dover, Delaware, the church in which mother held membership for many years, conducted simple, meaningful, inspiring funeral services on Monday afternoon, November 27, at the Connor Funeral Home in Dover, and then my sister Mary and I, lone surviving members of the immediate family, followed the hearse to the well-kept Lakeside Cemetery and saw the casket placed over the open grave that joined hard by my father's grave. (Mother and father had shared together fifty two years of happy married life before he passed away ten years ago.) A brief committal service, a simple prayer, and a benediction, and it was all over. We turned away and went our ways with that lonely feeling in our hearts which so many readers of THE SUN know from personal experience — only those who have had the experience know that sense of loneliness and loss.

You will note that I did not say that we had buried mother. To be sure when I stopped by the grave the next morning on my way back to Virginia, the casket had been placed in the vault and covered with earth, and the grave was covered with flowers—how mother loved flowers! And of course mother's body was under the ground. But we did not bury my mother. We laid to rest the earthly tabernacle of the flesh in which her spirit had dwelt those eighty-five years, but we did not put her spirit in that grave. And she shall have a new and glorious body, like even unto his own glorious body, for her spirit alive forevermore through him who is the Resurrection and the life. We know whom we have believed, and we are fully persuaded that he is able to keep that which we have committed unto him against that day. O Death where is thy sting? O Grave where is thy victory? Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

At Home and Abroad

A PATIENT WHO "HAUNTS HIS MEMORY."

I had seen this patient in the clinic two or three days before. But the daily clinic is so frightfully rushed that there is little time to talk with one's patients. Now, as I rolled up my sleeves and began to scrub, I became acutely aware of the look of absolute trust in the dark eyes that watched me, and, somehow, that look in the woman's eyes and the peaceful, confident set of her fine face bothered me. Perhaps after all, I could not effect a repair on what was left of the damaged organs. All too well I have learned how difficult reconstructive surgery can be in these ubiquitous cases of pelvic damage! And why do they have to happen at all! They are avoidable. They belong to that great host of horrible things that should never happen. Preventable suffering—conquerable disease. I scrubbed until it hurt. The woman on the table watched me half-smiling. Could she read my thoughts? "Where is your village, companion?" I asked. She named an Umbundu settlement far from the mission or from any of our out-station dispensaries. "How long were you in labour, companion?" was my next question. "Three days," she said. Three days in the corner of a dark hut with Pain and the Bitter Impossible for company. And perhaps the jeers and scolding of pagan relatives who think that dystocic childbirth is due to the sin of the parturient. Still, perhaps there was a graduate of Means School for African women there to comfort. Or perhaps some young man trained in midwifery at the mission hospital had been called to her side. Yes, assuredly she had found help somewhere in that time of trial. So my next question was, "Little mother, who helped you?" Quietly, slowly, in absolute sincerity came the answer, "Suku na nustisa." (God helped me.)

If you could hear one such African patient give such glad witness to the power of the God you sent us to tell them about, you would say, "Yes, we shall continue to send the Word of Life and Comfort to those outside the church-filled lands of America and Europe. Missions must go on!" I do not differ from you in that resolve. I am glad that God made himself real in a village hut to that woman who is now on our operating table. I know how he has strengthened and comforted thousands of others of her race in this land in their poverty, in their pain, in their "contracted labour" banished to other places far from home and kindred.

But as I rinse and dry my hands and slip into a gown and gloves, I keep thinking "Why couldn't we have had a midwife there? How long will it be before the people have a diet rich in the food that will give them proper pelves? How long, how long!" And because it is my conviction that God wants to help his people with knowledge, health, and freedom, I say to you at home: "Strengthen your mission in Africa. Send us more doctors, nurses, craftsmen, teachers, technicians, and ministers. Let God help these people through us!"—Dr. S. GILCHRIST, Dondi, W. Africa.

HE REFLECTS ON THE VALUES OF VISUAL AIDS.

Paganism is undergoing a revival, thus demoralizing young Christian forces, and the old methods are no longer useful. Yet this one event may indicate the direction in which we ought to move in re-establishing the evangelistic work of our churches among non-Christians. Our pastors are well-trained, if we compare them with the average of our constituency, but they are more like the presiding elders of early Methodism; they have so many out-stations and miles to cover. Their work is limited, because their time and energy are devoted first and mostly to keeping their parishes moving. Most of the detail work falls on untrained lay leaders. What they cannot do in six months or a year, we can do in one evening with a filmstrip and a projector. The passing scenes explained by brief Scripture passages have an effectiveness never achieved by the average evangelistic sermon.—SAM KEETZEL, South Africa.

"FREEDOM IS NEVER FREE."

to its citizenry the less freedom that citizenry possesses.

Individual initiative languishes and "freedom shrieks for help" whenever the people are content to look to the government to provide their material needs and solve their personal problems. Opportunity, and not charity, constitutes every person's need. Paternalism but breeds indolence, pauperism and beggary. Indeed there can be no freedom without moral responsibility. People who demand their rights but refuse to accept their responsibilities are but tyrants in disguise. And for the Government selfishly to encourage the people to look to it for its "hand-outs" of monetary favors but marks "the beginning of the end" of freedom for all the people.

Lord God of Hosts,
Be with us yet,
Lest we forget—
Lest we forget!

We need to remind ourselves that our American freedom was purchased at too great a price by its heroes who paid for our freedom in the coin of their own life blood—that our freedom has cost too much for any of us to stand by and allow it to be kicked about like a football by selfish and unprincipled politicians, without our making telling protest. A freedom that has cost so high a price as did our freedom is entitled to the dedication of our love and our lives to its security. As others have died for it we are basely undeserving to have it, if we are unwilling to live for it, work for it, and pray for it.

Christian patriotism inspires us to acknowledge God as the Author of our freedom and our Co-defender of that priceless treasure. Appreciation of our American Freedom is not expressed by those who selfishly seek personal advantage,—to the neglect of personal honor. Neither is appreciation of our freedom expressed by disrespect for our nation's laws. Only by seeking to honor God with one's life, one's talents, and with whatever possession one has can one express his appreciation of American Freedom. Both faith and patriotism inspired those who paid the price to make us free.

The freedom which our heroes bought for us with their own life blood calls for the dedication of life and faith to the God of our nation by every American. There are thousands who sing with gusto "God Bless America"—but those unchristian and, therefore, unpatriotic lives are anything but a blessing to their nation.

Our American Freedom should inspire every American to pray that our freedom may not be lost in the present.

TIMOTHY CHANG'S CHRISTMAS.

There is nothing a college student looks forward to more than getting home for Christmas. Now, of course, Timothy Chang will not be able to go home, but he is hoping to have his brother, Silas, who is a student at the University of Michigan, spend the holidays with him.

The dormitories at Duke University, where Timothy is in school, will not be heated during the holidays, which means that Timothy and Silas will need a home or homes within which to enjoy Christmas. I'm sure there are many families in the Southern Convention that would like to have these boys share their home during Christmas season.

They will be out of school about December 15 and if you would like to have them visit you over night or for a few days, please let Dr. W. T. Scott at Elon College know about it and he will arrange the schedule for your convenience.

Any Christmas greeting or gifts for Timothy or Silas should be sent to Elon College in care of Dr. Scott.

MRS. O. H. PARISH, President,
Women's Missionary Convention.

YOUR CHRISTMAS PROGRAM.

Does your society have a Christmas program? What type of program do you have? There are many things you might do. . . .

Yours may be a group which enjoys fellowship among its members at Christmas, and so you "draw names," have a "tree" and "treat" just for yourselves, with extra special refreshments, Christmas games, carols.

Your may be a group which feels that Christmas is definitely a time to share with others less fortunate than yourselves. And so you bring gifts of food, fruit, toys, to be given to those in your community who will not have much at Christmas. It may be a "White Christmas" program with the gifts wrapped in white paper and placed in a pile under a tree.

Yours may be a group which is responsible for whatever Christmas program you have in your church. You will be the group who will plan for the "tree" for the whole Sunday school, the program by the children, and the "treat" for them.

Yours may be a group which likes to have a very lovely Christmas service, dignified and beautiful, which brings to you the true meaning of the Christmas season. This you may have within your own group, or as a public program for the church group and your other friends.

All of these programs have their place at Christmastime. It should be a time of fellowship within your own group, of sharing with others, of presenting the Christmas story in a beautiful and meaningful way. Perhaps you will be able to combine all of these things into your plans for the Christmas season. Let us hear if you do anything "extra special" and different—if possible before it happens, for we may like the idea and want to use it.

"FOR THE KINGDOM OF OUR LORD."

A Christmas program by the above title is found in your program booklet "Thy Will To Do," which is included in the packet. The name comes from a phrase in "The Messiah."

"The kingdom of this world is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of His Christ."

This is a very lovely program, which many of our societies will use. It was given in shortened form at the School of Missions last summer by members of our Reidsville society, and those present will recall how effective were the memorized selections of the candlelight service.

Please do not dismiss the program, because you do not have the material from Handel's "Messiah" available on records. The Asheboro society is using the program on December 17 as their Christmas gift to the church and the choir will sing appropriate Christmas songs, rather than using the records. In case some are interested in such a plan for using the program, this is the music being planned by Mrs. John Davis:

Hymn: "Watchman, Tell Us of the Night."

Choir: "Hark the Herald Angles Sing" (In place of record, "Every Valley Shall Be Exalted.")

Choir: "There's A Song in the Air." (In place of record, "For Unto Us.")

Solo: "Come Unto Him."

Hymn: "Joy to the World."

Choir: "Alleluia" — Palestrina
(In place of record, "Hallelujah Chorus.")

Whether you use the program, as intended, with the recordings of "The Messiah" or whether you substitute your own Christmas songs, we believe it is a program which you will like. It will probably need to be given in the church rather than in a home, unless you have plenty of room for a worship center so placed that all can see the candles upon it.

A VISIT TO BRICKS.

One of the home mission projects of our denomination is located at Bricks, North Carolina. Many of us have read about this attempt to turn a Negro school into a community project, with improvements of every phase of community life as the goal. A program containing information about this enterprise in our own state is suggested for our use in local societies in March. I wonder how many of our people have ever visited Bricks?

Last week Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, Mrs. O. H. Paris, Mrs. John G. Truitt and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill took a day out of busy lives to go to Bricks and see for themselves just what our denomination is doing there for a rural Negro community. We are hoping that each of them will share with us their reactions, and give us first-hand information about this North Carolina project. How about a report from each of them?

THE FARMER'S VOCATION.

do so, they have time for church, reading, travel and enjoyment of fellowship with neighbors. The capitalist-farmer caught between two economies, rural and urban, belongs to neither unless he pays a price. He must struggle for a sense of vocation and deliverance from conflicts due to the dual and transitional nature of his relationships.

For the peasant-farmer, the machine-farmer and the vast majority of "average" farmers in between who have some of the qualities of both, work is a matter of great moment. As Christian vocation, work has significance, not for its own sake but as a mark of worth of the individual. Labor is dignified when it builds with honor a quality of product and fulfills man's obligations in life. Farming is Christian vocation when husbandmen put their hands to work and give their hearts to God.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor, Southern Pines, N. C.

Mrs Carl Key has written me a very interesting letter about one of the activities of the Children's Church at Durham. She enclosed a tiny little bulletin that is used by the Junior Church members and it is very attractive.

This particular service was one in which some Jewish friends shared. As we come to Christmas we need to remember that it is the birthday of Jesus. We also need to remember that as a little boy he joined in the fun and festival of his people.

Mrs. Key writes: "Mrs. Cohen and Mrs. Kraus, the Rabbi's wife came to visit Children's Church. We had an informal discussion about Jewish customs, holy days, festivals and symbols. Mrs. Cohen brought her lovely silver Menorah with the orange candles which they light during Hanukkah which is celebrated this year from December 3-10. They told us of the holidays and some of the games. The boys and girls asked questions and our guests answered them."

The inside of the Bulletin had drawings of the Jewish Star or the Star of David as it is sometimes called. There was a drawing of a menorah and the order of service included.

Blessed art thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast sanctified us by thy commandments, and command us to kindle the lights of Hanukkah.

Call to Worship:

While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease.
Genesis 8: 22.

The 100th. Psalm was said in Union and Mrs. Key told the story, "Santa Wears Black" which was taken from Children's Religion, December, 1947.

She concluded: "For our Call to Worship, the Psalm and the song, 'God of All' our guests could join with us. The story was about a little girl who mistook the Jewish grandfather of a neighborhood friend for Santa Claus. It tells how Peggy and her brother were invited to share in the Hanukkah ceremony in the home of their Jewish neighbors. Our guests were presented with gifts of homemade Christmas cookies, one of the traditional foods of our Christmas season."

Thank you, Mrs. Key for sharing this lovely time with us. There are many sources of information about Jewish customs. One is the very beautiful book, "One God—The Ways We Worship Him" by Florence Mary Fitch. It not only tells about Jewish religious festivals, but Roman Catholic and Protestant.

MOTHER KNOWS BEST.

By LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

She was a very young mother and very lovely to look at as she stood at the door and said, "Mother knows best! Now don't ask me again! You are not to do it!" I forget what the issue was, but I looked back quickly into the early days of my own motherhood and laughed to myself. Why, when I was her age how little I knew about anything! Yet I am sure that I, too, handed out the same "Mother knows best."

Of course, a young mother has had some experience along many lines, but as to helping children to meet life's problems she generally does not know much. She and the children should grow together, and in many situations she will know best. But there will be still other occasions when the children's judgement will be good and should be taken into account. Mothers cannot persuade their children that Mother always knows best, unless their past experiences have proved this to be true.

Barabara Anne Stone has positive likes and dislikes. At six years of age she has favorite foods and favorite games. And, too, she is very sure as to the colors that are her favorites.

One day she and her mother went to the city to buy material for the little girl's new dress. After considering several possibilities her mother indicated her choice to the saleswoman.

"But I don't like that, Mother! I don't like blue and red together. I like this yellow and brown," Barbara Anne urged.

"Mother knows best what you should have. Now keep still!" was the response, and the red and blue material was purchased.

Mrs. Stone has always liked the combination of red and blue, but Barbara Anne, when she has to wear the dress to school, feels unhappy in it—her disposition seems to react to it unpleasantly. Her mother wonders what can ail her child every time she puts on her "pretty" dress!

This attitude of "Mother knows best" is usually far from convincing, and mothers often do not understand why. There are other mothers who use that attitude as a battle-ax to stop controversy and argument.

Mothers—and Fathers—instead of so much of this self-assurance, why not give the children opportunities to do things and see if parents really do know all there is to know? Parents are by no means infallible. Is there any reason why a boy or girl should not work out a really improved scheme sometimes? Give the young people a chance to choose and to develop judgement. Let them show their initiative; let them work out their ideas. If the results are disappointing, they will nevertheless have learned a valuable lesson.

Grandmother Brown is a woman of opinions—extremely strong ones. She is caring for two little grandchildren, seven and eight years of age. The elder adjusts to her grandmother's ways easily, but the younger has decided ideas of her own. As a result, with Susan—the younger child—there is constant friction. She shows real pleasure in displeasing her grandmother. However, that lady does not relax her arbitrary manner. Grandmother "knows," and Grandmother's word is not to be questioned!

One day she was laying down the law to the child's father, and Susan asked, "Aren't you very impolite to speak to my daddy that way?"

"Indeed I'm not!" was the reply. "My way is best! And he should know it by this time!"

"Daddy and I don't think so," answered the child.

We all have known mothers who failed to recognize their children had grown up and who never learned the wonderful lesson of "hands off." We mothers never know what our children are thinking. Sometimes in later years they remark about various childhood experiences, and we find to our amazement that we were not as important in our "know-all" attitude as we thought we were.

However, much of the time mothers do know best!

Out of the Mouths of Babies

Jack and Mary had just been to the grownups' church for the first time. A day or two afterward they were found in the nursery whispering audibly to each other.

What are you children doing? their nurse asked.

We're playing church, replied Jack.

But you shouldn't whisper in church, admonished nurse.

Oh, we're the choir, said Mary.

Your editor hopes that you will enjoy the story on this page concerning the College Cevenol, Chambon, France. I had the pleasure of visiting there this summer, paying for my stay by giving a talk on Agape. I became acquainted with the "space conditions" mentioned in the article. We slept in tents with very little covering even though the weather was cold. I was very pleased when I awoke one morning to find my feet very warm in spite of the cold. There was a big red hound lying on my feet, but I couldn't get him back the next night.

MAX TALKS.

The job of your representative to an international work camp didn't end when the ship docked at Quebec. Since then Max Vestal has been making numerous addresses concerning his experiences at Agape. He spoke at four of the five youth rallies held in October, the North Carolina Women's Missionary Convention, and the Western North Carolina Conference.

Max has Spoken also at several churches, including Browers Methodist, Flint Hill, Asheboro, Big Oak, and High Point. He was the guest speaker for the Methodist sub-district rally in Randleman, North Carolina. The men and women of the First Methodist Church in Asheboro have heard him, as well as the young people. Max has spoken on one radio broadcast and to many youth groups, including Alamance Presbyterian, Asheboro Presbyterian, Elon Community Church, Elon Ministerial Association, Seagrove, and Hanks Chapel.

Max Vestal wishes to thank each of these churches and youth groups for the courtesies they have extended to him. Max says: "It has been a pleasure to visit these many organizations. The response to the work camp idea has been most warming. It is our hope that our youth may continue to work, helping to bring the kingdom of God on earth—spreading Agape throughout the world. We can take a big step by making our project of bringing a Philippino student to America a success . . . again, my thanks, and may God bless each and every one of you."

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN COMMITTEE WORKS IN FRANCE.

The work camp was organized once camp held at the College Cevenol, Frances

The work camp was organized once more this year under the World Council of Churches and was made possible in large part through the financial support and the labors of the Congregational Christian Service Committee. It was the CCSC which, together with the college, organized the first work camp here five years ago, which served as inspiration and model to the World Council Youth Department for a whole series of such work camps. This year's camp also caught, I think, some sense of the inner mystery of the college which it has helped mightily to build. German students coming straight from the highly articulate theological and liturgical atmosphere of their Student Parishes, in which the prophetic Confessing Church movement was born out of the anguishing struggle between the Gospel and National Socialism, have at first been bewildered by the formlessness of the Christian experience of many of the French and American young people. The Americans particularly have brought to their pick and shovel labors the ingrained conviction that work can be prayer. The Germans, who characteristically perform their work with great conscientiousness, have tried almost with a hopeless feeling to make their comrades from other lands understand that devoted work can be a prayer addressed to Hitler, to Stalin, or to God. The Americans and some of the French have been restive if worship services or religious discussions showed any tendency to make the church, or even the Christ, too evidently the center of the camp, out of a deep desire to repulse and exclude no one, no man of good will. The hope of the college is that through such a camp, as throughout the school year, young people coming out of extraordinarily different backgrounds will find new and deeper forms of unity in faith. Over against the narrowness which can characterize equally the orthodox and the liberals, the College Cevenol tries to point to the living Christ, whose name is Prince of Peace and Love Incarnate, who called all men unto him, and who promises that those who respond by bearing together the burdens of that common cross which he gives them, he will in no wise cast out.

Fourteen hundred cubic metres of earth have been excavated by hand by that 78-man camp in a little over a month, and now the masons can begin laying the foundations of the long-dreamed-of classroom building. The work of two former college students during the camp of last summer was to put into the service of the college some of the architectural knowledge they have obtained at the university, and all winter long we who are charged with the planning for the future of the school have been studying plans and costs. Building is probably not much cheaper in France today than in the United States, but with the aid of the willing minds and muscles of campers we find that we can hope to build a 14-classroom building, with urgently needed basement storage space, for $75,000. With the announcement of a generous gift by a long-time friend of the college in memory of his wife, the Finance Committee found just as the camp opened that it had received a total of $13,000 for this purpose! The architects quickly calculated: with that sum the foundations could be put in for both wings of the ell and covered with a layer of cement which would protect them from erosion and serve one day as the floor of the classrooms. Perhaps at the center of the ell one section could be completed right up to the roof, giving us already before the next snow flies one basement

VICTORIOUS DAILY LIVING.

LESSON XII—DECEMBER 17, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Count it all joy my brethren, when you meet various trials, for you know that the testing of your faith produces steadfastness. And let steadfastness have its full effects, that you may be perfect and complete, lacking in nothing.—James 1:2, 3.

LESSON: II Corinthians 11:18-30; 12:8-10.

DEVOTIONAL READING: II Timothy 4:1-8.

The Word of an Expert.

Some one has facetiously said that "An expert is a little spurt away from home." There are many people who "talk big" when they are among folks who do not know them very well. But they are not such experts as they profess to be. But this fellow Paul had a right to say something about "victorious daily living," for he was an expert on it, whether with folks who knew him or folks who did not know him. He lived victoriously and out of the abundance of his heart he spoke. That is why his words have meaning for us. For it should be remembered that Paul was a man of like passions as we are. He lived in the same kind of world that we live in, he lived with the same kind of people we live with, and he had the same kind of experiences that we have. When Paul writes about victorious living he is talking about victorious living in our kind of world with the kind of people we have to live with and in the experiences through which we have to pass.

A Religion of Power.

One does not read much about Paul without finding out that for Paul, religion had power. It was not simply a creed that a man had in his head, or a system of religious practices through which he went, but a vital force and factor in life, and in everyday life. Religion did things for Paul and did things in Paul. It was tremendous force or power on which he laid hold, or which he allowed to come into his life and express itself through his life, which enabled him to bear what had to be borne and to do what had to be done. It was for him a dynamic force which could sustain and strengthen and transform life. Paul laid hold of the power of religion even as a man turns on a switch and lays hold of the power of electricity. Paul found religion the secret of victorious daily living. It should be added that for Paul religion was essentially an intimate personal relationship with Christ. His life was so completely surrendered to Christ that he was a conductor of the power of the living Christ. It was because his life was linked to Christ's life that life could not defeat him. He could do all things through Christ who strengthened him.

Victorious Living When the Going IS Rough and Tough.

The Corinthian Church had given Paul a lot of trouble and a lot of concern. Corinth was a large city, boasting of cash and corruption. It was hard for the Christians who came out of this environment to rid themselves of all heathen beliefs and practices. There were those who insisted that Christians should observe the ceremonial law of the Jews, and they found ready hearers among some of the members of the church. It grieved Paul that his converts were coming again into the bondage of the law from which Christ had freed them. He wrote his beloved Corinthians to the effect that they had been saved by faith in Christ and that they need not observe Jewish forms and ceremonies. He furthermore criticized the Judaizers who had caused the trouble. Instead of meeting logic with logic and truth with truth, Paul's enemies attacked both his character and his apostleship. Whereupon Paul told in brief something of the trials and hardships which he had endured for Christ's sake and in Christ's work. He did a little boasting, but boasting that was done in a spirit of humility, about what it had cost to be an apostle in comparison with the easy life of those who opposed him. It almost makes one's hair stand on end to read about some of the experiences this veteran had had in his campaigns for Christ. Hard work, imprisonment, beatings and floggings, stoning, shipwrecks—on one occasion he had floated around for a day and a night on the deep—all kinds of perils—in flooded streams, by robbers, by his enemies, on land and on sea, in city and in country, fasting, exposure to cold, lack of clothing—all these and other dangers and hardships he had endured. But that was not all, and he indicated that it was not the worst either. He adds "Besides all those things that are without, there is that which presseth upon me daily, anxiety for all the churches," or as another translation has it, "the care of the churches." By day and by night he carried on his heart fellow-Christians far and wide. In short both from without and from within varied and powerful forces beat upon this man's life and threatened to defeat him. But he refused to be licked. He had found the secret of victorious living through Christ. Paul was not licked because he was not licked inside, and no man is ever licked until he is licked inside. The thing to be remembered is that Paul faced experiences such as we are not called upon to face, and yet he lived victoriously. If he did it, we can do it. But only in the same way in which he did it—through the power of the living Christ, appropriated through faith, and available through surrender.

Victorious Living When Handicaps Seem Hopeless.

Paul had some burden, heavy and grievous to be borne. He calls it "a thorn in the flesh." A thorn in the flesh is usually not deadly, but it can be decidedly uncomfortable and painful, a constant source of nagging pain. What this "thorn in the flesh" was we do not know, and it is perhaps idle to speculate, although many scholars have done so. We do know one thing—it was such a nuisance to say nothing of such a burden that Paul asked God to take it from him. He besought him thrice, and the word "besought" means great earnestness and almost agonized entreaty. But God said "No." But God said something else, something perhaps more important. He said, "Paul I can't take the thorn away; it is my will for you to have it. But I will give you grace to deal with it, and my grace will be sufficient for you. And your very weakness will enable you to lay hold on my power." God said "No" to Paul's prayer, but his prayer did not go unanswered. In fact Paul got a wonderful answer to his prayer. And all the rest of his life, in spite of the thorn in the flesh, Paul was more than conqueror through Christ whose power rested upon him and worked mightily in him.

FAITH CAN MASTER FEAR. G. Ernest Thomas. Fleming H. Revell, N. Y. $2.00.

Few lives, if any, are free of fear. Some are obsessed by fear. Some who would not admit it, have secret fears.

For all must deal with fear, either in their own lives or in the lives of others, the author brings the assurance that it must and can be wiped out "by a confidence which is born out of reason and faith." Many aids are suggested. For instance: "If our attention is centered on worthy ends, a wise use of memory will help to banish any of the fears which have their origin in failures."

Parents will find many helpful psychological insights such as the following: "Sometimes our fear of failure is the result of childhood compulsion which has never been overcome. If a child is subjected to ridicule because of certain mistakes which he makes, or if he is compared unfavorably with other brothers or sisters, he often assumes that he is a failure, or he lives every day in constant fear of it."

Ministers who read this book will become better pastors, will learn to deal more sympathetically and more helpfully with frustrated individuals. Homiletic gems abound. Any pastor who can help his parishioners allay their fears has performed a lasting service.

The author's point of view is not simply negative. His approach is positive, as set forth in this typical paragraph. "The possibility of failure is a constant threat to happiness. Our competitive society is the fountain of fear which drenches most of those who live within it. The Christian attitude toward life offers a full and satisfying answer to the deepest problems which confront any of us. It leads us to recognize that we have talents, and challenges us to use them wisely and well. It removes the tensions which are caused by an unreasonable striving for position. It opens the floodgates of power from God whereby every one of us can be victorious. In the living of that faith we can successfully avoid the fear of failure."

Surely this is the Christian answer to fear.

THE CHURCH AND CONTEMPORARY CHANGE. G. Bromley Oxnam. The Macmillan Co. N. Y. $2.50.

Bishop Oxnam is the logical man in Protestantism to write a book on this subject. During recent years he has helped to shape the social policies of Protestantism. His conspicuous position of leadership both in the Methodist Church and in the Federal Council of The Churches of Christ of America have given him a unique vantage point to study the currents of thought and action in contemporary Christianity.

The social philosophy of a great churchman is found in the author's Introduction: "The most effective antidote to dictatorship abroad is life-giving democracy at home. It is a healthy democracy that is immune to Communist bacteria. Liberty, equality, and fraternity are contagious, and if present in sufficient vitality may become epidemic. Let people who suffer dictatorship behold a nation in which man has preserved his liberty, established equality, and practices fraternity, and it is certain as day follows night that such a vision will become a revolutionary force that will not rest until freedom is won. Socially controllable inequalities must be removed."

Moreover, the Bishop insists: "We get nowhere by ringing tocsin bells, by digging our underground caverns and making ready for atomic bombs of Communism. We win the future by moving into the sunlight. Intelligence and social conscience pledged to enthrone the moral law in social practice, can end poverty, direct atomic energy to the enrichment of personality, and, what is of greater importance, give the spirit of man full opportunity to love God with all his mind and soul and strength and his neighbor as himself."

Every minister should be acquainted with the writings of this social prophet. His Beecher Lectures at Yale in 1944 were on the subject, "Preaching and the Social Crisis." He declares: "It is shortsightedness that trains our candidates for the ministry in comparative religion, and rightly so, but fails to acquaint our leaders with the philosophies, the social theories, the tactics, economics of the contemporary challenges of our faith."

The majority of ministers need orientation in our complex economic order. The repetition of platitudinous sermons prepared from previous generations will not suffice in our day. The Bishop is writing out of first-hand experience when he says: "The minister must follow Jesus into contemporary society, carrying his convictions and possessed of his courage, determined to enthrone his ideals." Again he points out that the minister must be able to tell the difference between the spent forces about to relinquish power and the dynamic forces about to assume power.

One finds here considerable help in a critical appraisal of capitalism and the role of labor in our industrial world. He tells how the Christian minister proclaims a World Gospel in the name of a World Savior and dedicates himself, even going "into all the world to teach the nations." This teaching must be backed by practices of free people who are ready to sacrifice for Christianity just as the Communist stands ready to implement the Communist ideology.

Capitalism comes in for a rather serious drubbing when the author states: "It is a striking and significant fact that no great social reform has been sponsored by American business. . . . American business has not only failed to sponsor a major social reform, but unfortunately, has fought most reforms. It fought the right of labor to organize. It fought the demand for an eight-hour day. It fought plans for workingmen's insurance and compensation for accidents."

The rule of thumb in evaluating economic policies is this: "Religious leaders insist upon the worth of persons. They affirm the supreme value of personality. They therefore do not ask, Is it Capitalist? Is it Socialist? Is it Communist? They ask Is it Christian? By that they mean, does a particular way of getting a job done enrich personality, maintain freedom, release creative initiative, benefit humanity?"

Religious liberty is discussed with special reference to the Roman Catholic Church. He writes: "The Roman Catholic hierarchy holds to a principle that is a denial of religious liberty. Where opposition to the principle is strong, it practices tolerance as a temporary expedient." Ample source material is included for those

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you for the good report this week. I am very sorry I held things up last week by absent-mindedly addressing my report to Reidsville instead of Richmond. How terrible I felt when it came back to me on Tuesday afternoon! But it also was an excellent report. I am so grateful for everything. We had been living for quite a while on faith, hope, charity—and mostly faith and hope! I was about to say during that long dry time "the greatest of these is 'charity' and that is what we are lacking."

This past Wednesday night I addressed our whole campus family of one hundred one on what it means to be a Christian daily and always. I wish you could have seen these fine boys and girls as they crowded around to say something complimentary to me at the close of the worship service. It was not I but the spirit of deep reverence and worship that had come upon them. They responded to that. It is only occasionally I speak to them, but every week we have worship for all and others are invited in to make the talk or to tell the story, as the case may be. The central diningroom is also a fine place to say a prayer, make an announcement, or a simple earnest appeal to the boys and girls to help make ours a really good and inspiring home. Here, too, the response is good.

Speaking of the diningroom—I wonder if anyone will be so good as to send us turkeys or chickens for Christmas. I wish they would.

That very cold Sunday, Mrs. Truitt and I took only five of our boys on our regular three-churches trip. They did an excellent job and we are grateful for the lovely response of the churches.

Please cooperate with us in taking a Thanksgiving Offering in every church, as we really greatly need it.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

"FREEDOM IS NEVER FREE."

ent political scramble of the nations. Without question things are far worse in international affairs today than any of us realize. And it is much later than we think. But, if the American people look to God, instead of only to Washington, all that our freedom means to us now can be preserved and a still richer freedom to follow will be our nation's position. "Without God, we are sunk," but with God as our hope we will go from strength unto strength. The answer to America's baffling problems is not found in economics or in politics, but in religion. "The only way out of our national predicament is via the Ten Commandments and the two great Commandments of Jesus." In God is our hope.

Our problems cannot be solved by human wisdom alone—God is our nation's greatest need. He alone has the answer to our nation's problems. We dare not place our dependence upon material values and material forces. Material power and wealth alone are not enough. We need the spirit and power of God as our defense. No Army or Navy or Air Force can be large enough in itself to give our freedom the protection needed in these days of frightening peril. Let the torch of American Freedom fall to earth, and in all probability the flame of freedom throughout the world would be extinguished forever.

Christian patriotism calls for a moral rearmament for our entire country. It calls for a mobilizing of the Christian ideals, the Christian conscience and the Christian faith—the ideals and faith of our fathers. Every true American patriot will accept the challenge. These who want what Russia has, will not. Those who are willing to take what Europe and Asia are seeking, will not. But all who truly appreciate our American heritage of freedom will respond to the challenge and seek to give God his rightful place in their personal lives, in their homes, in their business or profession, in their communities, and in their nation—that our freedom may not perish from the earth.

YOUR FLAG AND MY FLAG.

Your flag and my flag,
And how it flies today
In your land and my land
And half a world away!

Rose-red and blood-red
The stripes forever gleam;
Snow-white and soul-white—
The good forefathers' dream;

Sky-blue and true-blue, with stars to gleam aright—
The gloried guidon of the day;
A shelter through the night—

Your flag and my flag!
And, oh, how much it holds—
Your land and my land—
Secure within its folds!

Your heart and my heart
Beat quicker at the sight;
Sun-kissed and wind-tossed—
The red, the blue, the white

The one flag—the great flag, the Flag for me and you—
Glorified all else beside—the red
And white and blue!

Your flag and my flag!
To every star and stripe
The drums beat as hearts beat and Fifers shrilly pipe!

Your flag and my flag—
A blessing in the sky;
Your hope and my hope—
It never hid a lie!

Home land and far land and half
The world around—
Old Glory hears our glad salute
And ripples to the sound!

"God of the past, our times are in Thy hand—with us abide: lead us by faith to hope's true promised land—be Thou our Guide."

God, grant that our government shall be in fact as well as in words,—
"A government of the people, by the people and for the people," instead of—a government of the politicians, by the politicians, and for the politicians. "So mote it be!"

storage room and two classrooms. We have high hopes that with such a beginning the time will not be too far off when gifts will be made by those who, following the history of this really incredible school, will want to make it possible to complete the sturdy skeleton which has been the product of the summer's labors. (Congregational Christians will be happy to know that the college has been approved by the Mission Council as an "Authorized Special" for which they may designate their gifts.) Those who have visited the college or read carefully previous general letters know that in spite of the very good spirit and many-sided activities of the school, it is literally true that we are carrying on a seven-year course for 330 students, of whom one-third are residents, under space conditions considerably inferior to those of many D. P. camps on this continent.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

There may be readers of these notes who have burdens heavy and grievous to be borne who have handicaps and limitations that are indeed thorns in the flesh. And perhaps again and again like Paul they have asked God to take away these things which buffet and threaten to beat them. Perhaps today's lesson may help such to learn Paul's secrets of victorious daily living. Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever. What he did for Paul he can do for us. This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.

interested in a careful study of this problem.

The Church, Bishop Oxnam asserts, must develop grand strategy for world crisis. It must heal its divisions, regain touch with reality, discover a way to witness, work and worship together, to the end that its common faith may become a common purpose and evenetuate in a common act.

Carl Key Reports for CROP

The Christian Rural Overseas Program (CROP) officially opened its 1950 harvest appeal to rural Americans to help underprivileged and hungry people overseas with relief in kind by dedicating an entire shipload of foodstuffs on United Nations Day in Chicago. The cargo was made up of advance contributions from 17 states where CROP this year operates and government surplus of powdered eggs and dried milk. Participating in the colorful ceremony were DP children seen above in Ukrainian national costumes who sang "America" in English and in the Ukrainian tongue. Some of the government surplus is seen in the inset during loading ceremonies flanked by Walter Parr (left) and Carl Key (right), CROP's Regional Field Directors.

CROP, a department of Church World Service, has now become a department of the new National Council of Churches. Church World Service voted to complete its operations and transfer its overseas program to the National Council.

A strong conviction prevails among Protestant leaders that the experience which has been gained by the denominations in cooperative relief has in the main been a happy one and should be preserved for the future church. This action will involve a radical change in the program and in the organization of CWS, but it is comforting to those who have labored and sacrificed for the movement to know that this unique ministry will be extended in what is perhaps even a more significant service to mankind.

Oakland and Berea Christian Churches Purchase Parsonage

The Hardcastles have recently moved into the new parsonage of Oakland and Berea Christian Churches. The home, purchased from Mr. W. G. Saunders, is located in the village of Chuckatuck, and was a real bargain at the price paid for it, $12,000.00. It is an attractive, well-built, well arranged home with seven rooms and bath. It also has an enclosed porch which can be used as a dining room in the spring, summer and fall. There is a large, screened porch on the side of the house. The house is thoroughly insulated, and there is a central heating plant. The grounds around the home are landscaped with shrubbery and trees, including dog-wood trees which are beautiful when in bloom. On a large lot in the rear of the house are a barn and several other substantial out-buildings. The parsonage was bought jointly by Oakland and Berea Churches and has been paid for by cash raised by solicitation and by money advanced by the churches in anticipation of pledges already made. Oakland and Berea thus are added to the list of churches in the Southern Convention which own their parsonages. They are to be congratulated on this progressive forward step.

"GOD'S HANDMARK UPON US."

By REV. EDWARD J. VORBA.

In relating their experiences in the British Isles many early American authors have told of spending Christmas in Yorkshire. I can understand why they were so enthused about celebrating that joyous holiday in that lovely northeastern section of the Green Isles, for three years ago my Christmas Day was spent in that very same Yorkshire. It was in the industrial city of Huddersfield, just across the moors from Lancashire. I was a guest in the home of a college friend whose father, the Rev. R. Reginald Parry, is one of Great Britain's noted preachers.

Mr. Parry, who is the minister of the Highfield Church in Huddersfield, is also an amateur photographer. During that holiday season he showed me many of his photographs. One ex-

THE CARROLL COUNTY MISSION.

Under the fine leadership of Rev. James W. Madren, pastor of the Carroll County Mission, progress is being made on improvements at the Elk Spur parsonage, including the installation of water and bathroom facilities. Several of our churches have contributed to this worthy cause and also many individuals. The total cost is going to be about $600 for these improvements, and the Mission Board would welcome additional contributions which will add substantially to the comfort of our pastor. Contributions should be sent to the Mission Board, Elon College, North Carolina.

Special thanks should go to Mr. W. B. Williams of our Newport News Church, electrical contractor, for supplying wire for lights for the Elk Spur Sunday school rooms and materials for wiring the garage and playground.

The Rocky Ford Church is considering the possibility of relocating, and is now raising funds to help to make this possible.

pecially caught my attention. It was of an old man shaping a piece of pottery. The story behind the picture is this. Shortly after Mr. Parry took the photograph King George visited the factory. He picked up a piece of pottery which had not hardened, and his handmark was left upon it. He was sorry, but the factory so prized the king's handmark upon the pottery that it was placed in a museum and now is a priceless possession.

Like that is the handmark of God upon each of our lives. We will know that again this Advent and Christmas Season as Christ comes anew. It is the handmark of love. It is the handmark of his purpose and will. As we move through these joyous and festive days we realize all this as we never have before. God's handmark is there upon each of us. We will rejoice in it and will never have it otherwise. The handmark of the Great King is upon us all. May we be true to ourselves these Advent days, acknowledge that seal of God's loving will, and ever live as persons with God's stamp upon us.

Japan's unusually long coastline is approximately three times that of the continental United States. In relation to the land surface, there is one mile of shore for each eight or nine square miles of land. In the British Isles, to which Japan is sometimes compared, the ratio is one to thirteen.

TWO NOTED CONGREGATIONALISTS CLAIMED BY DEATH

Dr. Charles R. Brown, dean of the Yale Divinity School from 1911 to 1928, died at New Haven, Connecticut, on Tuesday, November 28, at the age of 88. He had served as moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches, as guest preacher on many college campuses, and had lectured widely on religious subjects. He gave a series of lectures at the Elon Christian Workers' Conference in 1948. His book, "The Main Points," a theological summary, is required reading for Methodist ministers. His lectures on preaching at Yale were published under the title, "The Art of Preaching." There are many reasons why this book should be read by every Congregational Christian minister. His preaching was of a high order: concise, lucid and scholarly. And yet the spiritual note was predominant and unmistakable. His flawless prose has served as a model for many preachers and writers. A number of ministers in the Southern Convention had the privilege of studying under Dean Brown. One of the great preachers of our generation has gone to his reward.

Funeral services for Dr. Oscar E. Maurer were held in Center Congregational Church in New Haven on Saturday, December 2. Dr. Maurer was the pastor of Center Church from 1909 to 1943, and since that time has been pastor emeritus. He was the twelfth pastor of the historic church. He was moderator of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches during the biennium 1938-40, and served for 35 years as recording secretary of The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. He was honored last June at the 141st Annual Meeting of the American Board as he gave up the post of recording secretary. Many people knew him as the skillful editor of the Manual for Congregational Christian Churches. He preached at the biennial session of the Southeast Convention held in Norfolk when he was moderator. He was a man of scholarly attainments, genteel manners and saintly character. He brought great dignity to the Congregational ministry.

Congregationalism has produced its quota of great preachers. Biblical scholarship, evangelistic fervor, social concern, missionary zeal and pastoral fidelity have characterized the Congregational ministry at its best. Here are traditions to uphold, examples to emulate, records to inspire. The future should be no less auspicious than the past.

DECEMBER FOR CHRIST

One of the best suggestions of the season comes from an interdenominational movement called "December for Christ." To foster observance of the true meaning of Christmas, individuals are asked to attend church (daily if possible), offer prayers of thanks for the birth of Christ, and work for peace.

That, it would seem, is an appropriate program for Advent. The energies and resources of so many people are spent before Christmas that worship has little significance. December is the time for prolonged reflection on the advent of Christ and his continuing ministry in our world. Stewardship (partnership with Christ in service) and prayer (fellowship with the living Christ) should take on new significance. Each of us should reach for deeper meaning in Christian experience during the holiday season of this midcentury year. New revelations may come. Miracles of grace may occur.

Yes, let us all unite in the "December for Christ" movement. These days, both before and after Christmas are days of grace, rich in spiritual possibilities, days in which Christ can continue and perfect his redemptive work. Christ in the heart, Christ in the home, Christ in the hemisphere, Christ everywhere; this is the Advent and Christmas message.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL IS BORN

The Congregational Christian Churches are a vital part of the new National Council of Churches. Our leaders were prominent in the movement which led to the formation of the National Council. Ecumenically-minded ministers and laymen who have served long and honorably in its antecedent interdenominational bodies will give strength and guidance to the new inclusive Protestant organization.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Williams of Newport News represented the Southern Convention at the Constituting Convention in Cleveland. Some of the reports of the convention have come to us as a result of their thoughtfulness. Mr. Donald C. Bolles, Public Relations Director of the council, has prepared a roundup story of the four eventful days at Cleveland. The substance of his story is given here in order to provide our readers with a running account of this epoch-making council:

In a solemn setting, rich in color and pageantry, the delegates of 29 American Christian denominations brought into being the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America, dedicated "to the glory of God and the service of mankind."

It was a great moment in religious history as a representative of each of 25 major Protestant and four Eastern Orthodox churches signed constituting documents, and then heard the presiding officer, Dr. Franklin Clark Fry of New York, formally declare the National Council "officially constituted."

The capstone in the arch of cooperative Christianity in America was erected in a memorable ceremony in snow-bound Cleveland's public auditorium on Wednesday morning, November 28. Against the backdrop of the banners of the 29 constituent denominations, the eight merging agencies signified that they now were united in an interchurch enterprise linking 32,000,000 Christians in 150,000 churches across the land.

There were 4,000 delegates present in Public Hall as the plan for one great interdenominational agency at last became a reality. At one table near the front sat a group with an especial interest in the moment. It was the planning committee of 48 men and women—six from each of the merging agencies—who in large measure were the architects of the National Council. Most of them had been at Atlantic City in 1941 when the blueprint was first conceived. Now they were witnessing the harvest of their years of arduous and intensive efforts.

Under the constitution approved by the 600 official representatives of the 29 constituting communions, the National Council will begin operations January 1, embracing the major interdenominational enterprises of Christian activity developed over more than a half-century. Centered in four major divisions and more than 20 other units will be evangelism, education, stewardship, foreign and home missions, family life, overseas aid and many others. In addition to strengthening united action in many areas of Christian concern, such as human rights, world order and economic justice, the National Council, through general departments of united church men and united church women, represents a step forward in creating new opportunities for greater and more effective participation of the laity in all areas of church life.

Every step necessary to enable the National Council to start operations as the new year dawns was taken during the historic four-day meeting—the first general assembly, as well as the constituting convention, of the new council of churches. The delegates chose as the first president a distinguished clergyman—the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill of Greenwich, Conn., the presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and named as the chief administrative officer of a staff of more than 400, Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches. Dr. Cavert was elected general secretary and Dr. Roy Ross, general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, associate general secretary.

A budget that will exceed $4,435,000 was presented and the interim policy making body—a 65-member General Board—was formally constituted and held two sessions.

The constituting convention, acting upon the suggestion of Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York, American president of the World Council of Churches, quickly framed and adopted messages to both President Truman and Secretary General Trygve Lie of the United Nations.

To President Truman, the convention messaged: "May the God who holds the nations in the palm of his hand and from whom, in times past, our fathers sought wisdom and understanding, guide you and your advisers to the end that peace may be vouchsafed to the peoples of the earth. The responsibilities which are yours can be borne only with the aid that comes from God, and to him we commend you in our prayers."

To Mr. Lie the delegates expressed the fervent hope that the United Nations "assured of the full participation of our country, may act under God, to secure with justice the enduring welfare of mankind." The delegates, he was told, "offered special prayer to Almighty God that the United Nations may find just and effective procedures for containing and resolving the conflict in Korea."

Earlier the delegates had received from the President of the United States a message of greeting in which he termed the National Council a step that will "enable the American churches to exert a greater influence in the strengthening of the spiritual foundation of our national life at a time when a materialistic philosophy is rampant." He had been invited to address the convention but declined because the national emergency required his presence in Washington.

Dr. Frederick Nolde, substituting for British Ambassador Sir Oliver Franks, delivered an address that seemed to reflect not only his own opinion of the Christian approach to the crisis at the moment, but that of a majority of the delegates. Dr. Nolde is director of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs. He declared: "So long as there remains a marginal possibility of averting total global war, we must utilize every means which will not betray conviction or offend conscience. . . . In this process, and even if war should come, we must penetrate the artificial curtains by which we are momentarily separated and experience the bonds of humanity and faith which unite men of different nations and races. . . .

"The struggle for peace must go forward unrelentingly, and men must be driven by the conviction that peace can yet be won. In these trying days, and always, we pray God, through Jesus Christ our Lord, for the faith which enables us to stand in the face of principalities and powers of darkness. From him alone can come strength to make the expression of our faith adequate to the needs of our day."

Dr. Nolde outlined eight practical steps which he said might help to avert war. These were:

1. Guard against hysteria which robs action of moral perspective and political wisdom.
2. Guard against the self-righteousness and hatred which give impulse to the monstrosity of a holy war or a preventive war.
3. Guard against unilateral action which rejects a moral judgment as reflected by majority opinion of the United Nations.
4. Guard against false pride and face-saving tendencies which close the door to open-minded and effective negotiation.
5. Guard against the prejudice which refuses to see the evils in a situation which is predominantly good and thus deserving of support.
6. Guard against complacency which comes with increasing military strength and which may bring a disposition to risk an incident, or even to create an incident, for inciting conflict on a world scale. (Please turn to next page.)

7. Guard against making our economy so dependent upon military production as to give the impression that we are unprepared to recognize the importance of economic health throughout the world.
8. Guard against impatience in seeking a sound conclusion of the world's present plight.

As Dr. Nolde concluded his address, a unique demonstration of approbation followed. Delegates rose to their feet to give him prolonged applause and a long line formed on the stage to congratulate him. Later a resolution was approved to send copies of his speech to the Secretary of State and to the members of the Senate and House committees on foreign relations.

A message "to the people of the nation," drafted by a committee representative of all 29 communions and headed by Dr. Douglas Horton, also reflected the delegates' concern for the present crisis.

Terming the time "big with peril and with opportunity," the message said that the people, as well as the leaders, of the country, have a part to play.

"The call of Christ to us all seems clear, that we play it with calmness, self control, courage and high purpose, as becomes those whose lives are in the hands of God. Without hysteria, without hatred, without pride, without undue impatience, without making national interest our chief aim, but shaping our own policies in the light of the aims of the United Nations, without relaxing our positive services to the other peoples of the world, and in complete repudiation of the lying dogma that war is inevitable, let us live and, if need be, die as loyal members of the world community to which Christ summons us and to which we of the Council are dedicated."

The Council, said the message, "stands as a guardian of democratic freedom," and "a sturdy ally of the forces of liberty."

"The Council stands for liberty with the richest content. It stands for the freedom of men to be as the Lord God meant them to be. It stands for Christian freedom—including the freedom to pursue happiness and with justice and sympathy to create conditions of happiness for others. . . ."

The National Council's leaders said they were conscious of their own shortcomings.

"Knowing that men too often dream in marble and then build with straw, we whose very human lives are not separate from sin and ignorance can make no boast of past or future excellence.

"But this we have done: by God's grace we have forged an implement for cooperation such as America never has seen before. The council is our churches in their highest common effort for mankind.

"Our hope is in Jesus Christ. The Council is a demonstration of his power to unite his followers in joyous cooperation. . . ."

"In this hope," the message concluded, "we commend you, our fellow citizens, to God's mercy, grace and peace."

Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, noted minister and radio speaker, addressed the Council on Tuesday evening. He said that the National Council is a product of a "spirit of unity which has been growing, and the seed for a harvest which only God can forecast. It is," he added, "the greatest forward step toward religious unity which America has not yet seen, and it may well prove epochal."

The formal ceremony on Wednesday morning in which the Council was officially constituted was filled with symbolism of greater cooperation carried out in a dedicated spirit.

As the audience waited expectantly, the start of the procession was heralded by sharp notes from four trumpets. As the organ played hymns sung by two choirs, the leaders of the 29 communions, dressed in multi-colored vestments and gowns, marched in stately procession into the hall. At their head was the crucifer, followed by a blue-and-white-garbed male choir and two boys carrying the American and Christian flags. Next was a group of church leaders, each designated by his denomination to participate in the act of constituting the Council, the heads of the eight merging agencies, and the representative of the state and local councils of churches, Dr. Hugh Chandler Burr. Following were other dignitaries scheduled to participate in the morning's session.

Finally, in the procession were the denominational delegates. In alphabetical order the gowned delegates moved down the middle aisle. Each denominational delegation was preceded by a white banner trimmed in maroon, bearing the emblem of the Council and the name of the communion. The bearers of the emblems, carried aloft on staffs, were in maroon vestments.

At the start of the meeting the delegates observed a moment of silent prayer for "the United Nations, our nation and those in the great struggle." Bishop John S. Stamm, president of the Federal Council of Churches, led prayers for the United Nations.

The bearers then brought the denominational banners to the stage as the act of constituting itself began. The chairman, Dr. Fry, president of the United Lutheran Church in America, called upon the voting representatives to rise, and asked whether they had agreed to become members and authorized their representatives to sign the official documents. "We do," they replied in unison. Then turning to the single representatives of the denominations seated on the stage, Dr. Fry called the roll of the communions. They rose one by one, stepped forward to a table in the center of the stage, and affixed their signature to the constituting documents. When they had finished, Dr. Fry placed the documents on the altar and then declared the Council officially constituted. He then said: "Let us now dedicate it to the glory of God and to the service of mankind." It was the signal for the 4,000 delegates, alternates, consultants and visitors to rise to their feet for the climactic point of the ceremony.

"And now," they intoned in unison, "as a fellowship of Christian churches, in the communion of the saints, in love and goodwill towards all . . . we invoke the blessing of God upon this National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America, and dedicate the Council to his Glory and the service of mankind, in the name of (Please turn to page 15.)

News of Elon College

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

ELON COLLEGE MEMORIAL GYMNASIUM DEDICATED.

Dr. L. E. Smith, President of Elon College, paid high tribute to Elon's "Gold Star" heroes of World War I and World War II in delivering the principal speech for the formal dedication of Elon's magnificent Alumni Memorial Gymnasium on Saturday night, December 2nd.

The huge physical education plant was begun in May, 1949, and was completed in January, 1950, when it was first opened for use. The building continued in use through the last portion of the 1949-50 term, but formal dedication was delayed until all construction and installation of equipment was complete.

The dedication program was held on December 2, on the occasion of the opening basketball game of the 1950-51 season, which saw the Elon College basketball team meeting the powerful University of North Carolina Tar Heels. The Elon team put up a tremendous battle against the team from the larger Southern Conference institution before going down to defeat by a 57 to 48 score.

The dedication program was held during the half-time intermission, beginning with an organ prelude and the singing of "Faith of Our Father" by the Elon Choir. The invocation was by Rev. James R. Hailey, an Elon graduate of the Class of 1950, after which the choir sang "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

Dr. Smith, who had been confined in bed at his home and at the Alamance General Hospital for a month prior to the dedication game, was sufficiently recovered from an ankle operation to be able to attend the game in a wheel chair, and he delivered the dedicatory remarks while seated by the public address microphone.

In paying tribute to the Elon alumni who gave their lives in the two World Wars, he pointed to the part that Elon College itself played in the two great fights for freedom. He also stressed the part that the gymnasium is to play in Elon's ever-broadening program for the all-round development of her students, physical as well as intellectual and moral.

Upon the conclusion of his dedicatory remarks, Dr. Smith led the assemble crowd in a special litany of dedication.

Plans to unveil a memorial plaque, bearing the names of the "Gold Star" alumni, were cancelled due to the fact that the completed plaque did not arrive in time. The program closed with the national anthem by the Elon Choir.

The memorial plaque, which is to be placed permanently in the entrance foyer of the gymnasium, is to carry the names of four Elon alumni who died in World War I and thirty-three who gave their lives in World War II. The alumni, in whose memory the gymnasium is dedicated, included the following:

World War I: H. H. Barber, of Elon College; John Carl Miller, of Biltmore, N. C.; W. F. Odom, of Bennett Creek, Va.; and Charles N. Whitelock, of Huntingdon, Ind.

World War II: Joseph Henry Bagley, Jr., of Suffolk, Va.; Henry Baxter Bottoms, of Margarettsville, N. C.; Frank Bernard Bragg, of Burlington, N. C.; Jourdan Bivins, of Hillsboro, N. C.; James Buckner, Jr., of Graham, N. C.; James Box Conner, of Vernon, Ala.; James Elmer Dickey, of Burlington, N. C.; George Henry Hugh S. Garrison, of Charlotte, N. C.; Faust, of Scalp Level, Pa.; Sanford Friedman, of Greensboro, N. C.; Joseph Hardison, of Greensboro, N. C.; Keith Harris, of Eliot, Maine; Vernon Hayden, of Portsmouth, Va.; Adrian Hoffman, of Burlington, N. C.; Dewey G. Hooper, of Burlington, N. C.; Joe Howard Hopkins, of Arlington, Va.; Vincent Albert Kaslow, of Cumbola, Pa.; Van Kennedy, of Wilmington, Va.; John Allen May, Jr., of Greensboro, N. C.; Harold McCarn, of Elon College, N. C.; Albert Glenn McDuffie, of West End, N. C.; David William Offman, of Julian, N. C.; Millard Hugo Piberg, of Elizabeth, N. J.; John Puglisi, of New York, N. Y.; Miss Naomi Steed, of Candor, N. C.; John Frank Thompson, of Efland, N. C.; Preston Towns, of Augusta, Ga.; Douglass P. Tucker, of Raleigh, N. C.; Emanuel David Tulchinsky, of Newark, N. J.; Lloyd Elom Whitley, of High Point, N. C.; James Carson Womble, of Pittsboro, N. C.; and Stanley Yonkoski, of John City, N. Y.

The text of Dr. Smith's address follows:

"When the founding fathers built Elon College, they dedicated it to the improvement and development of every young man and young woman who might come to its campus in search of information and preparation for life. Its curriculum is conceived not only for the improvement of the mind of its students, but for the health of their bodies, the strength of their moral characters and the enrichment of their spiritual selves.

"On two different occasions in its comparatively brief span of service, its programs of institutions have been interrupted by the "call to arms" issued by our government in defense of the free peoples of the world and the democratic way of life. In response to each call, Elon College offered its manpower and facilities freely to the command of our government. In World War I we gave our campus to the government for the Student Army Training Corps and a large number of our alumni and students, four of whom never came back. In World War II we gave our campus to our government for the 325th division of the Army Air Corps and a larger number of our alumni and students, 33 of whom never came back.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Contributions on apportionment from the churches and Sunday schools of the Convention for the college are coming along in pretty good shape. We have gone ahead of last year's total a little more than $700. We have two more weeks to go. This is Christmas. As a rule, individuals feel generous at this time of the year. Churches should feel more so. We are only $1,674.64 from the total of $15,000. It would be wonderful if we could reach the total apportionment of $15,000.

This is an appeal to the churches that have not paid their apportionment in full to please send a contribution if possible. To pay your apportionments probably would not impoverish you, but if all did, it would greatly enrich the college. This is to express the hope and with a prayer that we may reach the total to the college in this time of its need.

At Home and Abroad

BLESSINGS COME TO THOSE WHO WAIT—IN CHINA!

Dear Friends:

As we read our Daily Devotions this morning, Willard Sperry's meditation on The Communion of Saints turned our thoughts toward you home folks. We thought by this time we would have seen many of you; but for reasons known only to the government we have still not been able to leave China.

Our exit visas, requested July 4, were granted early in September. Because of my condition at that time, we could only travel by boat. This the government would not allow. Now we are waiting with most of our things packed and inspected twice by the police. Aside from the uncertainty of our future, approaching winter further complicates our living in this poised-to-go state.

Most of our mental discomfort has come from the fact that for these months of waiting we have had no real job, having resigned from Union High School and the Synod in July. Many of you folks could well use some of this "vacation" forced on us, and we would gladly give it all to you. We're not exactly idle (Dick is called in almost daily by the police for something or other); but we long for some worthwhile work.

Here in this time of waiting, we are receiving a great spiritual blessing—fellowship with the missionaries. Now that the government has allowed us to move back into Foochow proper, we are living in the beautiful American Board Compound. Here we can enjoy worship and play with missionary doctors, nurses and teachers of our Board, the Methodist, the Presbyterian, Anglican, and a family sent by China's Children. We do have wonderful times together. In this compound alone there are thirteen missionary children and babies; you can imagine how that helps Lew-is to grow.

The youngest of those thirteen, as many of you already know, is our David Van, born October 1—World Communion Sunday and the new national holiday of Communist China. That was an auspicious day; everything went exceptionally well. None of the things we feared materialized, and mother and baby are still doing fine.

Another blessing which continues with us is mail from home. When conversation with a Chinese friend about conditions here lowers our spirits, or when the radio news reports depress us over the international situation or when thoughts of Korea and men still at war sadden us, we get a letter from one of you—a lift to our spirits.

And now this beautiful fall season points our hearts toward Thanksgiving and Christmas. Will they be spent among loved ones at home or with the loved ones here on the field, or—?? Our future—the broad OUR, yours, ours, the world-in-conflict—our future lies with God. In the Advent season and the new year ahead, may we all more diligently seek the guidance of Jesus that we may do our part toward creating the kind of world he would have for man, that we may meet whatever our future holds, as his Son would meet it.

"Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God our Father, who loved us and gave us eternal comfort and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts and establish them in every good work and word."

DICK & DOROTHY JACKSON.

November 1, 1950.

NOTE.—This letter is the latest one received from the Jacksons. It should be noted, however, as stated in THE SUN of last week, that they left for Hongkong on November 28.—MG. ED.

FACTS ABOUT AND RESULTS OF MISSION WORK IN JAPAN.

The following interesting facts about Japan have been gathered as part of its research work, by the Japan International Christian University Foundation.

* * *

More than 90,000 Japanese students are enrolled in Christian schools, colleges and universities of Japan.

* * *

Salaries of Japanese government officials are low by American standards. The salary of the Japanese Minister of Education is $55 a month.

* * *

Between Korea and Japan the sea is so shallow that a comparatively slight upheaval would permit an army to walk across dry-shod. Much of the East China Sea is no more than 125 to 150 feet deep.

* * *

Between June 1948 and April 1950, 853 Japanese men and women made cultural visits to the United States. Of these, 50 students and 239 temporary visitors were sponsored by the U. S. government.

* * *

More than 31,000 P. T. A. units, with about 16,000,000 members, have been organized in Japan since the American occupation. Through them, parents in Japan for the first time have a voice in the education of their children.

* * *

"The inhabitants of central Japan enjoyed sitting on Mother Earth's cradle," remarked a radio commentator when Japan was struck by a severe earthquake during World War II. About four earth tremors shake Japan every day, or some 1,500 annually.

* * *

Christian churches in Japan had a total membership of 331,709 in 1949 as compared to 319,224 in 1940. Of this total, 201,321 are Protestant and 130,388 Catholic. Not included in these figures are members of non-church Christian groups, with an estimated strength of 6,000 members.

* * *

Japanese women are learning their social and political responsibilities through a "chain" system of educational meetings encouraged by American officers. Groups up to 30 women selected from factories, offices, farms and homes take courses lasting from one week to several months, then split up into teams of two or three and organize small discussion groups in surrounding towns and villages. The men folks, especially local government officials, often drop in to listen.

* * *

In an original approach a distinguished American former diplomatic and consular official in the Far East is making a double-barreled effort to help two countries. Joseph W. Ballantine's new book "Japanese As It Is Spoken" (Stanford University Press), gives Americans a competent and simple guide to the intricacies of the Japanese language and culture. Japan also benefits because by assigning his royalties to the International Christian University of Japan Mr. Ballantine is contributing to the democratic development of the country he knows from more than twenty year's diplomatic service.

COME TO CHRISTMAS.

Come to Christmas with Thanksgiving
For our work with children and our heritage in the church
Which bind us in a sustaining Christian Fellowship.

Come to Christmas with penitence
Because our lives reflect so dimly
The light of the Christian spirit.

Come to Christmas with awareness Of the testing that must be endured by all.
Who enter effectively upon new days of service.

Come to Christmas with willingness
To submit our lives anew
To the transforming power of love.

Come to Christmas with assurance
That the Kingdom of God is stronger Than man-made plans which divide races and nations.

Come to Christmas with hope That the way of Good Will may be found and followed
At all cost to personal and national pride.

Come to Christmas with radiant joy
And rise from this dedication with renewed purpose
To live as a child of God and
As a brother to all mankind.

Come to Christmas!

"IN THE SAME COUNTRY."

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill calls attention to a fine Christmas service printed in the November-December issue of "Guide Posts," and entitled "In the Same Country." If you are belatedly looking for a Christmas program this may be just the thing you need.

It is given in dramatic form, with four "scenes"—Manger, Home, Street, and Shepherd. However, it is suggested that it may be used as a simple worship service, describing the scenes but not presenting them and substituting single readers for the verse choir.

"THE KINGDOM OF OUR LORD."

In connection with the above named program which is given in our program booklet, in the packet, it has been suggested that when using a choir, rather than recordings, it would be well to have music in the last part of the program.

If you are interested in this, here are some suggested hymns (all of which are in the Pilgrim Hymnal) to be used after the speaker indicated:

"Emmanuel"—"O Come, O Come, Emmanuel" (all).

"Wonderful"—"Once in Royal David's City" (1, 2).

"Counsellor"—"Bright and Joyful is the Morn" (1, 2).

"Mighty God"—"Hail to the Lord's Anointed" (1, 2, 4).

"Everlasting Father"—"Good Christian Men, Rejoice" (all).

"Prince of Peace"—"I Heard the Bells on Christmas Day" (all).

So many of you asked for a Christmas cookie recipe that I must give you one. Here it is:

- ½ cup of butter or shortening.
- 1 cup of sugar (try brown for a different flavor sometime).
- 1 egg.
- Flavoring—Just a few drops of your favorite (lemon, vanilla, orange).
- 2 cups of flour.
- A wee bit of salt.
- ½ teaspoonful baking powder.
- ½ teaspoonful baking soda.
- 2 or 3 tablespoonfuls of milk.

Mix the wet ingredients and sift in the dry ones. Mix well and store in the refrigerator until very cold. Then roll thin on a floured surface and cut out in fancy shapes. Ice with a frosting made like this: about a cup of powdered sugar sifted, a few drops of milk, a drop of flavoring and drops of coloring. You will want red and green for Christmas! Cover oatmeal or corn meal boxes with wallpaper or construction paper. Decorate the top and bottom too. Run a wollen strand (made by twisting several wollen threads together and tying at the ends) through holes made in the top. You will have a nice gift box to fill with your Christmas goodies!

Several reports of special fun making goodies have come from Norfolk, Virginia.

We have Christmas because it is the birthday of Jesus, whose coming into the world made the greatest difference in human life and attitudes. All of us can recall many stories of his kindness and helpfulness to others. How do other boys and girls in other lands celebrate his birthday?

A nurse in a mission hospital at Chihuahua, Mexico wrote last year: "Christmas was really in the air. Sixty children patients gathered around while I played my music box. We had a party complete with pinata. We sang carols and had a tree." The pinata is a pottery bowl (you could use a bag) filled with candy, little gifts, nuts and fruits. It is hung high and the children take turns trying to break the bowl and spill the gifts which are shared by all. That would be fun.

From Bihar, India a teacher described. "What a glorious day we had. We called it 'Garu Bhent Day'—the offering to Jesus. We had told and re-told the story of why we were giving. The gifts were of vegetables, grains and fruit. There followed a party with tea and sweets, singing and fun by old and young."

From China: "Christmas was so joyous that all felt that China had the true spirit of Christmas. There was no thought of Santa Claus or busy shopping days. The decorations were lovely beyond belief. The people made delicate cut-outs to festoon the windows and used green leaves, ferns and poinsettias to make the rooms lovely. There was a short sermon, singing and gifts: peanuts, oranges and to each went a used-Christmas card from America." Although we cannot send them cards this year, perhaps we can again soon.

The story of how Christmas is celebrated in other lands could go on and on. Christmas is a glad time. We rejoice that it is here again!

CHRISTMAS FOR MOTHER.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

It was the day before Christmas Constance Mason, a member of the book selection committee for the children's library in which I serve as librarian, had come to the reading rooms to look over some book catalogues and evaluate some new books. Constance has a good-sized house to keep and a family of three children to care for, yet she seemed as unhurried as if it had not been one of the busiest days in the year. Other mothers whom I had seen that day were bustling about with last-minute Christmas preparations that allowed them no time for such carefree browsing through the books in a library.

When Constance came to my desk to have a word with me before she left, I put my wonderment into words. "How does it come about," I inquired, "that you are able to spend an hour at the library on the day before Christmas? Is your family going away for the holiday?"

My friend smiled. "No," she answered, "we're staying at home, but I've already finished my Christmas preparations—the children are doing their part today. I think Wayne wanted a chance to set up a gift he's been making in his manual training class at school, so I came away for a little while this afternoon. The girls had some projects they were working on, also."

"That sounds as if your children were having an especially good time getting ready for Christmas," I commented. "Won't you please tell me more about it? Most of the mothers whom I know seem to be doing all of the Christmas preparations themselves."

"Of course, every mother wants her children to have a happy Christmas," Constance responded. "Until last year I proceeded as though the only way to accomplish that result was for me to work so hard beforehand that I didn't have enough energy left to enjoy the day when it came. I was so tired sometimes that I was actually a bit irritable with my family."

"It was a chance suggestion from my daughter that roused me from that mistaken attitude," Constance continued.

"We learned to make such a tasty cranberry salad in our cooking class today," Jeanie told me one day when she came home from school. "Wouldn't a pretty red salad like that look nice on the table with your poinsettia and Christmas candles?"

"I think it would be lovely, Jeanine," I replied. "How would you like to make that salad for our Christmas dinner?"

"Oh, Mother, could I?" my daughter exclaimed in delight. "Do you think I could make it well enough?"

"Of course you can, Jeanine," I assured her. "You may prepare it, except for the lettuce, the day before Christmas, and we'll keep it in the refrigerator."

"Jeanine's pleasure at having a part in the Christmas preparations made me realize that the other children might like to share in them, too. Wayne helped with the decorations and polished the silver. Small Peggy was permitted to set the table. I was pleased to see the interest she took in putting each piece of silver in its exact place."

"This year we have found more opportunities for the children to help. Peggy has learned an easy way to make good creamy mints, and Jeanine is showing her how to make bright red crepe-paper cups for them. Wayne asked if he might arrange the centerpiece for the table—I am eager to see what he will use. Jeanine is making her cranberry salad and a light dessert."

"I believe each child feels that his

WEEKEND WORK CAMPS IN CHICAGO.

This is an invitation to you to join the growing circle of people interested in the volunteer weekend workcamp. In over five years, here in Chicago, at least five hundred persons of varying ages, races, and creeds have, over a weekend, given their time and energies in projects designed to help others help themselves. At the same time workcampers have gained valuable insight into the problems of a blighted urban community.

Weekend volunteers work side-by-side with residents of a slum area, helping them to: repair crumbling plaster walls; apply fresh paint or wallpaper to dingy wall; clean-up back yards and alley-ways; construct and renovate recreation space.

Who Should Apply? Any person fifteen years of age or older who is prepared to share in the responsibilities of group living for the weekend and who is sincerely interested in exploring the avenues to better human relations.

The Weekend Program—The Weekend Workcamp begins with supper on Friday evening followed by a general orientation to the neighborhood and the role of the Workcamp. Saturday is spent working at the projects which have been set up in advance. The evening is devoted to discussion and informal recreation. The Workcamp closes after breakfast on Sunday. It is very important that you plan to arrive on time, and stay with the group through Sunday morning.

Costs—Every camper is welcome, whether or not he can pay anything toward the expenses of the weekend. The cost of lodging and meals are shared according to ability to pay. The average cost per person for the entire weekend is $3.00.

Directions—Workcampers are asked to bring their own sheets and towels. Be sure you bring old clothes. Further instructions and directions for reaching the Workcamp will be mailed to you when your reservation has been confirmed.

Living together, working and worshipping together, attacking the social problems of our day, young people have proved to their own satisfaction that human brotherhood is something more than a respected phrase. For more than twelve years the American Friends Service Committee has held workcamps in many parts of the United States, offering material aid and understanding fellowship to groups cut off from the normal life of the community by social and economic discrimination. By the labor of their hands, workcampers and local volunteers ease the pent up emotions and tensions that exist in these groups of underprivileged citizens.

The Chicago Weekend Workcamp brings together high school and college students and young adults from many sections of the Greater Chicago area and many religious affiliations as well as different racial backgrounds for an intensive weekend of group-living and practical community service.

Each Weekend Workcamp is under the direction of a resident married couple who coordinate the projects and supervise the program. Space in these Workcamps is limited. If you wish a reservation or further information about these projects, write Chicago Regional Office, American Friends Service Comm., Inc., 19 S. Wells St., Chicago 5, Ill.

Baxter Twiddy, ex-president of the Southern Convention Youth Fellowship is helping to direct these Chicago work camps while he is studying at Chicago Theological Seminary.

THE SAVIOR IS BORN.

(CHRISTMAS)

LESSON XIII—DECEMBER 24, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Be not afraid, for behold I bring you good news of great joy which comes to all the people; for to you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, who is Christ the Lord.—Luke 2: 10-11.

LESSON: Luke 2:1-16.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 2:1-15.

The Strange Ways of God.

"God moves in mysterious ways, his wonders to perform"—thus writes the hymn-writer. And perhaps nothing that God ever did is more mysterious or marvelous or miraculous than what happened and centered concerning Christmas.

Strange wasn't it how Baby Jesus was born in Bethlehem, instead of in Nazareth? Ordinarily he would have been born in Nazareth—that is where his parents made their home and lived. But a heathen and pagan ruler got it into his head to make a census of the people in his domain and instead of enrolling the people where they lived, he compelled them to go to their ancestral home! Thus it was that Joseph and Mary had to make the comparatively long trip of those days to Bethlehem to be enrolled in the census. And while they were there, Jesus was born. The amazing thing about all this is, of course, the fact that centuries before this event, a prophet had foretold that the Savior of the world would be born in Bethlehem of Judea! Little did that heathen emperor dream that all unwittingly he was helping to fulfill the divine plan and purpose.

Strange, too, not only where he was born, but how he was born, Strange, and more than strange, mysterious and miraculous. For the Lord Jesus Christ was born of a Virgin. He had no earthly father, he was conceived by the Holy Spirit. That statement is an occasion for stumbling to some people, but by and large, and from of old, the doctrine of the Virgin Birth has held a central place in the teachings of Christianity, and it lies at the heart of evangelical Christianity. Millions of people recite sincerely and honestly the Creed which affirms that Christ was "born of the Virgin" after being "conceived by the Holy Spirit." It is a strange doctrine, a mystery that goes beyond reason to faith, but it is deeply embedded in Scripture and rooted in reality.

There is also something strange about the circumstances under which Jesus was born. That Baby who was born in a rude stable, perhaps even a limestone cave, without benefit of doctor or even mid-wife, and wrapped in simple swaddling clothes by his own mother was the Son of God, the King of kings and Lord of lords—the Savior of the World. One might think that one so important and so imperial would have been born in a palace with ladies in waiting and amid pomp and splendor. But God wanted people to know that he entered into the life of humble folks, that life does not consist in the outer trappings on which we put so much store, that a man's life does not consist in the abundance of the things that he possesses.

Strange, too, what happened when this Baby was born. Some shepherds were keeping watch over their flocks by night when an angel (the word means "messenger") appeared unto them, and a great light such as was never seen on land and sea shone round about them. Furthermore the heavens became vocal with the first Christmas oratorio or anthem sung by a great choir of heavenly visitors, praising God and saying "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased." (Preferred translation by most scholars.) Things like that belong to the realm of the strange and the mysterious and the miraculous indeed. It is expressed in beautiful and perhaps poetic language, but it has a solid core of historical fact back of it. When one recalls just who this Babe was and what he became and what he did, one is not surprised after all that strange things did happen at his birth.

Come to think of it, it was rather strange that the news of this Christ Child's birth came to whom it did. There were some influential men and some great religious leaders in the world at that time and it might seem strange that the news did not come first to them. As a matter of fact it came to humble shepherds watching their flocks by night, folks who were rather outside the realm of conservative and orthodox Judaism and religion. And later the historic and history-making fact was revealed to men of another region and another religion. But God wanted men to know that he does not care for our social distinctions, and that the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him and, made known to the humble in mind and heart. Furthermore it is significant that the good news was brought to men while they were at their work. God makes himself known in the common life and the common round of life.

And of course, it is strange what happened because this Babe was born! Here for instance is the big world of business, calculating, practical, hard-headed as we say and sometimes also hard-hearted, here in a land thousands of miles away from where this Babe was born, and nearly twenty centuries after he was born, dating all its important as well as its unimportant papers in terms of when he was born. That is something to think about when we think about strange things in this world. And think about what happens at Christmas in our modern world! The money that people spend on others, the distances that they will travel just to be home on Christmas Day, the friendly service they will render, the tremendous amount of planning and work that is involved in getting ready for Christmas, the desire on the part of folks, even folks who are not religious, that nobody be overlooked at Christmas, the special programs that are held, not only in churches but in communities 'round the world, the tremendous increase of the spirit of good will and good cheer that characterize the Christmas season—these and a hundred other things are the direct and the indirect result of the coming of Jesus Christ into the world.

But more, and more important. The amazing and awe-inspiring thing which the word strange does not describe, is the effect that the coming of this Babe of Bethlehem has had upon the life of the world and upon the moral and spiritual climate of the human race. Religion became vital and life-changing under his touch. Millions have found new life through faith in him. Industry, education, health, family life, government, every realm of human life has felt his influence, and has been changed in some measure of his spirit. And the end is not yet, for his influences waxes rather than wanes. Of the increase of his government there shall be no end. He shall rule forever and ulti-

"A VOICE IN THE DARK."

A Sermonette

By REV. W. R. CATTON, Decatur, Illinois.

"If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!"—Matthew 6:23.

It was an important meeting, in a large church. Suddenly the lights went out. The people, however, were not entirely in darkness, for there were two candles on the altar. There were many people, for Frank Laubach was to be the speaker.

Another man had just stood up to read the scripture when the current failed and the lights went out. The lesson was to have been the parable of the Good Samaritan. In the darkness he turned to Laubach and asked him if he could repeat the parable from memory. Laubach could. He stood, and there in the darkness, with only the altar candles to pierce the gloom at all, we heard the voice of a great man quietly but confidently uttering the words of Jesus, all the way from "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" to the final "Go thou and do likewise."

It is not by any means fanciful to find this all symbolic of high meaning.

The people sat in darkness, but the darkness was not utter darkness: there were still the "candles of the Lord." There were the lighted candles at the altar, where light must always come, pointing the upward way.

There was the voice in the dark. It was the voice of a great and good man. Such a person is himself a "candle of the Lord." No matter how dark the world, men will not be in utter darkness because there still are great and good men. Here is the best illumination of all.

A man must be the hope of men. We must learn from other persons. As person touches person, as one helps another, the world will learn the way to go.

But where does this man get his own illumination? "If the salt has lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted?" "If the light that is within thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" This man, this voice in the dark, was the best symbol of it all. The great man learns of Christ, that he may have wherewith to give to those in darkness. There is thus this urgency upon us all, to go to the best we know, and to be the best we can be by learning from the best we can know, because the best we can be and the best we can know is desperately needed by others. People must have from us the light that we can give, and how can we give the light except we are ourselves illuminated? One of the finest little parables Jesus ever told was about the man who went at night to his friend with a plenty to get something that he in turn could give to the friend in need who had come to him on his journey.

And the Parable of the Good Samaritan, the words of Jesus that came with gentle persuasiveness from this voice in the dark, this parable is itself symbolic of the illumination we all of us just now most need. The 20th Century is outwardly quite different from the 1st, and another story might be used to illustrate the truth today, but the essential thing that is illustrated is still our greatest need today.

The world has indeed "fallen among thieves" who have beaten it and left it half dead.

Help is needed, in the spirit of neighborliness, of human kindness, of brotherly love. Social engineering, wise social planning, are needed to discover the kind of help needed, for a different kind of help is required in our world today than the simple acts of relief recounted in the parable. But the spirit, the motive, is the important matter. We must have the spirit of the Good Samaritan, the motive of love, and the recognition that any man who needs our help is now our neighbor. We must want to help, must want to save the beaten world from those who are destroying it, and must want to help not just because we are afraid but because all men are our brothers and we know and understand they are. This is still the Christian spirit we must have, and the centuries have demonstrated this.

And remember the closing note of the parable, "Go and do thou likewise." The teaching must lead to action. Right thinking and right understanding must bear their fruit of right conduct and right living. Right thought and right conduct, "faith" and "works" are inseparable, and together make the Christian.

We are, indeed, as those who sit in darkness. But in the darkness there is still a light, and a voice in the dark. Follow the light! Listen to that voice!

Most of all, we ourselves will have to be as lights. We are not only required to follow the gleam, we must ourselves illuminate. The world needs the light and leading of Christ. The world? That means my own family, my own community, my own business, whatever people I touch, anywhere. The world needs the light and leading of Christ, and Christ can be seen only through us. In the world of darkness, we must be the voices in the dark, uttering the words of Christ. We must be strong, and wise, and good. We must be. "If the light that is in us be darkness, how great is that darkness!"

ELON MEMORIAL GYMNASIUM DEDICATED.

"While these men and women were in college they were seeking to free their minds and spirits from the fetters of ignorance that in their freedom they might serve mankind with their acquired efficiency and out of the richness of their experiences. While on yonder battlefield, whether in the air, on land, or on sea, in the strength and daring of their youth they fought to free men and nations from physical bondage, economic oppression, social injustices and political tyranny. True, they did not come back in body, but they are here in spirit. They still walk across the campus, linger in the corridors and halls of the buildings, and sit with you in the classrooms. They are in this building tonight. We recognize their presence, and in due and solemn recognition of their unforgettable services and tragic sacrifices that brought glorious victory to the world and to us, we gladly and in all humility dedicate this building—this gymnasium—together with its traditions, its facilities, and its ambitions—to their seared memories and eternal hopes.

"We are happy to establish this beautiful memorial to our fallen heroes, though it falls far short of their noble services. They have given so much, we have given so little, yet it is given to us to carry on in the strength that God has given us in the name of Christian civilization and pray for universal and enduring peace."

Between October 1, 1945 and January 1, 1950, the population of Japan proper jumped by 10,700,000 persons as a result of natural increase and repatriation.

The Orphanage

J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Our Thanksgiving and Christmas programs have now been given at the following churches and organizations: Monticello, $77.87; Zion, $261.00; Lebanon, $48.88; New Elam, $186.65; Burlington, $1,341.92; Ramseur, $74; Shiloh, $85; N. C. & Va. Conference, Wake Chapel, $1,421; Wentworth, $121.67; Auburn, $150.50; Burlington Rotary Club, $2,010, five hundred of this to come in January; Bethlehem, $85.51; Moore Union, $31.47; Christian Chapel, $17.19; Christian Light, $55.89; Shallow Well, $190; Turner's Chapel, $115; and Hanks Chapel, $220.54; making a total counting the January gift, of $6,490.09.

The class of twenty-two children knows that these churches and organizations would have given us good contributions without their program, but they feel, and so do I, that their programs boosted the offerings.

We have six churches yet to which we have promised to go, with several that have asked for the program that we could not yet reach. December 10 we will be at Mt. Bethel, which is my old home church; New Lebanon, and Kallam Grove. The following Sunday we will give our Christmas program at Ebenezer, Garner and Amelia. We feel greatly indebted to the pastors for their cooperation and help with these programs. Since the middle of August, when I finished my supplying of the Elon College pulpit, I have spoken in thirty-two of our churches.

Last night we had forty of our children and two matrons at the University of North Carolina as guests of the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity and the Chi Omega sorority. They had turkey dinner and all the trimmings, Christmas tree, Santa Claus, fruits, candies and toys.

Monday night the Burlington Junior Chamber of Commerce will entertain the entire group of children for dinner at the Alamance Hotel. They will send busses to transport them.

On Wednesday night at 6 o'clock will be the birthday party, and a devotional service conducted by Max Vestal at 7 o'clock. Friday night the young ladies from the New Vogue Hosiery Mills in Graham will bring a Christmas party for all.

On December 18 the Elon College students will give the children a Christmas party, and on the 20th the Greensboro Woodmen of the World will come, bringing gifts and entertainment for all. On the 21st the Bell Telephone girls from Burlington will bring us a Christmas party, and then there is our own big Christmas party in each building, when gifts from the many churches and Sunday schools will be given to the children.

Thanks to everybody for the good report this week. Send a Christmas contribution to "your other family," the Christian Orphanage. Put the Orphanage with its 80 children on your Christmas list. Do not think you have to send a big sum, if you are not able. A financial contribution, whether large or small, will be a real blessing to these children. Thank you also for your prayers, your goodwill and your kind words.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL IS BORN.

the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." With a fervent "amen" the audience then joined in singing the Doxology.

The chairman turned to representatives of the eight interchurch agencies. One by one they came forward and placed in his hands documents signaling the transfer of their functions and programs to the new Council.

Temporarily the National Council's offices will be decentralized in several buildings in New York, and the ICRE building in Chicago. The administrative offices will be at 287 Fourth Avenue, New York. It was pointed out that some leases expire before the next general assembly in 1952, thus requiring action in the interim by the General Board.

"The Nations Under God"—theme or Thursday night's session—developed into one of the most interesting. The platform was shared by Dr. Nolde and Dr. W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the World Council of Churches, Geneva, and a frequent visitor to this country. In addition the delegates heard short wave messages from the Archbishop of York and Christian leaders of other countries. The messages were broadcast over a national network of 155 stations (as part of We the People).

Laymen's Department Formed.

One of the most significant was the initial gathering of the general department of united church men at which Mr. Lem T. Jones, of Kansas City, president of the National Council of Presbyterian Men in the U. S. A. was elected chairman.

Dr. Luther Wesley Smith, Philadelphia, executive secretary of the Baptist Board of Education and Publication was the speaker and Dr. Harold B. Stassen, president of the University of Pennsylvania, presided.

"We have opened the way for laymen to come to the front in the life of the Church today," declared Dr. Smith.

The United Council of Church Women, which now becomes a general department of the National Council, has become a vital force in the Christian life of the nation. There has been no similar interdenominational laymen's organization. The steps taken at Cleveland towards achieving a full partnership of laymen with the clergy suggested to many leaders that the development might prove the most important undertaken by the National Council.

The constitution provides that four of the eight vice-presidents must be laymen and that a woman be either president or a vice-president at large.

Leaders are Installed.

The convention closed Friday night on a note of dedication. Solemn promises to administer their several offices "to the glory of God and the advancement of his Kingdom" were made before the altar by the Council's newly-designated leadership. With Dr. Hermann Morse as master of ceremonies, Bishop Sherrill, the other officers, the general board and the staff of more than 125 men and women, most of them with many years service in the merging agencies, moved forward in turn to take their pledges of "constant fidelity to the constitution."

Clerical and academic garb mingled with the street clothes of lay men and lay women in the processional that opened the service of installation and consecration. It was led by the Messiah Chorus, composed of 275 Clevelanders; the women in white gowns, the men in dark suits. The officers were seated on the stage, the general board around the white tables forming a cross, the staff at red tables, surrounded the general board.

The speaking on the closing night was shared by Bishop Sherrill, in the vestments of a bishop of the Episcopal Church, and the Rev. Eugene Carson Blake, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Pasadena, California.

The long-range significance of the National Council, said Dr. Blake, can be "measured by the quality and persistence of the individual Christian discipleship of the leaders of our churches."

Calling for the end of religious competition, Dr. Blake said that the words of this week would be insincere unless they mean "that no longer are we going to continue in the old paths of denominational rivalries."

"Free churches in America," he added, "are stronger, and will remain stronger than any religious rivals, not by attacking others, but by increased devotion to their own task and to him who leads them."

In his presidential address, Bishop Sherrill declared the formation of the National Council, "in a time of confusion and discord is a promise of a high hope for the future."

"The churches here represented are determined without compromise," he added, "to cooperate wholeheartedly in those great fields of endeavor in which we are essentially one."

Calling the times "stern" and labeling the forces of evil "powerful and relentless" the newly-elected president condemned "laissez faire Christianity, without dynamic force" as inadequate. "Only a church of deep conviction and spiritual experience," he emphasized, "can meet the necessities of our times."

"The real problem which confronts the churches is not the strength of the enemy without, but the quality of the spiritual life within. The Council can only be strong as the churches are strong."

On this note and benediction by the bishop, the convention ended.

help is a sort of a Christmas gift to me," Constance concluded. "I'm glad that I have learned to let them find some of their Christmas joy in this way."

Looking at my friend's happy face, I added, "Your children have enabled you to give them something in return, Constance. I would say your special gift to them is an unhurried mother."

The answer is simply that this Babe born in Bethlehem was the Only Begotten Son of God, the Savior of the world, the promised Messiah, the Lord Jesus Christ, God Incarnate, the Word made Flesh. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift. And glory to God in the highest, peace on earth.

AMERICA SUPPORTS JAPANESE CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY

The center structure in the drawing above already stands on the 350-acre site of the International Christian University, and was purchased with funds contributed by the Japanese themselves. It is reported that the royal family made a large gift. The building at the left is the university church, and that at the right is the library.

Substantial progress has been reported toward the financing and opening of the International Christian University in Tokyo, Japan. The first president of the new university is Dr. Hashiro Yusa, who was educated in the United States. Dr. Yuasa is a Congregational Christian and is a distinguished man of science. This project has stirred great expectations in Japan. The Japanese people are doing their part. The question now is, will we do ours. More specifically, will you who read this do yours?

The International Christian University will be:

A Gesture of Goodwill; a token of America's friendliness to a one-time enemy.

A Source of Strength and Inspiration to the program of reconstruction and reform now in progress in Japan; a program that will help make Japanese society secure against the forces of violent revolution that threaten our world.

A Means of Undergirding and Revitalizing the whole system of Christian education in Japan, a system that has been building for 90 years, in which almost 100,000 young persons are enrolled.

A Notable Experiment in Higher Education which will provide Japan with its first genuinely international university; its first Christian, but non-sectarian graduate university, with graduate schools of education, public affairs and social work; its first truly liberal arts curriculum; and its first opportunity for community life for students and faculty on a university campus.

A Facility for the Study of Oriental Culture, Language and History that will be available to students from all countries, and will be under the direction of an international faculty.

An Evidence of America's Concern for the development of Japan as a democratic nation, and a demonstration of interest in the efforts of the Japanese people to build their society on a sure foundation; a sound and sensible plan, arrived at after years of deliberation, looking toward cooperation of East and West in the furtherance of such objectives.

The Angel Song

By C. REXFORD RAYMOND

A MID our fears of war, the Angel Song
Can calm the storms of hatred Christmas Day.
But though we know that Christ can conquer wrong,
His crib is not the altar where we pray.
Christ's life from Bethlehem to Calvary
Shone forth as flaming fire at Pentecost.
Since then His living presence lets us see
That led by Christ, the peace will not be lost.

When Christmas dawns, Christ bids us rise above
Conceit and so become the saving salt
He called upon His friends to be. Our life of love Fulfills the Angel Song; and we exalt
Our Lord who wills that neither caste nor race
May mar God's image in a brother's face.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, BROTHER HUDSON.

Most of us in the Eastern North Carolina Conference have been seeing Brother Will Hudson for a long time. I wonder how many know what an impressive record he has built up, for our church, in his lifetime. 64 years ago he became a member of Oak Level Church and 7 years later married his inspiring wife who is 2 years younger than he. The newlyweds started taking THE SUN the next day and have continued until now, except for a brief two year intermission. He has missed only four Eastern North Carolina Conferences in 50 years, has been deacon 49 years, and treasure of Oak Level Church for 41 years. Come January 1, 1951 this Christian record maker will be 84 years old and still going strong. Happy birthday and many more to come from the pastor and many, many friends of this fine Christian gentleman.

REMEMBER OUR RETIRED MINISTERS AT CHRISTMAS TIME.

To each Pastor and Church have been mailed Special Christmas Fund offering envelopes to be used for receiving the special Christmas offering for our retired ministers and ministers' widows. This offering is used to send a small Christmas check to these Veterans of the Cross. Their pension from our Church is small. Our gifts to Superannuation are not sufficient to make this Christmas gift without this special offering. Won't you be generous in your gift for this worthy purpose? We hope you will. We owe a debt of honor to these men and women of God who have given us spiritual guidance. They now need our help.

The Christmas Fund offering should be given to your Church, and the treasurer should send these offerings to the Southern Convention office, Elon, College, N. C., designated "Christmas Fund for Aged Ministers."

Remember our retired Ministers at Christmas time? Your gift may be their only remembrance. Your gift may mean that they will have the necessities they must have. Remember those saints of the Church who no longer because of age or illness can provide for themselves. Be generous in your Christmas Fund offering.

ANOTHER GOOD WEEK-END.

On Friday, December 8th, I met Rev. George M. Tally in my old home town, Ramseur, and went with him to Antioch (R) Christian Church for a conference with the deacons and trustees regarding the work of the church and plans for a new church.

Antioch Christian Church was admitted to the Deep River Christian Conference (now the Western North Carolina Conference) at the 21st session of Conference held at New Center Christian Church, October 8, 1885. W. N. Hayes, a charter member of the Church was licensed to preach at that session. For many years Rev. W. N. Hayes was one of the faithful pastors of the Conference.

Brother Tally has been pastor of Antioch Church since 1938. There are 151 enrolled in the Sunday school, with an average for 1949 of 109. The church has a membership of 113. There are more than 30 members of the young people's society. The church maintains a regular mid-week prayer service, and one of their young men, M. D. Chisco, has recently dedicated his life to the Christian ministry. Plans are under way for the erection of a new brick church building, and the devotion and enthusiasm manifested by these leaders gave us the conviction that these plans will soon be a reality. It was good to go to Antioch. Congratulations to Brother Tally and his people of this good church.

Sunday, December 10th, was spent with Rev. R. Eugene Tally at Piney Plains and Lee's Chapel churches.

Arriving at Piney Plains for Sunday school and morning service I found a church where people believe in taking their Bibles to church. The Sunday school classes showed evidence that this is a "Bible school." Congratulations! At Piney Plains I learned that my great and good friend, spiritual father, the late Dr. Charles H. Rowland preached his first sermon at this church, then worshipping in a nearby school building; also that Rev. J. Lee Johnson, venerable minister of the Christian Church, had served as pastor for forty years. I met there Mrs. D. I. Stephenson, a sister of the late Dr. J. O. Atkinson. I felt that I was on holy ground. At the morning service it was my privi-

SOCIAL MANIFESTATIONS OF THE INCARNATION

Speaking of the incarnation, Kagawa has this to say: "The spirit of Christmas supplies the fundamental drive behind the Christian social movement in modern times. He who is appointed to occupy a high position in society, abandons his freedom for self-aggrandizement in order to serve the common people by humbling himself."

Christmas, after all, is not as ephemeral as some of our celebrations. Christmas has become elongated and inundated in much of our civilization. Christmas in July? Yes, the Christmas spirit has become the ruling spirit in countless lives.

The incarnation is no mere theological dogma. It is historical fact. Christian individuals and institutions perpetuate its spirit and influence. Neither is the incarnation limited to churches and the theological classrooms. Divinity has infiltrated our secular society and the gospel leaven is at work in the larger social lump.

Look confidently to the future for fuller manifestations of the incarnate Spirit. The drive behind the Christian social movement is gaining momentum. Despite our current pessimism, powerful redemptive forces are at work and the best is yet to be.

CHRISTMAS MESSAGE FROM ZACHARIAS

Zacharias holds this timeless ideal and privilege before his readers: "That being delivered out of the hand of our (spiritual) enemies, we might serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness all the days of our life."

This is indeed the Christian's privilege, his highest privilege. Repeated deliverances, far more miraculous than he realizes, have come. The love and dependability of God banishes fear. Days of grace are given in which man may serve out his days in holiness and righteousness. This realization gives point and zest to life. It is not meaningless; it is a partnership, a divine partnership.

Here is the age-old message of Christmas, but it is not limited to Christmas. Here we have the angelic privilege of serving Christ and God. All may experience practical holiness and achieve righteousness, this day and all of our days. Our world will be a better world if we are strengthened in this conviction this Christmas.

THE CHRISTMAS FUND

Can you visualize the significance of the Christmas Fund? Can you realize what it means to be a minister, especially an old minister? Have you ever reflected on the plight of the aged minister who has reared a family and spent his life on a small salary? Do you know what it means to get down to the very last dollar and have nothing in reserve?

The Christmas Fund gives a financial lift to the aged and disabled ministers. These ministers who have given their lives in the service of others, who have laid the spiritual foundations of our generation, should not be cast aside and neglected. They are not asking for anything, but it is our privilege to give them sustenance and cheer during their declining years.

They have blessed us—our home, our church, our nation—far beyond our understanding. Now we can bless them. In giving, we too shall find a blessing. Do not fail them.

God bless you, the elder statesmen of our spiritual commonwealth. You have never known or desired luxury. Schooled in the art of economy, you have grown wiser and better with the years. A host of good wishes to each of you, and many returns of the Season!

SUNDAY A DAY OF PRAYER FOR UNITY AND PEACE

A call to the clergy and people of twenty-nine Protestant and Orthodox communions to join on Sunday, December 31, in a day of special prayer to God "for a peace which is the fruit of righteousness" has been issued by Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, the president of the newly-formed National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America.

Bishop Sherrill has expressed the hope that "many outside of our fellowship will join in this day of prayer, that united in our faith in God . . . we may indeed prove ourselves a nation under God."

Bishop Sherrill's call to the 31,000,000 members of the twenty-five Protestant and four Eastern Orthodox communions that constitute the National Council was issued in accordance with the call to prayer to Christians of many churches and nationalities from the World Council of Churches.

"As we begin a new year of great portent and the second half of this twentieth century, let us beseech God to give to all nations, unity, peace and concord," said the president's message. He urged that the last Sunday of the year be observed in sacrament, in prayer and in watchnight service.

Bishop Sherrill, noting that "now is a time of war and rumors of war," declared the "supreme lesson of our day is our need of God, his wisdom, his mercy and his guidance of men and of nations.

"As never before, we should pray daily to God for all mankind, for those who have at home and abroad the responsibility of governmental decisions, for the United Nations, for the establishment of a peace of justice and, purged of self-righteousness and worldly fear and anxieties, the rededication of ourselves and of our nation to the will of God."

Who'll Go With Us To Bethlehem

By WYNN C. FAIRFIELD.

*Who'll go with us to Bethlehem
On Christmas Day in the morning?*

JOSEPH:

*Will you come with me as I tread the road,
As I guide the ass with his heavy load,
This wife of mine with her burthen great?
Thank God, for yonder is Bethlehem's gate
And we yet may find place for this marvelous birth
Of which tidings shall go to the ends of the earth.
Will ye join me in living such life that your boy
May speak of his Father in heaven with joy,
Helped and not hindered by your deed and word
To use that best Name that earth's millions have heard Wille ye come?*

MARY:

*Will you come with me to my hour of pain,
With straw for my bed where the cattle have lain?
Will ye tread with me the path of woe,
The pangs of birth and the harder blow
Of suffering with, not for your child?
Will ye stand with me beneath the cross
And weep for your son who counts all but loss
If God's will be done? Hast thou courage to bear
Such a son for God's use, his sufferings to share
For the world, O maid, meek and mild?
Wille ye come?*

THE SHEPHERDS:

*Will ye come with us as we hasten to town
To see this great thing of which tidings came down
From the angels above as we bowed heads in fear?
Oh say, can it be that the secret lies here
Of peace on the earth and goodwill among men,
Here in this stable? We'll go see it, then Turn back to our flocks and our vigils alone,
But never the same, for the great light has shone
In the heavens above and in our hearts, too.
That light with its glory is waiting for you.
Wille ye come?*

THE WISE MEN:

*Will ye come with us, as we bring to our King
Offerings rare that the ages will sing?
Long and hard has been our quest
For we've sought of all God's gifts the best,
The Child who means to us faith and hope.
For though wars may come and slay our own
We know that Love still is on the throne.
Though the road may be rough, we must follow the star
From the homes that we love to the lands that are far,
For God alone with the darkness can cope.
Wille ye come?*

HEROD'S SOLDIERS:

*Will ye come with us on our mission of death,
To slay in yon town every babe that has breath,
That ambition may conquer and power have its way?
What's a baby or two, or even four score?
In a twelvemonth or two there will be plenty more.
We care not for mothers or children at play.
For war is our business, we slaughter for pelf;
You look out for you, I'll look out for myself.
And they say if that baby escapes from our sword
Our business is spoiled, that he'll utter a word
That will soften men's hearts, make goodwill and peace
Until in all nations the warriors shall cease.
So forward we're going, nor have time to stay,
For orders are orders, we'll well earn our pay.
Wille ye come?*

YOU AND I:

*Shall we join them on their pilgrim way?
Shall we fathers be through whom God can be known?
Shall we mothers be unto whom God's will
For their children shall be more precious still Than any price they will have to pay?
Shall we seek that Child of whom angels sang,
To whom wise men bent while the heavens rang
With "Glory to God" and that glory shone?
Or shall we like hirelings, slay our hope Shall we go? Will you go?*

THE BIRTH THAT DIVIDES TIME*

A Sermon

By REV. HOWARD P. BOZARTH, Minister, Elon College Community Church

I.

In these days surrounding Christmas, it is natural for many of us to recall with special depths of sentiment the homes of our childhood. And the picture that memory rivives may carry us back to some old-fashioned sitting room, with a center table, perhaps with a marble top, and on that table a great old-fashioned family Bible.

The Book was much too large and cumbersome to be taken up in one's hands and read. It never was meant for that purpose. It was there as a kind of symbol, a thing of significance in, and of, itself. It reminded those in the household, and the visitor too, that certain things were counted as central and primary within those familiar precincts.

But now and then, when neighbors or relatives dropped in, the talk might turn to Uncle Jim, or Aunt Fanny. How old was this one, or that one, when he died? Then someone would go to the old family Bible, which opened easily at the center, and there would be spread out the genealogy of the family—as much of it as was known or cared about—and there were recorded the dates of various arrivals, and departures, of members of the intimate circle. That was the main function of the big Book. It reminded us that all flesh is grass, and that our own lives are dated.

Now any birth is significant. It is a thing of wonder, to bring the beholder to his knees in reverence. Death, too, remains an august mystery. As far as history is concerned, the two most important facts about most of us are, that one day we were born, and another we died. The tabernacle we inhabit is taken at last to some quiet place and laid tenderly in the earth. A modest marker over our dust bears our name, and beneath it, the day of our coming and that of our going away. So it is that our lives are dated.

II.

But we are about to celebrate once more the birth of one who is not accurately dated at all. Scholars disagree on the actual day and year of his birth. The year of his death is not certainly known. Yet we celebrate both his coming and his going with observances which rank among the most impressive rituals of earth. One, whose birthday is not known, has done far more for history than any, and all others, whose nativity is recorded. And in death itself, this man accomplished the unimaginable: he abolished death, so that now we say, "he died that all might live."

We cannot entertain such thoughts without recalling the words of Phillips Brooks, who also wrote the beloved Christmas hymn, "O Little Town of Bethlehem,"

Here is a man who was born in an obscure village. He never wrote a book. He never held an office. He never went to college. He never traveled more than two hundred miles from the place where he was born. He never did one of the things that usually accompany greatness. Nineteen wide centuries have come and gone. Today he is the centerpiece of the human race and the leader of the column of progress.

I am far within the mark when I say that all the armies that ever marched, and all the navies that ever were built, and all the parliaments that ever sat, and all the kings that ever reigned, put together, have not affected the life of men upon this earth so powerfully as that one solitary life.

Scholars may search and debate over the day of his birth and death, but these are of little comparative note. In every significant way this man's life was timeless. Therefore we take what tradition has assigned as his natal day, and there we divide time. It is Before, or After Christ. He who lived so short a time in the flesh has become critic and divider of all time!

Each century his stature increases. We say reverently, that if God were to enter the portals of a human personality, he could only be such a person as this, in what he was and said and did. We declare, therefore, that Jesus was God, incarnate in the flesh. It was God who was born in a manger, and who made entrance into the world through the door of a stable. And having found this entrance, he never has left us. Jesus was crucified, but death could not hold him. He lives evermore in fellowship with those who love his coming, to guide them in the way of life eternal.

III.

Our Gospels tell us that when Jesus was about to be born, a new star appeared in the firmament. Men of wisdom saw it, and followed its westward passage until it brought them to the cradle where the Christ-child lay. We will treasure forever this priceless legend. Today, as we contemplate the significance of his birth, let us consider one of the allegorical aspects of this loved Christmas story.

Not everyone saw the Christmas star. Modern astronomy knows nothing of it. Yet the light that fell last night from countless stars had left them ages before the star of Bethlehem appeared. Scholars cannot tell us about this single luminary, but they do tell us how new stars are found in the celestial sphere.

Every star, they say, has its own gravitational influence. It is affected by a like influence wielded by other stars within a certain radius. Each body in the heavens tends to attract, and is attracted by, all others in that field. By studying the behaviour of a given body, or group of bodies, it is possible to calculate the gravitational influences at work upon them. It is possible not only to estimate the influence of stars, suns and planets which are visible, but also to detect and measure the gravitational pull of the unseen and unknown. So astronomers have been able to determine just where certain unknown stars should be, at a given time. They have fixed their powerful telescopes upon the exact point where, by their calculations, the unknown should appear. And so it is that new stars have been discovered in the firmament.

In much this same manner we are able to determine the position and nature of the star of Bethlehem. By the study of its influence, with the telescope of the spirit, we are able to discover its exact location. The place of its shining is found to be, invariably, in the human heart. So we say the advent of Christ is a personal experience; it is an event of the soul.

But when this advent takes place in individual experience, our own history, like that of the race, has a dividing line. The soul has its B. C. and its A. D., its Before and After Christ. With the new birth there begins a new era for the soul. That is its A. D. history. Christ has become, for the individual, the divider of time.

IV.

Children sometimes ask why history is divided and designated by the symbols of B. C. and A. D. And a child can understand the explanation.

PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH, Elon College, N. C.

THE MEANING OF CHRISTMAS.

The daily papers are constantly reminding us of the number of days remaining before Christmas. By the daily press, the radio, and television, everybody is exhorted to do his Christmas shopping early. When we think of Christmas shopping and have the urge to do our Christmas shopping and get it out of the way, as a rule we and all others who do Christmas shopping are thinking of and referring to what we are going to buy to give to our families and friends. The spirit of Christmas is benevolence, giving to others. There is more, however, to Christmas than gifts for others. There is more to Christmas than the shepherds tending their flocks on Judean Hills. There is more to Christmas than a peasant family seeking for shelter and a resting place for the night. There is more to Christmas than a stable with its meagre furnishings for animal comfort. There is more to Christmas than a mother and babe wrapped in swaddling clothes. There is more to Christmas than a band of angels on the bosom of the clouds with their songs of rejoicing and praise. There is more to Christmas than the wise men with their gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh. Christmas is all of these and more, but in fact and of assuredly it is God's gracious gift to the world and to us—his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, who has gifts of mercy for all and whose grace is sufficient for human needs.

As we make our gifts to family and friends, may we find our way to the path of the wise men that leads to the Christ, and may we open our hearts and our purses and present to him our most choice gifts. When we shall have given ourselves, our wills will follow our hearts to the altar of generosity and consecration. I covet for all, particularly our ministers and the members of our churches, the blessings of God surpassing all that any could deserve and supplying the needs of all who trust and those causes and institutions that they represent.

PRAY FOR OUR COLLEGE.

A few days ago I was discussing the affairs of the college with Dr. Brown, Executive Director of the Elon College Foundation. Reports from the Sustaining Fund were not too encouraging. Contributions to the college on conference apportionments were more than $2,000 short. All the conferences in the Convention had met and the reports were in. These conditions in the face of the greatly-increased needs of the college and with prices continuing to mount, the immediate future was not very promising to say nothing about encouraging. I said to him, "As on previous occasions, the Lord is our source of help and supply. We shall have to take the matter to him in prayer and request the ministers and churches to pray for our college." Dr. Brown replied, "That would seem as little as they could do." I expressed myself in agreement.

As I think of the privilege of praying and consider the price of prayer and the things that are necessary before one really prays, all of which seem to me to be far from a "little thing." To really pray means the renunciation of self, the exaltation of Christ, the placing of things spiritual above all things material. The complete abandonment of self and self-interest, the subjugation of one's own will to the will of God and the passionate petition that his will may be done. I know that we may read prayers, we may say prayers without much effect, and with less earnestness. About all that is consumed is a little time, and all that is spent is a little breath, and all that is accomplished amounts to less than nothing.

I have in my possession a little book, "Five Minutes a Day," which consists of quotations from the Bible, from poets, and from prayers of the Saints, compiled by the late Robert E. Speer. The idea is to spend five minutes each day with these great sources of inspiration and instruction. The first page has to do with prayer, quotations that consist of exhortations to pray—to pray under all circumstances and conditions, and to pray without ceasing. To such praying are the promises of success. There isn't a task too difficult or a situation too serious that can not be remedied if those who are concerned are willing to lay the whole matter before God and at the same time are willing to pay the price for the answer.

I am not sure how many will read this article or how many will be able to interpret its meaning or give themselves to the exhortations contained herein, but some will and the result will be assured.

Would you count it too great a price to put the college and its interest in the center of your prayers on the day you read this and on the following Sunday in your place of worship, and if you are a minister would it be asking too much for you to exhort your congregation to take the cause of the college to God in prayer and you forthwith lead them in their petitions. If it were possible for you to be in my position you would understand this appeal and be delighted with the privilege of complying with same.

ELON CHOIR PERFORMS AT FRANKLIN.

Both morning and afternoon performances of Handel's "The Messiah," sung by the Elon College Choir in the Franklin Va Congregational Christian Church on Sunday, December 10th, were heard by large, appreciative audiences.

The famous oratorio, over two hundred years old, has grown more popular and lovely through the years. Likewise, its spiritual significance deepens in the hearts of rapt listeners who follow closely, its lines of biblical prophecy, heralding the advent of the Messiah, his life, death and resurrection. The closing, immortal Hallelujah Chorus is a grand Amen that rings as an omnipotent challenge to mankind for "Peace On Earth, Good will toward Men."

The Elon Choir's interpretation of this beautiful oratorio is a great credit to John Westmoreland, director, Fletcher Moore, organist, the sixty outstanding, precision trained voices who sing it and, of course, Elon College, producer of the combined talent.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

We are still quite a long way from our total apportionment for the college for the year 1950. This week a personal appeal and statement were mailed to the pastors of our churches in the convention that had not paid their college apportionments in full, stating the present serious need of the college and requesting that they make an effort to raise a part, if not all the amount due on apportionments. It is the hope and prayer of us all that these churches may respond readily and gladly to this appeal.

There are two more Sundays in 1950, which means two more opportunities for these churches to meet their apportionments. Fortunately there are five Sundays in December.

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS!

As the editor of this woman's page, and thus representing the Woman's Board of the Southern Convention, I bring greetings to all of the women of our local societies. We wish for each of you a very happy Christmas season in your churches, as you have your Christmas programs and meetings, and as you share with others the Christmas blessings which are yours.

To the many readers of this page Christmas will be very meaningful. As mothers, as Sunday school teachers, as leaders in women's societies, you will be responsible for the Christian interpretation of Christmas in your homes, your churches, and your communities. As you joyfully work at this task, we wish you good success.

My personal message to all of you is expressed in the words of Elizabeth Cushing Taylor (found in "The Family Celebrates Christmas, Pilgrim Press, 50c) :

I LIKE TO THINK OF CHRISTMAS.

I like to think of Christmas
As happiness to give
Not once a year, but every day
As long as we shall live.
Just loving care and kindness,
Friendly words and true
Will keep the Star of Christmas
Ashine the whole year through.

CHRISTMAS AROUND THE WORLD.

At this Christmas season when peoples in various countries are divided by war and rumors of war, it is good to remember that in every country of the world Christmas will be celebrated. Each country has its special customs and traditions, but the same Christmas carols will be sung in many, many languages.

Let us travel in imagination to different countries and see what they do at Christmas. In our mission stations in China (where only a few missionaries are left), in Japan, in India in the Philippines, in Africa, Christmas will be celebrated much as it is here, with gifts and a tree and Christmas pageants and plays. Many of our missionaries take the Christmas story to outlying villages and areas in city slums where it is completely unknown. By means of drama, song, story-telling they present the Christmas message effectively.

In Sweden the Christmas season begins on December 13. Rice, cooked in milk, decorated with cinnamon, and having in it one almond is served on Christmas Eve. The one who finds the almond will be the first to marry. The dish is called "grot." Gifts are opened on Christmas Eve around the family tree.

In Wales the whole town gathers in the market place to sing carols—thousands of voices led by dozens of trained caroling choirs.

CHRISTMAS BEATITUDES.

BLESSED is the mother who knows how big is Christmas—and how small.

BLESSED is she who leads the way to the manger, rather than the toy counter, at Christmas time. Her children will follow her.

BLESSED is the mother who stops in the midst of the cookie-making and the turkey-stuffing and the card-addressing to hear the angels sing. Her children will hear heavenly music.

BLESSED is the mother who brings a share of her possessions to the cradle of the Christ Child. Her children will follow her—none of them empty handed.

BLESSED is the family that knows how big is Christmas—and how small.

Their whole year will shine with happy memories and a zest for living.

—Armilda Brome Keiser in "The Family Celebrates Christmas."

In Iceland, where trees are scarce, the people make their own Christmas tree by tying branches of a shrub resembling cedar to a center pole. Prune cake and a thin bread shaped like a leaf and fried in mutton tallow are Christmas delicacies.

In Austria in the mountains at midnight on Christmas Eve the farthest mountaineer will light a fagot and make his way to his nearest neighbor. Joined by that household and their lighted torches, they make their way down to the village, with people joining the procession at every house. They march to the doors of the church where a Christmas service is held.

In Hungary three candles are placed in the hollow of a round coffee cake. The first is lit on Christmas Eve, the second on Christmas Day at noon, and the third on New Year's Day. The cake is cut on the sixth of January.

In Holland St. Nicholas comes on December 6. The children leave their wooden shoes for him to fill. At two o'clock in the morning on Christmas Day the boys gather in the market place to sing carols.

In France the whole family takes part in cutting and bringing in the "Cacho-fio" or "yule log." It is usually an olive or almond log. It should be large enough to last from Christmas Eve until New Year's night. Another French custom is to have a "creche" or nativity scene in each home.

In Mexico all the Christmas gifts are placed in an earthenware jar which is hung from the ceiling. On Christmas Eve all the children are blindfolded and given a chance to hit the "pinate" with a stick. When it breaks the candy, cookies, and other "treats" fall to the floor and the children all scramble for them.

As we have our Christmas tree and presents, as we help our children make a "creche," as we sing Christmas carols, let us remember the Christians in other lands who are celebrating Christmas, too. For some it will be in a secret meeting, for they live in lands where religious holidays are not allowed. For others, it will mean a joyous blending of the American and local customs in our mission stations. But in each Christian's heart will come the Christmas spirit, which should be strong enough to unite us all in one great symphony of praise and thanksgiving for the Gift of gifts.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS FROM MANY LANDS.

"O Come, All Ye Faithful" has been called the best-loved Christmas hymn. The writer of neither the words nor the music is known. It was probably written in Portugal in the Latin language. It was first translated into English by John Wade in 1751. It was sung in the Portuguese Chapel in London about 1785 to the tune with which we are familiar, and which is called "The Portuguese Hymn."

The story of "Silent Night" is one of the most interesting connected with any Christmas carol. Josef Mohr, a priest in Austria, wrote the words on a clear starlight night in 1818 as he was preparing for the Christmas season in his church. Franz Gruber, organist at his church, was given the poem and set it to music. At first it was sung only in the village of Orben-dorf, but an organ-builder who came

SUMMONS CHRISTIANS TO RE-NEWED HOPE.

Miss Sarah Chakko, President of Isabella Thoburn College, India, Secretary of the World Council's Commission on Life and Work of Women in the Church, speaking before the National Council in Cleveland, said:

Is this Civilization Worth Saving?

"Frankly, many of us do not act as if Christian groups can do much to save our civilization. We put our faith elsewhere. We depend upon human wisdom, upon diplomatic negotiations, collective security, large armies, etc. We are not far removed from the Jews of Jesus' day who counted on the might of armies for the realization of Jewish safety and security. Looked at from the worldly point of view this may be justified. The little group of Christians who resisted the Nazi oppression and paganism certainly did not stop World War No. II. The same may be said of the Japanese Christians before the last war. Looked at soberly one has no earthly reason to believe that the Christians in China or Russia can avert World War III. But the still more basic question is, is this civilization as we know it is worth saving? Does it fulfill in its essence the purpose of God? With the several centuries of opportunity, what have we done with the life giving word of God? The small minority who have cared have worked toward a worldwide church. But have enough of us cared about the hungry peoples of the world? Have we given them a chance at a decent living? Have we not taken possession of good land and driven the weaker peoples out? Have we not grabbed the persons of human beings and used them for our profit, and turned against them the moment we find them getting self conscious enough to assert their rights? Do we not justify this very iniquity by quoting the Holy Word of God? Have not saints and martyrs cried out against such iniquities and have gone to their death? If we wish to preserve such a civilization why should we expect the God of justice to befriend us at this hour? Let us ask ourselves what it is that we wish to save in our civilization and for whom are we saving those values?

The Christian Church is a minority movement.

"The Christian church has always been a minority movement. There have been periods in the history of Europe and America when people thought it was not so and that they were secure in their numbers. But I believe that in all times of history the real believers have always been a minority. To the Christian from the areas of the younger churches where he knows he is in a minority it comes as a shock that it is so in America. The neo-paganism which has come into existence because the church has lost the purity of her faith and because we have let ourselves be captured by the all powerful state, or by money, or by social status and respectability. The fact of the minority church all over the world gives a new meaning to that term that came alive at Whitby a few years ago. 'Partnership in obedience'—a new relation between the older and the younger churches, between what used to be thought of as sending and receiving missions. The missionary work of our day thus finds a new relationship of giving and receiving for the mutual strengthening that comes out of pooling of resources both in men, money, experience, ideals. Thus no Christian groups remain as purely giving or receiving group.

What is the function of the Church in the world today?

"1. What it always has been—to call people once again to the love of God, to an appreciation of the right sense of values in life and to commit themselves once again to God.

"2. In these days of tension to listen to those who criticize the church, criticize our nation, etc., attentively to understand if they have the truth on their side and to use them as a corrective agency in our church, national and personal lives.

"3. To maintain spiritual lines of communication between people who are behind the various kinds of curtains. Not to let national policies interfere with Christian fellowship. This is not an easy thing in times of tension as we in India have learned to understand.

"4. To influence our nations into right public policies and yet not be captured by the national interests thus letting the church be captured.

With all of this, we may be too late to save this civilization.

"If so the function of the Christian is to stand firm in his faith and see the emergence of a new one which has shed the shackles of the corruption of (Continued on page 13.)

to repair the organ there heard it, copied it, and carried it with him to the outside world.

An American carol is "O Little Town of Bethlehem," which was written by Phillips Brooks, Episcopal minister. While he was rector of Holy Trinity Church in Philadelphia, his congregation sent him abroad for a year. On Christmas Eve he went to Bethlehem. As he stood in the church built near the spot where Jesus was born, he was moved with emotion. Two years later he wrote this poem, which was first used by the children of his Sunday school in 1868. The lovely tune was written by the organist at Dr. Brooks' church, Mr. Lewis Redner.

One of the Christmas carols not as well known as the above, but which carries a lovely message, is "As With Gladness Men of Old." It was written by William Dix in 1861, when he was 23 years old. He was recovering from a very serious illness at the time. The son of an English surgeon who was trained for a business career, Mr. Dix wrote about forty hymns.

The words of "As With Gladness Men of Old" may well be used in any of our Christmas services. How fine it would be if each member of each of our women's groups would take seriously the implications of this hymn:

As with gladness men of old
Did the guiding star behold;
As with joy they hailed its light,
Leading onward, beaming bright;
So, most gracious Lord, may we Evermore be led to thee.

As with joyful steps they sped
To that lowly manger-bed
There to bend the knee before Him whom heaven and earth adore;
So may we with willing feet
Ever seek Thy mercy seat.

As they offered gifts most rare,
At that manger rude and bare,
So may we with holy joy,
Pure and free from sin's alloy,
All our costliest treasures bring,
Christ, to Thee, our heavenly King.

Holy Jesus, every day
Keep us in the narrow way;
And, when earthly things are past,
Bring our ransomed souls at last,
Where they need no star to guide,
Where no clouds Thy glory hide.

MEETING THE FAMILY.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Here you are, David!" "How are you, Sonny?" "Isn't he a darling?" "Well, David, you're quite a boy!"

Small David Penniman stood in the middle of the big hall in his mother's girlhood home surrounded by a crowd of admiring relatives. Loving arms were outstretched to embrace him and hearty voices boomed out in a chorus of welcome. Much to their surprise and disappointment the little fellow answered his relatives' greetings with a frightened cry and ran sobbing into his mother's arms.

Jean Penniman held her son gently, but she spoke to him in tones of dismay, "Oh, David, that's no way for a boy to act when he comes to visit his own family."

The eager chorus persisted. "Come on, David, don't be afraid!" "We won't hurt you." "Show us what a big boy you are!"

Suddenly a quiet voice hushed the clamor. "Let's give David a little time to become acquainted with us," the boy's grandmother was saying. "Come, Jean, bring David up to your room. Your father brought your own baby-bed down from the attic for him."

"I'm sorry David was so contrary," Jean apologized, as she led the little fellow up the stairs. "Ever since he was born, two years ago, I've looked forward to this visit, and I did want you to like your first grandchild."

Jean's mother looked tenderly at her grandson. "There won't be any question about that," she answered. "I'm sorry we were so thoughtless. Even an adult would be overwhelmed by so many boisterous greetings. David is accustomed to being with just two people—you and his daddy. It will take him a little while to adjust to the new situation of having so many strange people around him."

"I hadn't thought of that." Jean returned her mother's smile. "Since I know and love you all so well, I was just expecting David to know you, too. Now I'll try to help him instead of reproaching him."

"That's right, Daughter," her mother agreed. "I'll have Tom bring up your luggage. You can hang up your dresses if you like and give David time to find his bearings." Without pressing the boy's acquaintance further, his grandmother left the room.

In a moment Tom, Jean's brother of high-school age, appeared, carrying in one hand a suitcase and in the other a very small red chair. "Here you are, fellow!" he exclaimed, placing the chair beside his young nephew. "Do you remember this chair, Jean? We gave it a fresh coat of paint for David."

"Indeed I do," Jean replied, giving her brother's tall figure an affectionate appraisal, "but it's hard to believe that you ever sat in it!"

David's eyes brightened at the sight of the tiny chair, and in a few moments he appropriated it as his special piece of furniture.

Tom gazed longingly at his nephew, but he wisely refrained from attempting to lift the little fellow up. "We'll have some fun before you leave, David," he promised, and he found his patience rewarded when the boy responded with a fleeting smile.

"Yes, we are going to have a good time here, David," said Jean, echoing her brother's assurance as she went about her unpacking, while her son rocked back and forth in the little chair.

One by one each member of Jean's family became personally accepted by the young visitor, for, after their first mistake, all gave the boy time to find out that they belonged in the charmed circle that had hitherto held only his mother, his daddy, and his own small self. It was not long before David was as happy to be with his newly-acquired family as they were to have him with them—his grandfather was taking him on errands in the big car, his Aunt Paula was introducing him to the books of pictures that had delighted the children of an earlier generation, his Uncle Tom was showing him the wonderful engineering feats that can be accomplished with building blocks, and his grandmother was renewing the joy of holding a little child of her very own in her arms.

A PASTORAL PRAYER.

seek first the Kingdom of God. Rebuke us for our too easy preoccupation with the kingdoms of this world. Remind us that man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth, nor can his life be very much impoverished by the loss of any thing. Rather, let us seek in all things to be loving, kind and true; to be happy and be brave.

Help us this day to learn the things we ought to learn. We would repent us of our sins. We would ask to be forgiven. Create in us a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within us. We would, now, with open mind, and honest heart, learn more about thy way of life.

Be with all our loved ones, here and everywhere, today. Comfort those who mourn; companion all the lonely.

Where cross the crowded ways of life, where sound the cries of race and clan, above the noise of selfish strife, O let the voice of Christ be heard! We pray in Jesus' name, that he may come to be with us. Amen.

HENRY RUST TO VISIT SOUTHERN CONVENTION AREA.

Rev. Henry R. Rust, Whose picture appears on this page, will be in the Southern Convention January 7-16. Rev. Mr. Rust will speak at the Valley of Virginia Young People's Rally on January 7, at the Linville Church, and at the Eastern Virginia Young People's Rally at Franklin Christian Church, Franklin, Virginia, Sunday afternoon, January 14. He will also teach the course on Young People's Work at the Greensboro Area Leadership Training School at First Church, Greensboro, January 8-12.

As National Young People's Secretary, Mr. Rust's responsibilities include the development of plans and programs for local young people's group's, development of the church school curriculum for young people, cooperation with State Directors of Religious Education in all types of young people's activities; guidance to the scores of Summer Conferences administered by State Conferences; executive leadership of the National Pilgrim Fellowship, the youth organization of the Congregational Christian Churches; and cooperation with other denominational leaders in work of the United Christian Youth Movement.

REV. HENRY R. RUST.

Mr. Rust's experience in youth work includes two years of service in Great Britain, from 1945 to 1947, as Assistant Minister in the Warwick Road Congregational Church of Coventry, and as Youth Organizer in a group of adjacent Congregational Churches. He studied in Edinburgh and did work with some of the Scottish Congregational Churches during this period.

YOUTH WEEK.

The theme selected for Youth Week this year is "Christ Calls—Serve in Faith!" The first part of this theme recognizes that Christ is calling the youth of today. The second part of this theme is challenge to action.

If Youth Week is to be a vital experience among the youth of your church and community, you must take the initiative of informing others about the possibilities that Youth Week presents and assist those in position of leadership as they develop the program.

Youth Week has been set aside by denominational and interdenominational youth agencies so that all Christian young people may unite in worship, work and planning. More fully the purpose of Youth Week is:

To dramatize the place and purpose of youth in the program of the Church and the community.

To focus attention upon the responsibility of youth to their church and the church to its youth.

To build and strengthen a fellowship between adults and young people in the church and community.

To bring unchurched youth into an active, full church relationship.

To express the basic oneness of all Christian groups.

To focus, through the Parshad College Scholarship Awards, attention upon the responsibility of Christian Youth in the community and upon the value of a Christian Education.

This, then, is Youth Week and Christian Endeavor Week: a period of purposeful and objective planning and action carried out through a forceful demonstration of Christianity, a re-emphasizing of Christian unity, an evangelistic outreach, and a presentation of the spirit of Christian young people.

A Youth Week packet may be ordered by Youth Fellowship organizations in our North Carolina churches from Miss Frances Query, North Carolina Council of Churches, College Station, Durham, N. C. Our Virginia young people should order from The International Council of Religious Education, 206 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill. The price of these packets is 25 cents. Be sure to order early. Youth Week will be January 28-February 4.

NEWS OF ELON COLLEGE.

GROWING THROUGH FELLOWSHIP WITH CHRIST.

LESSON XIV—DECEMBER 31, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: One thing I do, forgetting what lies behind, and straining forward to what lies ahead, I press toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus.—Philippians 3: 13-14.

LESSON: John 15: 1-5; Philippians 3: 8-16

DEVOTIONAL READING: John 15: 1-12.

Good, But Good for Something.

Many people thank that being a Christian is primarily a matter of being good. And often of being good in a negative sense—they are good because they do not do this or do that. To be sure a Christian ought to be good in the best sense of the word. He ought to be good positively too. A Christian is really Christ's man. He will abstain from evil and vile things. He will try to walk worthy of the high calling wherewith he has been called. He will give heed to his manner of life. He will try to be a good man.

But Christians are not only to be good; they are to be good for something. Jesus emphasizes the fact that his followers are to bear and bring forth fruit. They are to be known by their fruits. He chose us and ordained us, all of us, that we might go forth and bring forth fruit, and that our fruit should remain. He said that it was as we bore fruit that our Father is glorified, and that we demonstrated our discipleship. He said that there was the possibility of even ordinary people bearing much fruit.

The secret of it all was an intimate, personal relationship with him. If we abide in him, and if his spirit abides in us, we will bear fruit, much fruit. Indeed apart from him we cannot bear fruit, any more than a branch of a tree can bear fruit if it is cut off from the tree. Here is a call to prayer and meditation and obedience and surrender. If his spirit flows into and through our lives, we will bear fruit, much fruit, and our fruit will abide.

There are words of warning and words of comfort in what Jesus said about bearing fruit. Fruitlessness brings a penalty—every branch that beareth not fruit is taken away, and withereth and dies. The penalty for failure to bear fruit as we are able is the loss of the ability to bear fruit at all. But if a branch bears fruit, even a little fruit, the Great Husbandman prunes it and nurses it along so that it may bear much fruit. The reward for bearing fruit is the ability to bear more fruit. Discipline, self-denial, suffering, sorrow and other seemingly hard experiences may be the Master's way of helping us to bear more fruit.

Good, but Growing in Goodness.

Paul, next to Christ, was perhaps the best man who ever lived. Perhaps no man ever lived more intimately with Christ than did Paul. And certainly no man was ever more fruitful in good works than Paul. He is at once the ideal and the despair of Christians even to this day. And if we were to draw up a list of the world's good, and its best men, we would put Paul at the top of the list.

But Paul did not think that he had exhausted the possibilities of being a good man. Many years after he met Christ on the Damascus Road, and when he had grown marvelously in grace and in a knowledge of Jesus Christ, he wrote a letter to his beloved friends and fellow-Christians at Philippi in which he talked out of his heart to them. He told of them of his great passion, born in him the day he met Christ, to know him intimately, to know his power manifested in his Resurrection, and also to know the fellowship of his sufferings. He had allowed nothing to come between him and Christ—he counted it as refuse or dung and got rid of it, so that he might have in his heart the righteousness that comes through faith, and the fruitfulness that came from abiding in Christ.

But now after many years, he frankly tells his friends that he is not as good a man as he ought to be, as he wants to be, as he determined to be. Goodness for Paul was a matter of growth, a flying goal, an ideal that was a constant challenge to effort. He therefore forgot the things that were behind—the failures and also the successes, and looking to the goal or the ideal, he pressed on, day by day trying to discover new meaning in Christ's teachings and to express new fruitfulness in Christ's service.

He sums up his words to his friends with some sober words. They are to follow the light they have. If they are honest and sincere God will reveal unto them their errors. But they are under obligation to walk in the light which they have. "Only whereunto we have attained, by that same rule let us walk." He has the mind and spirit of Christ here, for the Master said "He that doeth the truth cometh to the light." If we walk in the light we have, we shall have more light. If we follow the truth we know, we shall know more truth.

A merry Christmas and a happy New Year to readers of these notes and to members of THE CHRISTIAN SUN family.

A PASTORAL PRAYER. FOR A SUNDAY IN ADVENT.

By W. R. CATTON.

Our heavenly Father, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, we are in the days that lead toward Christmas and we consider again the coming of thy Son into our world. In these days, we pray thee that we may become more Christlike.

May we have his faith in thee. Be thou our Father, as thou wert his Father. Be our daily companion. In the hours of loneliness, we would learn to live with thee, as Jesus so well learned. In our various temptations be thou near us that, with thy power, we may not be overcome of evil, but may overcome evil with good. In our daily duties be thou our inspiration, making heavy burdens light because we draw our strength from thee. In our anxieties and perplexities be thou the light upon our path, and the lamp unto our feet.

May we come to have more of our Lord Christ's spirit of invincible good will toward all mankind. Those people with whom we have to do, every day; may we come to love them better. Let not familiarity breed contempt. Teach us how to be more patient; how to forgive, if we have aught against anyone, as we would hope to be forgiven. If anyone here today now recalls that anywhere his friend hath aught against him, let him be at pains to go at once to seek his friend and to be reconciled: then let him come to offer thee more fitting praise.

May we follow our Lord Christ in his great devotion to the Kingdom of thy love, the Kingdom which he sought to build upon this earth. Help us, in this day, and in our places, to BIRTH THAT DIVIDES TIME.

It is because, at the birth of Christ, a new kind of history began to be made. It was made by people in whose spirits the new era had begun in Christ. Rugged Galilean fishermen, blundering fellows, but eager and sincere, experienced new visions, and received great new incentives. They underwent amazing transformations, from purposeless, futile living, to that of utmost highnificance.

We cannot think of them without remembering in particular the leader among these first friends of Jesus, Simon Peter. He had a B. C. and an A. D. case history of singular note. When I was a child I thought "A. D." meant "after death." It was not a serious error in some respects. It was after the death and resurrection of Jesus that the A. D. history of Peter and all the disciples really began. It was then, so to speak, that they all became rocks, whereas before they were more like bags of sand. They supplied much of the rock foundation on which a new order of society was raised. They instituted a new style of fellowship. They exemplified a quality of righteousness that exceeded far the best that had ever been known. People saw them and believed that "surely God hath visited his people." The place and chronological date of Jesus' birth held no great significance for them. They cherished supremely his birth within their spirits. From it came the mighty impulse that inaugurated the historic era. His torians simply recognized this changed character of events, and gave time a new date line.

V.

Today we do well to consider some of the concrete aspects of the history Christ's advent inaugurates in the individual's life.

There came to my desk recently a brochure, called "A Religious Guide Book" by Rev. Paul McElroy, Danvers, Mass. It was compiled and edited by my minister friend, for distribution to the people of his parish. It is a beautiful and effective manual. It gives a brief history of his church; and it tells how that church is related, through Association, Conference, National and International Councils, to the entire Christian World Community. It depicts special ministries of the several organizations of this church in which people of all ages and interest may participate to advantage.

Then this brochure sets forth what it means to be a Christian—to be a member of the local church, and the great world-wide Community. It reminds the member of the things we as Christian most surely believe: "I believe in God the Father Almighty, infinite in wisdom, goodness and love; and in Jesus Christ, his Son, our Lord, who for us and our salvation lived and died and rose again and liveth evermore. . . ."

The manual then follows with the "bread or instruction" in what Christian discipleship involves, and a Christian home. There are beautiful graces for the children at the table; and others for adults as well. There are prayers for morning and evening, and ten simple rules for the beginner in the art of prayer. There are prayers of beauty and depth for all ages, and to suit all conditions and circumstances of life.

Then a large section is devoted to the most inspiring chapters of the Bible, gathered from the great Prophets, the Psalter, and the New Testament. The ageless passages most worthy to be committed to memory are designated and set apart.

The manual explains the sacraments, and the great days and festivals of the Christian calendar. It concludes with some choice religious poetry.

After reading through this guide book it occurred to me, somewhat suddenly, that there—there is what it means for Christ to be born in a human spirit! There was an outline of an individual's "A. D. history," the kind Jesus inaugurates in every life wholly committed to him.

We recall with deep sentiment that Jesus was born in a stable. But when artists depict the scene it lacks nothing of radiance. The B. C. history of that stable may have been drab enough, barren and ugly. For the same is true of human lives before Christ is born within. But, with his advent, a new glory appears, transforming the place which before had been drab and lusterless. The birth of Christ in the Bethlehem stable gave a peculiar sanctity to the place. When the A. D. history of the soul begins, there is not much human ingenuity can add to enhance its splendour.

Going through this booklet of my friend, I see portrayed the kind of life that has come out of the stable with its dreary emptiness, and has surrounded itself with the graces which make living a fruitful garden. History repeats and magnifies itself according to the pattern this booklet sets forth, when Jesus is born in our hearts.

VI.

In what era, then, is our present living cast? Is it B. C. or A. D. for us? Must the greater part of that which has gone by, for us, be designated by the former symbols? Has the new era, in fact, really begun for you and me? Is it B. C. or A. D. with us? Christmas can have no great depth of meaning if it be not the latter.

We need not be greatly troubled about the day of Christ's birth, as it concerns the mere historian. But the birth within—that is, indeed, a matter for concern!

Perhaps a place was once made for Christ's advent into our lives; he did come in, and make our lives radiant for a time. The Star of Bethlehem rose for us, and we followed it until we became weary or distracted. Then, perhaps, another star fascinated us by its shining—some star with only a borrowed ray, having no luster of its own, a false luminary, cold and lifeless as the moon. And we went off after its misleading. Is that, by chance, our own case history?

There were those who, in the beginning of the A. D. era of history, did just that. . . . There is so much of Demas in us all! We may have started well. We may have had a short A. D. history, but something turned us aside. The old B. C. history was resumed again, and we fell back into the ways of sterile, and barren existence. But, if that is true, we can yet do something about it. For even when we forsake Christ he does not forsake us. We may have become so entangled in the affairs of this world, keeping up with an envied neighbor, or become involved with a debilitating habit, so that the light of the Bethlehem Star has faded away. But we still can recover it. It still shines to light us back to the blessed era of A. D. once more.

O Holy Child of Bethlehem,
Descend on us, we pray;
Cast out our sin, and enter in,
Be born in us today.

SUMMONS CHRISTIANS.

the old. The future that God has for the redemption may perhaps not be through this civilization which has not risen to its responsibilities. The important thing is not for a civilization to be saved, but for God's scheme of redemption to be worked. Through us, if we can fulfill our obligations, but in spite of us if that is necessary. What ever is the case, the Christian's hope is always there. It is in the ultimate purpose of God, not in saving his skin. Therefore the Christian has no panic. He follows the path blazed by his Lord.

The Orphanage
J. G. TRUITT, Superintendent

Dear Friends:

Thank you for the good report this week. I have been praying that God would bless us in raising sufficient funds to pay our bills and have a little to go on during the non-productive months when the funds come in slowly. Work and prayer is a combination that is hard to beat, and while I am here I expect to do my best for these boys and girls and for the welfare of this most worthy institution. I appreciate the forthright way in which you are sensing that and responding. Thank you.

What a good time we had this past Sunday at my old home church—Mt. Bethel. I could not help, as I brought those boys and girls into that church, remembering my sainted Mother and Dad, who labored long and well in that community. Also at New Lebanon, a neighboring church, I can remember when it was organized and built. Now how fine it is with their second building, a lovely brick church with many rooms. We ate our dinner there, and what a dinner! Then we drove to another church, Kallam Grove, which is only about two or three miles across the way from where I was reared. Here, too, I saw many kinfolks. I was proud of them and they proud of the children from the Orphanage, as their three offerings indicated in the report show. My good friend, Percy Ricketts, their pastor, did everything he could to make our visit in these three churches a success. We believe these churches and the others are better and happier because of what they did for the children.

What nice letters come to me! One sends a check and says give a dollar each to the five oldest boys; another sends a letter with ten for Billy Whitt, and others send letters telling of good things for these boys and girls to eat. Money sent for personal gifts to these children is given over to them as they need or want it, and is not recorded as regular income. But who knows but these nickles and dimes give as much morale and happiness as any gifts you make. It gives these children a sense of being loved, and of belonging. It helps them.

Our good friends at Ingram have sent us fourteen big, fat chickens. Mr. and Mrs. M. W. McPherson are giving us forty dollars worth of turkeys. Winchester has sent in a gift for everybody, wrapped, named and sealed with a little prayer for the bright-eyed child who opens it.

May God bless you everyone at Christmas. Our hopes are in God in the internationally anxious days. If you have not yet sent in your Thanksgiving or Christmas contribution, just bear in mind that we need it. Help to answer your prayer for God's mercy and love by being yourself a channel through which it can flow.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

WE PAUSE FOR LIGHT AND CLEANSING

By CHARLES A. WELLS

On one day each year men have a glimpse of the heights which the human spirit can attain. After a year-long pilgrimage through a strife-filled world, the path littered with the wreckage of war and hatred, there is a blessed pause for a few brief hours to view the miracle of divine love made manifest through the birth of Christianity. It is more than a historical commemoration, it is a personal experience, something we enter into and which enters into us. Not a home or a life can become so sordid or sad that some fresh cleansing ray of light will not enter into it during these hours. The Christmas season comes to remind us that no matter how we fail or sin, God is not far away, his love as tender as the touch of a child, his presence as glowing as a star. Let us linger longer by the path this time and try to carry more of it away in our hearts.

LEADERSHIP TRAINING.

Press Young People's Quarterly during the first quarter of 1951. (2) Planning for Children in the Church School. There will be three instructors in this course: Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Educational Secreatry of the Southern Convention; Miss Ruth Dunn, a graduate of Elon College, who holds an M. A. degree in Religious Education from the Hartford School of Religious Education, and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, who is also a graduate of Elon College and holds her M. A. degree from the Boston University School of Religious Education. (3) The Program of the Local Church. This course is to be directed by Rev. Henry R. Rust, National Secretary of Young People's Work of our church. He is one of the outstanding leaders of the nation in work with young people. (4) Improving the Sunday Church School. This course will be taught by Rev. W. J. Andes of Winston-Salem. Mr. Andes, a graduate of Elon College and Yale, is well qualified by experience and ability, and is well versed in both the theory and practice of the subject to be considered.

The expenses incident to participation in the school will be negligible. The major portion of the cost of the school is being defrayed by the participating schools.

The First Church of Greensboro, located at the corner of Walker Avenue and South Eugen Street, will be the host for the occasion, and it is happy to offer its facilities for this Leadership Training School, and to welcome all who will take part in the school.

Those wishing further information are urged to write to the dean of the Training School, Mr. Martin T. Garren, 508 North Edgeworth Street, Greensboro, N. C.

ANOTHER GOOD WEEK-END.

tunity! Lee's Chapel was organized during the ministry of the late Rev. P. T. Klapp at nearby Zion Christian Church. A new Sunday school has been organized at Lee's Chapel.

Returning home Sunday night after a busy week-end, I was tired physically, but renewed spiritually. It was a good week-end. May God bless these churches and their pastors in their great work.

An Age-Old Christmas Greeting

I SALUTE you. I am your friend, and my love for you goes deep. There is nothing I can give you which you have not got; but there is much, very much, that while I cannot give it, you can take. No heaven can come to us unless our hearts find rest in today. Take heaven! No peace lies in the future which is not hidden in this precious little instant. Take peace! The gloom of the world is but a shadow. Behind it yet within our reach is joy. There is radiance and glory in the darkness, could we but see, and to see we have only to look. I beseech you to look. Life is so generous a giver, but we, judging its gifts by their coverings, cast them away as ugly or heavy or hard. Remove the covering and you will find beneath it a living splendor, woven of love, by wisdom, with power. Welcome it, grasp it, and you touch the angel's hand that brings it to you. Everything we call a trial, a sorrow or a duty, believe me, that angel's hand is there; the gift is there, and the wonder of an overshadowing presence. Our joys too: be not content with them as joys. They too can conceal diviner gifts. Life is so full of meaning and purpose, so full of beauty beneath its covering, that you will find that earth but cloaks your heaven. Courage then to claim it: that is all! But courage you have; and the knowledge that we are pilgrims together, wending through an unknown country our way home. And so at this Christmastime I greet you. Not quite as the world sends greetings, but with profound esteem and with the prayer that for you now and forever, the day breaks and the shadows flee away.

*From a letter written by
FRA GIOVANNI, A. D. 1513*
